Monday being Coronation Day and a public holiday, we had arranged to again amalgamate, and preach on the Common: but the weather being wet, the meeting was held in the tent instead, and, being weatherproof, a large company assembled, and united testimony was given to the dying, risen, and coming Lord. No doubt other workers were busy here during this wondrous week, and may have much to tell of the Lord's work of which I have not heard; I here recount what I saw, and what I thank God for, for putting it into the hearts of his people to do for his glory and the advancement of his Kingdom on earth.

CHAS. COOK.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.—A most encouraging muster of the Christian Harbour Lights was held at this Society's headquarters in St. George's-street, E., on Thursday last. Rev. G. J. Hill gave an interesting account of the progress of the work at the Society's coast stations, and also stated that in commemoration of the Queen's Diamond Jubilee 150 seamen had been entertained to dinner, etc., at the Sailors' Home, Fowey. A service of thanksgiving and praise had been held on a large steamer at Maryport, at which nearly 1000 people, including most of the seamen in the port, were present, and various special efforts had been put forth at other stations. In London a good work had been accomplished, and he was glad to see among the seamen then present some who had been converted at the last New Year's Festival, and others more recently. Captain Nichols, Mr. Owens and many others took part in the meeting, and at the close several seamen signed the pledge.

Luke xvi. 25.

"LOUIE," said mother, "I want you to do some shopping for me." "All right, mother, I'll be ready in a minute." Mother told Louie her wants. There were five things for her to get, and she said "Be sure you remember them all." But when Louie got back one thing was missing. It was some black thread, and mother had been waiting for it, and could not finish her work. "Oh, I am sorry, said Louie, "but I quite forgot." How often we forget! I want you to remember one thing especially, and that is "It is no real excuse to say 'I quite forgot.'"

Did you ever think what a wonderful thing memory is? A power God has given you to recollect the things you have heard or seen, and like most of God's gifts, too, it grows stronger the more you use it. The most wonderful thing about our memory is that it will go with us into the next world. We shall remember there the things we said and did here. Read the story which Jesus told in Luke xvi. beginning at verse 19.

All the misery and sin in this sad world began because Adam and Eve did not "remember" what God said to them. Turn to your Bibles again and read Genesis ii. 16, 17; iii. 2, 6.

God Remembers.—In Gen. viii. 1, we are told that "God remembered Noah" when he was shut up in the ark. It would have been a sad thing for poor Noah and all his family and the animals if God had forgotten him! God remembered Abraham and his promises to him, and Lot was saved, see Gen. xix. 29. David said, "He remembers that we are dust" (Ps. ciii. 14), that means so weak and foolish by nature; He remembered this when his own people rebelled against Him (Ps. lxxviii. 39). In Mal. iii. 16 we are told that God keeps a Book of remembrance, and the names of those who talked to one another about Him were written down.

Do you talk together about God?

There are some things God promises not to remember. What are they? Look in Isa. xliii. 25 and Heb. viii. 12. These promises are true for each one who confesses his sins and asks to be forgiven for Jesus' sake.

God says we are to Remember.—What?

"Remember now thy Creator."—Eccles. xii. 1.

"Remember the Sabbath-day, etc."—Exod. xx. 8.

"Remember what God has done for you."—Deut. viii. 2.

"Remember to do his commandments."—Num. xv. 39. And because He knew they would often forget He told his ancient people to put some blue cord or ribbon on their garments, and when they looked at the blue ribbon it would remind them. Some of you wear a little blue ribbon. Why? Jesus asks us to Remember his words (Jno. xv. 20; xvi. 4), and He has given us his Holy Spirit "to bring to our remembrance" his loving commands (John xiv. 26).

Before our Lord went back to heaven He said that where his children met to worship Him they were to take bread and wine in "remembrance" of his dying love. Oh, how strange it is that when Jesus Christ suffered so much for us we should need something to remind us of Him! But He knows all our temptations and trials, and wants so much to help us.

One more thing I want you to think about, i.e., We may ask God to remember us. David often asked God to remember him. Turn to Ps. cxxxii. 1, Ps. xxv. 6, Ps. lxxxix. 47. So did the Prophets, Hab. iii. 2. Samson prayed "Remember me." When and what for? Judges xvi. 28. Hannah prayed "Remember me." 1 Sam. i. 11. Nehemiah also, chapter xiii. 14, 22, and 31; and Job, xiv. 13; and Jeremiah, xv. 15; and the dying thief, Luke xxiii. 42. And we find that every one of these prayers was answered. Dear children, if in your time of need you, too, will cry, "Lord remember me," the answer will be sure to come, for our God is always the same, and He never forgets his promises.

Please do not forget that there is such a thing as remembering too late. Peter remembered the words of Jesus too late, after he had denied Him three times, and "he went out and wept bitterly" (Matt. xxvi. 75). Judas remembered too late, and was in such despair that he killed himself (Matt. xxvii. 3-4). Try now to remember what the Lord would like you to do, where He would like you to go, how He would like you to speak, so that you may please Him all the day long, and then in heaven we shall never forget, but join in the everlasting song of praise to Him who remembered us (Rev. v. 9-12).

About Processions.

By William Luff.

SO much has been seen and heard and read about the Royal Procession, that I think a little talk about processions in general will be interesting. I expect you have all seen a procession of some sort, whether at a funeral, a wedding, or the Lord Mayor's Show. The Bible tells us of many, with some of which the "Searcher" this week deals. But I have others and the first is

A BLACK PROCESSION.

All our sins, from the first lie to the last, every bad word, thought, or deed, every bit of disobedience, wicked, temper, pride, envy, cruelty. What a black company! Add to them all the omissions of good, things left undone that ought to have been done, and the procession will be a long one.

Where is this procession going? Up to God's throne, there to wait for our coming and the day of judgment. And every day we add to that procession. Do we not wish these bad things could be got rid of like the host of Pharaoh's who followed the people of Israel? How the Red Sea swallowed up that awful procession! Armed to the teeth they were going to destroy God's procession, but God destroyed them. And He can destroy our sins, drowning them in the Red Sea of Christ's blood, so that we shall never see them any more.

A BRIGHT PROCESSION.

All our mercies, from the baby's rattle and all the toys of childhood, dolls, tops, horses, to the last love-token we received. With these might march all the clothes we have worn, boots of increasing sizes, hats, coats, frocks, etc. Then the books we have read, food for the mind, and side by side the food we have eaten for our bodies, loaves, vegetables, joints, puddings, pies, cakes. I expect this procession would frighten us. Behind these would come father and mother, brothers and sisters, aunts, uncles, cousins, and all the friends God has given us. These would include Sunday-school teachers, and Band of Hope helpers, with all our banners, etc. And I think we should have to include the angels who take care of us.

What a bright procession! Shall we not cheer them as they pass, and give thanks to God?

GOD'S PROCESSION.

This is the best procession of all.

The Son of God goes forth to war,
A kingly crown to gain;
His blood-red banner streams afar:
Who follows in his train?

Yes, there are soldiers in this procession: true knights in armour.

Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness. And your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God.—Eph. vi. 11-17.

Then there are light-bearers in God's procession. At the seaside the children sometimes have a lantern service, when every child carries a lantern. We may hold forth God's word which is a shining light. Standard-bearers are also in this happy procession. Singers, too, who "feel like singing all the time."

In one Lord's Mayor's procession a band of boys got the most praise. Who will be a musician in God's happy band?

Where is God's procession going? To join the HEAVENLY PROCESSION.

Which John describes thus:—

After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.—Rev. vii. 9-17.

Little children will be there,
Who have sought the Lord in prayer.

I once saw many thousands of soldiers, who had returned from war, march past the Queen. It was a procession of conquerors. That is what the heavenly procession will be.

But if we want to march through the pearly gates by-and-by we must be in God's procession now; for only those who thus come are admitted; all others will be thrust aside, according to the hymn which tells of those who will sweep through the gates:—

These, these are they who, in their youthful days,
Found Jesus early, and in wisdom's ways
Proved the fulness of his grace.
"Washed in the blood of the Lamb.'

Twopence Each All Round.

A friend writes:—"Dear Uncle Tom,—Enclosed are ten shillings for the Cripples' Bathing Machine from one 'In remembrance of the benefit received from sea-bathing thirty-five years ago.' I hope you will very soon get the amount required." So do I. Out of the £16 needed I have received £9 16s. 10d. Can we not complete the amount this month? Twopence each from my young Bible Searchers would do it. Now then!

How to Learn the Books of the Bible.

[I shall set a few lines each week till completed. Learn them and write them out from memory.]

In Genesis the world was made by God's creative hand;

In Exodus the Hebrews marched to gain the Promised Land;

Leviticus contains the Law, holy and just and good;

Numbers records the tribes enrolled—all sons of Abram's blood;

Moses, in Deuteronomy, recounts God's mighty deeds;

Brave Joshua into Canaan's land the host of Israel leads;

In Judges their rebellion oft provokes the Lord to smite;

But Ruth records the faith of one well-pleasing in his sight.

THE EVANGELIST.

BY the late SIR ARTHUR BLACKWOOD.

HERE are two titles applied in scorn to our Lord by the Pharisees: "A gluttonous man and a wine-bibber"; "A friend of publicans and sinners" (Luke vii. 34). Of the first it is needless to speak; but the second, used by them in reproach and derision, is one of the most precious of his Names, most comforting to his children, and which, perhaps more than any other, has drawn souls to Him.

There are many different stages in Christian experience. The first is when the sinner can just grasp his Saviour, when he feels that without Him he should utterly perish. But he only holds on to Christ as his Saviour; he does not realise Him as his Friend. He goes on fearing, downcast, ever dreading lest he should fall away, and not leading the bright, happy, self-denying, God-glorifying life that the children of God should live. Yet still, if this be your case, if you do just know Christ, though it be only in this way, bless God for it! Though you have only a feeble hold, thank God you have that! Another stage of Christian experience is when you can realise Christ as your Saviour, when you know that He loves you, and you are lending a bright, happy life to Him. The third and the highest is to walk with Him as your Friend; as Enoch "walked with God"; or as Abraham, of whom God spoke as "Abraham my friend."

Now let us try to find out something about this our Friend. The love of Christ is immeasurable. The friendship of Christ will be the friendship of Heaven. In heaven it will fill our hearts to overflowing. Even here what we do know fills our narrow hearts; and how little do even the best and most advanced know of this wondrous love! St. Paul's prayer for the Ephesian Church was that they might "know the love of Christ, which PASSETH KNOWLEDGE." He compared his love to the greatest earthly love, that of "a husband to his wife." "Christ loved the Church, and gave Himself for it." As we can only find out things we do not know by measuring them by things we do know, let us measure this friendship by what we know of earthly friendship. We read in Prov. xvii., "A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is borne for adversity," and again in Prov. xviii., "There is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother." An earthly friend is of no use unless he remains the same. One who loves me to-day and does not care for me to-morrow is useless. But Christ loves always—yes, through all. How soon even our real with us and we with them! But here is One who always loves, is always the same. When we have sinned and disobeyed Him we think, "He cannot love me now, something must be done before He can love me again." I know I often think so. But it is not so. He loves always, through all...

Then a real friend is for adversity. We have many friends in gladness and sunny days, but when poverty or sickness or bereavement and sorrow come, they leave us. Here is One whose love is never so great as when all other joys fail, who is always so gentle and loving in our sorrows. Again, earthly friends, however loving and willing, are often unable to help. He is ever able. They may be far away and not know our need. He is ever present, ever near. What a Friend He is!

Again, between friends there must be perfect confidence, and that is seldom found.

FRIENDS ARE NOT ALWAYS TRUE.

It is not so with Jesus. He knew of all the coldness and forgetfulness, the hardness and blindness, and yet He revealed Himself to us, and He forgives all. He knew of all the sins we commit now, beforehand. He loved us, even to die for us, while we were enemies and hated Him.

And not only is He our Friend, but He says we are his friends. "I have called you friends." He loves our friendship and delights in us, and He has given us this seal of his friendship: "All things that I have received of my Father I have made known unto you." It is not only that we can tell Him everything about ourselves, but that He tells us "all things that He has received of his Father." He has in his Bible told us all things that can possibly be of service to us. If we do not know them the fault is not his, for He sends his Spirit to reveal the things of God to those who seek for Him. And we may lean on Him for everything, lean all our weight, and the heavier we lean the more He is pleased. Love begets love.

Oh! what a blessed thing it is to open our eyes in the morning and to have our first waking thoughts fly up to Him, our Friend; feeling his presence ever with us, and to be able to say, "I shall go through this day at the right hand of the love of God." I would I could think of this as my own experience, but it may be the experience of all his children. Perhaps some here may be saying, "But I don't feel at all; I am hard and cold and dead. Sometimes I am impressed by a sermon or a prayer, but the next day, even the next hour, I am as unthinking as ever." Many to whom I have spoken lately, very many, have said,

"OH, IF I COULD FEEL MORE."

I tell you, all this about "feeling" is just a device of the devil. He will let you go on talking about feeling for ever, and resolving for ever, and the way to hell is paved with good resolutions. You say you can't come to Christ now; you must feel more and better yourself a little first. I tell you, you cannot do it. God does not say, "Feel and be saved," but "Believe, and thou shalt be saved." That's the only thing you can do. Feeling will never save you; being impressed and weeping won't save you. Nothing but believing, taking Christ just at his word that He died for you. Don't let Satan persuade you that anything else will help you, for it will not.

Which wants help the most, the man lying in a snowdrift benumbed, insensible, or the man who has just strength enough to try and get out? Is it not the first? Who wants help most, the drowning man who can struggle with the waves, and may perchance save himself, or the man who has sunk for the third time and cannot feel? You cannot help yourself. Christ is the Saviour for you, for He comes to help the helpless.

Perhaps you are saying "I am so vile, so abominable that Christ can't love me." But these are reasons for his loving you, for He is the friend of sinners.

Not the righteous; sinners Jesus came to save.

Oh! if we who know a little of this love of Christ realised it more, what different lives we should live. We live so heartlessly because we don't believe his love.

And to you who are unsaved, who say He does not love you, what does his Word say? "While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." We never heard of anyone dying for his enemies. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his FRIENDS." But He did it for his enemies. It is one of the greatest proofs of how much He loves his friends, if He loved his enemies even unto death. And you can have Him for your friend for the asking, nay, even for the "looking."

When you have believed on Him, then He will give you strength and grace to love Him and to feel as his child. "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name."

I wish I could speak to you more earnestly about this great love. Perhaps I may never speak to some here again till we both meet before the Judge. And when the great white throne is set, and the books are opened, what would you not give then to have the Judge for your Friend—to have all in those books blotted out?

And what will be your feelings then, when you think you might have had Him and you would not? There never will be such an easy time as now for you to have Him. Do not turn away. It will be harder for you to take Him to-morrow—not harder for Him, but harder for you. Oh! that none of you would go away now till you have found Him for your Friend.

* Notes of an address given at Wood Lodge, Streatham, une 4, 1860.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Hugh C. Wallace (of the Evangelisation Society) has just closed a successful tent mission at Stebbing, Essex. As a result of the services, several were led to decision for Christ and his Church.

Mr. Thomas Payne, from Manchester, took all the services at St. Andrew's Hall, Plymouth, during the month of June. So great was the blessing received by many that he consented to stay on for another month. Truly the heavenly gales have been blowing during these hot days and mightily refreshing the souls of the people. Pray for Plymouth. E. R. H.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has during the past month addressed large meetings in the open air, near the Round Pond, Clapham Common, also in the People's Hall, Boone-street, Lee. Last Sunday he delivered a lecture entitled "The Bible Triumphant" at the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, Clapham Junction. For some time past the atheistic party has been very active in South Wales, special lecturers visiting Pontypridd and the neighbourhood. In reference to an appeal from working-men of the district Mr. Bradlaugh purposes, D.V., in a fortnight's time starting on an open-air anti-infidel crusade. Prayer is requested for blessing on this special effort.

The annual temperance fête at the Crystal Palace will be held on Tuesday, July 13, and Mr. William Forbes, as in previous years, will be pleased to meet preachers and singers on that day at three o'clock, at the Bible Stand in the Palace. These services began twenty-six years ago.

Irish Evangelization Society.

THE simple instrumentality of this Society—earnest men telling of the love of Christ out of full hearts—continues to be used of God for a very gracious work in many parts of the sister Isle. During the last six months of 1896 an increased number of wooden halls (four) have been in use summer and winter; while during the former season the two tents have proved most efficient auxiliaries in the good work of evangelisation. Missions have also been held in various halls, barns, churches, and schoolhouses. The movable wooden halls involve a comparatively large expenditure for the number of meetings held, but have great advantages, and seem to be the most effective means of holding a mission in many places.

One remarkable feature of the past year's work has been the increased attendance at the meetings of Roman Catholics, to an extent which has exceeded all previous experience, and has covered a wider area of country. Though controversial preaching has been avoided as far as possible, the priests have generally made themselves conspicuous in opposition. Still, it is cause for thankfulness that many Roman Catholics have come and sat under the sound of the old Gospel night after night for weeks together. In the North of Ireland, in several places, the meetings have been large and crowded; and in all parts of the country the people have given freely of their small means to help on the work, £827 having been received as thank-offerings at the close of the missions.

The following extract from written testimony is interesting:—

"The seven weeks' mission which was held here by Messrs. Peat and Crozier was most encouraging in point of numbers, and much spiritual blessing has been experienced. The evangelists were enabled to reach the hearts of their hearers in a very remarkable manner, the spiritual tone of the entire neighbourhood has been raised, and your agents have been owned of God in a very peculiar way. Many here will thank God through eternity for your Society. The converts from this mission covered the district with a network of prayer-meetings, and when no speaker was available they read and prayed in turn, and several stood up to testify what God had done for them."

Mr. T. M. Carleton wrote concerning his meetings in the City of Limerick:—

"The hall is packed every night, and large crowds of Roman Catholics have been attending regularly. We could not leave before 11 p.m., as the Roman Catholics remained for conversation. This is very remarkable, for it is difficult to get them during the Lenten season."

While conducting a mission in Raphoe, co. Donegal, Mr. J. H. Crawford wrote:—"We had a very large meeting last night, the hall being packed with about 500. Over thirty gathered at 8 a.m. for prayer." Ten days later: "I met a bright young pupil of the Royal School here, reading Spurgeon's 'Safe Through the Blood.' He told me that last Sunday night, after the meeting, a brother of his and another young lad had a walk, and talked about spiritual things, with prayer by the roadside. God blessed this young fellow with a knowledge of sins forgiven then and there; while one of the others got into Gospel freedom on the following Tuesday night."

The hon. sec. of the Society is Mr. James Barton, Dundalk, who earnestly commends his evangelists and their cause to the prayers and efforts of Christian friends. This year began with a serious financial deficit.

The Outlook in Ireland.

I SPENT a recent Sunday in Arklow. This little town has long been before the public in connection with street preaching inaugurated by the rector, Mr. Hallowes, and his curate, Mr. Harrison. On the kind invitation of Mr. Hallowes, I preached twice in the parish church to very fine audiences, but I was specially anxious to witness the preaching in the streets, and see for myself the attitude and demeanour of the people. It will be well in the public recollection that for a considerable time the preachers had to be guarded by police, and that Mr. Hallowes and his curate spent a term in Wexford jail. Neither of the gentlemen just mentioned seem to have any appetite for dinner on the Lord's Day. Immediately after morning service they had some bovril in the vestry, after which they started for the services in the streets.

A small organ was carried to the church gate and a hymn sung. A considerable crowd lined the wall on the opposite side of the street, while heads were visible from two small streets running at right angles. Mr. Hallowes requested me to preach, as the people, he said, had come to hear me. For reasons perfectly satisfactory to myself I declined, one of them being my desire to be a spectator of proceedings of which so much has been spoken and written. Mr. Hallowes preached for about fifteen minutes. The people kept their position to the end, and a considerable number were walking up and down. Then the rector and his band, about twenty strong, moved into the street singing a hymn, and I walked down the footpath a little in the rear. There were considerable crowds at every corner, and whenever Mr. Hallowes saw a crowd the band halted, and he or Mr. Harrison preached.

I was thus present at four addresses in the heart of the town, and two more were delivered after my departure. There were certainly as many as 200 people within hearing distance at some of the addresses. I asked Mr. Hallowes if this was a typical Sunday, and he said it was not. He had placarded the town with notices of my advent, and large numbers, he said, had come out to see me, and probably to hear me. They certainly took steps to see me thoroughly. At one corner about thirty or forty women and girls had congregated. Seeing that I was walking on the opposite side of the street, they crossed over, so that during the whole of this service, they stood quite close to me. Crowds of school-children, principally little girls, formed a double line around me, staring with intense curiosity.

The most remarkable feature about the whole proceeding was that from the beginning to the end I heard not a single word of insult or disapprobation. After the evening service in the church a great crowd had congregated outside the church gate. As the rector and I passed out, I heard one of them say, "God help you," but nothing worse than that. A band was performing in front of the parish priest's house as we passed up the street. We walked right through the crowd, and were not interfered with in any way. Next morning I received a letter, written in convent caligraphy, begging of me to "repent before it was too late." I need not point any moral. I think it will be evident to the most superficial observer that Mr. Hallowes and his confrères have won a remarkable victory for free speech and familiarised the people with the preaching of the Gospel.

THOMAS CONNELLAN.

Dublin Medical Mission.—The work carried on by this mission continues to go forward with a steady increase, and many will be glad to hear of the numbers who attend now. Last Wednesday we had the largest crowd who have ever attended, 144 being present during the service, and 158 in all attending the dispensary that morning; we believe this large attendance was mainly due to the distribution of Australian Jubilee meat, which we were able to give out the previous day to 150 patients of whose need of help there was no doubt. We regret to say the Dublin Medical Mission never was so much in need of funds before. We were unable last month to pay our salaries fully, besides requiring money for medicine, rent, coal, and gas accounts, etc., and we have found it necessary to commence work at a new roof which will cost £70 extra. The Lord is using the work mightily in reaching Roman Catholics and others, and we ask for prayer that many may decide for Christ and not fear to take their stand boldly for Him. (Mrs.) E. EDITH FIGGIS, Hon. Sec.

Missionary Farewell.

A QUARTER of a century has passed in missionary service connected with the East London Training Institute, Bow-road, where meetings were held last Friday for thanksgiving and for taking leave of Dr. Harry Guinness, who is shortly leaving for Peru. A large party of outgoing missionaries for various fields of service, were also commended to God.

The afternoon gathering took place in Harley-street Chapel, adjoining the grounds of the Institute, the chair being occupied by Mr. T. A. DENNY, supported by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, and others. In a few genial opening remarks the Chairman recognised a wonderful development of missionary enterprise in our own times.

Dr. HARRY GUINNESS mentioned points from the annual report of the Institute, showing that the work grows in solidity and momentum every year. The annual average of applications is 183 men and women, out of which number some fifty-seven are usually placed on personal probation. This year an aggregate of 115 students have been in residence in Harley House, Cliff College, and Doric Lodge. The element of differing nationalities has been very marked among the students. At the close of this session the total output of the Institute will reach 970. While in training the students do a great deal of evangelistic work in the East-end of London, and 137 different centres have also been supplied during the past twelvemonth. Berger Hall, the centre of activity, is developing a medical missionary department, necessitating extension of premises. Deaconess work is actively carried on at Bromley Hall, and has been very successful. The expenditure under all heads runs to some £24,000 annually; and while God has graciously supplied the need the close of the session leaves some little deficiency. Dr. Guinness explained that his journey to Peru is undertaken for efficient organisation of existing missionary forces in South America. A visit to Jamaica will follow with the view of ultimately bringing native influence to bear upon Africa. Training work in the Institute is gradually broadening out so as to provide workers for Servia, Bulgaria, and even for India, as well as for the Congo and other familiar fields.

The theological department of training was represented by Rev. G. D. HOOPER, who spoke highly of the diligence and piety which mark the students under his care. Their first study is the Word of God, which uniformly occupies the forefront of instruction. Christian evidence studies have furnished a large proportion of successful passes and prizes in examinations. This speaker bore strong witness to the sterling worth of the training and of the staff engaged in it. Similar testimony was borne by Rev. JAMES DOUGLAS, another theological lecturer, who was impressed by the extent to which the Divine blessing rests on the work, and by the spiritual strength which God has vouchsafed in this connection.

From Hulme Cliff College came Rev. J. F. T. HALLOWES, the principal, who disclaimed the power to "make" missionaries: for they are spiritually born such. The training of the Institute is founded upon the conviction that Bible cream is found at the bottom, and also that an educated missionary has enormous advantages in many ways. Much care is taken to guard against the danger of contracting the spirit while expanding the intellect. Methods after the pattern of those shown by our Lord Jesus Christ have been earnestly sought for the benefit of men believed to be workers chosen of Him.

Miss LUCY E. GUINNESS, who has recently returned from India, traced her travels upon a map hanging near the platform, her visitation comprising spheres wherein twenty millions of people are unreached by any representative of the Church of Christ. In the hope of awakening God's people to greater realisation of this vast need, the painful facts, pathetically sketched this afternoon, are to be presented in a book which Miss Guinness hopes to have ready very shortly. After a few moments of silent prayer,

Rev. Dr. PIERSON spoke in a very instructive, loving, and encouraging way upon the serious business of preaching the Gospel in connection with its two great qualifications of faith and obedience. Higher criticism should be left severely alone, while we give people positive truth. Scholars of this world may be fools in the school of God; and his utterances are to be fathomed only by those who are led by the Holy Spirit. Critical studies under such influence are decidedly valuable. It is impertinent irreverence to raise the question whether Missions "pay," in view of God's requirement of obedience to a distinct command. God counts his messengers equally faithful whatever may be the attitude of the hearer. Who should dare to compare the ministries of Jesus Christ and of a Spurgeon, though the apparent results were so divergent?

Tea was served in the grounds, followed by an open-air gathering, the day closing with the Lord's Supper administered by Rev. F. B. MEYER.

Simon Stone.

BY FATHER TAYLOR, CHAPLAIN TO SEAMEN, BOSTON

Simon Stone, he spied a boat,
"Oh, here is a boat!" cried Simon Stone,
"I've a mind to try if this boat will float,
I'll fish a spell, if I go alone."

"Oh no," said the rest, "we are going too."
"Then jump aboard," said Simon Stone.
They sprang in the boat a happy crew:
Wouldn't you like to have counted one?

They rowed and rowed, they sailed and sailed;
"Small luck, small luck," said Simon Stone.
They tried and tried, and they failed and failed,
Till they ached in every muscle and bone.

They dipped and dipped, and they hauled and hauled;
"Not a fin for our pains," said Simon Stone.
"Hark!" cried one, "for somebody called.
Who can be out on the shore alone?"

"Never mind who, pull away, pull away!"
"Let's give it up," said Simon Stone;
"We have fished all night, we may fish all day;
Let's quit; I'm going ashore, for one."

Then the strange voice called from the shore again.
"Listen! Listen!" said Simon Stone.
And now in the dawn they see Him plain,
Walking along the shore alone.

"Throw the net to the starboard, and then you'll find,"
Cried the voice. "Let's do it," said Simon Stone.
So they dropped the net with a willing mind;
"Heave ho! there's a haul," cried everyone.

They tugged and they hauled, but they hauled in vain.
"Let's drag it ashore," said Simon Stone;
So they dragged and dragged with might and main.
"It's the Lord," spoke softly Cousin John.

"What! what! what!" cried the rest in the boat,
"What's that you are saying?" quoth Simon Stone;
"The Lord? Why, here then give me my coat."
In a trice he had it, and put it on.

"Why what in the world are you going to do?"
"I am going ashore," said Simon Stone;
And he sprang without any more ado,
Overboard into the sea alone.

Then the rest they looked and said with a smile,
"What a man to be sure is Simon Stone!
He's up to some queer thing all the while."
"How he loves the Lord!" said Cousin John.

Oh, he swam for life and he swam for love,
Till he stood on the shore with the Lord alone.
Who knows, but he and the Lord above,
How the Lord spoke sweet to Simon Stone?

Now tell me, boys, both old and young,
Did you ever hear of Simon Stone?
And have you guessed the riddle I've sung?
And is it a story you've always known?

Now tell me if ever you loved like him?
If ever you felt, like Simon Stone,
Whether I run, or fly, or swim,
I must have a word with the Lord alone?

Convent Supervision Memorial.—A correspondent writes:—"Can any of your readers account for the fact that during the present century no less than 865 convents have been established in Great Britain and Ireland, while not one of them is open to Government inspection? Surely such a state of things should not be allowed in an enlightened Christian country. An appeal, to be signed by the women of Great Britain and Ireland, is now in circulation to present to our gracious Queen, during this Jubilee year. I am doing what I can, and have a good number of signatures. I trust our sisters will rise to the occasion and do their utmost in this matter." Further particulars regarding the Convent Supervision Memorial may be had from Mrs. Arbuthnot, 2, Tressillian Road, Brockley, S.E.

A Forest Conference.

THE third Forest Conference of evangelists and others took place in Epping Forest, near Chingford, on Friday and Saturday last. The weather was lovely, and the proceedings throughout were of a most enjoyable and profitable character.

On Friday morning Mr. John McCall presided, and read John i. 13, and other Scriptures introducing the subject of sonship. Mr. R. C. Morgan referred to John i. 13, and showed that as our connection with Adam is by blood, our connection with God is by faith. The sonship of believers is based upon the sonship of the Son of God. Sonship is not merely physical, it is moral and spiritual. In John viii. Jesus told the Pharisees that if they were Abraham's children they would act like Abraham. They were of their father the devil, and the works of their father they would do. "Like father, like son." Jesus proved Himself the Son of God by doing the works of God. Let us, yielding ourselves to the indwelling Spirit, be "imitators of God as dear children." Rev. David Baron followed with weighty thoughts upon Hannah's great prayer-prophecy in 1 Sam. ii. 10; and Mr. Carver, of Norwich, indicated symptoms of reaction from the downgrade teachings of recent years, of which the confusion between Fatherhood of God in Adam, and the Fatherhood of God in Christ, has been the chief support.

In the afternoon, Mr. Stuart Thorpe spoke of the Preventive work of the Rescue Society. Some 17,000 young women had passed through its several homes in London and its suburbs. Mr. J. H. Gordon evoked much interest by his account of work in the West Indies. He was followed by Mr. J. E. Taylor on evangelisation in Buckinghamshire villages, and by Mr. Newton Jones, who spoke of methods and results of work among children. Then Mr. Charles Inglis recounted his experiences in Salt Lake City, with its open doors for the Gospel. The truly evangelistic singing of Madame Ryall was a delightful feature of this meeting.

So many gathered in and about the large tent for the evening meeting that the sides were thrown open, so that friends sitting under the trees might hear the speakers. Mr. Garstin was in the chair, and Pastor Fuller Gooch spoke with much spiritual power and acceptance of the work of God in bringing many sons to glory (Heb. ii. 10). "Manifestation of the sons of God" was taken up in detail by Dr. Neatby from John i. 10-13. Mr. Charles Inglis then drew some very practical lessons from Rom. viii. 14-19, showing that God's children find their pedigree declared, their position defined, their privilege stated, and their responsibility enjoined.

On Saturday morning Mr. R. C. Morgan (in the absence of a brother editor, Dr. Moore, of the Christian Commonwealth) and Mr. W. R. Lane spoke on the Stewardship of Believers.

In the afternoon, Mr. H. S. Ridings, Civil Engineer, connected with the Christian Alliance Mission of New York, spoke warmly of that institution, and of its founder, Rev. A. B. Simpson. It has 300 missionaries working in nineteen parts of the globe. Mr. Ridings vividly presented the needs of the neglected Continent of South America, which has 400 missionaries among its 40,000,000 of inhabitants. England has far more trade with South America than the United States has, yet the latter does much more for its spiritual needs than we.

Then Mr. McCall pleaded the cause of the Strangers' Rest, and Mr. Thomas Jackson gave a touching account of the lepers in India, on whose behalf he made an earnest appeal.

Mr. Weber, a young man, deaf and dumb, spoke by signs, which were interpreted by Mr. Garstin, jun. He said he was happy, though deaf and dumb. His simple sentences were very affecting and effective, and the pathos, not only of his words but of his appearance, moved not a few to tears.

Mr. H. D. Brown told some illustrative anecdotes of the good done by the Christian Colportage Association, and was followed by two of his colporteurs, ready and racy and tactful men, as indeed are the whole body of these invaluable men.

The evening meeting was addressed by Dr. McKilliam and Ned Wright. The tent was crowded, and on this, as on the previous evening, the Gospel was pressed home, and some souls were brought to decision for Christ. The last was a very powerful Gospel meeting.

Mr. A. Garstin, to whom the excellent arrangements were mainly due, has also received many letters expressing grateful appreciation of help experienced. Conferences of this kind involve little expense, are easily arranged, and are quite as useful in proportion to their size as great conventions.

The Brazil Mission.

ON Monday evening a meeting was held in Exeter Hall to take leave of Miss Sutter, who is shortly leaving England for Gospel work in connection with this Society, founded by the late Dr. Kalley. Mr. T. A. Denny presided, and introduced Rev. J. Fanstone, of Pernambuco, who has seen seventeen years' service for God in South America, where missionary effort is making great strides to-day in contrast with past neglect. But the field is so vast that all existing agencies fall far short of supplying its requirements, and, for the same reason, Mr. Fanstone had to confine his remarks to one district. In Pasa Trés the converts were doubled in six months. Four families came thirty-six miles to enjoy Gospel privileges in that place. A cluster of families make up the membership in a church of 200. The towns and villages all around are open to the Gospel, but there are not sufficient workers to occupy the ground. Mr. Fanstone read a letter lately received, full of detail, showing the great spiritual needs of the country.

Miss Sutter very earnestly advocated the cause of her adopted field of labour, and besought prayer for a double measure of God's Spirit as equipment for her work. Souls there, unsatisfied with the husks of Romanism, are showing signs of hunger for Him who is the real and only Bread of Life. Fervent commendation to God of Miss Sutter and other workers already in the field was made by Dr. H. W. Soltau on behalf of the meeting.

A copy of the Gospel of Mark, in Portuguese, snatched from a Popish bonfire, by a convert, was exhibited by Mr. H. Maxwell Wright as an object-lesson. He then introduced Senhor Braga, of Rio de Janeiro, and interpreted his very interesting account of conversion from Romish error to Gospel light, and firm stand for God under many difficulties connected with his business and social standing. God, however, has blessed him very much in these respects, and enabled him to become a liberal supporter of God's work in Brazil. At the time of his conversion there was much persecution up and down the coast; but since the proclamation of the Republic, much liberty has been found for the Gospel. The church founded by the late Dr. Kalley, in Rio, has become not only self-supporting but sustains a mission of its own. Resuming his own address, Mr. Maxwell Wright said he feared that unless the open door in the Republic were utilised, God might see fit to close it.

Dr. Rocha asked prayer for revival in the Brazilian churches, that native Christians may fully use their opportunities in the Master's cause.

Stirring words concerning the necessity of responding to God's call for more labourers in Brazil were spoken by Mr. H. S. Ridings, especially in view of the greater need of that country as compared with our own favoured land. While doing engineering business in the country for fifteen years, he had heart-moving experience of the need for Gospel light in a dark continent, and the way in which some are trying to meet the pressing necessity.

Dr. Maxwell gave details of the mission's present standing in regard to workers and stations, and showed the pressing need for a large increase in both particulars. He closed by leading the meeting in prayer that the vast needs of South America may be laid upon the hearts of God's people.

The Letter Mission.—This work of corresponding with earnest seekers after Divine truth continues to be honoured by God as an instrumentality for bringing souls out of darkness into light. Miss Woodrow, of 25, Rozel-road, Clapham, S.W., testifies that her correspondents do not cease writing as soon as they are saved, but look upon her and her helpers as friends to whom they may write in every time of perplexity. It is cause of rejoicing that they are passing on the message and standing steadfast. The work might be very largely extended by advertising more freely, but the amount of support does not permit; indeed, last year closed with a deficit. Among the correspondents was one who, though young, had gone far on the downward road, and wrote from the very depths of despair. The Lord gave a message of peace, and for two years now the lad has been trusting Christ and following Him.

Christian Colportage Association.

THE desire for reading on the part of all classes is ever increasing, and the eagerness with which both young and old devour literature of every kind is an evidence of the vast power for good or evil wielded by the printing press, while it is notorious that for many years the seeds of infidelity, vice, and crime have been sown broadcast over the land. Not less to be deplored is the extensive use of the printing press for the spread of Romish doctrines and blighting Rationalistic teaching.

For twenty-three years a service full of difficulty but attended with untold blessing has been carried on by the Christian Colportage Association, 37, Farringdon-street, London, E.C., of which Mr. H. D. Brown is secretary. At the close of last year this society had a staff of 123 colporteurs; and during the period of its useful existence no less than fourteen and a half millions of Bibles, Testaments, books, and magazines have been sold. Besides these more than ten millions of Gospel tracts have been freely distributed.

The peculiar value of the work lies not only in its effectiveness as a means of counteracting evil, but still more in its use as a most powerful agency for carrying the Gospel message from house to house by the printed page and the living voice of a servant of the Lord Jesus Christ. A few incidents taken from the colporteur's journals may serve to illustrate the extent, variety, and blessed results of the work:—

"To-day, when I called at a house, a servant girl told me, her face beaming with joy, about the conversion of her father, an old man who has been ill with consumption for two years, always greatly opposed to the Gospel. 'I have talked to him and prayed for him,' she said, 'and I do thank God that some texts I bought and hung up in his room have been used in bringing the poor wanderer home to God, and he is now truly converted. He seems to be dying, but is rejoicing in Jesus as his Saviour."

By some it is thought that colportage is only useful in country places remote from the means of obtaining books. At the house of a Christian lady in the West-end of London a colporteur found a kitchenmaid who did not possess a Bible, and induced her to buy one. The lady afterwards saw him and said that her servants could purchase any good books required at the shop of a Christian bookseller near. He told her about his sale to the maid. "What!" she exclaimed, "do you mean to say that a servant in my house was without a Bible?" Finding it was true she became much interested in the colporteur's work, purchased a number of his books, and said he would always be welcome.

"I have just heard," says another, "an interesting account of the conversion of a man who came to my market-stall some time ago with his little girl. She asked her father to buy her one of our Bible Stories. For a time he refused, he did not wish her to have anything of the kind. However, the little girl would have no other book, and at last the father bought it. When they got home she begged him to read it to her. The father believed neither in God nor in his Word, but had to read this book to please his child. After he had read a little, he began to wonder whether the book were true. Strange to say, to test it he compared it with the Book he had despised; and as he read the latter God's Spirit dealt with him until he cried for mercy and yielded himself to the Saviour."

Barracks have been regularly visited by the colporteur in one district, while another occasionally looks in and is welcomed at a large racing stable where a number of lads are in training as jockeys. One book sold on the sands at Scarborough was the means, under God, of the conversion of an old man past seventy years of age. A girl who came to the door showed the colporteur a memorial card relating to her brother's death. She had bought two cards with texts upon them and sent them to her mother, who put them on the wall of the sick lad's room. God used them to his conversion, and he died with the name of Jesus on his lips.

Colporteurs' visits are not invariably successful. The work is arduous and difficult, and not infrequently the visitor is received with angry abuse, while sometimes tracts offered are torn and thrown away. Still, as a rule, he wins his way, and, with patience, prayer, and tact, overcomes hardest obstacles, with blessed results.

In Southern Morocco.

By BUDGETT MEAKIN.

MANY supporters of Christian missions are unaware either of the need of workers in this portion of North Africa, or of the existence here of a most worthy agency called "The Southern Morocco Mission." In addition to the North Africa Mission with its thirty-six workers in North Morocco, there are also this mission here with a score of agents, the Central Morocco Mission at Rabat, the Alliance Mission of New York at Mequinez and El Kasar, the London Jews Society at Mogador, and the Bible Society with colporteurs itinerating where they can. One important feature common to all but the first-named Jewish Mission, is that they are undenominational, and that in none are the workers questioned as to their sect, so long as all are strictly evangelical. The Mildmay Mission to the Jews has now abandoned its work in Morocco, just as its workers were getting in touch with the language and people and ready to move up country, where practically nothing is being done for the Jews. All workers here hope that the decision may be reversed, and the agents retained.

Southern Morocco may be said to extend to the river Oom R'beeâ, and, except on its northern plains, its inhabitants are mainly Slooh Berbers, to whom Arabic is still a foreign language. These occupy the whole of the Atlas and adjacent mountain ranges, the province of Sousse, and the districts bordering upon the Sáhara. In the common belief that their ancestors were of the Christian faith till Moslem missionaries came among them, backed by fire and sword, supplies the Gospel messenger with a powerful lever in dealing with them, especially as they still retain a large share of independence, and have always shown a unknown to the plainsman. Thus there has always been more hope for work among them than among the Arabs and townsmen, but as yet they have hardly been touched, and only one or two have attempted even to learn their language.

Ten years ago a foreign sphere was being sought by Mr. John Anderson, of Ardrossan, for a number of young men and women trained to Gospel work in the Ayrshire and neighbouring county Evangelistic Unions, of which he was the leader, when a letter of mine to his organ, The Reaper, called his attention to the needs of Morocco. A breakdown in health demanding a change and rest, he came out to Tangier in 1888, and when Mr. E. F. Baldwin left the North Africa Mission to commence work in the untouched south, Mr. Anderson laid the matter before his friends, a party of whom were soon on their way to Mogador. The "Matthew x. lines" advocated by Mr. Baldwin not appealing to most of his fellow-workers, when he left for the East the work was reorganised as the Southern Morocco Mission.

For some time it continued to grow and spread, but since Mr. Anderson's call to direct the Bible Training Institute in Glasgow—a post for which he is pre-eminently fitted—it has been impossible for him to give it the attention it deserves. So for the last few years the extent of its operations has remained all but stationary, those engaged in the work, however, gaining invaluable experience for future extension under the able local direction of Mr. Cuthbert Nairn, who has made Marrákesh his headquarters. Two years ago Mr. Anderson's secretary, Mr. Hugh Paton, came out to Morocco for a period of practical acquaintance with the work, with a view to returning this autumn to take up the secretaryship at home, and to keep its claims before the Christian public. This, it is hoped, will bring about a forward and regular movement. The office of the Mission is the Bible Training Institute in Glasgow.

The stations already occupied are Marrákesh—the southern capital—and the ports of Mazagan and Saffi, in all of which medical work is carried on; and Mogador, Azammoor, on the Oom R'beeâ, Demnat, in the mountains above Marrákesh, and Tarudant in Sousse, are all needing workers, while several more are required for itinerating. In Marrákesh, where I write, the need is especially felt for a women's hospital, a small house being already in use for men. No centre like this exists on the coast, since from it may be reached the people of all the closed regions to south and east, for Europeans are not allowed in the mountains. And to none is Morocco so open as to medical women, for whom there is room for a dozen at once. Not only are the houses in the cities open to them, but they may often pass and be welcome in country districts

WHERE MEN COULD NOT GO.

A striking instance of this was the visit to Sousse last year of two of the North Africa Mission ladies, the only foreign women known to have been there, where men are forbidden.

For the proposed women's hospital in Marrákesh some funds are already in hand, though not yet enough; but if the scheme can take effect and a house be hired by this autumn, an English medical man has promised a winter's work there at his own expense, and to contribute to the support of some of the beds. The chief need of the moment is a qualified nurse to take charge as matron, and anyone interested in the scheme should communicate with Miss Perston Taylor, Marrákesh, viâ Mazagan, Morocco. Educational work is not at present possible, and in these lands public preaching is out of the question; but for personal dealing and Christian influence medicine and loving care for the sick open wide doors, whether in town or country.

The Famine in India.

IN our last issue, through an error, it was stated that the committee of Christian Succour to India had sent £11,000 to Bombay. Correcting this, Lord Radstock writes: "It is £1100 (eleven hundred pounds) that we have sent to our Bombay committee. Altogether, we have only been able to send over £7000. But that has been a life-saving of thousands. Many thanks for all your kindness in this and other matters."

Mrs. J. G. Potter, of the Baptist Mission, Agra, India, writes to us:—"The famine-stricken people—women especially—are sadly in need of clothing as well as food. Their requirements in this way are few, but, for two years and more, many hundreds of those round us can have had no money to expend on anything but their scant supply of food, hence the worse than tattered condition of their garments. It would give great pleasure to see several hundreds supplied with both skirt and chaddah (covering for the head and shoulders), but the latter is not a necessity—most of them are possessed of a rag that serves that purpose—and gifts cannot be bestowed lavishly during famine time.

"We have had some money sent us specially for clothing, but that is used up. With it over 250 skirts were made under my superintendence. This sewing provided eight days' food for ten hungry women, to whom I paid 5 pice (1½d.) a day for doing the work. These women, whom otherwise we should not and could not have helped, were chosen out of the scores of starving ones who crowded daily to our doors.

"Since providing clothing is a recognised form of relief work, and hungry women can earn their bread by making up the same, it seems to us far better to use material made by famine people than to purchase English-made stuffs. Unless money be sent specially for the purpose of providing clothing, we scarcely feel justified, much as clothing is needed, in spending money on such when so many are in need of food. Donations for this purpose may be sent direct to me or to Mr. W. Potter, 16, South-grove, Peckham, London, S.E."

Pastor Fliedner's great work in Madrid is meeting with opposition. Roman Catholic dignitaries have remonstrated with the Government of Spain, for they view the proposed Protestant college as an outrage upon the established religion. An ecclesiastical newspaper says:—"When Catholic Spain, that is to say the Spanish people, generously opens its veins in order to give all its blood, and opens its coffers to give its last coins upon the altars of patriotism, it ought not to be permitted that its religion should be struck in the face. An insult which will bring new conflicts to a nation already compromised with such serious and difficult enterprises, is an anti-patriotic task for which suitable anathemas cannot be found in history." Another organ of opinion in Spain says:—"It would be a crime of high treason such as can scarcely be conceived to propagate doctrines contrary to the religion of the State, to offend the Catholic sentiment of almost all Spaniards, to make public manifestations tending to augment the Protestant influence, and to introduce with religious division the torch of discord." These quotations indicate the importance of Pastor Fliedner's work.

French Priests in Revolt.

THE Evangelical movement among French priests is becoming disquieting to the dignitaries of the Church, and more and more encouraging to Professor Bertrand and the friends of the Mission to Converted Priests. In a recent letter, the Professor informs us that a priest had written him: "In a meeting lately a colleague called you a very dangerous heretic, and described your work as an anarchist bomb. So thoroughly am I convinced to the contrary, that I intend, as soon as possible, to leave my pagan church in order to follow Christ. My bishop knows that I preach the Gospel like a Protestant pastor, but he refuses to take notice of it, saying that so long as I wear the cassock I am not so dangerous as I should be if I were to throw it into the ditch—as I mean to do soon."

The action of Abbés Bourrier, Joye, Bonhomme, Corneloup, and other able men who have lately left the Roman Church, in face of threats and in spite of tempting allurements, has been much canvassed in the Press, especially in L'Eclair, one of the best-known political papers of the cheaper class. According to this paper, the spirit of revolt is spreading in the ranks of the younger clergy in favour of what is rightly called "a more simple and evangelical Christianity." There is a growing disposition to try to the utmost to use the Romish churches for evangelical purposes. Abbé Philippot, of Plomion (Aisne), having for some time done this, has at length been called upon by his bishop to retract his teachings. This he at once declined to do, and received sentence of excommunication. Writing since to a friend, the brave man says:—"At the present moment, being outside every church, I feel myself more than ever in communion with all souls that are living the life of the Gospel, under the direction of the Holy Spirit."

In the course of a published profession of faith, the Abbé says: "When the martyrs of the early centuries were interrogated before the judges on their faith, they answered, 'I am a Christian.' Following their example, I make profession of my faith in this one statement, 'I am a Christian.' I am a Christian because I am united to Jesus Christ by faith, and in Him and by Him I have pardon of my sins, and immediate communion with my heavenly Father. I am a Christian because the teachings of Jesus Christ are the law of my understanding; because the morality of Jesus Christ is the ideal of my life; because I know of no religion so perfect as that of Jesus Christ. I put the Gospel of Jesus Christ above every human word, and I judge of everything by the Gospel. In religious matters, human doctrines and institutions are praiseworthy if they are inspired by the spirit of the Gospel; they are bad if they go against the Gospel."

The Abbé writes thoughtfully on many points of teaching, controversial and otherwise, and in view of his words, following so rapidly upon similar manifestoes by other converts, it is not surprising that L'Eclair should speak plainly of "this Evangelical revival of the Christian conscience," by which the Romish bishops are actually "baffled." In many cases the bishops have hesitated to issue ecclesiastical thunderbolts, but Abbé Philippot has not thus escaped. Will our readers pray for him, and take a renewed interest in the work which M. Bertrand carries on among enlightened and converted priests? M. Bertrand's address is, 86, Boulevard Bineau, Neuilly, Seine, France.

Bible Flower Mission. — Grateful to the senses of many among London's sick and poor are the floral gifts borne by loving hands from this Mission into scenes of misery and suffering. The sight of bright flowers opens hearts for the reception of the accompanying cards with healing and peaceful words of divine truth. Removal has been made to a higher floor in the building, 110, Cannon-street, E.C., where the work which has been in operation for more than twenty years continues under the direction of the Hon. Sec., Mrs. Turton. We fear that, financially, the Mission has suffered somewhat of late through the demands of this Jubilee year. One of the hospital visitors found a poor woman very ill, to whom was read Eph. ii. 13. She said, "Do you think I am dying? I am not sure that I am ready. Please read the verse again." Prayer was made with her, and she declared, "I can now trust myself to Christ."

Herman Warszawiak.

WITH the greatest regret we record the following. We have had communications from America for some months past, which more than prepared us for this result, but we have abstained from giving publicity to them until the inquiry was concluded. Our information agrees with the report of the New York Tribune, from which we quote:—

At the morning service in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, on Sunday, June 20, Herman Warszawiak, the Christian Hebrew who has been seeking admission into the ministry of the Presbyterian Church, was publicly denounced as guilty on charges of gambling, and was suspended from the communion of the church. He had, as stated, applied for admission into the Presbyterian ministry; this led to an investigation into his character, and serious charges were brought against him.

The session of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, at the request of the Presbytery, began an inquiry into the charges, and examined the evidence very carefully. After a long investigation the result was made public. Dr. Hall, pastor of the church, was chairman of the session, and Silas B. Brownell, secretary. Anthony Comstock and others testified before the session, and their investigation resulted in finding Warszawiak guilty on all the counts except one.

The charges specified that while Warszawiak was a member of the church, and was engaged in missionary work among the Jews, and receiving aid from the public, he engaged in the practice of gambling and frequented public gambling resorts. It was known that the decision of the session would be announced on June 20, and a large congregation was present. Dr. John Hall was called away to New Jersey on account of the illness of a grandchild. Dr. Pritchard, of Alexander Chapel, took his place..

Just before the sermon was to be given, Silas B. Brownell, secretary of the session, rose and read the finding of that body as follows:—

"The session having deliberately considered the testimony in the case of Herman Warszawiak, a member of this church, charged by the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America with immoral conduct, as set out in two charges, supported by sundry specifications, and having listened to the testimony, arguments, and explanations which have been offered, as well by the accused as by the Committee of Prosecution, does judge and decide that the charges have been proved, and that the said Herman Warszawiak is guilty of the immoral conduct charged upon him.

"And the session does further judge and determine that the said Herman Warszawiak ought to be and he hereby is suspended from the communion of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church."

Convention at Coonoor.

MR. D. R. LOGAN, of the Ceylon and India General Mission, Coonoor, Nilgiris, South India, writes:—

"Our Second Annual Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life has come and gone, and our hearts are full of praise to God for the blessings bestowed. Thrice daily for the three days of the Convention an eager audience gathered to hear of 'The Double Inheritance: What Christ has in us, or rather seeks to have in us: What we have in Him: and how this realised will lead to a life of satisfaction and fruitfulness.'

"Comparisons on such occasions are, as a rule, not wise, but the feature of the gatherings was the Bible-readings in the afternoon on 'The Life of Fellowship with God.' The common missionary sin of letting work crowd out the needful communion with God was incisively dealt with, and the conviction wrought in the hearts of many was deep, and we believe resulted in definite confession and holy resolve to end that rule of things. As the provision for a life of fellowship was also plainly put no doubt that resolve will be displayed in action through the grace of the Spirit received.

"Quite a number of American and Canadian missionaries were present. As last year, we closed with a missionary meeting, at which stirring accounts of the difficulties and triumphs of work in the presidency were given. Oh, for a deeper enthusiasm at home in the evangelisation of India's millions, and for a more practical consecration on the part of all who are already interested in that Divine enterprise

GOVERNESSES IN FRANCE.

SIR,—Will you allow me space in your columns to make public a much-needed warning? It is not generally known in England that young governesses, teachers, and female servants who take posts in France can according to the law of the country be dismissed at any moment for no fault at all. Although they are entitled under these circumstances to eight days' salary, it is often stopped by their employers in repayment of their fare out, leaving them penniless.

From facts which have come before us we fear it is no unusual thing for girls to pay a heavy fee to an agency, and to go abroad to posts, believing that they are sure to stay for a month, and are sure of a month's salary in any case to pay their way back to England. Instead of this, in a few days they may be told that they "don't suit," and are literally turned into the street without friends.

Some cases of this kind have found their way to our Girls' Friendly Society Lodge in Paris (where respectable English girls of all creeds are welcomed as well as our own members), and we find by inquiry at our embassy that girls thus instantly dismissed can claim no legal redress at all in France. Girls cannot be too cautious in going to engagements abroad: they or their friends should make careful inquiries before starting; this can always be done through the consuls and embassies, and they should, when possible, take an introduction to the English chaplain.

We, in our office, undertake inquiries for our own members, and are quite willing to do so for any other girls on payment of a small fee to cover postages.—I remain, yours faithfully,

ELLEN E. BRADSHAW,

"IS VIVISECTION JUSTIFIABLE?"

SIR,—Does not your correspondent, "M. B.," beg the question at issue when he assumes that hypodermic injections possess diagnostic value capable of "an absolute settling of knotty and urgent points"? As most of such pretended diagnostics have been already abandoned, it is difficult to know to which he alludes.

I submit that, apart from the question of cruelty, the annals of medicine may be searched in vain for really useful discoveries due only to experiments on animals, whilst we now have an object-lesson in India, where profound irritation (falsely ascribed to religion and sanitation) has been at last caused by the long-continued outrages of officials, whose inspiration appears to be derived from the "science, falsely so-called," of a clique of over-confident bacteriologists. That they have received a check (culpable as have been the means employed) will at least prevent the reimportation of their noxious prophylactics amongst our unoffending fellow-citizens.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

EDWD. HAUGHTON, M.D.

Upper Norwood, S.E.

[Another correspondent quotes Prov. xii. 10, and Psa. xviii. 25, and maintains that vivisection contravenes the teaching of Christ as to patience, self-denial, and gentleness. A third, while pointing out that the question raised by "M.B." is not mentioned in Holy Writ, refers to the Mosaic injunctions, Ex. xxiii. 19; Deut. xxii. 6, 7, xxv. 4 (with 1 Cor. ix. 9), as implying that it is not God's design that the lower animals should be tortured, even for the benefit of mankind. Moreover, on the scientific aspect of the subject, we are reminded of the weighty conclusions regarding vivisection reached by Dr. Lawson Tait, an unimpeachable authority, and formerly an advocate of that which now he condemns, as quoted from his works in The Animals' Friend for August, 1896: "That it has proved useless and misleading, and that in the interests of true science its employment should be stopped, so that the energy and skill of scientific investigatros should be directed into better and safer channels. I hail with satisfaction the rousing which is evident in the public mind upon this question, and I feel confident that before long the alteration of opinion which I have had to confess in my own case, will spread widely amongst the members of my useful profession."—ED.]

Perth Conference.—This gathering will be held Sept. 13 to 16. The general subject will be "The Christian's Relation to the World: how he is to come out from it and be separated, and yet live in it and for it" (John xvii. 15-18, 21.) The secretary is Rev. Dr. Bannerman, Free Church Manse. St. Leonards, Perth.

PAUL AT THESSALONICA AND BEREA.—Acts xvii. 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"They received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily."—Acts xvii. 11.

THERE was no synagogue in Amphipolis or Apollonia, so the Apostles made straight for Thessalonica, the capital of Macedonia. They left Luke at Philippi (hence the third person is used in the narrative). Note:—

I. Paul's Heroism.—With wounds still sore from the scourging at Philippi they yet start at once on a hundred miles journey. What physical agony they must have suffered! The Jews dogged their footsteps wherever they went, yet, faithful to his people, Paul always went first to the synagogue (1-10). He met with punishments and disappointments enough to damp the ardour of the strongest, yet surmounted them all. More grace is needed to live the martyr's life like this than to die the martyr's death. It is Christlike to do good to our enemies. We should pray and labour for the conversion of those who hate us. We must look to Christ for the example and the strength to do this.

II. Paul's teaching at Thessalonica.—During the week he was working night and day for his own living (1 Thess. ii. 10), but on three successive Sabbaths he spoke in the synagogue. There is no better place to spend the Sabbath than in God's House. He reasoned from the Old Testament, by making clear obscure passages (opening, 3) that the Messiah of Scripture should suffer, be crucified, and rise from the dead (Isa. liii.). This is the point which the Jews would not admit. Their Messiah was to be wealthy, wise, and powerful in a material sense; a crucified Messiah was not the one they expected or would acknowledge. Paul compared the description in the Old Testament with the life and character of Jesus, and showed that they were identical (3). Many Jews, Greeks (who were often found in the synagogue for the reason stated below), and some of the chief women were converted. Among the most devoted followers of Christ when he was on the earth, women are still the most numerous, sacrificing and faithful in the Christian Church. It is no mark of weakness or degeneracy that more women than men are found in our sanctuaries today; it is but a repetition of Apostolic experience.

III. More Persecution.—The Jews were jealous of the success which attended the Gospel of Jesus, so they hired the rabble to harass the Apostles and attack the house of Jason, with whom the Apostle lodged. Foiled in their purpose (for, having received timely warning, they were concealed), the mob leaders carried Jason and others before the magistrates. Charges made (6-7): The first showed that the fame of the Apostles had preceded them, and that they were doing the work which Christ foretold (Matt. x. 34). The second is an attempt to make hospitality a crime. The third, if treason were meant, the accusers were much more guilty than the accused, for their Messiah was to dethrone all Cæsars and kings. The magistrates, although troubled, were wiser than those at Philippi, only making Jason give security that he would keep the peace.

IV. Berean Disciples.—Paul and Silas departed in the night—not that they had any fear for themselves, but to remain even a day would compromise Jason and the brethren—to Berea, a small secluded town sixty miles further south. Arriving there, the apostles go at once into the lions' den, but the mouths of the lions are stopped. God had prepared the hearts of the people to receive them. The Bereans were not prejudiced (16), for they searched the Scriptures. No man can do that faithfully without finding Christ. The reason why so many do not find Him there is because they are always looking for something else—mostly faults. "They are they which testify of Me." Christ is the Alpha and Omega of the Old Testament and of the New.

If the disciple comes with an open, diligent mind (11), the result is certain. "Therefore many believed." More Greeks were converted than Jews, because the latter had a religion in which they profoundly believed, while the Greeks had proved the falsity of their gods. They were without a real religion. No rest for the soul. Hence, when Paul preached, they gladly accepted Christianity, which brought so much light and comfort both for this life and that which is to come. It is ever so. They who feel their need of Christ get most of his grace. He came to save sinners. He will help in every time of need. The proud, self-confident know little of Him, but those who have heard Him speak in the "valley of the shadow" know the comfort of his rod and staff.

Y.W.C.A. Thanksgiving.

NOT the least significant of the numerous Jubilee celebrations recently witnessed was the great thanksgiving gathering in the Royal Albert Hall last Thursday evening. For an hour and a half preceding the time fixed to open the meeting, the enormous audience were gradually growing in numbers; and half this interval was pleasantly filled with some grand singing by a choir composed of a thousand members of the Association, conducted by Mr. Livesey Carrott.

Upon Lord Kinnaird (President of the British National Y.W.C.A.) taking the chair, the whole assembly rose to the strains of "God save the Queen." Then Archdeacon Sinclair led in the Thanksgiving Prayer, which concluded with a petition that God may enable Her Majesty, through the years that remain still further to consolidate the peace of the world and the unity of the Empire, also to extend the blessed bounds of the Redeemer's Kingdom. The General Thanksgiving followed, in which all joined audibly, beseeching God that his people may show forth his praise not only with the lip but in the life.

A long procession, directed by Dr. Barnardo, and composed of members representing various departments of the Association's operations, crossed the arena to the triumphal strains of the organ, and presented reports to the Marchioness of Ailsa, Lady Kinnaird, Lady Henry Somerset, and others upon the platform. Among the banners carried by this long array of maidens, bearing also garlands, wreaths, and flags, were those of "Foreigners in London," "The Flower Mission," "Foreign Missions," India, Japan, China (with girls in native dress), and others too numerous to mention. Frequent bursts of applause marked the glad emotions of the spectators at this pleasing sight.

A loyal address to Her Majesty was read by the Chairman, and this the Queen has graciously consented to receive at the hands of H.R.H. Princess Christian, patroness of the Windsor Branch. The choir followed in a hymn expressly written for this occasion by Miss Lucy A. Bennett, having the refrain—

In the great thanksgiving,
We would bear a part;
Voice we now the praises
Of the nation's heart.

Then Canon Fleming gave an eloquent recital of an ode specially composed for this celebration by by Rev. Canon Rawnsley:

O Queen, in the pause of the triumph and gladness of heart,
While the sons in all lands that proclaim thee have honoured thy name,
Shall the daughters of Britain be silent and not bear a part,
To tell forth thy fame?

The ode is published in "Sketches of the Y.W.C.A.," a well-illustrated and tasteful shilling booklet obtainable at headquarters.

Through the medium of a resolution the great gathering expressed its desire to "magnify the Lord in deep thanksgiving for his grace and goodness shown to our country in the long reign of our gracious Queen, and for her lifelong example in every relation." Moved by the Chairman, this found a fervent seconder in the Dean of Norwich, who declared that the Queen's exemplary and loving character is the nation's greatest treasure. In sharing the blessings which God has bestowed upon our sovereign, it is our duty and privilege to disseminate them far and wide from the inexhaustible resources of the ascended Christ.

Another special hymn, "Victoria the Great," (words by Rev. E. C. Ince, music by Mr. Livesey Carrott), was sung by the choir; and a collection was taken towards completing the purchase fund of the national headquarters, 26, George-street, Hanover-square, London, W. A sum of £16,000 has been contributed towards this object, but £4000 is still needed.

The fruits of this unique reign in raising the status of womanhood was another note of thanksgiving to Him who is higher than the highest, voiced by Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson. Would, said he, that the most illustrious woman of modern history might be present to witness such magnificent evidences as this bloodless Christian arena affords of the triumph of her own sex, reserved for these later years of her superb reign, in women who are devoting their lives to the service of Christ and of humanity. God be praised that the warm and loving heart and the sympathetic touch of womankind have been introduced with such glorious effect into work for Him. Lord Overtoun added some warmly appreciative utterances concerning woman's ministry and the desirability of its extension through individual effort and influence on the part of Association members.

The final note of glory to God was indicated by Mr. James Stokes, and it recognised the birth and advance of the Y.W.C.A. during this reign; so that founded in prayer by a group of eight women, it now numbers hundreds of thousands, and stretches out over the Empire, rooting and spreading in India, Canada, and the colonies, as well as at home. The Bishop of Sierra Leone rejoiced that the religion of Jesus Christ cares for women and children. Let our sisters, therefore, first lay hold of Christ's salvation for themselves, and then be earnest in spreading its blessing among all with whom they come in contact.

After the choir had sung "Our Association hymn" — "True-hearted, whole-hearted, faithful and loyal"—a limelight exhibition was given, illustrating the history of the Y.W.C.A. and its work in all parts of Her Majesty's empire. The pictures were ably described by Dr. Harry Guinness, and this brought the long and varied programme of a very memorable occasion to a close, the interest of the enormous audience being well maintained until a very late hour.

The writer of the article on "Johannesburg" in The Christian of July 1, is evidently not aware that there is at Johannesburg a Y. W. C. A. Home, the address of which is—Miss Mitchell, 42, Moor-street (between Bru and Jeppe-streets). Though small, this Home is in the hands of a true homemaker. We would not lessen but rather emphasize strongly your correspondent's statement that "at the present moment there is no place in the whole world more unfitting for a single woman than Johannesburg."—Very truly yours,

Annie M. Reynolds.

General Secretary World's Y.W.C.A., 26, George-street, Hanover-square.

The Y.M.C.A.

Mr. E. Davies, of Adelaide, has been appointed to the general secretaryship of the Association at Perth, West Australia, in succession to Mr. J. T. Kevern resigned.

The anniversary festival of the Adelaide Association, news of which is just to hand, was an unprecedented success. A thousand persons attended the tea, and at the subsequent meeting seventeen hundred were present.

The Northampton Association has purchased the Unitarian chapel, schools, and other property in King-street, with a view to adapting the same to its requirements. The premises are suitable and central, and will doubtless enable the forward movement to be well and efficiently sustained.

The Association at St. Helens, Lancashire, has made great advances in all departments since the advent to the secretaryship of Mr. George Holmes, late of the National Council staff. The great requirement at the present moment is a new building, as the old quarters in College-street are ill-adapted to the work.

Four members of the Bombay Association have died of the plague. A particularly encouraging work is now being carried on among soldiers and sailors. With the return of Mr. Henry Conder, president, the former are coming freely to the building, and a combined soldier and sailor meeting is being held on Sunday nights after church.

The quarterly council meeting of the North-Eastern District Union has been held at High Cross House, Benwell, Newcastle, when an "At Home" was kindly given by Councillor and Mrs. H. Crawford Smith to the members and friends of the District Union. There was a large gathering. The results of the Christian Evidence Society's examination showed that at Stockton, Middlesbrough, and West Hartlepool students had been awarded certificates. The council strongly recommended that the examinations be renewed next season.

For the first time the Christian students of France have met in convention with the double purpose of improving themselves spiritually and of considering what should be done to promote Christian influence and action among French University students. About 130 answered the call of the organisers of the convention — the French National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s and the Paris Protestant Students' Association— and came together in the grounds of Les Ombrages, at Versailles, kindly placed at their disposal by Madame Alfred André. The occasion was one of great stimulus and help to all those assembled, and will doubtless bear much fruit in the months to come, both in the Universities and in the various Associations represented.

Irish Notes.

No fewer than 15,000 children were examined last year in Holy Scripture in the Church of Ireland day schools in the united diocese of Down, Connor, and Dromore.

A tent for Gospel services has been presented to the "Irish Evangelical Society and Congregational Home Mission" by Mr. Josiah Goodman, of Clapton It is being used in gathering in the hitherto neglected in various places to hear the message of life.

At a largely-attended missionary conference held last week under the auspices of the Templepatrick Presbytery in Millrow Presbyterian Church, Antrim, a paper was read by Rev. Robt. Wallace on "Why so many children trained in our Sabbath-Schools do not enter into Church Communion." Rev. J. S. Crawford, of Damascus, delivered an address on "Mission Work in Syria," and Rev. W. G. Strahan, of Ahogill, spoke on the "Conspiracy behind the Public-house."

A conference of the Sunday-School Union for the Tullahogue Rural Deanery has been held at Cookstown, Rev. Dr. Jordan presiding, and amongst those present were Lady Lenox-Conyngham and Lady Ella Garnett. An illustrative lesson was given by Rev. T. J. McEndoo, and thoughtful papers were read by Revs. R. S. G. Hamilton and J. M. Young. The conference was the second of the kind that has been held at Cookstown, is likely to become an annual one, and promises to be a great benefit to the members of the Union. It was largely attended.

The French in London.

The thirty-fifth anniversary of the Mission to French-Speaking Foreigners in the Metropolis, held in the beautiful grounds of Grove House, Regent's Park, kindly placed at the disposal of the committee by Mr. and Mrs. Greer, drew between three and four hundred friends and supporters from all French-speaking countries, and many others besides.

The children of the French schools near Fitzroy-square, by their games, their songs, and their French "rondes," proved a great attraction. But the two features which gave the meeting a peculiar interest were, first, the presence of the superintendent of the Mission, Rev. J. Du Pontet-de La Harpe, marvellously restored to health after a long and serious illness; and, second, that of Pasteur F. Coillard, of the Zambesi French Mission. The young will remember to the end of their days how the latter gathered them round him on the grass, and told them in his own impressive way some of his startling adventures in Central Africa.

The report presented gave general satisfaction. The schools, near Fitzroy-square, have had 229 scholars, boys and girls, all foreign (the committee do not admit any others), 468 governesses have applied for situations, and 243 have availed themselves of the Bienvenue Home (North Kensington), exclusively intended for them; 447 young servant girls registered their names at the Société Protestante Française de Placement (Bayswater); 887 English families and schools applied for foreigners, and 71 poor children were sent last summer for a fortnight in the country.

The window gardening society is very popular, and brightens, no doubt, many a humble window round Fitzroy-square. At Christmas time 300 persons, children and parents, were gathered round the traditional tree; 200 copies of the Almanach des Bons Conseils, and 150 copies of the Almanach de la Jeunesse were given away, and twenty-three indigent families were enabled to eat a good meal and warm themselves on Christmas day.

In addition to a pastor and a curate, the French Reformed Evangelical Church in Bayswater, with which this mission is connected, keeps a colporteur who visits regularly about 100 foreign families around the schools, some of them anarchists, and gives away monthly among them, 100 copies of an excellent publication, "L'Appel." As to finance, the receipts for the year amounted to £2,465 9s. 7d., the expenditure leaving a deficit of £51 4s. 9d., in addition to liabilities of £427 3s. 5d. The chairman, and after him Rev Joseph Angus, D.D., Sir George Williams, Rev. J. J. Coxhead, and M. Coillard, addressed the meeting.

Olympia in Brussels.—We are trying to benefit the English girls, who, under Mr. Kiralfy, are taking part in the great show in Brussels. I am endeavouring, through Pastor Kennedy, to have the girls visited by English ladies, who would show them any little kindness in their power, and would, above all, try to win them by sympathetic and Christian help to a life of faith and love. I have offered to send a supply of Testaments and Gospels in French or English, as such may be needed, and should feel grateful for any help to purchase these.

THE BOOK WORLD.

Victoria the Good, Queen and Empress, is a bijou book especially designed for children. A bright little sketch is accompanied by high-class illustrations; contents and exterior alike render this an interesting memento of the present year. (1s. Gardner, Darton, & Co.)

Along the Medway. (6d. R. E. Taylor & Son, 19, Old-street, E.C.) This is another of the manuals for pedestrians which we owe to Mr. Walker Miles. All who have used his other books will want to get this and traverse the delightful field-paths which are to be found "along the Medway" and by many a picturesque Kentish town and village.

Modern Judaism and Modern Christianity, by Mrs. Baron, is a thoughtful examination of some recent utterances of a Jewish minister. Students of the Jewish question, and those who have been puzzled by "critical" views of the religion of Israel, will do well to read this useful pamphlet. (6d. Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel, 23, Boscastle-road, N.W.)

"Altogether Lovely," by H. D. Brown, is a volume of meditations on Him who is "the chiefest among ten thousand." It deals with the holiness and majesty, beauty and glory of the Son of Man. Here is food for the soul, which the spiritual palate must pronounce very good. Contemplative Christians will prize the book, and read it again and again. (1s. Marshall Bros.)

A Man of Plain Speech. By M. E. (2s. 6d. Headley Brothers.) A delightful narrative, partly historical, illustrating life among "the people called Quakers" in Scotland in the seventeenth century. Its old-world flavour and the simple modes of life and speech that pertained among the Friends in those days of narrower freedom, give a piquant interest to the pretty story.

Baptismal Regeneration in the Church of Scotland, an open letter to Dr. John Macleod, of Govan, and the Remanent Members of the Scottish Church Society. By Dr. Theophilus. (6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) Reprinted from The British Weekly, this letter shows sacramentarian tendencies and teachings to prevail just where some of us would least expect to find them.

Unveiling the Papacy: Revelations of the Great Mystery: Union with Rome: A Solemn Message and Warning from Heaven to Every British Subject. By James L. Wood, author of "The Hidden Hand," "The World's last Crisis," etc. The title-page fully describes this composite pamphlet, which is in large measure a compilation from well-known works, and a collection of facts and statements from recent periodical literature. Taken as a whole, these pages deal with sorrowful apostasy and issues of the utmost gravity. (1s. Marshall Bros.)

William and Louisa Anderson. Compiled by Wm. Marwick. (5s. net. Andrew Elliot, Edinburgh.) This is a bulky book of some 660 pages, and it is over-loaded, we think, with too many details. But the sympathetic reader will find the memoir, which is largely autobiographical, a very readable one, both from its personal interest, and from the information that it gives of mission effort on the West Coast of Africa and in Jamaica. This worthy couple laboured long and faithfully in the foreign field, and we trust the story of their devoted service will prompt some to consecrate themselves to the same noble cause.

The Evangelist's Bible Digging, and some Treasures he has Found. By Henry Thorne. (1s. Alfred Holness). Those acquainted with Mr. Thorne's early expository works will know what to expect from this little volume, which deals in his lucid and reverent style with the Gospel of Matthew, a portion of exceeding interest and importance, and the leading characteristics of which are too little understood. There can be no question about the quality of these nuggets; and it is a real pleasure to be able so heartily to commend the book. Though full of suggestive hints, it is, after all, less critical than it is practical; it appeals, therefore, to the general reader, and not merely to the smaller circle of recognised Bible students.

Mitchell's Mechanical Diagrams. No. 1. (G. Stoneman. 3s. 6d.) In connection with his own evangelistic work, this diagram was constructed and used by Rev. John Mitchell, and has been published for the use of Sunday-school teachers, evangelists, and others. The subject is one of great interest and supreme importance, as it represents the Destroying Angel passing over the door protected by the redemption-sign, whilst he enters with unsheathed sword the second door, exactly similar in other respects, but death-doomed, because the conditions of deliverance and safety had not been fulfilled. It is an impressive object-lesson, and one which would not be easily forgotten. The size of the diagram and the clear bold type of the wording makes it suitable for platform use.

Obituary.

REV. WILLIAM SPILLER COX.

Of this devoted young missionary, whose departure we briefly announced last week, The Church Missionary Intelligencer for July says:—"Mr. Cox went out for the first time last January to Sierra Leone to meet the pressing need of assistance to the Rev. W. J. Humphrey (Principal of Fourah Bay College) in his duties as secretary of the Mission. Our deepest sympathy goes forth to the bereaved parents and other relatives and friends of our deceased brother."

Mr. Cox showed great promise from childhood. A resolute will, early sanctified, made him a valiant soldier of the cross at Westminster School, and afterwards at Oxford. Ordained in November, 1893, he did good service for two years at Peckham. Notwithstanding that he had thus learned the great needs of city populations at home, he heard and obeyed the call to the foreign mission field. Accepted by the C.M.S. in January, 1896, after a year's special preparation, he started for Sierra Leone. His last words, written from a bed of sickness, were: "He doeth all things well."

REV. DR. GOOLD.

The death is announced of Rev. William Henry Goold, D.D., of the Martyrs' Free Church, Edinburgh, which took place last week. Dr. Goold had been ailing for some time—in fact, for the past three or four years he had been suffering from a painful disease, the result of a chill caught while travelling on the Continent on business for the National Bible Society. But until about a year ago he was able to take part in the work of the congregation.

Born in 1815, Dr. Goold was the only son of Rev. William Goold, then minister of the Reformed Presbyterian congregation in Edinburgh. From the very outset of life, therefore, young Goold was brought up under pious training and noble example. He was sent at an early age to the Edinburgh High School, and both at school and college his career was exceptionally brilliant. After leaving college he proceeded to the study of divinity at the Reformed Presbyterian Hall, then placed at Paisley. Here he was trained by the well-known brothers, Drs. Andrew and William Symington, one of the daughters of the latter afterwards becoming his wife. In 1839 he was licensed, and shortly afterwards called to be the colleague and successor of his father.

From 1840 until the year of his death, Dr. Goold's whole energies were directed towards consolidating and building up the congregation to which he had been called. As a pulpit orator he had few rivals for noble, persuasive eloquence and massive grandeur of thought. About the year 1860 he was appointed eastern secretary to the National Bible Society of Scotland, and for thirty-six years he has been an unwearied labourer in this important field. In 1876 the negotiations for union between the Free and Reformed Presbyterian Churches were brought to a happy consummation, and in 1877 Dr. Goold, in compliment to the Reformed Presbyterian Church, then united with the Free Church, was elected moderator of the latter. Dr. Goold's edition of the works of John Owen, the great Puritan divine, amongst other products of his pen, is a masterpiece of solid learning and critical acumen.

PRINCIPAL BROWN, OF ABERDEEN.

Many will hear with sorrow of the departure of the venerable Dr. David Brown, Principal of the Free Church College, Aberdeen. Although he had attained the ninety-fourth year of his age, Principal Brown, until a comparatively recent date, displayed remarkable activity, but in the month of April last the weight of years began to manifest itself in very marked degree. On Monday of last week the aged divine had are lapse of extreme weakness, which indicated that he felt the end was approaching.

On Saturday morning, Miss Brown, in the course of her tender watchfulness, asked her father whether he did not feel so well, as he had not asked for the newspaper to be read, but had merely inquired who was to preach the next day. The reply was that he had had a good night, but he seemed extremely weak. At midday he repeated in a clear voice lines which he greatly liked—

> And when I'm to die, receive me, I'll cry;
> For Jesus He loved me, I cannot tell why.
> But this I do find, we two are so joined,
> He'll not be in glory, and leave me behind.

He asked to be left quietly to his own thoughts. After about an hour he said to his daughter, "Read me the hymn, 'Happy day, when Jesus washed my sins away.'" This was done, but he wished for none but the two lines, and repeated them,

> Happy day!
> When Jesus washed my sins away.

These were his last words. At 5.40 p.m. he fell asleep, quietly and sweetly without a cloud of care.

Dr. Brown was a native of the city in which the greater part of his long life was spent. He was the son of Provost Alexander Brown, and his mother was a Chalmers. He came of a family which for generations has been a strength and blessing to the north-east of Scotland; and shared with many of them a fine musical taste, a quick sense of literary style, great mental activity, and deep religious feelings. After passing through the usual courses of study at the Grammar School and at Marischal College, he graduated in 1821, and was licensed to preach in 1826. His first sphere of work was in London in the great congregation of Regent-square. Circumstances led him to the Metropolis after the completion of his theological studies, and brought him into contact with Edward Irving, whose assistant he became. For eighteen months he held this appointment, but was unable to work any longer in harmony with one whose views differed so widely from his own. He was then ordained to a charge in Banff, and shortly afterwards married Catherine Dyce, sister of Mr. William Dyce, R.A. In the Disruption movemen. he took a prominent part with the Evangelical party He made frequent contributions to theological literature, his works including commentaries on the Gospels, the Acts, and the Epistle to the Romans. In 1857 he was appointed to the chair of Apologetics in Aberdeen Free Church College, and in 1875 he succeeded to the principalship. He held degrees from Aberdeen University and Princeton College, Jersey, U.S.A. About three years ago he received the Royal Order of St. Sava from the King of Servia for editing his commentary on the Gospels for translation into the Servian tongue.

Among his most interesting writings may be named his "Life of John Duncan," and among his most valuable, his exposition of the Gospels in the well-known Commentary of Jamieson, Faussett, and Brown. He took a zealous part in the revival movement of 1859, and gave earnest support to the work of evangelists, whether visitors from America or of native development. One of his last literary efforts was to write a sketch of the work of grace in Aberdeen under Richard Weaver thirty years ago, for inclusion in the forthcoming memoir of that well-known evangelist.

Personalia.

Miss Annie R. Taylor is on her way to England. She will be accompanied as before by her Tibetan servant Puntso and his wife. Miss Taylor expects to be in England about three months, and to be able to attend the Keswick Conference, and address meetings on behalf of the mission. Her address will be 22, Cromwell-crescent, South Kensington, S.W.

Rev. Dr. T. L. Cuyler has received the distinction of Doctor of Law from his alma mater, Princeton University. The degree was conferred upon him and ex-President Cleveland at the same time. The event has been the fitting occasion of kind and gracious things being said of the good and venerable man, whom many institutions of learning have now delighted to honour.

Mr. F. Dixon-Jones was united in marriage to Miss Julia F. Stone, on June 26, at Dartford, Kent. Prayer is asked that through this union great blessing may result in the Lord's work in Spain. Mr. Jones has been a worker in Barcelona for some years, chiefly among lads and young men, and souls have been saved through the various classes and meetings held amongst them, as well as by individual work. Miss Stone's work has been partly in Grosvenor House Young Women's Institute, Greenwich, partly in holding missions in the English villages, and partly in missionary work in Spain. The Lord has given more than thirty faithful co-workers, by whose means the present work is being carried on both at home and in Spain. Their future address will be: Pasage de la Concepcion 10, Pasco de Gracia, Barcelona, Spain.

Zenana B. and M. Mission.—Those who would see something of what is accomplished by the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, cannot do better than send for "Pictures of Our Work," which will be gladly forwarded from the offices, 2, Adelphi-terrace, W.C. These excellent illustrations, produced from photographs, tell their own story in a way which altogether eclipses the medium of mere words, and cannot be looked upon by any Christian eye without evoking sympathy. During the last three years the mission has largely increased its village work. Women in the villages are more easily reached with the Gospel than those in the towns; and a number of candidates who have offered for this important field are ready to go out when funds are available. One picture represents a scene near Lucknow, in which district the distress, caused by the famine, has been so acute, that Miss Wahl's whole time has been devoted to relieving the famine-stricken population.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

REV. H. NEVILE SHERBROOKE has resigned the living of Clifton, in consequence of weak health.

The Bishop of London presided recently at the fortieth annual general meeting of the London Diocesan Home Mission. The report showed that twenty-six mission clergy were now working in connection with the Mission in twenty-four districts in various parts of the diocese.

The Bishop of Perth appeals for help for the Church in Western Australia. The diocese of Perth has an area of about one million square miles, with a population of 160,000. With such a population it is impossible for the Church to be self-supporting, especially as there are no leisured classes.

The Archbishop of Dublin presided at luncheon in the Convocation Hall of the Church House last Friday, when the Church's duty to and work among the outcast was considered. The Church Army system of dealing with the outcast, by which over fifty-two per cent. receive a fresh start in life, was briefly explained.

The Bishop of London has appointed Rev. J. E. Watts Ditchfield, curate of St. Peter's, Highgate, to the vicarage of St. James-the-Less, Bethnal Green, vacant by the resignation of Rev. C. Moon. Mr. Ditchfield has been for over five years curate of St. Peter's, Highgate, where he has largely helped to build up a very fine afternoon service for men.

A choral festival which has just been held at Wells Cathedral included a "choral Eucharist," when the whole of Merbecke's Mass was used, including the Benedictus and Agnus Dei, while after the consecration the O Salutaris Hostia was sung. The Protestants of Somersetshire should take note of these Romanising tendencies, and not fail to let Bishop Kennion know what they think about them.—The Rock.

The presence in England of the many colonial and missionary prelates for the Lambeth Conference has suggested a new series of Simultaneous Meetings very much upon the pattern of those of the C.M.S. The proposal comes from the Boards of Missions, who have chosen the first complete week in October (usually given over to the Church Congress) as the best date. There will be no endeavour to push the claims of specific societies; the one object will be to bring home to the conscience of the Church her duty towards the unevangelised world.

Congregational.

A tablet is to be erected in Eccleston-square Church to the memory of the late Dr. Hiles Hitchens.

Rev. W. T. Fernie, of Maitland, has been appointed minister of Courtenay Church, Wellington, New Zealand.

Rev. A. D. Philps, who has concluded a thirty-three years' pastorate at Coggeshall, is proceeding to Paris in connection with the McAll Mission.

Mr. W. E. Hawkins, of Strathfield, Sydney, in conjunction with Rev. James Buchan, has been appointed secretary of the Union for New South Wales.

A representative conference of ministers and members, convened by the West Midland Federation, has been held at Spencer-street Chapel, Leamington, to discuss a paper on "The Modern Dearth of Conversions."

At a meeting of the Colonial Missionary Society it was proposed to render special help to the churches of Napier, Newtown, and St. Clair (New Zealand), and to send out a deputation to visit the Australian colonies.

The committee of the Irish Evangelical Society and Congregational Home Mission has completed a plan for district councils (northern, middle, and southern) for more effective work in Ireland. All Congregational Churches in Ireland will assist in working the plan.

The executive committee of the Notts Congregational Union at their last meeting unanimously passed a resolution expressing their very high regard for Rev. J. Calvert, pastor of Addison-street Church, Nottingham, and earnestly hoped that he might be restored to health.

Rev. J. W. Atkinson's golden jubilee and also twenty-eighth anniversary of settlement as pastor were celebrated at Latimer Chapel, East London, on Sunday last, amid tokens of continued prosperity. Rev. A. Jeffrey preached in the morning, and Mr. Atkinson in the evening, to large and interested congregations.

At a meeting of the London Missionary Society, a sympathetic welcome has been accorded to Rev. D. D. Green, just returned from Madagascar after only three years' service, on account of the total breaking up of Christian work in the Antsihanaka district following on the French invasion. Mr. Green, who had been in danger from illness and from marauding bands, stated that the work in Antsihanaka had been entirely destroyed, there being nothing left to mark the former work in that province.

Rev. James Ervine having resigned the pastorate of the Congregational Church, Kingstown, a farewell meeting was held, presided over by Sir Robert W. Jackson, Bart., C.B., on Wednesday evening, at which he and Mrs. Ervine were presented with tokens of love and esteem. On the following evening, at a meeting in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., at which all denominations were represented, Mr. Ervine was presented with another illuminated address. Mr. Ervine's future address will be Newcastle, county Down.

Calls.—Rev. J. R. Hughes, Abergele, to Soar and Jerusalem, near Mold; Rev. Herbert G. Brown, of New College, to East Ham; Rev. J. D. Williams, Flint, to Penry Memorial, Chester; Mr. D. T. Thomas, of Hadleigh, to Clare Church.

Resignation.—Mr. Fred. Robinson, of Lidget Green.

Baptist.

Rev. J. Thomas, of Liverpool, has declined the call to St. Andrew's, Cambridge.

At Bow Church, Bow-road, forty-nine new members have been added during the past year.

College-street Church, Northampton, will celebrate in October its bicentenary. The church is to be repaired.

The completion of twenty-one years' pastorate by Rev. R. Bastable has been lately celebrated at Loughwood Church.

Miss Jessie Beckingsale, science mistress in the Girls' High School in Gateshead, has been accepted by the Zenana Society for the mission field.

Rev. M. Lister Gaunt, of Helston, Cornwall, has accepted the pastorate of the church at Sandown, Isle of Wight, and will commence his ministry on July 11.

Rev. H. and Mrs. White, of Yukusu station, Upper Congo, are now, under medical orders, on their way to England, accompanied by Rev. J. R. M. Stephens.

At the last annual meeting of the committee of the North Wales Baptist College, a resolution was passed in favour of amalgamating the three existing Welsh colleges, but the final settlement of the question is to be left for the decision of the various churches throughout the Principality.

Rev. W. C. Minifie's recognition services were held on Wednesday last week at Sion Baptist Chapel, Bradford. A sermon was preached by Rev. C. Spurgeon, of London, and a public meeting was presided over by Alderman Nicholson, of Wakefield, and addressed by Revs. J. H. Hollowell (Rochdale), T. G. Tarn (Harrogate), and Wm. C. Minifie.

Rev. Daniel Jones, of Agra (Baptist Missionary Society), reports that about 2000 famine sufferers are receiving help in his district from missionaries. Gratuitous relief is given, but where men and women are able and willing to work, employment is provided, such as spinning, weaving, grinding corn, and digging. Rev. Gogon Ghunder Dutt, writes that "The famine grows more and more fearful month by month; some of the villages in the Kally Gunge district have become totally depopulated."

A recognition service in connection with the settlement of Rev. Alfred A. Savage as rector of the Salters' Hall Baptist Church, Baxter-road, Islington, N., was held on Wednesday last week, and proved to be a most successful and encouraging meeting. The public meeting was presided over by Rev. W. Hardy Harwood, president of the Islington Free Church Council, and addresses were subsequently given by the pastor, Revs. J. H. Shakespeare, M.A. (Norwich), Alfred Bax, of Reading (the former pastor), G. P. McKay, and others.

The tenth anniversary of Cann Hall Church, Leytonstone, was celebrated last week, simultaneously with the first anniversary of the settlement of Pastor H. F. Gower. Progress was reported in every department. Ninety-nine new members had been received, most of them on profession of faith, and all the agencies of the church have made progress and been consolidated. At the public meeting on Thursday, addresses were delivered by Revs. J. E. Bennett (Hackney), J. Felmingham (Wandsworth), and the pastor, whose work, thorough and aggressive, continues to yield fruit among young and old.

On Tuesday, last week, the quarterly meetings of the London Baptist Association were held at East Hill Chapel, Wandsworth. At the morning meeting for ministers Rev. A. F. Riley read a paper on "The Application of the Gospel to the needs of to-day." In the afternoon Mr. B. J. Greenwood read a paper before ministers and delegates on "The difficulties which beset Christian men in business through the prevailing spirit of desire for wealth." A public meeting was held in the chapel in the evening, when addresses were delivered by Rev. F. A. Jones (of Islington), Sister Alice (of Hammersmith), and Rev. D. H. Moore (of King's Cross).

Change of address.—Rev. H. F. Gower, to 59, Carnarvon-road, Stratford, E.

Methodist.

Nearly twelve hundred ministers are expected to attend the Pastoral Session of the Wesleyan Conference at Leeds.

At the Auxiliary Fund Committee, which met recently, Rev. Walford Green presented a favourable report. The ordinary sources of income are flourishing.

A new mission church has been opened in Elm-street Whitefield, near Manchester, by Mr. J. Neill, jun., the founder of the mission, in memory of his mother.

Memorial-stones of a new church have been laid at Blowick, a rising district of Southport, by the Mayoress. Accommodation is being provided for 850 worshippers.

Mr. and Mrs. Clegg have resigned their positions as evangelists in Newcastle-on-Tyne P.M. First Circuit, and intend to devote themselves to special mission work.

Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., has again placed his public hall at Littlestone-on-Sea at the disposal of a number of London ministers, who will each spend a fortnight at that watering-place.

Sites for a women's shelter, home, and coffee tavern have been secured by the Manchester Mission at Ancoats, and for a men's shelter and labour yard and office premises in Oxford-street.

A new missionary hall and Sunday-schools have been erected in Jennings-street, Groves (Hull Circuit). The hall seats 600, there being also an infants' school and twenty classrooms. The total cost is £3500.

The desirability of closing Lever-street, Manchester U.M. Mission, is being discussed. The Manchester and Salford Free Methodist Guild consider the work too important to be dropped. The difficulties are wholly financial.

Rev. D. E. Jones, Llandderfel, has left for India in order to open up a mission field, in connection with the Bible Christians, among the tribes inhabiting the district of Lushai, bordering on the Khassia and Jaintia Hills, Assam.

A reunion of old U.M. teachers has been held at Bellfield, Rochdale, to celebrate the diamond jubilee of the school. A former teacher, now ninety-four years of age, made a speech and sang. Among those present was one who had not missed a single anniversary for fifty-nine years.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's scheme for a provincial assembly, representative of the whole of Welsh Wesleyan Methodism, was discussed at a special conference at Chester. The British Conference will be asked to remit the proposition to the North and South Wales Synods.

A new mission is to be established, to be called the "Central Ireland Mission," having its headquarters at Athlone, and embracing the work of the Athlone Circuit. There will be a committee of management, and Rev. Wm. Harpur has been appointed superintendent, with Rev. J. H. Morton as his assistant.

The Foreign Missions Committee has made several alterations in its constitution for the ensuing year. Rev. Marshall Hartley will preside at the quinquennial General Synod of the Indian districts, to be held early in 1898. He leaves England almost immediately after the completion of his official duties at the Leeds Conference.

A draft constitution for the association, under the new Act, of the Wesleyan schools in South-Eastern England, including part of the metropolitan area, has been issued by the Education Committee. The governing body will be chosen by the managers, one member being allowed for every four schools, the number so elected co-opting additional members.

Presbyterian.

A new church and schools are to be erected in Harehill-avenue, Leeds.

Rev. Dr. Lorimer, of Boston, will preach at Marylebone Church on July 13 and the six following Sundays.

While Dr. Monro Gibson is absent during the month of August his pulpit will be occupied by Rev. Dr. Milligan, of Toronto.

Rev. L. M. Gibson has decided to decline the call to Jarrow, as his friends are anxious for him to continue his pioneer work at Southend-on-Sea.

Rev. Robert Wylie, who resigned his charge at Canonbury at the last meeting of the North London Presbytery, has sailed for New Zealand with his family.

Rev. J. C. Gibson, M.A., of Swatow, has been appointed Lecturer on Evangelistic Theology in the Free Church Colleges for two sessions (1898-1900). Rev. Andrew Scobie, M.A., of Rochdale, is the new Moderator of the Presbytery of Manchester.

Rev. R. J. Adamson, formerly English Presbyterian minister at Beddington, has returned to this country after some years' residence in Canada, and the Presbytery of Newcastle will recommend the English Synod to readmit him into the ministry.

The annual report of the Presbyterian Church of Penang (Straits Settlements) for the year ending March 31 last, shows that the congregation continues to make satisfactory progress under the faithful ministry of Rev. William Murray, M.A., formerly of Crook, County Durham.

Rev. J. Morgan Jones, of Cardiff, Moderator of the General Assembly, presided recently over a large meeting at the Trevecca Theological College. It was reported that eighteen candidates had presented themselves for the entrance examination, and that thirteen were successful. The work of the college has maintained a high level of excellence.

The diamond jubilee of Rev. Dr. Andrew Thomson has lately been celebrated at Broughton-place United Presbyterian Church, where he has laboured for fifty-five years with great success. Dr. Black, of Wellington Church, Glasgow, preached in the evening, and spoke of Dr. Thomson's fidelity and devotion to his duties, of his eminence as a preacher and religious writer, his wisdom as a councellor, and of his able advocacy of keeping the Sabbath Day. Dr. Thomson spent the first five years of his ministry at Lothian-road Church. He is retiring from active duty.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. G. A. THEOBALD, at Bloemfontein, for some years a preacher in Wesley circuit, Halifax.—Rev. R. W. BRYANT, for thirteen years Wesleyan missionary in the Orange Free State.—Archdeacon DOBINSON, in West Africa.—Mr. W. C. PARTON, of The Bury Times, a devoted worker in the Bury Church and school.—Mr. J. SLIMMON, deacon of Spicer-street Congregational Church, St. Albans.—Mr. A. H. Yarrow Home for Convalescent Children.

AT the south end of Broadstairs, closely approaching Ramsgate, is an institution of a very unique kind, fully endowed and quite independent of subscriptions for support. It was the experience of the founder and many friends that there are thousands whose means under ordinary conditions are barely sufficient for their wants, to whom in abnormal circumstances, such as the sickness of a child, with its attendant expenses, life is a bitter struggle—men and women often of gentle birth and education, but too self-reliant to make their necessities known outside their own households.

At the end of last year the institution had been open seventeen months, and letters had been frequently received from parents expressing gratitude for the care and attention bestowed on their children. A small weekly payment is required on behalf of each child, and the average stay is three weeks. The trustees are anxious for public co-operation by recommendation of deserving cases of the kind for which the house was erected, in order that the full complement of children may be secured throughout the year. Further information may be obtained from the secretary, Mr. T. Fredk. Myers, at the London Office, 73A, Farringdon-street.

Seaside Services.—We hope to resume Sand Services for young people at Aberystwith, in Wales, about the middle of July, for four or five weeks, and to go thence to Barmouth. We should esteem the fellowship of Christians in earnest prayer for much blessing; also the help of reliable workers for Christ.—G. BENNETT.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, July 5, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BEFORE starting for the seaside, will our kind readers bear in mind the children of alley, court, and slum, who are waiting upon their generosity to afford them the joy of a "day in the country"? Our fund is not yet up to its usual water-mark; we therefore once more plead the cause of the little ones, and ask for a speedy response.

The Keswick Convention will be held a week earlier than usual this year, viz., from the 19th to the 24th inst. Particulars as to reduced fares may be obtained from J. T. Budd, Esq., 26, Lake-road, Keswick, in return for threepence in stamps.

Following Keswick comes the Students' Summer Conference of the British College Christian Union, which will be held this year, not at Keswick, but at Dr. Grattan Guinness' Missionary Training College at Curbar, Derbyshire. It is a beautiful spot, and any non-student visitors who are fortunate enough to be in the locality will be well repaid by attending the meetings, which will be addressed by Dr. Handley Moule, of Cambridge, and other well-known speakers. The session is from July 24 to August 2, and particulars may be had from the general secretary, at the offices of the Union, 93, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

After the calm, a storm. The universal burst of happiness and goodwill which signalised the Jubilee is already being put to the test. No sooner had the rejoicings begun to wane than a dark cloud rose over the Indian horizon, where it will be a hard task to allay the disaffection which has already caused the loss of hundreds of lives. Lord Salisbury last week gave utterance to some unusually pessimistic words regarding the slow progress of the negotiations between the Powers and Turkey. And the engineers' dispute with their masters threatens to assume calamitous dimensions at home. Here are problems to be faced and solved, and the afterglow of the Jubilee may well be used to temper and ennoble the spirit of those who have to deal with them.

A well-known Indian journalist, Mr. Wm. Digby, C.I.E., in reviewing the present situation in India, expresses the disquieting opinion that there is greater discontent in that country with British rule than at any previous time, not excepting even that of the Mutiny. Then it was the army that rebelled, the people for the most part being loyal at heart. Now it is the people that are alienated, and the feeling is not confined to the ignorant. He does not see any real danger of a rebellion, the people having no organisation. This, however, is slender ground for complacency; it is such widespread disaffection lying behind the recent outrages that constitutes the present danger. There seems to be needed a more sympathetic attitude on the part of the official class, and a greater allowance for the Indian point of view. The present crisis calls for wisdom and moderation quite as much as for firmness.

There is one bright spot in the dark and troubled sky: the famine has caused an extension of irrigation in the North-Western provinces, Punjab and Sind, with beneficial results. Thus the permanent and regular supply of water takes, in these districts, the place of an irregular and occasionally inadequate supply. Calamity has its lessons which no man and no nation can afford to ignore. The connection between hunger and discontent is always close; therefore, anything that our Government can do to increase the supply of the necessaries of life will help to maintain peace and order.

The latest move of the Sultan is to appeal over the heads of the Ambassadors to their respective sovereigns for their countenance to the retention of Thessaly. Replies were at once despatched which must have brought cold comfort to the Porte, as they were unanimous in "advising" the Sultan to accept the terms offered. If this will convince the military party in Turkey that their dream of reannexing Thessaly is vain and idle, well; but it is likely that this appeal is but another link in the policy of procrastination at which the Sultan is an adept. The extraordinary subtlety with which he baffles and defeats the combined diplomatic skill of Europe would be matter for admiration were it not exercised consistently on behalf of oppression and wrong-doing. If only these powers were exercised on behalf of liberty and progress, what influence for good might be not exercise!

Twenty-eight years ago the manufactured iron and steel trade of the North of England established a Board of conciliation and arbitration, which has done its work between masters and men with the happiest results. Men are put upon the Board who are prepared

To meet all the questions before them in a fair-minded manner, and to discuss them honestly and straightforwardly, not attempting to misrepresent or hide anything.

Its success is attributed to the spirit of mutual confidence, respect for each other's opinions, and the desire to be candid and "straight." The working-men representatives on it recently expressed a desire to honour Mr. Whitwell, who has been its president for twenty-two years, and their thought was carried into effect the other day, when a handsome presentation was made to him. He confessed that if he had at all leaned towards the side of the men, it was because that was the weaker of the two. This sight of employers and employed forming a common court of appeal for the settlement of differences is much more edifying than that of strikes and lockouts. We join cordially in Mr. Whitwell's hope that the principles of his Board may guide thousands of men whom the Board itself does not represent.

The decision of the Court of Appeal in the betting case brought before it has caused great rejoicing in betting circles. One influential journal which greatly favours "sport" calls it "common-sense at last," and believes that if the case is carried to the House of Lords, the supreme tribunal will declare the decision to be authoritative and binding. It is to be hoped that it will be carried forward, so that we may know where we are. If professional betting, which is one of the scourges of our times, is to be protected and encouraged by law, the sooner the law is reformed the better. The Daily News is of opinion that "to suppose the House of Commons, or the Government of Lord Aberdeen, meant to punish bookmaking under a roof and to allow it under the sky is preposterous and absurd." Six judges—five criminal judges and one of the Court of Appeal—as against five, are of the opinion of the Daily News. The Times desires fresh legislation. Until we get it, there will be at every gathering of men for sport a carnival of betting with which local magistrates and the police will now be practically powerless to interfere.

On the morning of the storm I was worth four hundred pounds; now I am worth nothing. I cannot think of the future, but I keep on working.

So writes an illstarred Essex farmer, after viewing the havoc wrought by the recent terrible storm—the right spirit, truly, in which to meet calamity. And there are many others like him, equally distressed, equally brave. At the best of times it is only by hard living and industrious habits that farming can now be made to pay. The Mansion House fund will have to be a generous one if these thrifty families are to be kept, as they deserve, from sinking.

Miss Foster, one of Miss Annie R. Taylor's helpers on the border of Tibet, writes on June 13 a graphic account of the earthquake there. She had herself a narrow escape: "One plank is held by one nail only; but for that the wall would have collapsed across the threshold and blocked me in yesterday." Again, she says: "The barrier on the right side (east) is only a heap of rubbish...Turning my glass on the monastery, I saw it is an utter wreck...only a low bit of wall remains. Those words kept ringing in my ears, 'That those things which cannot be shaken may remain.'...As I sat and looked at that shattered wall, the thought came to me, 'Does it not mean something, that in a few short minutes the hand of God has thrown down both the barrier walls (for they say Galihka is a more complete wreck than this one), and also the temple of heathenism that confronts the entrance to Tibet?' How easily He has broken these 'gates of brass!' Can He not as easily break the less material ones?"

It is a curious and suggestive fact that so many brewers and publicans bring up their children as teetotallers. Mr. Wakerly, the secretary of the Band of Hope Union, said recently in an interview with a representative of the Daily News:—

You will be surprised to hear that we have the children of many publicans. The trade as a body may be against us, but the individual publican is as fond of his children as any other parent; and none knowing the curse of drink so well as he, it is often the case that he is only too willing for his child to join us.

There could scarcely be a greater compliment to the temperance cause than this, or a surer guarantee that it is worthy of the support of all who value the well-being of the community. If all parents did as these publicans do, we should not have many drunkards in the next generation.

Manfred speaks of an order—

> Of mortals on the earth, who do become
> Old in their youth, and die ere middle age,
> Some perishing of pleasure, some of study—
> Some worn with toil, some of mere weariness,
> And some of withered or of broken hearts.

It seems as if this order were rapidly increasing. Scarcely a week passes but we are horrified with some new tale of child suicide. What drives so many youths and girls into this insanity? Are their brains overtaxed by study or the worry of life? The seclusion of childhood is broken in upon all too soon by the rush of the battle. Lessons of repose and quietude, reliance upon God and meditation upon his Word, too seldom find a place in the curriculum alike of old and young. More time spent in communion with God would be the salvation of thousands of busy men and women. Those who even for a brief time daily walk in his green pastures find that it restores the soul.

The gravest question of the coming Methodist Conference at Leeds is the foreign missionary work, which is said to be "in a critical plight." It has quite recently been extricated from debt, but there is a want of elasticity in the regular income. Work grows quietly and constantly, but the income, if increased at all, is increased by means of extra exertions. Hence there will never be proportionate needs and means until they grow together. The same thing is true, to a large extent, of other great societies. The world is opened by Him who holds the keys, but the Churches are not ready to enter in to one door after another. Opportunity of service and readiness to serve are not co-ordinate. Such a spirit of consecration is needed as shall compel Christians to give both men and means as God has given to them.

In his striking address on the "Secret of of Christian Experience" to the students of Bala Theological College, Dr. Robertson Nicoll made some pungent remarks on the tendency of some theological thinkers to draw a sharp distinction between the authority of Jesus Christ and his Apostles in matters of doctrine. He pointed out that these Apostles used the intensest expressions to describe their relation to Him, such a relation of utter humility, obedience, trust, worship, intimacy as almost passed into complete identification, and as regards the subjects with which they dealt, he said:—

> No man may speak without the spirit of revelation. All human imaginings and suppositions are as idle as the chattering of sparrows. We have, therefore, to say either that we have no light, that the so-called revelation may be cancelled, that we must not concern ourselves with it, that we must content ourselves with the imitation of our Lord's earthly life, or else we must admit that the Holy Ghost glorified Christ by taking of his and showing it to the Apostles.

These words bring to a sharp issue one of the subtlest perils of modern Christian scholarship. There is something plausible in the idea that as Christ is alone the Truth, and the fountain-head of revelation, his own teachings must possess a higher authority than the derivative teachings of his nearest followers. This view loses its force when we remember that even our Lord's own words have been received through the medium of the Apostles, and that if their presentation of Christian doctrine is to be depreciated, then we have no guarantee that they have accurately transmitted the teaching of their Master in the Gospels. While, therefore, we must give due allowance for individual standpoint and personal peculiarities in the writers of the Epistles, the substance of their doctrinal teachings must be accepted as the "mind of Christ," which they so emphatically claimed to possess. "The Apostles must in the nature of the case be trusted all in all or not at all."

There are many signs in current literature of a deepening revulsion against the hard materialism of a few years ago. A softer spirit is abroad; the soul's yearnings are more widely acknowledged; there is a readier place found for the mystery of life. A thoughtful reviewer of Maurice Macterlinck's new book on "The Treasure of the Humble" puts it thus:—

> We are in the midst of a great revolution of thought, which is touching literature and speculation alike—an insurrection against everything which assumes that the external and material are the only fixed things, the only standards of reality.

This is a long way from Tyndall's attitude as president of the British Association, in which he credited matter with "the promise of potency of all life." And it is typical of a wide change that is coming over scientific thought. The soul has a way of reasserting its claims over all theories that exclude it from its central place. No solution of its problems abides save that based on the Gospel.

Has not the point almost been reached beyond which loudness in head-gear cannot farther go? The exaggerated hats, grotesque in shape, their floral erections and feathery elevations, their elongated bows and startling colours, are an astonishing exhibition of feminine submissiveness to the tyranny of the milliner.

Peter tells us that in the old time the holy women who hoped in God adorned themselves in the incorruptible apparel of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. And Paul desires in the Spirit that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, and (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works. Those qualities which Peter and Paul desiderated are not "up to date." Modest apparel, with shamefastness and sobriety, the incorruptible apparel of a meek and quiet spirit, are with many becoming things of the past. The rule of the Parisian theatres will be necessary in English places of worship, that ladies take off their hats during the performance. The last word is not used unwittingly, for with such worshippers such will the worship be.

Do mothers remember that in dressing their children in the height of fashion they are sowing seeds of pride in their young hearts, and preparing thorns for their own pillows by and by? Is this training up the child in the way she should go? Is it forgotten that modest apparel leads to modest behaviour and modesty of mind? That the reverse of this is also true? and that modesty means much more than "not immodest"? Remember the everlasting circles—action and reaction. Modest apparel tends to modesty of character, and modesty of character will clothe itself in modest apparel.

An esteemed correspondent writes from a Midland village:—

> Sometimes I think you take a pessimistic view as to the country villages. The place from which I write has had holy and devoted clergymen for at least a hundred years; now there is a very different ministry. But with the old people especially, the fruit of times gone by remains, and with scarcely any human help they cling to the Lord, and follow Him far more closely than many who have greater advantages.
> So it is in other villages that I know. There is often, also, earnest, quiet work carried on which is little known. In a village in Herefordshire, in which I reside, a heavenly-minded Christian squire does a clergyman's work among his tenants. He holds evangelistic meetings once a week in winter, and there the church is not dead either.

It is highly gratifying to hear of such villages. We so often receive reports of another kind; hence our particular pleasure to learn of devoted labour and its results among the rural population.

We are told that we should no longer preach "the wrath of the Lamb" and the inevitable punishment of sin, because people have outgrown the influence of fear, and are now amenable only to the attractions of love. The story which comes from Florida gives the lie to this theory: The negro preachers believed that the world was coming to an end, inferring it from the recurrence of spots on the sun, The people were so wrought upon by their fears of the coming judgment that some confessed to having committed murders, and for which in one case an innocent person had been punished. The preacher who gives his auditors credit for having outgrown the influence of fear labours under a delusion. He must declare the whole counsel of God.

The attempt of Father Gerard to prove that the Gunpowder Plot was a mare's nest, and that it was engineered by the Government of James I. in order to arouse anti-Catholic feeling in England, has been carefully investigated and refuted by Prof. Gardiner in a volume published last week. He proves that there is no shred of evidence for such an idea, while the traditional view is upheld by abundant documentary evidence. The attempt to reverse the verdicts of history may be made once too often. There is scarcely a great villain who has not found someone to whitewash him of recent years, and there are plenty of people who in their search for novelty accept these reversed estimates. Guy Fawkes and those who inspired him in his seditious purpose is not likely to be elevated to the peerage of the world's martyrs.

Apropos of this, there is nowadays a widespread and worthy desire to modify the sentiment of the second verse of our National Anthem. But it was very real when first used though it may degenerate into mere cant when the original occasion is forgotten. According to an old manuscript copy of the National Anthem preserved in the Antwerp Cathedral, the verses were composed on the discovery of the Gunpowder Plot, to which event the words "frustrate their knavish tricks" especially refer. Bearing this fact in mind, probably everyone would be prepared to sing the verse with deep sincerity.

A correspondent in India writes begging the friends of Hindu children to abstain from sending them dolls. He gives facts in support of his plea, and concludes:—

> It is clear that mission dolls given as prizes to Hindu children have been utilised by the heathen in their idolatrous worship.
> Taking this fact into consideration, would it not be politic to refrain from the practice until the people come to understand that "the worshipping of God by images" is expressly forbidden by the Divine Being?

Our friend does not doubt the kindly motives that have prompted the gifts. It is clearly a case in which there has been "evil done by want of thought" rather than "want of heart."

WHEN a man has to tell of the travels of his own life he has often to use that little word "I." It is an unpleasant word to both speaker and hearer. I have therefore to ask you to bear with me patiently, and to pray for me. I have no wish to exalt myself. I have nothing to boast of. My only desire is to exalt Him who revealed Himself to Moses as the great and only "I AM." In consenting to tell the story of his grace to myself—one of the chief of sinners—I am moved by the hope that others who feel themselves sinners will be led to say: "If God's love and grace availed for Richard Weaver, then none need despair."

I was born in the little mining village of Asterley, in Shropshire. My father's name was George Weaver; he was a farm labourer. My mother's name was Mary. They lived in a thatched cottage. They had four sons: John, the eldest; then George; then Thomas; and, lastly, myself. I was born on June 25, 1827. I don't know that my father's wage, from year's end to year's end, ever averaged more than ten shillings per week. There were not many dainties to be had out of that.

But with all this absence of dainties we were happy. We would, however, have been happier far if the Lord had reigned in my father's heart. My mother had not obeyed the command, "Be not unequally yoked." I am sorry to say I was the son of a drunken father. I could tell some sad tales of sorrow that I witnessed when quite a child. Many a time have I clung to my mother, and cried to my drunken father: "Don't kill my mother!" I can remember my mother, with her arms around Thomas and myself, pleading in prayer, and my father standing over her with an axe uplifted, and swearing that he would cleave her in two if she did not give over praying. I can see her face now, tears rolling down her cheeks, as looking at the axe, she tightened her grip on us and said to my father, "Ah, George, you cannot let it fall without God permits."

In those days the collier's child had to go to the pit when very young. I began when I had just turned seven. I was up in the morning at half-past four, and off to the pit. In the winter months I saw the daylight only on the Sunday. I praise God for better days for colliers. They have shorter hours now, and more time to prepare for the Sabbath. It grieves me to see the poor use that so many make of this greater leisure. I was a child, not eight years old, when I used to be raised out of bed on the dark mornings, weeping. My poor mother would go along the lane with me to the pit, encouraging me as we went.

The seam of coal that I began to work on was only thirteen inches thick. I had a piece of rope, called a girdle, put round my waist. This girdle had a chain attached to it. The other end of the chain was hooked on to a sleigh, laden with coal, and I had to crawl on my hands and knees and draw the sleigh along. The roof was not high enough to prevent my back hitting against it, nor was I able to keep my sides clear of the bruising. My back and sides were often so sore that I could scarcely hold up, but we were obliged to keep at it till it was time to go home. Then my mother used to wash me with salt-and-water. Only those who have gone through them can conceive the hardships of collier boys of that time. We could not be sold; but otherwise we were not better off than slaves. Down in the coalpit from five in the morning till nine (and often till ten) at night, ours was a life of dreadful suffering.

In the coal-pit I got mixed up with boys who cursed and swore and told lies, and I became like them. At first I shuddered at the things they did; but by degrees that wore off. Thus one defence of the soul was broken down. By-and-by I began to think the other boys got on better than I did, simply because they cursed and swore so much; and thus was a breach made in a second defence of the soul. I remember the first time I uttered an oath. How often I wished I had not done it! When I went home at night and was going to bed, my mother saw that something was the matter with me, as I got into bed without praying. She only thought I was ill, and she said to me:—

"I can see, my dear child, that you are ill to-night; so I will pray for you."

With what fervour did that mother plead with the Lord to bless her boy!

But, alas! that oath was only the beginning of sin. It was like the letting out of water. I went on, adding one sin to another. Still the mother prayed for her erring child, and to prayer she added personal entreaty. I remember that I used to leave my work, and go into the fields; and she has followed me there for hours, entreating me, with tears, to be a good boy. It was all to no purpose. My heart was steeled against her counsel.

When I was thirteen years of age my brother John got married. On the occasion of his marriage drink had, of course, a prominent place. Indeed, the ceremony would not have been considered complete without it. Up till that time drink had been to me like wormwood or rue tea. I had already acquired the accomplishments of dancing and boxing, and now I was to learn drinking also. They gave me one glass, and that one glass made me drunk—yes, drunk—and I was put to bed drunk at thirteen! Thus I had got fairly launched on the stream of sin. After this my mother's voice had no power to stay me. Wicked youths were my companions; drinking and fighting were my delights; and old men encouraged me in sin. Even my godfathers themselves were amongst those who incited me to fight. In these circumstances it is scarcely to be wondered at that my progress in sin was exceedingly rapid.

One night, when I was between seventeen and eighteen, as I was drinking with some of my mates, a man who stood nearly six feet in height began challenging any one in the room to fight with him. No one accepted the challenge. At last the pride of my heart rose, and I said to him, "I'll fight thee."

They said he would kill me. I replied that I could die but once. When we stripped someone cried out, "David and Goliath." In the fight he knocked me down thirty-two times. My brother Thomas kept carrying water in his boot and throwing it over me to keep the swelling down. At last I crushed one of my opponent's eyes. Of course, after that the fight was in my own hands, and he gave in and acknowledged that he was beaten. I thought I was a great man when they thereupon christened me "Undaunted Dick"; but I still carry the marks of that battle and feel the effects of it, and shall feel them to my dying day.

And yet God has granted to me a gracious forgiveness of that hour of sin. Years after that fight I was preaching in a little Primitive chapel; the place was crowded. A tall man, with grey head, and blind of one eye, sat on the pulpit steps. I saw the tears running down his cheeks. When I came down from the pulpit he took me by the hand, and pointing to his sightless eye, said: "Do you see that? Do you know me?"

I had forgotten him; but he went on to say:

"You did that; but, praise God, I can now see Jesus as my Saviour, and I am on the way to heaven with thee, Richard!" We praised God together.

At the Naval Review.

LAST week we gave some particulars of Christian effort at the Naval Review, from the pen of Mr. Charles Cook. Several other correspondents write us on the same subject. "A Helper" in the work carried on by Mr. Hogben, at the Welcome Mission, Portsmouth, writes:—

"One evening a very interesting incident occurred. A young sergeant in the marines came in to see Mr. Hogben, to tell him that five years ago he heard him preach in the Empire Music-hall, and was converted that same night. Filled with joy and peace in believing, he wrote to his mother, who desired to know more of this great change in his life, and eventually found Christ. Now he had the joy of relating that, one by one, all his family (at one time engaged in the public-house trade) had come to Jesus, had given up beer-selling, and were at the present time working and living for Him who redeemed them, and that he traced the whole glad history back to that night five years ago."

Miss Ridout, of the Gosport Soldiers' Home, writes:—

"As we steamed along the lines, picking up the workers from the other ships, it was delightful to hear how in every case the books had been well received by the sailors. We sang 'All hail the power of Jesu's name' as we neared or left each ship's side. The verse 'Let every kindred, every tribe' seemed very real on this (as someone expressed, it 'Missionary journey, but with the hearers brought to us,' and Mr. Hogben prayed earnestly that the seed sown on the waters might find an entrance in many hearts. Later some of the German sailors found their way to our Soldiers' Home at Gosport, where they had a hearty welcome from our men."

Another friend writes: "The band of workers, understanding the different languages, numbered 45, males and females. The steam launch was provided by Captain Vicary, of Southsea, and each ship was boarded by the helpers told off for the purpose, and the reception on the whole was most encouraging. A substantial cheque from Mrs. Robertson, of the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, Hampstead, being received, a good supply of Illustrated Gospels in French, Italian, Spanish, and English was obtained from Mr. Walters, 84, St. Paul's Churchyard, and these were gladly received. A grant of Gospels in different languages had also been obtained from the British and Foreign Bible Society. All who took part in the work are thankful to have been thus enabled to confess the Master to whom they belong, and since the distribution a service of thanksgiving has been held to praise God for his goodness in helping in this interesting service."

It is noteworthy that on board each of H.M. ships assembled in the Solent for the great Review daily morning prayers were conducted for their officers and crews, whilst on Sundays the captains "caused the public worship of Almighty God to be solemnly, orderly, and reverently performed in their respective ships," whether chaplains were present or not. The Church pennant floating over nearly the whole 165 ships of war on Sunday morning was a sight to give rise to much reflection and thankfulness. It is greatly to be wished that this custom of the early navigators could be more generally revived in the mercantile marine. The captains of several of the merchant ships at Spithead held Divine service on board, but most of them were dependent on the Chaplain of the Missions to Seamen and his staff in the mission cutter "Eirene," who conducted religious services with the several crews. Her Majesty's happy reign has witnessed many ameliorations of life at sea, but these are specially noteworthy in vessels in which the regular worship of God brings kindliness and brotherhood on board.

Rom. viii. 36, 37.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THESE are among the greatest words ever spoken by man, and are the more remarkable when we consider them as gathering up and recapitulating the experiences which immediately preceded their utterance.

It was towards the close of Paul's third missionary journey. About three years before, he had left the Syrian Antioch for the third time, after a sojourn of some duration (Acts xviii. 23). His eager spirit could not rest amid the comparative comfort and ease of the vigorous church-life which was establishing itself there, but yearned with tender solicitude over his converts throughout the region of Galatia and Phrygia. He therefore again passed the Cilician Gate, traversed the bleak volcanic tablelands of the upper or highland country, stablishing all the disciples, and working towards the Roman province of Asia. This lay to the S.W., on the seaboard. He had been previously forbidden to enter it (xvi. 6), but his steps were now as clearly led to it as they had formerly been restrained. Thus does our Sovereign Lord withhold his servants from the immediate fulfilment of their dreams, that they may return to them again when the time is ripe, and they, too, are more thoroughly equipped. The experiences of Paul in Greece were of the utmost possible service in fitting him for his ministry in that thickly populated and highly-civilised district; labours which resulted in a wide work of evangelisation, and in the ultimate formation of those seven churches, to which the risen Lord addressed his final messages.

It was to redeem a pledge he had solemnly made that the Apostle at last came down to Ephesus. He had spent one Sabbath-day there previously, on his way from Corinth to Jerusalem. On that occasion his ministrations had so deeply interested the Jews, that they had urged him to abide for a longer period; but this being impossible, on account of the necessity of hastening to Jerusalem to fulfil his vow, when taking his leave of them, he said, "I will return again unto you, if the Lord will." It was in pursuance of the intention that he formed then that the Apostle now visited the metropolis of Asia the Less.

A good deal had happened in the interval, in narrating which the Evangelist probably gives us the clue to the former prohibition of the Apostle's visit. Apollos, the eloquent Alexandrian, had visited the city, had met there Paul's friends, Aquila and Priscilla, who were awaiting their fellow-worker's return. By them he had been led into a clearer appreciation of the truth, in consequence of which his ministry had become more fruitful, both in helping them which had believed and in powerfully confuting the Jews. That strong ploughshare had and prepared the soil for Paul's further labours (xviii. 24-28).

But Apollos had now left for Corinth, and Paul arrived to take up and extend the work so auspiciously begun. He probably but dimly realised as he entered Ephesus how long he would remain, or the far-reaching results of his residence. It was enough for him to realise, as he afterwards wrote to the Ephesian converts, that there was a prepared path awaiting him; but whether it should be smooth or rough was known only to Him whose he was and whom he served.

As a matter of fact it was a conflict, from first to last. "I fought with beasts at Ephesus," was his comment after it was all over. And here, again, in enumerating his experiences, he compares them to a battlefield and himself to a combatant, crying —We are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter: but in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. In these words, written to Rome from Corinth, after the close of his work at Ephesus, and whilst his experiences there were yet fresh to his thought, he gives his own conception of the entire situation.

I. The Battlefield. There were several difficulties to be encountered, which must be taken into account if we would estimate the greatness of the victory, achieved through the grace of the living Saviour.

In the first place there was the pressure of the strange eager mass of human beings, whose interests, aims, and methods of thought were so foreign to his own. No one has stood alone in the midst of Benares, surrounded by that vast heathen population, worshipping on the banks of the brown and muddy Ganges, or ascending the thousand stairs of the marble temples which extend along the river-side, without a sense of loneliness and isolation. In the proximity of the great river, among those mighty and ancient pyramids of stone, beneath those façades and colonnades in which swarms the infinite life of India, how insignificant the life of the individual onlooker appears! What is he in the presence of that teeming mass! How can he hope to affect its habits of thought and life—as well might he divert the course of the ancient stream. Did not Paul feel thus, as he spent his first weeks at Ephesus?

But, besides, there was the vast system of organised idolatry which centred in the temple of Diana. Her image was said to have fallen from Jupiter (possibly a meteorite), and it was enshrined in a temple, counted to be one of the wonders of the world. The magnificence of uncalculated wealth, the masterpieces of human art, the fame of splendid ceremonials, the lavish gifts of emperors and kings, the attendance and service of thousands of priests and priestesses, combined to give it an unrivalled eminence of influence and prestige. Sooner might some humble Protestant missionary working in a back street of Rome expect to dim the magnificence of St. Peter's, or diminish the attendance of its vast congregations, as to hope that Paul's residence in Ephesus could have any effect whatever on the worship of Diana. Moreover, all the world knew that the city of the Ephesians was temple-keeper of the great Diana, and of the image which fell down from Jupiter (xix. 35), and therefore

KEEN TO AVENGE THE SMALLEST SLIGHT.

In connection with the temple there throve a great trade in amulets and charms. Each individual in the vast crowds that came up to worship at the shrine was eager to carry back some memento of his visit, and the more so if the keepsake would serve as a preservative against evil omens and spirits, of which there was a great and constant dread. The trade in these articles must have been a large one, or the artificers in silver would not have been numerous enough to fill the city with confusion, and to necessitate the interference of the town clerk. What the trade in strong drink is among ourselves, that was the business in these miniature shrines manufactured by Demetrius and his fellow-craftsmen. How impossible it seemed that one man, in three years, employing only moral and spiritual weapons, could make any difference to this ancient and extensive craft!

But still further, like many of the cities of the time, filled with motley populations—part Oriental and part Greek, Ephesus was deeply infected with the black arts of the exorcist, the magician, and the professor of cabalistic mysteries. The renegade Jews were foremost adepts in such matters, calling mystic names over any who were possessed of evil spirits. Even the converts to Christianity found it hard to divest themselves of their former association with these practices, and treasured their books to the amount of at least 2000. It is no child's play to turn a nation of savages from their confidence in witchcraft and medicine-men to sane views of life and Divine Providence; but how much harder to neutralise the insidious poison as it wrought through a great city like Ephesus! The people fixed the days of marriage and journeying, the engagements they should make, and the business transactions on which they should enter, after an appeal to the soothsayers and magicians; and it was a formidable task to combat their rooted prejudices and habits.

But perhaps Paul's most inveterate foe was the Jewish synagogue, entrenched in ancient prejudices and persistent disbelief. They were hardened and disobedient, speaking evil of the Way before the multitude. He also recalls, in his farewell address to the Ephesian elders, the trials which befell him by the plots of the Jews. When the great riot broke out, they were only too glad to show their hatred o the Christians by putting forward Alexander to dis avow all connection with them.

Such were the giant obstacles that confronted the humble tent-maker, as he settled down to his trade in company with Aquila and Priscilla. But he looked far beyond the limits of his workshop to great victories for his Lord, much as Carey, who wrought at his cobbling with a map of the world in front of him. But greater was He that was for him than all that were against him; and in all these things he was destined to be more than a conqueror through Him that had loved him.

Billingsgate Christian Mission.

The nineteenth annual meeting of this Mission was held in the Mission Hall facing the market, on Tuesday last week, the chair being taken by the president, Mr. F. A. Bevan, at four o'clock. After prayer and praise, the secretary, Mr. A. Walters, read the report, which was of a most encouraging character. The financial statement of the treasurer, Mr. W. H. Williamson, was to the effect that all liabilities incurred during the year had been met, that the balance owing to him at the close of the previous year, viz., £117 4s. 8d., had been reduced to £65 16s. 10d., and that a further sum of £200 had been paid off the debt remaining upon the building.

The amount now owing to the bankers is £3300, or just one-half the original cost. The treasurer made an urgent appeal to God's stewards to remove this as quickly as possible, as, to some extent at least, it retards the work. He pointed out that the money now paid annually for interest on the loan would cover the additional cost of introducing and maintaining important plans in view for improving the social and moral, as well as the spiritual, condition of the porters in the market, besides relieving the committee from the additional strain occasioned by the constant thought about, and the amount of time taken up with, the efforts to remove the aforesaid liability.

During the year a series of special Gospel services had been held by Dr. Harry Guinness. These were well attended, and there is reason to believe were productive of much good. The free meals to the unemployed who daily seek work at the wharves in the neighbourhood have been maintained during the winter months. These, which are invariably followed by an earnest Gospel address, have been well attended. Special reference was made in the report to the two coffee-stalls established and maintained by the mission at the eastern and western ends of the market in Lower Thames-street. These are proving centres of usefulness and blessing.

Addresses were given by Rev. J. Seaver, B.D., Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, Mr. Geo. Nokes, and Mr. J. H. Warlow, the latter being the missionary engaged in daily visitation amongst the men engaged in the Market.

Bible Motives for Evangelisation*.

I.—STEWARDSHIP.

By Rev. Dr. A. T. PIERSON.

I START with a most familiar passage in Matt. xxviii. 19, 20, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations...and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." There is a parallelism here which, even with the familiarity of the passage to our minds, some, perhaps, have never noticed. "Go ye...lo, I; all nations...all the days," as the word alway means; "to the ends of the earth...to the end of the age." Very noticeable are these parallels, in the light of Acts i. 8, where the same command is expounded; while, to the end of the age, Jesus is with us.

It requires but a cursory glance to see that this last command of our Lord suggests two great lines of thought. First, stewardship—"go ye"; second fellowship—"lo, I am with you all the days." I will confine all I have to say within these limits: first, the stewardship, and, secondly, the fellowship as the two great motives for a world's evangelisation. What is a motive? That which moves, or is calculated to move. When a motive actually moves, it becomes a motor. The great thing is, to have the possible motive turned into the actual motor.

Let us look at stewardship. A command is committed unto us, for obedience. One of the commonest words in the English tongue is the word steward. It means with another's property or estate, and who is to conduct it in another's interest and not in his own. It is a fine word to express our exact position in connection with the evangelisation of the world. I shall start with the motives drawn from duty; for stewardship suggests duty. Then, I shall take the motives drawn from delight; for fellowship suggests delight. This is the natural order from duty up to delight. Loyalty to God and love to man are the two great comprehensive spheres of duty.

There are three points of stewardship to which I will call your attention. First, the stewardship of humanity; second, the stewardship of the Gospel; third, the stewardship of life. Then there are three forms of fellowship to which I would like to call attention. First, the fellowship of mystery; second, the fellowship of history; third, the fellowship of miracle.

First, the stewardship of humanity; that is to say, I am my brother's keeper. It is a significant fact that the first man who ever disputed this truth was his brother's murderer; and in a sublime and awful sense we are either our brother's keeper or his murderer. Rom. i. 14, "I am a debtor"; and 1 Thess. ii. 4, "As we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the Gospel." We are debtors to the world, and we are trustees of the Gospel; for we are trustees in order that we may discharge our debt, that is why we are

PUT IN TRUST WITH THE GOSPEL.

The Lord has given us the infinite riches of the Gospel with which to pay the debt; therefore let us be faithful in our stewardship.

Rom. xiii. 9, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." How do we love ourselves? We give the first attention to ourselves; we protect, defend, enrich, enjoy ourselves. Love to our neighbour is to cover his protection, provision, and enjoyment. We must love our neighbour as ourselves. When love is put before us, in the New Testament, it is not an emotion, or even an affection, but a principle or law of life. Proverbs xi. 26, "He that withholdeth corn, the people shall curse him: but blessing shall be upon the head of him that selleth it." That is to say, if there is a famine, and you have corn laid up in the storehouse, the curse of God and of man shall be upon you if you withhold corn from the perishing when you are able to supply it.

Now, let us climb up a step to (2) the stewardship of the Gospel. (1 Cor. ix., 17, 18), "For if I do this thing willingly, I have a reward; but if against my will" a stewardship of the Gospel, "a dispensation of the Gospel is committed unto me." The two words represent the same idea. Whether you do this willingly or unwillingly, the fact still remains that the dispensation is committed to you, but the reward depends upon your doing it willingly. Woe unto me if I preach not the Gospel, but reward is mine if I preach the Gospel with a willing heart. You will lose your reward if you do the thing unwillingly; but still you have the dispensation. As I have already said, trustee is the counterpart of debtor. In Rom. x. 8 to 10 we have a marvellous passage: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus" as Sovereign and Master, "and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." Look further down the chapter. "How, then, shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard?" How marvellously simple are God's means for the world's evangelisation—just three things, and that is all: a hearing ear, a believing heart, and a witnessing mouth. Take Acts viii. 4: "They that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word." Compare Acts xi. 19, 20. Those who were scattered abroad were ordinary disciples; men and women who simply went and told what they knew about Jesus. That is the stewardship of the Gospel.

I think we ought to impress upon our minds how that throughout the Bible we are taught that the final object of all reception is impartation. There are three little words which seem to express the whole thing—take, eat, give. What is the first sin? "She took and did eat, and gave also unto her husband." She took what she had no right to take, ate what was not intended to be eaten, and led somebody else to partake of that which was not intended for him. What is the sum and substance of the Gospel? "Take, eat: this is my body which is broken for you...show the Lord's death till He come." To take what God means I should take, to eat unto eternal life, then to show to a dying world the death and resurrection of my Lord, is the WHOLE SUBSTANCE OF CHRISTIAN DUTY.

So that "take, eat, give" expresses the beginning of sin; and "take, eat, show" is the sum and substance of the redeemed life.

The first object of reception is impartation; and herein is the stewardship of the Gospel, that you should never know without telling, that the more you know the more you should tell, and that the more you know the more you should love to tell.

Thirdly, the stewardship of life. The signs of a perfect life are that birth should be succeeded by growth, and growth should find its perfection in fruit. All life is everywhere a gift in trust. What an awful sacredness this gives to parenthood! I may say two things about the stewardship of life. First, it is an inevitable necessity. John xii. 24, 25. How solemn these words are, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." If you want your seed of life to bring forth a crop, it must fall into the ground and die. If you want the seed of life to remain without a crop, you may keep it out of the ground, and let it live. In Matt. xiii. 38 there are two parables, the first relating properly to the soil. All the lessons of it turn upon the soil, and not upon the sower. When Christ comes to explain these parables, we notice that, in the first, He makes the seed to be the Word of God; but in the second, it is the children of the kingdom. God, in sowing this world, uses two kinds of seed—the seed of his Word and the seed of his children. He never brings nations to Himself by the Word alone, and He never brings peoples to Himself by his children alone. When his children go out and carry the Word with them, sowing the Word and themselves with it, then out of the double seed comes up the glorious harvest.

Jesus Christ teaches the same lesson in the memorable words of Matt. xvi. 25 (which need to be compared with John xii. 25), "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it." The cross is the sum of this parable of the lost life and the saved life. Jesus Christ lost his life on the cross, but how gloriously He saved it in resurrection. You lose your life on the cross, and you never know how gloriously you save it until the resurrection.

Secondly, it is an irrepressible necessity. Matt. xii. 34, "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." If your mouth does not speak, probably it is because there is so little in the heart. If you are not doing what you can to bring a lost world to your Master, it is because you have so little of your Master in your heart, that there is no irrepressible necessity for it. John iv. (the whole chapter), have you ever noticed the wonderful progression therein? "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." You come to Christ, drink and find satisfaction, experience eternal life, and find it to be a stream carrying blessing everywhere about you. It was illustrated in the woman who came to the well for her pitcher of water, found in Christ satisfaction for her thirsty soul, got new life, and then that eternal life at once ran out of her into the city of Sychar, and caused her even to lose sight of the barrier between the sexes, for she went and preached the Gospel to the men, not to the women. How audacious! But audacity is the creature of irrepressible life. A stream is very audacious; fire is very audacious, it burns up all obstacles. If you have a stream of fire in you, you are very LIKELY TO BE AUDACIOUS.

Before leaving the lower level of duty for the train on the higher one of delight, I would simply mention two facts which prepare the way for our ascent. First, missions belong to the very nature and genius of Christianity. They are not an artificial addition, not something tacked on; but they belong to Christianity in its very temper, genius, spirit, and essence. Every form and figure is employed to teach us this truth. Suppose we take just four, reviewing the argument before we pass on—light, life, seed, springing. Light must shine, life must propagate life, seed must bring forth harvest, a spring must bring forth a stream. Christianity is light, is the life, is the seed, is the spring; missions are the life, the propagation, the harvest, the stream. The second remark I want to make is that just as sure as you begin with duty you will find your way to delight. There is a constant ascent on the part of the true child of God to a higher and higher level. In the old fable of the birds made without wings they were told to take up their wings and bear them. At first the pinions seemed heavy as lead, but as the birds folded them over their hearts their wings grew fast, and that which once they bore now bears them. Begin by doing your duty, and God ends by making it your delight. I am saved by Christ in order to save; I have been taught by Christ in order to teach; I have been enabled to get in order to give; and, in God's reckoning, all life is lost which does not communicate and propagate life.

* Notes of a Bible Reading at Mildmay Conference.

Medical Mission Work in the Lebanon.

An early copy of the first year's report of the remarkable work at El Bourg, undertaken by Miss Helanie Baroody, a Syrian Christian lady, and Mrs. Lloyd, has just come to hand, and the results recorded are most gratifying. The report states:—"God has blessed the means used at the Medical Mission, and we have gained the confidence of the people in a wonderful way; they see that our God answers prayer, and are not nearly so much afraid of our religion as they used to be. Consequently, since our first three months' report was written, there have been many more open doors, and much more readiness to receive the truths of the Bible among the Motawelah."

Work among the children has been very successful, and about thirty are being taught both in the day and Sunday school. Visits are paid to the villages round, and the Gospel preached to them. Twice a week medical attendance is given, and 4538 cases have been treated during the year, the patients coming from the villages round, some of which are very far away. The Bible has been freely distributed, and in every way possible the work of Christ has been carried on, where no Protestant effort has before been begun.

It is proposed, as opportunity offers, to open new schools in the neighbouring villages, and this will involve much labour and considerable expense. A copy of the report can be obtained from (or contributions forwarded to) the hon. treasurer, Miss K. Smith, 60, Grosvenor-road, Rathgar, co. Dublin.

Wedding and Widowhood.

"SHALL we be in time for the wedding?"

"Well, as it lasts for several days we shall certainly be in time for something; but I should like you to see the procession."

The Doctor put his turbaned head out of the ghari window to urge our driver faster along the darkening street.

"Ah, it is all right," he added, suddenly facing round on me. "They have not started. See!"

I looked out and down the dusky road. The way was blocked ahead of us by a dense crowd of people—shouting, music, noise, stopped vehicles. My friend alighted and left me wondering and expectant. Somehow a special interest attaches to a wedding, be it where it may. I sat in the twilight waiting. Indian stars came out overhead in the deep blue. Was the bride's heart beating high on this her marriage night?

"It is all right, Miss Guinness; they have delayed for us. Let me introduce you to the bridegroom's father."

The doctor's cheery voice broke in upon my reverie. A Hindu gentleman outside the carriage door bowed courteously, helped me to alight, and swiftly piloted us down into the heart of the tamasha.

What an Eastern scene it is!—flaming lamps, candles, and scintillating lights in coloured bowls, hung high upon the bearers' heads, lining both sides of the procession; a central phalanx of brilliantly-dressed ladies, relatives of the family, on foot and packed into a solid square—their faces turned towards us as we pass, dozens of large dark eyes and shining polished coiffures of black hair, dozens of sleek brown arms and necks loaded with jewellery, and draped in delicate silk saris. It is a proud moment for the master of the ceremonies, who makes way for us through the festive throng.

The noise around is deafening. Beating of drums and blare of native music almost prevent our hearing his explanations of the next feature of the show—a tiny girl and boy covered with silks and jewellery, seated on two gaily-bedizened horses, led by attendants, at the very slow foot pace of the moving multitude. The noise grows louder as with a glance at the children's pretty faces, grave with the solemnity of so great an occasion, we are brought somehow to a densely crowded part of the procession, and find ourselves in the front ranks among the musicians who lead. Our advent is the signal for a brief pause in the march, and for the execution of specially startling music by an indescribable performer.

What words will represent the rattling noise, the antics, the contortions, the agony of music that succeeds? Under the eye of the father-in-law and of the white-faced stranger the players' enthusiasm reaches a climax. Higher and higher waxes the excitement, amid the admiring wonder of the crowd, until at last with a final deafening burst, he suddenly subsides and another musician steps forward.

Scent is showered on the crowd from costly ornamented vases. Someone behind brings a beautiful garland of flowers, which the courteous master of affairs places with much ceremony around my neck. The wreath is closely woven of lovely tropical bloom, heavy with scent, and falling below the waist. I express what thanks are possible amid the din of bagpipe music. We step into the carriage and are swiftly bowled away, leaving the tamasha creeping down the streets amid the flare of torchlight and prodigal showers of scent.

It is in progress from the bride's house to the bridegroom's, and will arrive in due course at the pleasant residence where in a few moments we alight, and mount the steps.

Oh, she is such a little bride! You stand hushed in her presence, scarcely able to believe that this is really she.

In the central room of a house she sits on a cushion by the bridegroom, both of them cross-legged on the floor. The women of the household, in gay gowns and solemn silence, are seated on the floor behind. Hindu musicians in front are performing soft weird music. Delicate refreshments are laid in a side room. The a tiny shy slip of a child; the husband a tall, vigorous young man of about twenty. He speaks English well, and talks freely to me, but does not move from his place upon the floor. Her uncle picks up the little bride in his arms, as you might a child of two, and carries her off out of the crowd into the refreshment room, to try and get her to say a few words, but she is too shy to utter anything but her name, which comes out at last, after much persuasion. Someone carries a small boy past dressed in the brightest scarlet. The wee bride stretches out her hand to him. They are evidently playmates.

"She is more fit for that little five-year-old than for the bridegroom you are giving her," I remarked pitifully.

"Ah, Mem Sahib, no! Such age is not our custom."

The age that is the custom is painfully evident. Everything around you is pretty, shining, costly, gay with music, and lit by a glare of light, but oh, it is so sad! As you realise what this wedding represents, you feel that you have scarcely ever seen anything sadder than this wee bride in her green silk dress and costly ornaments—a mite encrusted in a load of jewels. In about two years she will be actually married to this full-grown man.

But this after all is little. It might have been far worse, since Indian custom demands that every decent family should secure husbands for its girls while they are young—in their cradles, five, eight, or eleven years of age—and the age of the husband doesn't matter.

It frequently happens that girls of eight or nine are given to men of sixty or seventy. The popular belief is that "a woman can have no salvation unless she be formally married." And the younger the better, "the greater is the merit, thereby the parents are entitled to rich rewards in heaven."

A sense of the suffering of India's 240 million women comes over you as you look at the tiny bride.

"Will that child be actually married when she is twelve years old?" I ask my native friend.

"Yes," he answers.

"But she is not fit; it is cruel; it will be injurious to her."

"They dare not resist. Their mothers instruct them that they must submit," he answered, and went on to tell me of pitiful cases of suffering among girls whom, as a medical man, he had been called to try and relieve.

One cannot write of these things, but they make one realise the cry of India's women. No wonder that the nation is weak, that it is "sinking," as Vivekananda said.

We are shown round the galleries of the decorated house and come to the women's quarters, where the ladies rise to meet us; the happy wife and mother, brilliantly dressed and bejewelled, shows us her ornaments and smiles most pleasantly. She cannot speak a word of English. Someone is standing behind in the shadow, a young and well-formed woman.

"Who is this?" you ask, turning to her after the rest are introduced.

"Ah, she is a widow!" comes the grave and sad response.

No more need be said. You see she wears no ornaments and stands in plain, dull clothing, distinct from all the rest. And the words of the Hindu catechism recur to you strangely:—

Q. What is cruel?
A. The heart of a viper.
Q. What is more cruel than that?
A. The heart of a woman.
Q. What is the cruellest of all?
A. The heart of a sonless, penniless widow.

Widowhood in India is not only a life-long sorrow, but a life-long curse. It is believed to be the effect of some horrible crime committed by the woman in a previous life, a crime for which her husband has been punished. He has died, but she must suffer. Of course! It is her fault.

The widow must wear a single coarse garment, white, red, or brown. She must eat only one meal during the twenty-four hours of a day. She must never take part in family feasts with others. She must not show herself on auspicious occasions. People think it unlucky to behold a widow's face before seeing any other object in the morning. A man will postpone his journey if his path happen to be crossed by a widow at the time of his departure. The relatives and neighbours of the young widow's husband are always ready to call her bad names, and to address her in abusive language at every opportunity. There is scarcely a day of her life on which she is not cursed by these people as the cause of their beloved friend's death.

Hindu women, whose heads are shaved on becoming widows, think it worse than death to lose their beautiful hair. Look at this little lassie, only fourteen years old, her eyes swollen with bitter tears, sitting with a sad face out of everybody's way. She hardly knows the reason why her hair has been cut off, or why she is so cruelly deprived of all she likes. She will grow up in this sadness—grow up, perhaps, to feel inarticulately what a Hindu widow wrote:—

O Lord, hear my prayer! No one has turned an eye on the oppression that we poor women suffer, though with weeping and crying and desire we have turned to all sides, hoping that someone would save us. No one has lifted up his eyelids to look upon us, nor inquire into our case. We have searched above and below, but Thou art the only One who wilt hear our complaint; Thou knowest our impotence, our degradation, our dishonour.

O great Lord! our name is written with drunkards, with lunatics, with imbeciles, with the very animals; as they are not responsible we are not. Criminals confined in the jails for life are happier than we, for they know something of thy world. They were not born in prison, but we have not for one day—no, not even in our dreams—seen thy world. To us it is nothing but a name; and not having seen the world, we cannot know Thee, its Maker. Those who have seen thy works may learn to understand Thee, but for us, who are shut in, it is not possible to learn to know Thee. We see only the four walls of the house. Shall we call them the world, or India? We have been born in this jail, we have died here, and are dying.

The Indian woman as a bride goes inside her husband's house and never or scarcely ever goes out again, till her remains are carried out to be buried. For the rest of her life she is hidden there in a living tomb. And if she be a widow that tomb becomes a prison-house of pain.

But we know all about it. We have heard so very often. Books have been written and thousands of speeches made about India's women.

And we know the figures—huge figures moving among millions—140,000,000 women; 25,000,000 widows, 77,000 of them little girls under ten years old; 40,000,000 shut up in zenanas, most of whom have never even heard the name of Christ.

Yes, we know the figures, and we have a general notion that plenty of good people are doing all that need be done for India's women. Thank God, good work is being done by thirty-four societies with over 700 agents all told—700 to reach 140,000,000, nearly 200,000 apiece. But at least 130,000,000 of India's women can never yet have heard of woman's Friend.

* * * *

HE sat once by the wayside, not thinking about millions—about one. He was very tired, but not too tired to care about her sorrows, her shame; to talk to her, to bring her home to God.

And we amid life's weariness, who say we follow Him, have we cared yet for "one of these" in India, as Jesus cared that day?

LUCY GUINNESS

"Some Fell Among Thorns."

If persecution should arise,
The Christ on whom my soul relies
From me it would not sever;
For to my Refuge I would flee,
And closer, Saviour, cling to Thee
Whose aid availeth ever.

Help me with Thee my cares to leave;
I have no riches to deceive;
But other things have entered;
And love of these has choked the word
Which else, unhindered, undeterred,
Mine inner life had centred.

Dear Lord Divine, Thou knowest well
(There is no need for me to tell)
What things my heart has treasured.
Do Thou control them by thy strength—
Subdue them; till my life at length
Shall bring forth fruit unmeasured.

"The Lamp of China" is the title of a quarterly report of the Chinese Biblewoman's Mission. This agency works in co-operation with the C.M.S. and the Society for Promoting Female Welfare. It has been greatly used of God to the enlightenment of darkened souls in the Flowery Land. The promoters of the Mission would welcome the interest and prayers of Christians of all denominations. OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, July 18.

"For mine own sake, for mine own sake, will I do it."—Isa. xlviii. 11.

GOD finds his supreme motive in Himself. Mark how strongly He insists on it. "For my name's sake will I defer mine anger, and for my praise will I refrain from thee." And in this verse he twice repeats, "for mine own sake." Surely this is a matter for extreme comfort and congratulation.

If God had saved us because of some trait of natural beauty and attractiveness which He beheld in us, He might turn from us when it faded before the touch of years, or the change of our inward temper. The woman whose only claim on attention and homage is in her face, who has no other qualities to command and retain respect, must often dread the inevitable effect of time. It would be therefore a cause of perpetual unrest if God's motive were only one of pity or complacency.

But God's motive is his character, his name and nature the maintenance of his honour in the face of the universe. In the face of the universe of intelligent beings He is too deeply implicated in our salvation to show signs of variableness or the shadow of turning. He did not begin to save us because we were worthy or lovely, but because He would; and therefore He will not give up because we prove ourselves weak and worthless and difficult to save. There are times with us all when we can but cast ourselves on his infinite grace and say, "Save me for thine own name's sake." And when we have been overcome by sin, it is good to go to Him and say, "Father, I have nothing to plead but thy own nature and name declared in Jesus: for his sake, because Thou hast made promise to Him, and to me in Him, for thy glory's sake, defer thine anger, forgive my sins, and get to Thyself great glory in my salvation."

MONDAY, July 19.

"He hath made my mouth like a sharp sword, in the shadow of his hand hath he hid me; and he hath made me a polished shaft; in his quiver hath he kept me close."—Isa. xlix. 2.

These words were addressed to Israel, and must be applied to Him who alone hath expressed the true genius and spirit of the Hebrew people, that Prince of the House of David whom we call Master and Lord. And in so far as we belong to and resemble Him we may claim that God should make these words true of us.

The mouth, like the sharp sword, recalls the portrait of the Son of Man out of whose mouth a sharp two-edged sword proceeded. We may well ask that our words should partake of the nature of the Word of God, which is quick and powerful, and sharper than a two-edged sword (Rev. i. 16).

"Hidden in the shadow of God's hand" is a safe and strong position for the Christian worker. We all need more of the shadow, and we need not fear it when it is cast by his hand. Our life must be hidden with Christ in God, if we shall come forth largely to influence men. Do not be afraid of the shadow, Christian worker.

The polished shaft is the one that is free from rust. Nothing removes rust like friction, whether by the file or sand-paper. We have often to submit to the chafe of tiny irritants in order to keep us polished.

"In his quiver hath He hid me." Always ready for use, within reach of God's hand, waiting to be adjusted to the bowstring, and launched through the air to some joint in the harness; such should be our attitude. But again it is impressed upon us that we must be hidden through long periods of cessation from active use, content with the darkness of the quiver until the moment of our mission has arrived. Then forward with the might of God's hand thrilling through our souls.

TUESDAY, July 20.

"The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned (or them that are taught), that I should know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary. He wakeneth morning by morning."—Isa. l. 4.

This is a beautiful image. Morning by morning the Lord God draws near his chosen servant and awakens him, calling him by name, giving him some sweet message, and preparing him for the day's errands, duties, and sufferings.

The sense of the original is somewhat obscured by the use of the word "learned," which should be "disciple," one that learns through being taught. We must be disciples before we can be apostles, and be taught before we teach. We shall never do our best work for God until we accustom ourselves to receive and take his messages, and there is no such time as the early morning to assume the lowly posture of sitting at the Master's feet to hear his word.

Notice that God's messengers are sent to the weary. There are so many of these in the world that special provision must be made for their sustaining and comfort. God needs a great company of Barnabas's Sons of Consolation, who having been comforted shall know how to comfort others. No kind of ministry needs such careful preparation as that exercised towards the weary and heavy-laden. To learn how to do this involves some months of lonely suffering.

In softest whispers God draws nigh, uncovering the ear, putting back the locks that might intercept his gentlest accent. Only let us see to it that we are not rebellious, or turn away back. Let not the lowliness of the work, the weary mind, the worry about tiny questions, put us off from this sacred enterprise. Neither let us be dissuaded by those who would smite, and pluck out the hair. Neither pride nor fear must deter us from this sacred work.

WEDNESDAY, July 21.

"I, even I, am he, that comforteth you. Who art thou, that thou shouldst be afraid of a man that shall die, and of the son of man that shall be made as grass."—Is. li. 12.

It is related that in the great Indian Mutiny, when some hundreds of English ladies with their children were shut up in the Residency at Lucknow, and threatened by an immense crowd of rebels, a leaf of the Bible, stained with blood, and used as a common piece of wrapping, was brought in to them, and proved to contain these words. It reminded them of God their Maker, and bade them fear no more the fury of the oppressor, or the failure of bread, because the Lord God was at hand to neutralise the tumult and fury of their foes.

In the Lord our Maker we have the only antidote for alarm and sorrow. At this time the cross had not been erected with its precious revelation of the love of God, and the prophet quotes two of the greatest proofs of God's might—the miracle of Creation, with its over-arching heavens and deep-laid foundations of the earth; and that of the deliverance from Egypt.

Go out into nature, behold the might of God written on his glorious works, and then say to yourself, This God is my Father; and He would rather sacrifice worlds of matter, than forget or forsake his child. It were easier for Him to destroy all that He has made, and re-create it in a moment of time, than allow one of his weakest children that trusts in Him to be overwhelmed by trouble. Furious men are but the foam of the breaker which your Deliverer will put aside. The sea may roar, but it cannot overwhelm. He comforts who forgives. And his comfort is not in words only, but in mighty acts.

"Be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord."—Isa. lii. 11.

The chosen people are at the end of the seventy years' captivity; the time of their deliverance has come. Their Almighty Deliverer, throwing back the loose sleeve of his robe, to leave his arm free, makes ready for an unusual exercise of power. There will be no need of haste as when the people fled at night from Egypt. They may not go out with haste, nor go by flight, for their Divine leader would precede them, and his escort would be their rearguard.

This is the summons to us all who may have been in captivity to Babylon in any form. We are to arise and depart, shaking loose the bonds of our captivity. Let us follow the cloudy pillar of God's presence guiding us continually, and let us not be always looking behind, as though dreading the recurrence of past sins and mistakes. They shall not pursue those whom God has delivered; or, if they do, they shall not overtake. It is an unspeakable comfort to those who have sinned to know that the old temptations and forms of bondage are intercepted by the presence of the Eternal God, just as his cloud intercepted Pharaoh's host.

The one matter about which we must be scrupulously careful is our cleanliness. Of old, Cyrus entrusted Ezra with the holy vessels which Nebuchadnezzar had taken from the temple. These must be borne on the shoulders of the priests across the desert back to Jerusalem. We, too, are custodians of sacred vessels—the character and name of God, the holy Gospel of the Lord Jesus, the integrity of the faith, the inspiration and authority of Scripture. These are committed to our care. The Apostle bids us keep, through the Holy Ghost, that deposit which was committed to our care. But so holy a commission from so holy a God demands holiness in those whom He entrusts. We must not touch the unclean thing, but come out, be separate, and He will receive us and be a Father unto us.

FRIDAY, July 23.

"The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all."—Isa. liii. 6.

The Lord did it, because He was the Lord, and He took on Himself the iniquity of us all. "Made to meet" is the marginal reading, as though many confluent streams poured their black substances into one foaming maelstrom which filled the heart of the dying Saviour. Well may the Apostle Peter recapitulate his work in the matchless, almost monosyllabic sentence, "Who his own self bare our sins in his body on the tree."

This verse begins and ends with all. We are all alike in having "gone astray." We have not all gone in the same direction, nor all to the same extent. We are not equally far from the fold. But we are all away from it. They say that if sheep can stray, they will; and there is no kind of animal more hopeless and helpless than sheep which have got out of the pen. The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass its master's crib. The dog and cat will make their way home, but the sheep wanders on in small and ever smaller companies, until it is entrapped in the rocks, or devoured by wolves, or harried to death by dogs. Such were we. Panting, driven, chased, weary; but Jesus sought us, and brought us back to the fold, and gave us a name and place among his own. We are returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls.

But ah, how can we forget the cost we have been to the Shepherd! See ye not the wounds in his hands and feet? Know ye not that his heart was lacerated and broken by the burden that our sins imposed on Him? Have ye not traced the blood-marks on the stones and sand along which He came to seek and save? Is it not enough to make your sin and mine infinitely distasteful and hateful? "Our own way," that has been the curse of our lives, and the agony of our Shepherd. Would that it might be for ever blocked against us, and that we might be led in his own way for his Name's sake.

SATURDAY, July 24.

"O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted."—Isa. liv. 11.

From his standpoint of vision on the hilltops of glory, He sees the tossings of thy craft. Every billow, every lurch, every rebuff, is discerned and felt by Him. He, too, has sailed through stormy seas, and is acquainted with grief. Not comforted by man, thou shalt be consoled by the Divine Comforter. Cast out by thy lovers, thou shalt be gathered to the bosom of God. When the man born blind was cast out of the synagogue, Jesus found him, and He will find thee.

Deep down in the tossing waves, He will lay thy foundations in fair colours, and will spare no stones, however precious, in the elaboration of thy character. Sapphires, rubies, and carbuncles are very resplendent and beautiful, but they are all the children of fire. You cannot have them unless prepared to pay the cost in blood and tears. These jewels are produced of very ordinary ingredients, which have been subjected to tremendous pressure and terrific heat. When next your heart misgives you amid your fiery trials, remember that God is at work making the rubies and carbuncles of your eternal array. You will be well compensated.

There are destructive agencies around us on all hands—the smith with his coals, the waster with his scythe, the destroyer with his weapon—but they are all beneath the mighty hand of God. They cannot overstep the limits He assigns. When a man's ways please the Lord He maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him. He restrains the wrath of his foes, and surrounds him with a munition of rocks.

The blessings of this chapter are not for the Jews only, but for all the servants of the Lord, for all who, abjuring their own righteousness, are arrayed in the righteousness of Jesus. Pure raiment, white and clean!

"The Secret of England's Greatness."

ONE of the most glorious events in the sixty years' reign of the Queen was the gift of a Bible to Sagbua, the African prince, in the year 1849.

Her Majesty authorized the late Rt. Hon. the Earl of Chichester, the president of the Church Missionary Society at that time, to write a letter to the Prince to be presented with the Bible. The letter contained a full and frank acknowledgment of Christianity as the element of England's greatness. It was this letter, with the gift of a Bible, that prompted some Englishman to formulate the familiar saying, "The Bible is the Secret of England's Greatness."

Although the exact form of words is not in the letter, yet the laconic and familiar sentence is a fair and natural summary thereof, as the Bible is the standard of Christianity, and the Royal letter fully admits that Christianity has made England great and happy.

The moral influence for good exercised by that familiar expression over the minds of millions of people is incalculable. Yet several correspondents in the secular and religious press are now describing the familiar story as a myth, a fable, a plausible yarn, and even quoting the late Sir Henry Ponsonby to prove that point!

"A GOOD STORY GONE WRONG,"

In order to settle this question once for all, I ask you kindly to publish the letter of the Earl, and to allow me briefly to state the reasons for it. I had a personal knowledge of the two clergymen who were stationed in Abbeokuta as missionaries, and who had the honour of presenting the Bible and letter to the Prince in the name of the Queen.

The Rev. Isaac Smith and the Rev. Henry Townsend returned to England in 1849, bringing with them a piece of cloth and a letter from Prince Sagbua to the Queen of England. Her Majesty commanded Lord Chichester to write a reply, which I ask you to publish, in order that your readers might judge for themselves. I take the letter bodily from The Church Missionary Intelligencer of 1849. It reads thus:—

I have had the honour of presenting to the Queen the letter of Sagbua and other chiefs of Abbeokuta, and also their present of a piece of cloth.

The Queen has commanded me to convey her thanks to Sagbua and the chiefs, and her best wishes for their true and lasting happiness, and for the peace and prosperity of the Youriba nation.

The Queen hopes that arrangements may be made for affording to the Youriba nation the free use of the River Ossa, so as to give them opportunities for commerce with this and other countries.

The commerce between nations, in exchanging the fruits of the earth, and of each other's industry, is blessed by God.

Not so the commerce in slaves, which makes poor and miserable the nation which sells them, and brings neither wealth nor the blessing of God to the nation who buys them, but the contrary.

The Queen and the people of England are very glad to know that Sagbua and the chiefs think as they do upon this subject of commerce.

But commerce alone will not make a nation great and happy, like England. England has become great and happy by the knowledge of the true God and Jesus Christ.

The Queen is, therefore, very glad to hear that Sagbua and the chiefs have so kindly received the missionaries, who carry with them the Word of God, and that so many of the people are willing to hear it.

In order to show how much the Queen values God's Word, she sends with this, as a present to Sagbua, a copy of this Word in two languages—one the Arabic, the other the English.

The Church Missionary Society wish all happiness, and the blessing of eternal life, to Sagbua and all the people of Abbeokuta.

They are very thankful to the chiefs for the kindness and protection afforded to their missionaries, and they will not cease to pray for the spread of God's truths, and of all other blessings, in Abbeokuta and throughout Africa, in the name and for the sake of our only Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

(Signed) CHICHESTER.

When the missionaries went back to Africa they took with them this letter, a Bible from the Queen, and a present from Prince Albert to Prince Sagbua. A holiday was given to all the people in Abbeokuta on the day when the presents and Bible were given to the Prince.

In the year 1886, prior to Her Majesty's Golden Jubilee, the familiar proverb was declared to be a myth, and it was stated in hundreds of papers throughout England that Sir Henry Ponsonby, the Queen's Private Secretary, had said, in answer to a correspondent, that "there was no foundation for the story whatever." I felt sure that Sir Henry had never seen the Earl's letter, so I sent him a copy, and here is his reply:—

Windsor Castle, July 17, 1886.

DEAR SIR,—I have to thank you for your communication, and for the enclosed copy of the Earl of Chichester's letter, which, no doubt, explains the origin of the story.—Yours faithfully

Rev. W. Hillier. HENRY PONSONBY.

All your readers will conclude with Sir Henry that the Earl's letter was the origin of the story; and, moreover, that it supplies a good and solid ground for the essential truth of the familiar sentence, Vincit omnia veritas, though the tenour of the letter would be better expressed thus: "Christianity is the source of England's greatness."—I am, Sir, Yours faithfully, WILLIAM HILLIER.

India's Need—A Call to Prayer.

THE calamities which have overtaken India during the past year are surely a call for united prayer to God on behalf of that country.

Famine, plague and earthquake have visited that great land, bringing suffering and privation to many hundreds of thousands.

In view of these sorrows that have come upon India, and the great need for God's people to come together for united supplication, special meetings for prayer and conference will (D.V.) be held on JULY 28, 1897, as follows, viz.:—

1 to 2.—Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

4.30 to 6.30.—Conference Hall, 6, Ecclestonstreet, Buckingham Palace-road (five minutes' walk from Victoria Railway Station).

The attendance of Christians is earnestly desired at these gatherings, and they are also requested to make known the great need at this time for prayer on behalf of India. It is also desired that friends in London and the provinces will endeavour to have prayer-meetings arranged in their districts for the 28th inst., or for any other date that may be more convenient.

The Missionary Societies have agreed to co-operate.

"Founders' Day."

THE annual festival of Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Orphan Waifs was celebrated last Saturday at headquarters in Stepney Causeway, and from early in the afternoon a most attractive programme was in progress. Parties of visitors were taken round the workshops to see the rescued lads busily and skilfully employed at various useful trades. The domestic and general arrangements were also under inspection, and youthful patients welcomed their friends to Her Majesty's Hospital for Sick Waifs, where so many of thel ittle sufferers rescued from the perils of street life are being medically and surgically treated.

The centre of attraction, however, seemed to be the open space in the middle of the rectangular block of large buildings, three sides of which constitute the various departments of this great philanthropic and Christian organisation, so far as its London headquarters are concerned. Here a seemingly endless succession of interesting displays occupied the attention of a large company of spectators surrounding the extemporised arena, Military, naval, and musical drill, maypole dances, a tug-of-war for the boys, flag races for the girls, and sweet singing, afforded opportunity for seeing the children at play of a kind calculated to afford useful discipline; while the happy intelligent faces of the youngsters spoke volumes for the loving and kindly training which they must receive. Other attractions were found in a sale opened by Mrs. Frobisher for the benefit of the great family of 5,000 waif children now in the Homes; in swimming displays; and in the performances of the young Scotch bagpipers, the handbell ringers, and other instrumentalists.

Canon FLEMING was unavoidably prevented from taking the chair at the open-air public meeting, but there was a very widely representative platform and a crowd of listeners. Rev. W. J. WAGSTAFF offered prayer and thanksgiving for God's abundant blessing upon the good work during these many years. Dr. BARNARDO was glad to welcome so many supporters on this occasion in a year marked by signs of so much progress—among other things, in recognition of the right of children to kindly care and decent treatment. Friends had seen how well destitute children repay wise dealings with them for Christ's sake. Thanks to the growth of Christian philanthropy, there are many similar institutions to-day; but these homes are unique in not only receiving destitute children but in seeking them out, from the baby of a few days old to waifs of larger growth.

Pastor THOMAS SPURGEON felt he could not speak in any other than kindly fashion of such a labour of love as this. He had a fellow feeling for all Thomases; and it was quite evident that the beloved friend at the head of these institutions believed in justifying his faith by his works.

The Member for Stepney, Mr. F. WOOTTON ISAACSON, warmly commended the work in its wide and varied scope, and in its wise and kindly methods. Rev. PETER THOMPSON heartily expressed much esteem for Dr. Barnardo, not only on personal grounds, but from experience of the good effects of his work upon East-end life. The lives of these boys and girls are valuable to Christ, to his Church, and to the State. Poor children of the street evidently have a warm place in the heart of one who calls them "My boys, my girls." Mr. H. S. SAMUEL, M.P. for Limehouse, asked friends to go forth and tell others what they had seen here to-day.

Some of the boys and girls who are going out to Canada this month here marched round the outskirts of the gathering. These were representative of no less than 9150 neglected children emigrated to good homes, and of which only two per cent. have failed in the purpose of their life. It costs but £10 to give a boy or girl such a goodly start in life.

Special adaptability on the part of Dr. Barnardo for his great work was a prominent point of Rev. F. B. MEYER's speech. Let us, said he, find the work in the world for which God has fitted each one of us, and then let us stick to it. He had met at Mr. Moody's with one lifted by this institution from the slums of Stepney, who now occupies a useful position in the Christian ministry.

Dr. BARNARDO announced that the emigration scheme which has proved so beneficial is about to be extended to Western Australia, as the result of a movement originating in official circles there.

Miss Louisa Procter.

Mount Lebanon.

WE leave Beyrout by the pleasant carriage road, and follow the coast south, keeping a few miles inland. Climbing gradually, we have wondrous views of the higher ranges of the Lebanon. It is winter, and the mountain is half covered with snow; and yet the sun is hot, and the exquisite clearness of the air, and the blue tint of the sea, and the tropical vegetation around, make one think of summer. As we near Schwifat —which means "beautiful view"—the eye wanders over the vast olive grove which for eight or nine miles extends along the plain between the spurs of the mountain and the Mediterranean. The village is split into sections by deep and rugged gorges, which run into the mountain side, affording perfect shelter, and offering the most picturesque sites for houses.

The village "ain," or well, as we arrive, is crowded with a motley group of women and children in bright native dresses, and bearing all manner of water jars and vessels, for it is about sunset, and supplies must be got in. Leaving the carriage road—one of very few in the land—we climb up the steep mountain side by a rough path which wanders in and out amongst the houses, eventually leading us to the highest buildings, where we are welcomed with true Irish warmth and kindness by the venerable lady whose devotion and energy have originated and built up this mountain mission.

The history of the early days of the Schwifat Mission is one of personal guidance. A traveller through the land in 1879, Miss Procter's heart was touched, and she went home with a lively interest in the Syrian race, especially in the Druses, a people singularly in need of the Gospel light. Seeking and following the Divine leading, she soon returned to find a happy service amongst them, and after assisting in several missions, and learning by experience, her personal work opened clearly before her. After two years she was recalled to England by what proved to be the fatal illness of her brother, Rev. J. Procter, a clergyman of the Church of England.

In 1884 a petition reached Miss Procter from "the Druses of the Lebanon," praying earnestly for schools, on the ground that the English and the Druses "are one great family." In spreading this appeal before the Lord she sought the help of Geo. Müller in unitedly asking, as a definite petition, that an earnest Christian man might be sent to her aid, if work was to be undertaken. A few months later she met the faithful helper, Mr. Tanius Said, who also had been seeking guidance about his future service for the Lord, and together they began a school for twelve girls in a rented house. Miss Procter's own means were consecrated to the service, and she began, and has continued until now, without a committee, although she gratefully owns the welcome help of many Christians.

Schwifat was chosen as a centre of the work because its large population of about 7000 is mainly Druse, and it was among these people that her warmest call to service lay. In 1886 a house was offered for sale, and by a providential and unusual circumstance the whole of the five owners were in one mind to let her have it, although for Protestant work. The number of resident pupils was then increased to twenty.

The work grew slowly; about 1887 a few little boys were accepted and taught until they reached the age of ten or eleven years, when it was necessary to send them away, as there was no separate school for boys. The Moslem schools thus received them at the critical age, and they were generally lost to Protestant influence. Miss Procter had a growing and deep feeling of responsibility for these elder boys, and it was a continued subject of prayer that some way might open, and that funds might be provided for a new building and for the extension of the work amongst them.

In 1895 she visited England to press the claims of this part of her mission, and raised £350. Having then some hopes of assistance from a society, she proceeded to build on her own land, and near the Girls' Home, spending £650 on a plain, substantial block capable of accommodating thirty boarders and twenty day scholars. The two schools now contain thirty girls and twenty-eight boys, and the day scholars number fifteen girls and twenty boys. Thus nearly 100 children are under daily educational training and direct Christian influence of the most earnest kind. The children belong to families connected with the Greek Church, the Druses, and the Maronites, with the addition of a few Protestants.

Associated with Miss Procter in this work are Mualim Tanius Said, who has been her voluntary helper from the first, and Miss Appia, a Swiss lady, who has also given four years of willing service at her own cost and for the Lord's sake. The teachers and helpers are chiefly those who were educated in the school, and who rejoice to be associated with it. Miss Appia, with the assistance of a Bible-woman, visits five villages, holding cottage meetings and doing her utmost to bring the heavenly light into darkened homes. Mr. Said superintends the village schools, which have 110 children. Moreover, the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. have branches here, and there is a Band of Hope and a Scripture Union. The needs of the suffering are met by a dispensary, at which many attend, and where a native doctor and a lady doctor assist.

There are Sunday-schools for children and women, and adult services are held on Sundays, at which Mr. Tanius Said preaches. His personal history is interesting. He was born at Haddeth, a village near Schwifat, and the birthplace of the first Protestant martyr in that land. This witness for Christ was walled into a narrow chamber, too small to lie down in, and because he would not renounce his faith he was beaten slowly to death. Converted at the age of seventeen, Tanius early found service with the American Mission at Beyrout, where he was educated, passing through school and college. He has continued as their preacher on this part of the Lebanon to the present time, whilst for twelve years he has given much of his spare time to Miss Procter's Mission. He assists in the management, gives the Scripture teaching in both schools, and exercises a constant oversight and influence for good in the work.

One result of the schools is that thirty of the former girls are now teachers in village schools. The area of service will be seen when it is mentioned that they are stationed in Egypt, Damascus, Jerusalem, Nazareth, Bethlehem, Hebron, Tyre, Jaffa, Haifa, Tiberias, Laodicea, and other places. The present writer spent three days in the Schwifat Mission, mingling amongst the scholars and teachers, and holding meetings with them. He witnessed the admirable order and discipline, heard the bright, intelligent answers of the children, and had then, and during a later visit, the opportunity of judging of the good work done. Miss Procter is a lady of remarkable energy. She lives amongst the children, and spends herself, as well as her money, for them, and they love her in return.

The spiritual atmosphere of the place is bright, and the utmost simplicity prevails. Few, if any, missions of similar extent are worked for as small an outlay. Taking the last report, the general account shows an expenditure of £373. Towards this the children's money is £205. The new Boys' School and Home cost £650, of which about £300 is still required, and Pastor Said is in England hoping to raise this relatively small sum, and also to bring before the Lord's workers their need of lady helpers in both the boys' and the girls' schools. It would be a great help if such could be found, especially if they are able to provide their own maintenance. Friends at home who are prepared to assist by organising working parties or collecting subscriptions will be thankfully communicated with. The hon. treasurer in England for Miss Procter's work is Col. Williams, The Bank, 20, Birchin-lane, London, E.C. Pastor Said's present address is 153, Adelaide-road, Hampstead, London.

Of the need of such mission work everyone familiar with life in Syria can speak. To a large, a painful extent, the country is the home of religions that have lost their power in a dead formalism. The people live in the spirit of fear that depends on charms and contrivances to ward off evil, but know little of the revelation of love and grace in Jesus Christ, and of the possibilities of his full salvation. The missionary is a living message, and as a native said to the present writer, "We see that the religion of the Protestants is much deeper than ours, and we are watching to see if you live up to it."

Pastor Said is prepared to lecture on life in Bible lands during his visit. He is the bearer of letters from H.M. Consul at Beyrout (Mr. R. Drummond Hay), who speaks highly of the work. The Bishop of Jerusalem says of Miss Procter, "You have worked hard, and with much self-denial, and deserve sympathy and support." Dr. Henry H. Jessup, of the American Mission in Beyrout and Syria, says: "M. Tanius has certainly been a very faithful labourer in Schwifat and vicinity," and he goes on to say that their mission is obliged to practise "such severe retrenchment as will sweep away some forty village schools." Others, including distinguished members of the Society of Friends, join in an unqualified endorsement of worker and work.

Our Party at Brooklands.

THOSE who dwell in the beautiful country can scarcely imagine our delight in the East End to receive a warm invitation from Dr. and Mrs. Kidd for our poor women to spend a day at their lovely residence at Blackheath. It would be difficult to decide who received most pleasure: those who gave the invitation or the invited guests.

About half of the two hundred were widows, and many of these bright Christians, who amid the masses shine for Jesus, expecting and watching for their soon coming Lord. The day was all that could be desired. First, the arrival in a number of "brakes," and then strolling around the woodland, rowing on the pretty little lake, and resting under the shady trees.

There was much kindly intercourse between Mrs. Kidd's visitors and our poor women, many of whom had long known the Lord, and had found his promises all yea and amen through Jesus Christ. One lady said afterwards, "You asked me to help these poor widows; they have helped me instead, they have strengthened my faith in God."

It was lively to note the refining influence of the Gospel, seen in the kindness to each other, and more especially to the feeble and aged of seventy to eighty years, and the four who were quite blind. The testimony of one of these blind ones to the faithfulness of God was an encouragement to anyone weak in the faith.

We saw colour coming into pale cheeks with the nourishing food and the fresh air. Some of the very feeble ones said they were ever so much stronger for the day, and were returning invigorated for the labour of the morrow.

During the afternoon we had a joyful surprise in a visit from Miss Annie Taylor, who had only arrived a few hours from Tibet, as usual full of freshness and a burning zeal for these poor heathen Tibetans. She described their worship of the devil and drew lessons for the unsaved in our midst.

We give this little account, thinking that before the autumn passes friends may take the hint, and many of our London missions thus be refreshed. Words fail to tell the cheer by such kindness to those working for God in the pressure of the great city.

"Come, see the place where the Lord Lay."

Come, see the place where Jesus lay,
The place of rest when work is done;
The place of peace when ends the day
Of battle fought and victory won.

Come, see the place where Jesus lay,
The place of triumph after strife;
No walls can keep, no force can stay
The Resurrection and the Life.

Come, see the place where Jesus lay,
The place of hope for ages all;
So shall our graves give up their prey,
So shall we rise at Jesus' call.

Come, see the place where Jesus lay,
As sacred yet as it was then;
A place to worship at, and pray
In hope, till Jesus come again.

Open-Air Preaching.

The following exhortation (omitting the particular circumstances) to a little band of Christian Workers on recommencing their labours for the summer, may be seasonable to others: —

SEEK in all you do to spread a sense of God. Not merely that there is a God, but that He is living, loving, caring, listening. If then you pray in public, collect your minds; be calm and pray, really speaking to Him; or if you read his word, let it be with seriousness and reverence; or if you speak, let it be as God's messengers, representing Him.

As such, do not begin about man, what we are, but about God, what He is; what He has provided, what He has promised.

Lay well the old foundations—that God, in his great love and tender mercy, has provided for our forgiveness, our healing, our deliverance, for our holiness, our present peace and eternal happiness. Tender wisdom is needed to approach the soul of man. And all this through a righteous foundation—the obedience, and the sufferings of Christ. Make known "that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself;" and now sends forth his servants to beseech men to be reconciled to God. Speak, being one who is himself thus reconciled, and at peace. "Oh! to grace, how great a debtor!"

Show that the first two gospel blessings promised are, the forgiveness of sins, and the gift of the Holy Spirit. Keep both these in mind.

And that these two blessings are given by God on our repentance towards Him, and on our faith in the Lord Jesus Christ—such being the irreversibly appointed way.

But, seeing that the soul of man is asleep as to divine things, it must be awakened; and the appointed startling awakening truth is, that it is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment. This awakening is not effected by loud tones, but through the truth spoken with solemnity, intense seriousness, deep feeling, full belief. With such labour the Spirit of God works. And, in fact, unless He works, all our work will vanish away.

Point out definite personal sins, and trace them to the root of a fallen nature. Point out erroneous ideas in religion, and trace them to ignorance of God and his word. Paul told the Athenians that he who is created ought not to have wrong thoughts of Him who created him.

Also do not point out merely that an immoral action is wrong, but, further, that it is wrong in this way: that it is contrary to God—the holy God, the loving God, the righteous God, the Author of our being—our Judge.

If, while so speaking, some around look cold, or cloudy, or smile, or talk—be patient. The soul of man is a wonderful thing; also allowances must be made for the young or frivolous. Perhaps, after all, it may prove that such hearers only presented an incorrect external appearance to deceive their companions; and were inwardly in a groping, inquiring, seeking condition, who were after all taking in the truth spoken. This is often the case. Be encouraged.

Whilst warning has its place, see that you encourage. Make much of the daily life in business. The proper occupation of work, when blessed of God, affords good opportunities for honouring God, and for cultivating a trustful, faithful spirit. Deep, close fellowship with the Lord, is often nurtured by temporal difficulties.

Touch upon your own experience now and then, but not too often.

Let us be ready for the Master's use. Not forward to thrust ourselves into service, yet not slow to go forward when He opens the path. Many a Christian man has something to say in his Master's cause now and then. But to speak, and speak, and speak again, week after week, needs frequent meditation on the Bible, and prayer and thoughts incidental to our coming in contact with the mind and affairs of others. He who would call others to repentance, needs himself to be, not indeed miserable and sad, yet in a repentant spirit, contrite speech, not as a saint, but as a saved sinner.

An occasional reference to some topic of Christian, national, or parochial importance, which may have happened during the week, may enlist attention and be seasonable.

Eyes are upon all. And those who come a little or much to the front, these are especially marked. They, of all men, should so live as to be known in their neighbourhood to be right-minded persons—kindly, just, truthful, industrious; gentle, yet courageous, courteous, patient, temperate, something, much, of the Master, being seen in and illustrated by his servant.

Just a word as to tracts and books. I would advise these in moderation; and that, in general, before giving them away, they should be read and approved by the giver.

The Russian Dukhobortsi.

THE Dukhobortsi of the Caucasus are a body of people whose origin appears to date from that great European movement of two or three hundred years ago, in which the English Quaker movement arose. They profess implicit belief in and obedience to those Gospel teachings which are summed up in the words, "God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth," and "Love one another," "Love your enemies." Only those who have been able to follow such documentary evidence as Vladimir Tchertkoff has now collected and will shortly publish can form an idea of the way in which, contrary to official calumnies upon them, these Dukhobortsi have meekly and patiently stood against the extremity of persecution and injury with which the Russian rulers and soldiers have overwhelmed them.

Obedience to the command, "Love one another, love your enemies," has brought persecution upon the Dukhobortsi. Really believing and following the Prince of Peace, they found themselves unable to become soldiers, and, as they themselves phrase it, "learn the art of murder." In this they have not learned from the writings of Leo Tolstoy, as many suppose, but have simply followed the old tradition of their body, which has before been persecuted and exiled for the same cause, even at the end of last century. The Russian Government, enforcing the conscription, and believing it right (despite the commands of Christ) that men should fight in the interests of the State, necessarily finds in the Dukhobortsi an enemy whom it must subdue, or by whom it must be subdued. Hence these persecutions, which have taken the shape of wholesale beatings, confiscations, violations, imprisonments, and murders (for the deaths of many victims can be called by no other name).

During last winter over 4000 men, women, and children, driven from their prosperous homes and all but without resource, were left to live or die. If it had not been for the help of their brethren who were left behind, their case would have been still worse. They have been crowded together under the worst conditions, and have experienced the most extreme destitution. Roughly speaking, 1000 of these—one-fourth of them—have died of their misery; the rest are almost all of them sick and dying; only one in a hundred is really fit for work. Many of them are afflicted with an eye disease which destroys the sight.

The friends who are moving to help the Dukhobortsi see three courses:—(1) An appeal to the Russian Government to mitigate if not cease the persecution, and give permission to the Dukhobortsi to emigrate. (2) The gathering and forwarding of funds for immediate relief. The sufferers have to every twenty persons three horses (kept in case they should be exiled further away and have no means of transit), and each such group can be supported on £4 per month. Relief sent at once may save lives which would otherwise end. (3) The emigration of as many as possible of these people to other countries, England or elsewhere, where they may find either permanent or temporary settlement. Subscriptions to V. Tchertkoff, Broomfield, Duppas Hill, Croydon, will be forwarded through reliable channels.

Missionary Items.*

TWENTY years ago a traveller in Burma left a copy of the Psalms at a house where he stayed. A native read the book, resolved to cast away his idols, learnt Psalm li., and used it as a daily prayer. At last a missionary visited his village and gave him a New Testament. The story of salvation filled him with joy. "For twenty years," he said, "I have walked by starlight; now I see the sun."

A military graduate was successfully treated for a cataract at the mission hospital in Hankow. As he returned to his home, forty-eight other blind men gathered about him, and begged him to lead them to the wonderful foreign doctor. So this strange procession of blind men, each holding on the other's rope, walked for 250 miles to Hankow, and nearly all were cured. One, who could not be cured, received, while in the hospital, the better gift of spiritual healing.

There are about 1100 American missionaries in China representing the Protestant churches of the United States.

"How can I bring people in if I have to persuade them to walk twenty miles?" asked an elderly Chinese woman, a Christian, and fired with love for souls. She walked over ten miles herself every Sunday to come to church, but how could she persuade indifferent ones to come so far, or further, to seek what they had not yet learned to prize? The little mission centres need to be multiplied a thousandfold, for the white fields stretch away on every hand unreaped.

Some Japanese Christians in connection with the American Presbyterian Mission in Japan have hit upon a novel way of raising money to build a chapel by selling book-marks. They are poor, hard-working people, engaged in making chinaware, women as well as men being busy all day. But at night they set to work making book-marks, and devote the proceeds from the sale of these to the building fund.

The people of Uganda now spend hundreds of pounds yearly in the purchase of New Testaments, Gospels, and Christian literature.

A Chinese School.

SUPPOSE we take a peep at a Chinese school. As we go up the front steps, what is all this fearful racket? You need not feel afraid to go in. The boys are not tearing each other's hair, nor knocking each other down; not a bit of it. They are just doing what every good little scholar in China is expected to do; that is, every boy is studying his lesson over out loud. By "out loud" I mean in a perfect roar.

As they do this nearly all day long a good many of them quite ruin their voices. When you hear them trying to sing together it reminds you of a band of frogs.

The schoolboys in China go to school at the first streak of daylight, and schools keep open until dark. Most of the pupils have a fine memory, and are always cultivating it, and are proud of it. Even the wee ones can recite chapter after chapter and book after book, and one Peking scholar recited the whole of the New Testament in a single examination.

When a boy comes to school his teacher reads over a few words or lines of the lesson, and then the boy, taking the book, goes to his seat and repeats in a loud tone the words the teacher has read until he is able to remember them. Then he goes to the teacher to recite. Giving him the book, the little fellow turns his back to the teacher and repeats what he has studied. You see it gives no chance to take a look inside to see what the next word is.

The studies are unlike those of English schools, though the boys are taught to read, write, and sometimes to work a little in arithmetic. Most of the time is spent in committing to memory the writings of the former great men of China. As the boys become older and more advanced in study, they must write compositions. These are seldom if ever about skating or fishing; perhaps never about the cow or horse or dog; but with some sentence of a noted author as a text, the young student writes out a learned essay on a subject that interests few and profits none.

There are no Board schools in China, as we have in England. The Government does not attend to the education of the children, and those who go to school at all must pay for their own education, or their parents must pay for them. Either a teacher opens a select school, or three or four fathers unite together and hire a teacher for their boys. Thus poor boys must go through life without any education, many of them unable to read a word. It is not unusual to find men who cannot read at all; indeed, it is probable that by far the greater number of men in China are unable to read, while very few can take up any ordinary book and read it without difficulty.

There are no girls in this school, nor would you find any in one Chinese school in ten. In fact, the people do not think it worth while to teach their girls to read.—The Silver Link.

Pretending to Cry.

APRIL is the Chinese third moon or month (for it is the same word), and I want to tell you what the poor heathen think of more than anything else at this time. Well, they call it the Feast of the Tombs; and what they are required to do is to go to the graves or coffins of their relations who have died within the last year or two, and weep and wail. The coffins are sealed very tight, so they often keep them in their houses a long while before being buried, and they think, poor things, that one of the spirits of the dead relation is still in the coffin! They think each person has three souls and seven spirits, and at death one soul goes into the coffin, one into the ancestral tablet, and the third roams about. So accordingly they offer food and incense to the soul in the tablet, especially on the 1st and 15th of every month, and all through this third month; and on the hillsides where the graves are you see a great deal of paper money pegged into the earth, and floating in the wind. This is for the people whose poor bodies lie below, and some is for the spirits of the earth to pay them to be kind to the spirits of the people who are dead and gone. Then this month, especially on certain days, you see women sitting by the graves or coffins and wailing in a very loud voice, crying and saying a great many words. You find on asking that they are crying because it is the right day, and that they will rest presently and then begin again, so that it is really made-up crying and not true sorrow at all in most cases. After this the people very often burn the bodies in the coffins, and only keep the bones, which they put into large jars and carry to the graves.

Is not this all very, very sad? Just to think that hundreds and thousands of people in this great Empire are thinking of all their departed relations and friends as still needing their help, and have no bright hope of meeting them again in a world where there is no sorrow! Also that those still living have no better hope beyond; they know not the Saviour, who is the Resurrection and the Life. Oh, may it make you pray and work more earnestly to help to bring the Gospel of Hope to them!

In the girls' school we have twenty-five girls, and I am thankful to say all of them keep well and happy. I had one trouble through a theft of some money, and would like you to pray for the girl who took it. I am sorry to say I do not think that she was really sorry for her sin; nor is her heart yet changed by God's Holy Spirit. If you will bring that one girl to God in prayer which shall "prevail," you will have done a great work this year. I thank you all for your prayers and work for me, and I know that God will bless you for it all just as far as you do it "for his sake." M. BOILEAU.

Sympathy for India.

The following letter is from three young readers in British Columbia:—

"Rachel, Wallace, and I have much pleasure in sending you seven dollars and a half that we have collected for the poor little Indian Children, who are suffering from the famine. We have been very interested in collecting the money, and have gone without sugar and also without a light at night that we might get more money. We all hope that it will reach you in time to be of use in helping the little children."

"When Jesus heard of it, he departed thence by ship into a desert place apart: and when the people had heard thereof, they followed him on foot out of the cities."—Matt. xiv. 13.

"And great multitudes followed him; and he healed them there."—Matt. xix. 2.

"Insomuch that they brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them."

"There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed every one."—Acts v. 15-16.

"Sorrowing most of all for the words which he spake, that they should see his face no more. And they accompanied him unto the ship."—Acts xx. 38.

"And as Paul was to be led in to the castle, he said unto the chief captain, May I speak unto thee? Who said, Canst thou speak Greek?"—Acts xxi. 37.

"And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, they came to meet us as far as Appii Forum, and the Three Taverns: whom when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage.

"And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard; but Paul was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him."—Acts xxviii. 15-16.

UNCLE TOM.

Is My Bible Really True?

WHERE DID WE GET IT?

By Rev. CHARLES LEACH, D.D., Manchester.

VII.

ANCIENT VERSIONS OF THE BIBLE.

THE books of the New Testament were originally written in the Greek language. At a very early date some of these books were translated and copied into other languages spoken by the men and women converted to Christianity who did not know Greek.

The early versions of the Scriptures grew out of the necessities of the case. After our Lord's ascension to heaven Christianity rapidly spread, and took root in many lands. Within thirty years of the day of Pentecost there existed Christian churches, with their regular services and officers, in places far removed from each other. They were to be found in Europe and in Asia: at Jerusalem, Cæsarea, Syria, Antioch, and in Rome. They existed in Asia Minor and in the cities along the coast. Churches were found in Philippi, Thessalonica, and at Corinth.

Had the people in all these places spoken the Greek language only, then their needs would have been met by multiplying copies of the original Greek books of the New Testament. But this was not so. It was necessary that the churches in these places should have records of the revelation which the Lord and his Apostles had made, in such language as they could understand. To meet their needs we know that versions were made. It is not easy to estimate the high value of these ancient versions of the Bible, bringing us back, as they do, to a date long before the oldest of our known manuscripts. They connect us with the Apostles, and form a most valuable chapter in the history of the Bible. If we can show that versions of the Scriptures were in existence in the second century, we shall, of course, by that fact also show that the Scriptures themselves were in existence before that time, or they could not have been translated into those languages.

Out of the multitude of ancient versions I select two for special examination. These two versions are called the Peshito and Old Latin versions. They were, so far as we know, the first versions of the Scriptures made. One was produced in the East, and the other in the West. It is thought by some that parts of these two versions were made within the apostolic age, and that shortly afterwards the translations of the separate parts were collected, and, after careful revision, were put together as completed books. I will now give you a short account of each.

I.—THE PESHITO, OR SYRIAC VERSION.

The Peshito, or Syrian Bible, is the oldest Christian version of the New Testament known to the world. The language in which it was written (the Syro-Chaldaic, or Aramean) was the common dialect spoken in Palestine at the time of our Lord, though Greek was much used in business.

It is quite impossible to fix the exact date of this ancient Syrian Bible. I venture to believe that parts of it were made in Apostolic times, and very likely under Apostolic direction. There is some evidence to show that messengers were sent from Edessa to Palestine to copy the sacred books, and that the Peshito version was made at a time before the last of the Apostles had passed away. We may take it as an admitted fact that the version was completed in the second century, and some time before the year 150 A.D.

This ancient Syrian Bible is a most important book. It was always regarded with respect, and in the earliest ages was received as an authoritative book. Indeed, we know that several other important versions were made from it into other languages —Arabic, Persian, and Armenian; and when the Syrian Church lost its unity, and split up into several opposing sects, all received this version as of authority, and all used it in their public worship.

These things all show it to have been of great importance. I venture the supposition that it may not only have been the most complete, but the most reliable collection of the sacred books then known to the world, except such as the church at Jerusalem may have possessed. The fact that it was probably a translation of many original manuscripts and careful copies of original manuscripts gave it an authority almost equal to the originals themselves.

It is important now that you should note the books which this version contains. It includes the four Gospels, and the Acts of the Apostles, fourteen Epistles of St. Paul, 1 John, 1 Peter, and James. You will see that this list very nearly corresponds with our own New Testament. It only omits the Second and Third Epistles of St. John, the Second Epistle of St. Peter, the Epistle of St. Jude, and the Book of Revelation. It is very important to notice that though this ancient version omits five books contained in our New Testament, it does not include any book which is not in our New Testament.

II.—THE OLD LATIN VERSION.

We have seen that the Peshito version was early made for the Eastern churches. We now turn to the Old Latin version, which was made for the Western churches, and which has exerted an influence upon them which can never be told by the pen of mortal man. It was from it that St. Jerome made his Latin Vulgate. That Vulgate became the Bible authority of the Roman Church, and remains so to this day. And for more than a thousand years it was the chief source of nearly every version of the Scriptures made in the West.

Though I have said that this version has become the New Testament of the Roman Church, we cannot look to Rome for its origin. It seems that Christianity rapidly spread in Africa in the early centuries, and it is an admitted fact that a Latin translation of some of the Books of the New Testament circulated among Christians there, and enjoyed considerable popularity in those regions.

But though we cannot fix the exact date of this old version, we are in possession of evidence which certainly carries us back to the second century. It was well known to Tertullian and men of his day. He freely uses it, and shows that it was not only known, but current at the time when he was in the midst of his literary activity.

Tertullian was born between 150 and 160 A.D. If we take 155 A.D. as the year of his birth, and remember that the Old Latin version was in use in the African churches when he was a man and at work, it will not be unreasonable to say that it was written before the last quarter of the second century began. It may have been written much earlier, but it could scarcely have been much later.

The question now comes as to what books this Old Latin version contained. It contained the four Gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, thirteen Epistles of St. Paul, three Epistles of St. John, the First Epistle of St. Peter, the Epistle of St. Jude, and the Book of Revelation. It omits the Epistle to the Hebrews, the Epistle of St. James, and the Second Epistle of St. Peter. It will thus be seen that it contains all the books which our own New Testament contains except three books, and it does not contain any which our Book does not contain.

If these two versions are put together we shall get a more striking and important fact. We shall find that, with the single exception of the Second Epistle of Peter, which they both omit, they contain all the books which our New Testament contains. And it is to be observed that they do not contain any other books besides. Respecting these two versions, several things should be noted. They were probably in common use by great bodies of Christians in the first half of the second century. The churches which used them received them as the heritage of a previous age. They represented the New Testament which was known, received, and revered, throughout the Christian Church, including both East and West.

Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

VERY pleasantly, as well as profitably, was the twenty-first anniversary of this work celebrated last Thursday. It was also the one-hundred and-fourteenth year since the establishment of the historic Surrey Chapel, of which the present church, under the happy pastorate of Rev. F. B. Meyer, is a perpetuation. Hawkstone Hall, adjoining the church, was seen in a very bright aspect, its tables and platform laden with choice flowers, and its space filled with beaming faces of evident welcome to the floral festival and strawberry tea, kindly provided by the ladies of the congregation, which preceded an evening meeting in the church itself.

After hearty praise and prayer, led by Rev. A. W. Evans, assistant pastor,

Mr. Farmer, elders' secretary, gave details of church work, showing a present membership of 1019, with 5000 children attending the Sunday-school, and touching upon the operations of twenty prosperous departments. He used warm words of appreciation concerning the pastor and his helper, and the blessings which have attended their labours. Much influence for good is exercised over the young people of the neighbourhood, and the missionary spirit is strong in the church.

The extensive amount of financial detail in connection with this large church organisation was represented by a comprehensive statement from Mr. Atley, trustees' secretary. He closed with the presentation of a congratulatory address to pastor and people from P.S.A. brethren.

Grateful words followed from the pastor for the valuable co-operation afforded him by Mr. J. R. Griffiths (organist), and by the choir. Very appropriately, Miss Edith Luke followed with the air, "Let the bright seraphim."

As Mr. Meyer remarked, "Newman Hall's Church" seems to be a lasting phrase; and the greeting accorded to the former pastor by this meeting showed the esteem and affection in which he continues to be held by the membership of Christ Church. His address expressed deep gratification at the pastoral and official advantages experienced and the Divine blessing enjoyed by the Church to-day. Referring to the recent Jubilee, he was glad to have good reason to greet our beloved sovereign as a Christian sister. This venerable servant of Jesus Christ also spoke words well calculated to stimulate personal devotion in those who remember his former labours so affectionately. He rejoices to still find, in the various scenes of his present ministry, multitudes willing to listen to the old Gospel, well knowing that they will get nothing else from him. Testimonies to blessing received in years long gone by continue to frequently reach Dr. Hall as he moves about in his loved work of com mending the Saviour.

Rev. C. de Carteret, who has recently become vicar of the neighbouring Episcopal Church of St. Paul, rejoiced to have a share in thanksgiving to God for the blessings which He has vouchsafed in connection with Christ Church and its ancient precursor. He gave a thoroughly Evangelical exposition and exhortation, from Rom. xii. 1, to surrender, sanctification, and service.

Impressive closing words were spoken by Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson in the way of admonition and entreaty, pointing out that, as regards the Church, the ministry is its flower, the Holy Ghost its dower, and an unselfish life in its members is its power. Individual responsibility, especially in regard to the spiritual upholding of the ministry, is apt to be overlooked in a large Christian organisation such as this. Above all things should the Church value her dower of the Holy Spirit as the great Administrator of her affairs; and particularly is a Holy Ghost ministry essential. As to power, true love is always unselfish; and the usefulness of a church is measured by what it does outside itself for others, in view of the needs, wants, and woes of a suffering humanity.

THE EVANGELIST.

"As Dead as his Stick."

At the close of one of Mr. Moody's meetings held in the large temporary building at Addison-road I, an accredited worker, wended my way into the "Inquiry Room." Already the room was full, and Christians were busy dealing with anxious souls—souls eager to be helped into the light and liberty of the Gospel. I glanced around to see if there was one without an attendant, and my eyes fell upon a young man seated not far from the doorway in which I stood.

Quietly I stepped up to him, and placed myself by his side, taking swift note of the fact that his whole appearance indicated him to be of the respectable, steady, and, as far as one could judge, moral living order. He seemed to be about five or six-and-twenty, and there was a seriousness on his face which betokened real earnestness. As I sat by his side I asked him, "What is your difficulty?" "Oh, ma'am," was his immediate response, "I have been trying so hard to be good, and the more I try the worse I get."

This straightforward answer, with its revelation of effort, wrongly directed it is true, but honest, touched my heart and awakened a deep longing to be used to direct him into the way of salvation. One instant's swift petition for help and wisdom, and the next my attention was attracted to a stout walking-stick which he was holding, and the clue was given me as to how to deal with him.

"Suppose, I said, that you should carefully plant and nurture that stick which you have in your hand, watering and watching over it with the greatest care—how long do you think that it would be before it would break forth into leaf, and bud and blossom?"

With a look of questioning surprise, he replied "Never."

"Why not?" I asked. "Think, before you answer. Why would it not bear fruit or leaf according to its kind?"

"Because it is dead," was, of course, his reply.

"Yes!" I returned, "it is dead; and you are as dead as your stick; dead in trespasses and sin; yet you have been striving to bring forth the fruit of life. You need life, new life, and this you can only have by coming to Christ as a helpless lost sinner, and accepting eternal life as his gift."

I had not time to add another word ere his whole face shone with a light which only those who have seen it can understand; to me it has always seemed like the glory sometimes seen on the face of a dying saint, and truly it is the glory of the other world shining on the soul passing from death unto life.

He burst out, "Oh, I see, I see it; thank you, thank you."

For a moment we both kept silence, our hearts filled with thanksgiving, and then it was an easy and delightful task to expound to him "the way of God more perfectly."

Then we parted to meet again no more "till we meet at Jesu's feet," there to rejoice together and to praise Him who loved us and gave Himself for us.

How strange it seems that we are so slow to learn, and even when learnt at conversion, to retain practically the fact that this old nature cannot bring forth fruit unto God. How much failure we should be spared if we did but reckon ourselves dead—living only "by faith in the Son of God who loved" us "and gave Himself for" us. L. J.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Noah Taylor, of the Evangelisation Society, has been at Old Portswood, Southampton, conducting a tent mission. God has given great blessing to his people, who have all united in this special effort; backsliders are being restored and sinners converted. J. H. Holloway.

The Brothers Weaver have been labouring in the Old Barnwell Theatre at Cambridge. The meetings have manifested many tokens of God's blessing resting upon the work.

Mrs. Baeyertz closed a most successful mission at Newbattle, Midlothian, on Monday, July 5. The meetings began on the Diamond Jubilee week, when the thoughts of many were set on showing loyalty to their earthly sovereign, yet there was deep interest manifest, and it deepened and grew as the meetings went on. It has been felt to be a most refreshing time in the district; saints and sinners have been blessed. A. Hardie, Minister.

The Famine in India.

Painfully interesting information about the terrible condition of millions in the famine districts in India was given by some missionaries, who had just come from relief work, on Tuesday, 6th inst., at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street.

Rev. C. Hope Gill, C.M.S., from Jabalpur, where the famine is raging with the greatest severity, mentioned that it has continued for a very long time, but that the worst is still before us; not until the autumn harvest at the end of October can the end come, and even after that time there will be continued suffering. Whilst he stated that much had been done by the Government officials, scores and hundreds must die daily from famine in the Mundla district, as the roads become almost impassable at the beginning of the monsoon, and consequently the conveyance and distribution of grain is most difficult. The C.M.S. at Jabalpur have a poorhouse holding about 200, but in spite of all their care, as many as 143 have died, not from actual starvation, but most of them from the dreadful diseases caused by the endeavour to digest unsuitable food. The Government allows Mohammedans and Hindoos to adopt children, but what an opportunity now presents itself to Christians to care for the orphan children, and at the same time to tell them of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Miss Davis, of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, Aligurh, some 350 miles from Jabalpur, spoke as one not actually from a famine district, but from one in which only very great scarcity prevails. Their work is chiefly among respectable purdah women, who would sooner die at home than be seen in the street begging. Many men have deserted their wives, and there are many widows, amongst whom there is very great want. Women sell their girl-children in order to buy food for themselves. Miss Davis mentioned one who did so, but who was afterwards so overcome by remorse, as she thought of the future of her child, that she ran off and drowned herself. We who have never felt the gnawings of hunger can have no idea of the sufferings and temptations to which these poor people are exposed.

Rev. L. Parsons, Wesleyan missionary, very recently returned from Jabalpur, mentioned, as an instance of the starving condition of the people, that when Mr. Hicks shot a tiger lately, some ten or twelve hungry wretches immediately fell on the carcase and gorged themselves with it. In the streets of Jabalpur men are to be met crying out piteously "I am hungry, I am hungry," whilst others appeal with their quiet look of suffering. Would God the English Christians could see those agonised faces! The city is crowded with people, and they die in the streets, at the hospital doors, and in the mission compounds. Fighting the famine by the relief workers is no easy task, and it tries the strongest nerves. Many a one has been knocked up by it; may the Lord bless those now there, and may Christ's people in England be stirred to do what they can to alleviate the dreadful state of things.

After the missionaries had spoken,

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., expressed his wish to invite the missionaries to give the information to as many of the members of the House of Commons as he could gather together; and Lord Kinnaird proposed that a meeting for prayer and conference of all workers for famine relief should shortly be held.

Lord Radstock, who had called the meeting together, said by all means interest members of Parliament, and have a united meeting of all workers for famine relief, but do not let this hinder each one of us from doing his best. He invited all present to a meeting to be held on the 14th at the same place. The gathering, which had been a most interested and sympathetic one, then concluded with prayer.

Dr. Colin Valentine, of Agra (who is recruiting his health in Scotland), writes:—"On a recent Sabbath afternoon 5000 famine-stricken creatures rushed into our mission compound crying out for food. It was impossible to attend to such a great multitude at once, and my assistant and the friends who were helping him weeded out many of the terribly destitute, and gave them a few pice. I receive most harrowing accounts of the sufferings of the people. A gentleman who has spent the whole of his life in India, and has, on the whole, taken a hopeful view of the ultimate outlook, has entirely changed his tone, and his opinion is a most gloomy one. By the newspapers I see that the monsoon has commenced favourably in various parts of India. God grant that this may be the case!"

Our Oxford Letter.

[From Our Own Correspondent.]

Oxford is now very quiet. Vacation, however, would seem to have its temptations both to the citizens and to the Churches. There is a certain depression felt when the undergraduates have gone down. The tradespeople certainly feel it; many of the poorer classes are thrown out of work, and the churches themselves are liable to catch the apathy that, according to most people, is the special temptation of the "Long." Yet this is the time for that patient, quiet work which is so necessary to a steady growth. The stakes must be strengthened as well as the cords lengthened, and for this the comparatively quiet months we are just beginning afford a special opportunity. Personal intercourse with many is only possible during this time, and many a family who are too busy during term to receive a visit may now be cheered and helped by the pastor's call. Why should not something be also attempted for the College servants during these months? They are now comparatively free. A series of evangelistic services—in fact, a special mission by some tried worker, would, under God, be fruitful of much good.

Mutual pleasure is given by the visit of an old pastor, and the Primitive Methodists of Pembroke-street welcomed at their anniversary services on Sunday Rev. G. C. Crickmay, who, for eight years laboured at this chapel. The re-union was full of profit and pleasure. Bright and helpful services were held on the Sunday, and an interesting meeting on the Monday.

The members of the Methodist Free Church are to be congratulated on the report they were able to present last Monday at their annual meeting. It would seem that there has been a growing work among the young during the year, and a great impetus has been given to the spiritual work of the Church by the Christian Endeavour Society. Seven country churches are being fed from this Church. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth."

Through the interest of local friends, and by the kind permission of Mrs. Shirley, of Wyaston House, New Inn Hall-street, a sale was held on Thursday for the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. Notwithstanding the difficulties attending special efforts this year, we trust substantial help will be sent to the society.

Midnight Meeting Movement.—On Thursday last, Sir George Williams gave his annual strawberry feast to the fallen women of the Strand. A goodly company of voluntary workers assembled at 9 o'clock, when Rev. Dr. Newman Hall addressed them on the value of dealing with individuals. Illustrating this thought by our Lord's action in the case of Nicodemus, the woman at the well, the penitent thief, and the disciples on the road to Emmaus, he brought home the idea with great force. Then all the vantage points in the locality were missioned, but the attendance was disappointing, the effects of the recent Jubilee being still apparent among the women. Sir George treated the word "Friend" as an acrostic, and Mr. Dashwood gave an admirable address on the letters "V. R.," so much in evidence of late. One poor girl brought in her stock of unsold flowers, and gave them away to the lady workers; but a friend present saw that the full value of the fragrant buds found its way into the right pocket before she left for home. Several addresses were taken with a view to visitation.

Public Morality in India and England.

MRS. JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER occupied the chair at St. Martin's Town Hall, London, on Friday last, at the twenty-seventh anniversary meeting of the Ladies' National Association for Abolition of all forms of State Regulation of Vice. She was supported by Mrs. Tanner and Miss Priestman, of Bristol, Dr. Agnes McLaren, and a large number of branch secretaries from all over the kingdom, and by Sir James Stansfeld, Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., Mr. Stuart, M.P., Mr. J. P. Thomasson, ex M.P. for Bolton, and other well-known recusants in this movement.

It will be remembered that this question, after having been settled by the repeal of the C.D. Acts in England in 1886, and in India soon afterwards, has been revived by the concessions made by the present Government to the Government of India, and by the avowed intention (vide debate in the House of Lords) of reintroducing the regulation and tolerance of vice in India. By a coincidence, the Times, on the day of this meeting, printed an elaborate telegraphic report of the debate in the India Legislative Council, showing that the worst predictions of Mrs. Butler's party were coming true.

Mrs. Butler, reviewing the situation, spoke with pleasure of the thwarting of proposals for vice-regulation in South Australia, and also in New Zealand; while as regards the action of our Home Government, she declared that she never felt more hopeful of the ultimate victory of righteousness than at the present moment, notwithstanding the decay in England of moral faith, the sense of justice, and strong attachment to noble principles and lofty motives.

A most significant contribution to the meeting was made by Dr. Agnes McLaren, who explained that Miss Sarah Robinson, "The Soldiers' Friend," who welcomed the C.D. Acts when first enacted, had now entirely declared against them and their re-enactment, as follows:—"I remember telling you when the C.D. Acts first came into effect at Aldershot, that they were a boon. There was a Christian doctor and good helpers (ladies) to look after the girls; I was there and saw all this. But as time has gone on, I have come to see the evil of these Acts, moral evil, is worse than physical; and I see great harm has been done, which perhaps can never be undone, by regulating vice. All shame has been destroyed, in the minds of both men and women concerned in the matter. Soldiers are no longer ashamed to be seen frequenting dens. Teetotallers go to them, and even men who attend Bible classes, because the thing is (in a way) sanctioned.

"The women are not ashamed. When I have called on some, I have seen texts of Scripture pinned on the walls, and a nice decent-looking girl would ask if she might join the Helping Hand Temperance Society at the Institute. On my refusal, she would say, 'I don't see why not; you and the soldiers get your living one way and I another; I pay my way the same as you do,' and these girls would attend all our public meetings and services with no apparent sense of incongruity.

"The whole standpoint is altered, and it is felt that the trade is as much recognised as any other. This is fearful moral evil, and no supposed physical good can ever atone for it. It is of the unclean spirit throughout."

Sir JAMES STANSFELD, the former parliamentary leader of this cause, made an important and logical pronouncement, concluding with practical suggestions respecting the Indian troops, among which were these: That as the troops sent to India are mere boys, it was the duty of the Government to impart moral education and environment, and make vice difficult; and that the state of morality or immorality of any given regiment or company should be reckoned with in awarding good-conduct stripes and other rewards, and that the presence of diseases consequent on immorality should be considered a stigma on soldiers and officers alike.

Mr. STUART, M.P., in a short speech, showed that the very first act of the India Legislative Council (as reported in to-day's Times) was to repeal the Act of 1895, and by so doing prepare the way for such a system as Lord George Hamilton's despatch prohibited, and promised should not be reintroduced.

Other speakers were Mr. H. J. Wilson (M.P. for Holmfirth) and Mrs. Wilson, Miss Balgarnie, Mrs. Solly (of Cape Colony), Mrs. Richardson (York), etc. Resolutions consistent with the purpose of the meeting were carried unanimously, and with enthusiasm.

In Inland China.

A LETTER TO MR. S. TREVOR FRANCIS.

IT is a long time ago since we parted at Vancouver. We were much stirred up six weeks ago by reading a book on revivals, in which the author stated revivals were largely dependent on our own state of soul, our prayerfulness, and efforts for the salvation of men. The book further stated that churches had been known to die out (without revivals there will not ordinarily be as many persons converted as will die off in a year) where people supposed the work "uniformly" carried on, and souls gathered in one by one, without any special season of blessing, was the best way. And that, on the contrary, it was under "excitements" that sinners became willing to seek salvation.

We were much stirred to find out how much the blessing rested with ourselves, and that by unitedly gathering for prayer and crying to God we might bring about a revival in our midst. The spirit of prayer was given us. Our little company became expectant of coming showers, and we were permitted to see the workings of God's Spirit in our midst, as we had not in the past. I think personally our own blessing might be summed up under four words—faith, prayer, sowing, and harvest.

Faith. The Lord has shown us we may exercise faith. It is extraordinary how much we were in bondage as regards the will of God, not daring to ask and persevere lest it might not be God's will. The Lord has delivered us from this snare. We see ourselves now as voluntary responsible agents,

TRUSTED AND ENTRUSTED AMBASSADORS.

Second, Prayer. Prayer has become much more real. It has been most blessed to understand that the promises, and encouragements to pray are intended by God to lead us to bring all our desires to Him, and that we may expect answers to these very same petitions. You may smile, and pity us, but we had been afraid to exercise faith generally, not daring to believe our requests were the will of God, and that faith ought always to be exercised, and to a very large extent.

Third, Sowing. We had always believed in our call to sow, and that there was much preparatory work to de done before we could expect any results. We thought God would bring about these results more or less independently of us, and if souls were not saved it was because God's time had not come, and sinners would not believe the Gospel.

Fourth, Harvest. We had not understood that the "harvest" was as sure as the "seed time;" that God has made it impossible in the natural world to have one without the other (Gen. viii. 22). We thought the "due season" for reaping souls would probably be twenty or thirty years hence, though the farmer's "due season" was within a few months! We had fallen back on the Sovereignty of God to cover our own failure and unbelief. This was largely due to certain interpretations of such scriptures as Gal. 6, 9, and James 5, 7. Now we find much more rests with us than we have dared to think. It is not the purpose or will of God that his servants should be hindered and hampered by Satan at every turn by thoughts of his (God's) sovereign will. He leaves his servants free to pray and work up to the utmost of their capacities.

On January 28 we returned from a journey round the village schools, which had been marked by some remarkable instances of the Lord's power to lead heathen men to Himself. On Feb. 5, while at the Pilgrim's Rest, we were much drawn out in prayer for the little boys and girls, thirteen in all, under that roof. United prayer was made for the salvation of the eight boys that night. In a remarkable degree we feel sure the Lord was going to speak to them all that night, and the result was the boys and two of the girls came forward and confessed Christ, and the other three girls later the same evening, we believe, did the same.

This was Friday evening. We were full of expectancy, and the Lord gave us the spirit of prayer and supplication such as we had not known or enjoyed in our past history. The next Lord's Day, after breaking bread, I was moved to give a free invitation to any desiring baptism, and to express my willingness to receive any who were truly repentant, and desired to serve the Lord.

An afternoon meeting was specially arranged to receive any who might come for this purpose. The weather was bitterly cold, with rain and snow. Our guest hall has only a mud floor with bare tiles above, no fire, and strong currents of air blowing through the place. We went out and found it full of men, women, and children, desiring to be baptized. This was the "new thing" and the "marvellous thing" we had been led to ask the Lord to do. We had a blessed time that afternoon, followed by baptisms the next Lord's Day publicly in the river. This was a sight Wuch'en had not seen before. Men had not been publicly baptized, much less women, but we were able to carry this through before a large crowd without any difficulty.

The weather was still cold, and under no circumstances do the Chinese ever use cold water in winter. It was grand to see them willing to go into the cold river to obey the Lord! Indeed, our hearts are full of praise.

While the Chinese New Year's festivities were on we were led to hold special meetings, walking through the town and holding short meetings in the open air; in the evening the Jesus Hall was filled with those who were willing to listen to the Gospel, so that the Lord caused us to triumph over the weather, time of the year, and outside distractions, which those who live in China know so well. At 10 a.m. we met all the native Christians in the Jesus Hall for prayer, and one after another brought their "mountains," their blind, their maimed, and their halt, and laid them down at Jesus' feet in believing prayer.

There has been some opposition. The daughter of an old woman of sixty-nine forcibly held back her mother from coming to the hall to be baptized. We felt much concerned lest the old woman should go back. However, next Lord's Day she made her escape from her daughter on some pretext or other, and got round to us, hoping to be baptized that day. All her preparations were made, but no baptism took place. The opinion was expressed that it would be better to wait till her relations were willing for the old woman to be baptized. At that time things looked very dark. The daughter was filled with rage, and had come to one of the evening meetings after her mother, to try and get her away, and to inform us her (the mother's) family were unwilling for her to join the church. Prayer was offered for the daughter that she might repent. Ten days ago her mother told us her daughter had repented, and she wished to buy a Testament for her. A few days after the mother brought her daughter here to get the Testament, and to be instructed in the Gospel. The

LION WAS CHANGED INTO A LAMB!

The Lord's Day following the mother was baptized in the presence of her daughter, who was now willing to do a daughter's part, and has since attended our services, following with interest in her hymn-book and Testament, as she knows how to read. The Lord has encouraged us so much we are just waiting day by day for the answers to our prayers. Some answers have not come yet, but we do desire to persevere.

How are you getting along? We have heard little news of you since your visit to Tunbridge Wells. Are you better in health now? The party who came out to China in 1894 have all done well. Quite a few came out last year, and we are expecting more this autumn, the Lord willing. The need this way is appalling. Will you tell the Christians to get out of England, and not to die there, nor be found there when the Lord comes?

I dare not trust myself to write you about this matter. My heart is sad. Let us bow our heads in shame. Think of the eternal regrets "in that day"!

Now, with our love in the Lord, yours most sincerely in Him, EDWARD J. BLANDFORD.

On Wednesday last week Mr. and Mrs. J. Gurney Barclay entertained the whole of the missionaries of the London City Mission at Knotts Green, Leyton. This was the fifth occasion of the kind, and the party numbered about 450, to which must be added about 100 personal friends of the host and hostess, who came in the afternoon. Everything possible was arranged for the enjoyment of the missionaries, each of whom was presented with a book as they were leaving. Vocal and instrumental harmony was introduced by the choir of missionaries, who seldom, if ever, have sung amid such beautiful natural surroundings.

The event of the day transpired after tea, when Mr. Robert Barclay presided over a short meeting. He reiterated the words of welcome that the aged and revered host had spoken earlier in the day, and confessed to feeling humbled before so many God-fearing men who had toiled so long for the Master in the London slums. Rev. W. S. H. Wilson (vicar of Leyton) offered prayer, and addresses were given by Revs. W. R. Mowll (Christ Church, Brixton), and G. H. C. Macgregor (Notting Hill).

At this juncture Mr. and Mrs. Gurney Barclay came forward, at the request of Sir George Williams, and a handsome illuminated address was disclosed to view. Sir George asked them to accept it as a small but affectionate token of sympathy and esteem for what they had done for the London City Mission. The address, which contained the portraits of the recipients, and was signed by the committee, officers, and a dozen of the oldest missionaries, set forth a grateful recognition of the long association of Mr. and Mrs. G. Barclay with the Mission, and their liberal support of its funds.

With considerable feeling Mr. and Mrs. Barclay acknowledged the gift. Hearty rounds of cheers were given, and Sir George next presented Messrs. Packer and Millman each with a handsomely-bound Bible, they being the two oldest missionaries, having served the London City Mission continuously since 1847.

"Truth Before Everything."*

Mrs. Josephine Butler, whose splendid service in the cause of morality has won for her a foremost place among the distinguished women of the Victorian era, has been constrained once more to take up her pen. She says:—"I feel that I have a word to say, and I must say it." And with an eloquence impossible to all but those whose souls are bowed down by the burden of their message, she has said it. It is a wonderful deliverance, such as perhaps scarcely any other woman could have written.

It is touching in its gentleness and tenderness towards some who have been, as she believes, betrayed into a false position, but in its exposure and condemnation of vicious principles and practices it is uncompromising and overwhelming; and yet all through its language is singularly measured and convincing, the words of one whose confidence in ultimate victory nothing can shake because she believes that "The battle is not ours, it is the Lord's."

The words of Wendell Phillips at the grave of Lloyd Garrison are quoted as a motto at the beginning: "Only by the most absolute assertion of the uttermost truth, without qualification or compromise, can a nation be waked to conscience of that truth or strengthened for duty." All that follows is worthy of the quotation, and is in strict accord with the words she has chosen for the title of the pamphlet—Truth Before Everything.

We do not know that we can render truer service to the cause of national morality than by commending Mrs. Butler's remarkable pamphlet to our readers.

New Hebrides.—The missionaries of the group have decided to have a new "Dayspring" in place of the mission vessel wrecked last year. It was agreed that the Victorian Church, in co-operation with the home committee of the John G. Paton Fund, be requested to obtain the ship as soon as possible, and that all the churches be urged to co-operate heartily in the maintenance thereof. There is a goodly sum in hand towards meeting the initial cost.

Dunoon Training College.

The annual report says:—"During another year the hand of the Lord has been good upon us, and we have found no reason to depart from the familiar principles of the College. We seek to train for Gospel work in various forms young men who are capable, consecrated, and evangelical. The spiritual quality of holiness—enthusiasm for soul-winning, self-sacrifice, and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit are placed first. The Book of books is to us the Bible, and so we aim that all our students become familiar with it in Greek and Hebrew.

"The present year has been marvellous, for our Heavenly Father has sent us a noble building far above what we expected. By this means the College has a local habitation and a name, besides the possibility of wide influence. We are abundantly thankful to the kind friends who have enabled us to enter on the premises, and who wish to remain unknown. Steps will be taken at once to supply all the purchase money. The students have shown praiseworthy diligence in their work. Some of them have entered the ministry during the year, and send us cheering words of their work. The number of students during the winter was thirty-two. Our faith has often been sorely tried, but we have lived to see the faithfulness of God, and we have no hesitation in going forth to new trials in the assurance that God is with us.

"In addition to the regular college work, it is in our heart to make the extensive buildings and grounds of the New College a seaside rest for weary Gospel workers of all denominations. We trust means will be sent to build small cottages within the grounds. The accommodation and service will be free, and the workers can pay their own food. It need hardly be again said that the Principal has given his services freely."

The New Session opens September 6, 1897.

The College Buildings are at Dhalling Mhor, Kirn. Rev. Duncan Macgregor is Principal.

A Quiet Day.

The third annual quiet day took place at Jordans, Bucks, on Thursday of last week, the meetings being held in the Friends' Meeting-house, and refreshments served in a tent pitched on the adjoining ancient burying-ground, where William Penn and his five children, and many other forefathers of the hamlet, sleep. The conveners were Mr. Colin Taylor, of Rickmansworth, and Mr. J. E. Taylor, of Aylesbury. About 120 attended, perhaps a fourth of whom were from the immediate neighbourhood, the rest from towns and villages within a radius of twenty miles. The subject considered was a comprehensive one: "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost." The speakers were Rev. Barnes Lawrence, of Blackheath, and Mr. Walter B. Sloan in the morning; Rev. Mr. Pearson, from Uganda, Mr. Morgan, Mr. Lane, and Mr. Inglis in the afternoon. Such gatherings can be convened with small expense of time or money. They do much for the instruction of Christians in country places, and often afford a fruitful opportunity for Gospel preaching.

Sailors' Welcome Home.

Miss Child has done well in removing the Sailors' Welcome Home from Ratcliff Highway to Canning Town. The former locality is well supplied with mission agencies. We should not be surprised if some of these should also by-and-by endeavour to meet the sailors and the increasing population down the river.

Miss Child's new Welcome Home is admirably situated just below Canning Town Station. On Tuesday evening, 6th inst., the monthly meeting of the Life Boat Crew was held. Addresses were given by Colonel Macgregor, Mr. R. C. Morgan, and by Mrs. Watts, who kindly interests herself in the sailors of the fleet of merchant vessels owned by the firm of which her husband is the chief partner. A number of testimonies to the grace of God followed from men of the sea.

There is a piece of ground behind the Welcome Home on which Miss Child wants to put up an iron building for the double purpose of a dining-room and a meeting-hall. It is called for by the necessities of the work, and doubtless the God whom she serves will supply the means.

Scripture Readers at Work.

The annual report of the Church of England Scripture Readers' Association indicates a large amount of good, varied and earnest work at a very moderate cost.

The agents employed by the society are occupied not only in visiting the poor from house to house and from room to room, but also in factories and workshops, besides conducting or assisting in open-air and mission services, temperance societies, Sunday-schools, etc. In the year ending March 31 last, nearly 400,000 visits were made by the 130 Scripture readers employed, of which about 50,000 were to the sick, aged or afflicted, and 7500 to public-houses, common lodging-houses, etc., whilst 13,500 cases were reported to the clergy and others for relief.

The number of services and meetings of various kinds held in the same period reaches the large total of 21,000. We congratulate the Association upon these signs of vitality and upon the earnest spirit in which the work is being carried on.

Here are the estimates of the work, as given by some of the London clergy, in whose parishes the Readers labour:—

The vicar of a South London parish says:—

"Our Reader is an exceptionally useful man; he is most energetic, and has his heart in his work. His visiting is thorough, and the poor people speak very highly of him. His success amongst the young is most marked, and his Sunday afternoon class for lads is now a strong feature of our work."

"During the last year Mr. —— again proved, not only his benefit to the parish, but his necessity. His years and experience are constantly proving of great help in the parish work. During the winter three or four special cases of conversion and great blessing through his means have occurred."

"I think great benefit has resulted from their work in keeping in touch with the working people, and helping the clergy to go where their services are needed. The number of poor attending church has certainly increased, and this is in a measure due to the exertions of the Scripture Readers. Without some such agency the parish could not be worked. They do their work zealously and well."

"I think the Reader has been very helpful in stirring up slothful people to avail themselves of religious privileges, and thus bringing some to God's house. His visits to the sick have been valued and blessed. He is a most diligent, conscientious worker, and has found his way into houses where visitors have been refused admission. He is kind, painstaking, and judicious. I am deeply grateful for his services."

"I earnestly hope the committee will be able to continue their grant, for which I am most grateful. The Reader gives me great satisfaction. His help is invaluable to me, and his knowledge of the people very considerable."

The offices of the Society are at 56, Haymarket, London, S.W.

Heaven's Sweetest Note.

I trust Thee—not myself, but only Thee;
Thro' the dark night of sorrow guide Thou me
The way I know not, but I know thy love
Will bring me safely to my rest above.

Here is no resting, for our saddened hearts
Are filled with disappointment, and the smarts
Of human sorrow, moaned in every breath,
Along our tearful journey unto death.

The blight of sin is in the bitter strife:
The hung'ring, thirsting of this human life;
No hollow laughter on the lips can hide
The yearning bitter cry "unsatisfied."

Yet there is resting from the ceaseless flow
Of disappointments that on earth we know;
For though our faith is ofttimes feeble, dim,
We can leave all our care and grief with Him.

And far away where the sweet Homeland lies,
There will be resting. There, the broken ties
Reforged again by the blest hand that died,
We rest in his deep resting "satisfied."

Then shall no sigh of sorrow moan to Thee,
No blot of sin, no wail of misery,
No brimful eyes, no souls with sins opprest,
No lonely hearts aweary with unrest.

God's Morning Stars, who swept along the slopes
[illegible] shores; who once had thrilling hopes
Which broke in gladsome song when time began,
And stilled to silence at the fall of man;

For very joyance shall the marshalled throng,
Those shining hosts of God, shout, shout a song
So vast in volume that its mighty sea
Shall roll its billows through eternity.

Yet sweeter note, and more harmonious still,
Shall steal along the courts of Heaven and thrill
Its secret way into the heart of God,
The Song of those redeemed by Jesu's blood.

Aggressive Work.—27.

ENTERING a large conservatory in one of our parks, where quite a number of people were moving about, I talked with a police officer who stood inside by the door. He said he had been away sick for some time. I asked where he would be now had the sickness terminated fatally. He replied he had been trying to believe in the Saviour; evidently he had thought seriously about the matter, as he spoke quite feelingly and was ready to talk about the great question. It was a pleasure to converse with him, as he was in a right frame of mind, and when I left him I felt some seed had been sown in good soil.

Close by an elderly man was standing. I handed him a booklet and asked if he were saved. He replied, "No one could tell that." I sat alongside him and showed him in a few sentences how it was our privilege to know, and how very simple it was. He answered rather sharply that he thought, at his age, he ought to know all about those things. "Yes," I said, "it is true; yet age is not always a passport to a knowledge of the way of life." He agreed with me.

After leaving the conservatory, I gave a booklet to a man standing by a lamp-post, and asked if he were saved. He answered, "You asked me that question not long ago, and I gave you an unkind reply, for which I am very sorry and I now wish to apologise."

About forty people were in an overhead railway carriage which I entered. I spoke up asking how many of us were saved and knew it. A young man looked at me intently, and I at once appealed to him as to whether he had the blessing. He replied, "Yes, for five years." Another man opposite to me said he had been saved six years, and the guard of the train who was inside said he was converted ten years ago. I asked them to tell us how the Lord brought them into the Kingdom. The first said he came into the Light under the preaching of the Word. The second said his case was at a revival meeting in Liverpool, and the guard explained how the Saviour met him at a meeting in Boston, U.S.A. I told how the Lord used affliction in bringing me in. All the other people listened most attentively and were evidently quite interested. It must have been rather a touching time to some present.

I met a well-dressed elderly man in the L. and Y. railway station last week, who said he met me on the L. and N.W. Railway twenty-five years ago, and I talked to him about his soul's salvation. He never forgot it, and had been a Christian man some years now.

I lately spoke to a railway official on the overhead railway, who said he was saved at one of my Hengler's Circus meetings eight years ago. I am at times asked why I ever discontinued these immense meetings, where we always had crowds, and which I was permitted to carry on for thirteen years. An answer is, that the Circus changed hands, and I could not get the building any longer. Instead of trying to obtain some other building, I feel that the meetings had done their work, and possibly the Lord wished me to labour on other lines for a time, which I have ever since felt to be correct.

Among the Militia.

Mr. John Coates, known in connection with the Ross Bible Carriage, writes from 3, Cantilupe-road, Ross:—

"Our labours among the militia have been most encouraging. We have had large companies to listen to the Gospel, and up to the present date have distributed upwards of 15,000 Gospel booklets among them, which, we are glad to find, are read and appreciated. Militiamen are provided with neither Bible nor Testament, and we now have over 1000 men in camp without the Word of God. We get a fresh company each month, and I have been enabled to place a copy of the New Testament in each tent in the camp, but funds for this are now exhausted.

"Our tent work is also encouraging. We have had a good time with our large tent at Stroud, and commence another tent mission at Stonehouse on the 18th."

Antwerp.—We opened the Sailors' Rest on July 1 with a short prayer and praise meeting. Several residents, English and Scandinavian, were present, and some sailors during the evening. Christian friends here are welcoming the effort. We ask for prayer that this place may be a blessing to many.

A MISSION APPEAL.

Dear Sir,—When we returned from China last November, we brought with us a young Chinese Christian who has been working with my brother-in-law, Dr. Edwards, at Tai-yuen, as medical assistant. He is very earnest, and has done a good deal of practical work, but was anxious for a more thorough training than he could get in China, as he hoped thus to become a more efficient worker. Dr. Edwards hoped some Christians in England would be found to take up his case and provide the necessary funds, but we have hitherto been disappointed in this, as we have only received promise of £15 a year for three years, whereas it will cost £100 a year.

We shall be very grateful if you can mention his case in The Christian, as if funds are not forthcoming he must return to China shortly. We have come here on my husband's account, as the doctors have forbidden him to speak, and ordered him to try the treatment here for his throat. It was a great disappointment to give up meetings already arranged, but we rest in the assurance that God's appointments are always best for his children.—Yours sincerely, E. Jessie Pigott.

FANNY J. CROSBY.

Dear Sir,—In connection with the biographical notice of Fanny Crosby in The Christian of the 8th inst., it may interest your readers to know that our sweet English hymn-writer, the late Frances Ridley Havergal, being much struck with Miss Crosby's hymns, wrote to inquire who she was. The following beautiful reply was received: "She is a blind lady, whose heart can see splendidly in the sunshine of God's love." Miss Havergal then sent her the following greeting, of which I only copy a portion. The whole may be found in "Under the Surface," under the title of "A Seeing Heart."—I remain, sir, yours obediently,

One whose privilege it was to know F. R. H.

Sweet blind singer over the sea,
Tuneful and jubilant: How can it be
That the songs of gladness, which float so far
As if they fell from the evening star,
Are the notes of one who never may see
"Visible Music" of flower and tree,
Purple of mountain, or glitter of snow,
Ruby and gold of the sunset glow,
And never the light of a loving face!
Must not the world be a desolate place
For eyes that are sealed with the seal of years,
Eyes that are only open for tears?
How can she sing in the dark like this,
What is her fountain of light and bliss?

Oh, her heart can see, her heart can see!
And its sight is strong and swift and free.

. . . . . .

Her heart can see, her heart can see;
Well may she sing so joyously!
For the King Himself, in his tender grace,
Hath shown her the brightness of his face;
And who shall pine for the glow-worm light,
When the Sun goes forth in his radiant might?

. . . . . .

Her heart can see! her heart can see
Beyond the glooms and the mystery,
Glimpses of glory not far away,
Nearing and brightening day by day.

. . . . . .

Dear blind sister over the sea!
An English heart goes forth to thee.
We are linked by a cable of faith and song,
Flashing bright sympathy swift along;
One in the East, and one in the West,
Singing for Him whom our souls love best.

"Singing for Jesus," and telling his love
All the way to our home above,
Where the severing sea, with its restless tide,
Never shall hinder, and never divide.
Sister, what will our meeting be,
Where our hearts shall sing, and our eyes shall see?

A CALL FROM THE ARMY.

Dear Sir,—I observe that a great number of young men are disposed to offer themselves for evangelistic work. Civil life appears to be crowded out with Gospel preaching, while our Navy and Army are in a certain sense neglected. True, we have our chaplains, and soldiers' and sailors' institutes, but it seems to me that if any permanent and lasting work is to be done the men must be on the spot to do it, and not altogether by preaching, but by living out the life—and prepared to strengthen those who are weak.

What I would propose is that a number of men, well taught in the Scriptures, and of strong character (nothing else will do) be drafted into our Army and Navy, where they will find abundant scope for their energies. Many young men enlist into our Army and Navy who have had a Christian training. They try to stand against the scoffs and jeers for some time, but finally give up the struggle. Here is an important field where all that is wanted is the man; everything else is provided.—Yours truly,

William Ferguson (Gunner).

AN ITEM OF INTEREST.

Dear Sir,—For the encouragement of those of your readers who seek to serve the Lord Jesus by scattering Gospel papers, you may possibly like to make known a circumstance which has recently come to my knowledge. A person employed in the home of a worldly family, known to me only by name, relates that from time to time there have come to that house copies of The Christian, with certain pieces or paragraphs marked in pencil, and accompanied by letters urging upon the receivers the claims of Christ. It is pathetic to learn that the papers and the letters are sent by a younger member of that family, who, on account of mental affliction, has been for many years in one of our large asylums. In what way the papers are first obtained is not known to me, but that they awaken real interest there can be no question.

Will not your readers pray that the seed thus sown by feeble hands, in ground practically untilled, may bear much fruit? I think you will feel, too, that the incident—one fully authenticated—is a further justification of your practice of putting into each issue even of a paper primarily intended for believers, some statement of the Gospel so simple that it lets low the saving rope of truth, low enough to reach such as from the depths of a despair either physical or spiritual, or both, may yet scan your pages for comfort, and dare to lay hold of the Saviour who can meet and satisfy their uttermost need. A Constant Reader.

THE ESSEX DISASTER.

Dear Sir,—In referring to the sufferings and loss of the Essex farmers you kindly mentioned my name. I thought, perhaps, as an eye-witness of some of the results of this calamity, it was my duty to use any influence I may have with the Christians of our land, on behalf of these men, who through no fault of their own are many of them face to face with ruin.

As to our own farm (I say our, for though my brother does the work, with one of my sons, I have to face the financial side), we are not nearly so badly hit as many others, because ours is a dairy farm and our cows were not hurt. Our loss is about £200 to £250. But we shall recover. The sad thing is, there are very many who have not escaped so comparatively lightly. I have seen whole fields of wheat, peas, beans, barley, etc., so ruined that they are not even worth cutting or harvesting.

In sending me your very kindly gift to help meet our loss, you truly said, "In bearing one another's burdens, we do fulfil the law of Christ." Every shilling will be a real help, and every pound will enable someone to take heart and try again. Money sent to the Mansion House fund will be better than trying to find some one farmer to assist, as the Committee will doubtless give to those most needing it. Some of the owners of land are doing nobly; one landlord, for instance, who owns a great many farms, has postponed his rent audit until further notice, and is paying for all the glass broken. But where these men will buy seeds for another year, I do not know.—Yours truly, George Clarke.

KESWICK HORSES.

Sir,—Will you find a corner for an appeal on behalf of the Keswick horses, who perhaps are not looking forward to the forthcoming convention with quite the same happy expectation of help and blessing that many of your readers are. Men and horses will be working very hard next week. The latter cannot speak for themselves. May I plead three requests on their behalf—that visitors will not enter a conveyance drawn by lame or tired animals, that they will dismount and walk up long steep hills, and that they will contribute (if only a penny) to the Society whose officers' work is to prevent cruelty.

"The merciful man is merciful to his beast."
"Be ye therefore merciful."
"Blessed are the merciful."—I am, Sir, faithfully yours,

P. H. Johnson,
Hon. Sec. to the Cumberland and Westmoreland Branch of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

The Gospel in Spain.—Mr. W. Greene writes from 3, Endsleigh-gardens, London, N.W.:—"Our friends the Matamoroses, mother and daughter, have had a catastrophe at their hall at Malaga. Being built on ground where the earthquake was, a wall has given way, and the drainage has got out of order. £30 is required, or the work must stop. There are overflowing congregations, all Roman Catholics. They have been nine months without rain in Andalusia, and to bring down rain the people are making processions with the Virgin and saints. Poor people, how much they want the Light!"

Paul Preaching at Athens.—Acts xvii. 22-34.

Golden Text.—"God is a Spirit: and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth."

PAUL is alone in Athens (14). To his sensitive disposition solitude was a great trial. To be alone in a crowd only intensifies the isolation. Athens with its 20,000 gods! where art, poetry, and philosophy had reached their climax. But the reality of its learning had vanished, and the people were now living on the husk of a former fruit. The glory which Paul saw was the glory of death. He turned away in disgust from the shame which was writ large on their temples.

He began preaching in the market-place, but so great was the noise that he could not be heard. They took him to the Areopagus—the court where all religious questions were judged. The people were jesting, but Paul was in earnest.

I. Paul's Sermon.—Though they had 20,000 altars, they were not satisfied. They had erected one to "the Unknown God" (23). They could not know this God, for "no man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, He hath declared Him" (hath revealed Him). Paul makes God clear to them through Jesus Christ.

(a) God as Creator (24).—The sea, the land, etc., could not have made themselves. They must have been created by some power outside themselves, and greater than they all. That power we call God. In that mirror we can see the wisdom, power, gentleness, and justice of God. The wonderful structure of the minutest creature shows that its Maker was wise; the mighty sea, and wind, the thunder's roar tell that their Maker was powerful. The provision for the needs of every living thing shows the Creator's care and gentleness, and the inviolable law of punishment for wrong and reward for right shows that the Creator is just.

(b) God a Spirit (24, 25).—You, the created, cannot make a house for the Creator to dwell in. If you wish to worship God at all, it cannot be by altars and ceremonials but "in spirit and in truth."

(c) Creator of Man (26).—Paul proclaimed the unity of mankind. Since God has made all He should be worshipped by all. Aretas, a native of Tarsus, said, "we are his offspring." So, as children, we should love and reverence our Father. The Father is not a fate or chance, but a Person. We could not come into existence without Him, we cannot live without Him. All this Paul used to show, that if God's life is in us, it is absurd to think we can represent Him by gold or any material thing (29). Also that we are dependent upon Him, not He upon us, He gives, we receive (25).

(d) Saviour of Man.—All this done in order that we may seek after God and find Him; God is the home of man, there is a world-wide longing after Him.

> Far and wide though all unknowing,
> Pants for Thee each human breast;
> Human tears for Thee are flowing,
> Human hearts in Thee find rest.

The Father will not punish his children for their crude attempts to imitate Him by idols. He will overlook it—forgive it—wink at it (30). But now the order of events is changed. Instead of man seeking God, we have God seeking man. Though He wishes all to be saved, He will not compel any one. Man has a free will, and it is "Whosoever will."

(e) The Judge of Man (31).—God has shown in Jesus what we ought to be, and might be. It is our duty to repent. The light has come, and there is no excuse for stumbling. We ought to be sorry for our former falls; God will one day judge men by Christ. He is the standard, and all who have not tried to copy Him will be condemned. "This is the condemnation, that light has come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light."

The proof that there is an after-life, and therefore a judgment, is seen in Resurrection. Death is not a fullstop which ends the paragraph, only a comma—the sentence will be completed when the Judge gives his verdict.

II. Result of Paul's Sermon.—Some mocked at the idea of Resurrection—the fact is too terrible for wicked men to believe; their creed is, "Let us eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die." Some would like to hear more about the matter (32). They were serious, but delay is dangerous. Their "more convenient season" never came. The gulf that may now be passed by "one step to Jesus," widens until it becomes impassable—a "great gulf fixed." There were only a few who believed. Dionysius, a member of the council (who was martyred at Athens) and a few more. Paul went away feeling he had failed. No. There is no failure in faithful service. "My word shall not return unto Me void." Every good deed goes to form some part in the mosaic of God's vast temple.

The Y.M.C.A.

The Kennington Association is being reorganised, and gives promise of good work in the ensuing autumn and winter months.

At a meeting in connection with the newly-formed Association at Balham, it was resolved to take a well-situated suite of rooms in the High-street, nearly opposite the railway station.

The annual breakfast meeting of the Hastings Association, held in Shaftesbury Hall, was well attended. The Mayor of Rye presided the previous day over a meeting held under the auspices of the local Association. On each occasion an address was delivered by Mr. W. Hind Smith, representing the National Council.

Mr. D. A. Black, general secretary of the Belfast Association, had a very warm reception upon his return home after a tour in the United States. From the train he was carried shoulder high to a carriage in waiting to drive him to the new buildings of the institution, where an enthusiastic meeting was held under the presidency of Mr. Robert Anderson. Rev. Dr. Kane gave an address of welcome, to which Mr. Black made a suitable reply.

Foundation stones of a new Y.M.C.A. building at Buckfastleigh were laid on July 6 by Mr. John Furneaux, J.P., and Mr. C. King Smith. At the afternoon function Mr. Edw. Windeatt, C.C., of Totnes, presided and delivered an address. There was a large attendance. Dr. Hingston, of Plymouth, president of the district, wrote: "It is now fifteen years ago since I first became closely associated with the Y.M.C.A. movement, and every year I have become more and more convinced that there is no association which has the same power of attracting, protecting, and helping young men as a well-worked Y.M.C.A."

An appeal has been issued in behalf of the Young Men's Christian Association of Rio de Janeiro, Rua da Assembléa No. 96. This Brazilian city is declared to be "London and New York and Chicago at their worst, and with almost nothing to offset these terrible influences. Religion is at a discount: the Roman Catholic Church has many temples, but few worshippers; has many who term themselves adepts of its truths, but their lives belie the statement. Infidelity is the fashion, while positivism, materialism, and spiritualism are professed by multitudes. There are almost none of those restraining influences that are to be found in the United States and England." A Y.M.C.A. was founded in 1893; ever since its organisation it has been housed in rented quarters near the very heart of the city. A large, well-built, unfinished structure has been secured for the Association, and it is proposed to adapt it without delay for the purposes of the work. The Association will only occupy the upper floor until the debt thus incurred is paid off; but in the meantime assistance is sought from the friends of work among young men. Communications may be addressed to Mr. M. C. Leite Rosas, 23, Rood-lane, London, E.C.

The Y.W.C.A.

On Thursday, July 8, an interesting reception was held by Lord and Lady Kinnaird at the headquarters of the Y.W.C.A., 26, George-street, Hanover-square, for the workers connected with the World's Y.W.C.A. and colonial representatives and friends now in this country. The meeting which followed was presided over by Lady Fairfax, vice-president of the World's Association. The Hon. E. Kinnaird explained the nature of the gathering, and stated that representatives were present from Australia, Canada, South Africa, and India. Addresses followed by Miss Reynolds, general secretary of the World's Y.W.C.A.; Miss Gollock, who spoke of the great need of workers among Eurasians in India; Mrs. Cleghorn, president of the Capetown Branch; Sister Lucy, who specially pleaded for workers for Ceylon; Mr. James Stokes, of New York; and the Bishop of Lucknow, who warmly testified his appreciation of the work in Chunar, India. The meeting was brought to a close by Bishop Potter, of New York, who spoke of the work of the Y.W.C.A. in the United States.

Episcopal Appointments.—A petition signed by 38,743 persons, has been presented to Parliament by Col. Sandys, M.P. Promoted by the Church Association, the petition sets forth a protest against the existing policy of the advisers of Her Majesty in the exercise of patronage in the Church of England. It is pointed out, that out of a total of thirty-four bishops there are (or were when the petition was drafted) twenty High Churchmen, or Ritualists, and not more than five Evangelical Churchmen. The petitioners ask for an inquiry by the House of Commons, as to the exercise by the Prime Minister and bishops of their ecclesiastical patronage.

Irish Notes.

The annual conference of the Church Methodist Missionary Society has been held in Irvinestown, Rev. A. A. Watson, rector of Maguiresbridge, presiding. Delegates attended from various circuits and districts.

Rev. R. Cole, who is leaving Armagh for Banbridge at the close of his three years' term as Methodist minister in that city, has been presented by the congregation with a beautifully illuminated address, a purse of sovereigns, and several other tokens of esteem and love.

Sermons on behalf of the South American Missionary Society have been preached in several churches throughout Ireland. Mr. B. Grubb, who is now in Chaco, writes very hopefully of the work, and says he looks to Ireland for men and money to carry on the mission.

Mr. J. Townsend Trench, J.P., has made a donation of £50 to the Methodist funds. He has also handed over to the Methodist Conference 4000 fully paid up £1 shares in his tyre company, and has named Revs. G. R. Wedgwood and J. W. R. Campbell as trustees of the fund.

Rev. Chas. Inwood, who recently obtained permission from the Irish Methodist Conference to devote himself for some time to Keswick work, intends, after attending the Keswick Convention and the Students' Union in Derbyshire, to visit Canada, and address meetings in each of the principal cities of the Dominion.

The new Archbishop of Dublin, addressing a meeting of clergy at Enniscorthy a few days since, urged careful preparation for their work, and said an unprepared ministry meant an unprepared parish. Speaking on the care of children, he stated that the school should be visited every day, or at least once a week; and, as to preaching, he recommended careful exposition and fervid exhortation.

Personalia.

Mr. G. H. Lord, of Buckhurst Hill, who recently returned from Egypt and the Holy Land, is giving interesting and instructive lectures on his journeyings and Bible mission. He has a few dates open in September and December.

Rev. T. R. Lawrence, of the Sailors' and Soldiers Institute, Alexandria, has had to forego his intended visit to England. After announcing his purpose to come, he found that the work would not permit of an extended absence from Alexandria.

Rev. Thomas Evans, the aged Baptist missionary from India, has been going through the Welsh counties stirring up interest in world-wide evangelisation. He writes:—"I have now a fair view of securing ten thousand weekly pennies for the work. I hope my visit will prove profitable to the churches."

Mr. George Müller, preaching recently upon the Prodigal Son, prefaced his address by intimating that although he had preached tens of thousands of times within the last seventy-one years, he had never before selected this parable as his subject. But he believed it had been specially given to him on this occasion in answer to prayer.

Rev. William H. Sloan, Baptist missionary in the city of Mexico, is finishing a complete concordance to the Holy Scriptures in the Spanish language. Seven years' labour have been put upon it, a large number of missionary helpers co-operating. Mr. Sloan has not yet decided whether to publish the work in England or the United States.

Miss McLean writes to us:—"Will you allow me once more to advertise my address, and thus save inconvenience to friends in all parts, viz., Japanese Christian Institute, 62, Coolfin-road, Custom House, E.? This centre has been much resorted to already, and greatly appreciated. My visits to two Japanese war vessels at Newcastle and Tilbury Docks have met with hearty appreciation and tokens of blessing."

Rev. Oscar Michelsen, of Tongoa, New Hebrides, at latest advices, was on a visit to Sydney, New South Wales. This, we regret to learn, was owing to the serious illness of Mrs. Michelsen, who, however, since reaching the Australian continent, has experienced some improvement in health. In a recent letter, Mr. Michelsen informs us that the last mission synod was delightfully harmonious and happy, cheering reports of progress being presented from every station in the island district.

Dr. Baedeker.—We have recently had the pleasure of a short visit from Dr. Baedeker, and have been much refreshed, as he recounted something of the Lord's work in Russia. Our hearts were stirred as he told us of the Stundists and Armenians, and of the wonderful access he has had to the prisons in Russia, and the openings for the distribution of New Testaments. Meetings were held in the Christian Union Buildings, Lower Abbey-street; also in the Merrion Hall, Lower Merrion-street; and the Grosvenor Hall, Rathmines. T. O.

Obituary.

MRS. MARCHBANK, KEIGHLEY.

Many are mourning the loss of Mrs. Marchbank, who passed away recently at Cowling, Keighley, Yorks, aged 78. She was a most devoted and earnest Christian worker. For over fifty years she was, as strength and opportunity were given her, at the call of the sick and dying for many miles around, at all times of day or night, and very often regardless of the weather. She was untiring in ministering to the wants of the poor according to her means. Her intelligence was much above the average, and her piety was genial and not marred by sectarian narrowness. She was baptized as a believer over fifty years ago, but retained her membership of the Methodist Church. C. C.

MR. W. J. TAYLOR, EVANGELIST.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. W. J. Taylor, of the Evangelisation Society, which took place quite suddenly at Kingston-on-Thames, on the evening of July 6. He was the eldest son of the late William Taylor, the Navvy Evangelist, and had been connected with the Society for about twenty years.

For fifteen months Mr. Taylor had suffered severely from consumption, and went to South Africa in Sept., 1896, hoping the change of climate would benefit his health. While staying at Beaufort West, he unfortunately contracted typhoid fever, with results that hastened his decease. Under medical orders he sailed once more for England, arriving in February last. The highest medical skill was brought to bear on his case, but the disease made rapid progress. He bore his acute sufferings with the greatest patience and fortitude.

Beloved by all who knew him, his death is a great loss to the Evangelisation Society, and especially to the work in Scotland, where he laboured during the last six years of his career. His addresses were characterised by great force, and strict adherence to the truth as it is set forth in the Divine Word. His preaching was greatly owned of God in the conversion of sinners and the edifying of the saints.

Mr. Taylor, who was forty-one years of age, retained consciousness till the last. His final words, while dying, were spoken to check the fears and grief of his mother and wife, who were present. His oft-repeated prayer for some days had been, "Lord, give me peace and rest." That prayer is now abundantly answered.

Flushing Strangers' Rest.

About ten years ago an association was formed in Flushing by the Consistory of the English Presbyterian Church there, having as its aim the temporal and spiritual welfare of seamen. The project met with much sympathy also among those outside the congregation; and in order that the object of the association might be reached, a home was founded. For the past eight years this has been situated on the Beursplein, and has served as the Seamen's Home and Strangers' Rest. Many a home and foreign seaman has found it a comfortable resting-place and refuge from the countless temptations to which he is exposed on land. Owing, however, to the great expense of the hire and keeping up the house, and the insufficiency of the funds at their disposal, the committee have been obliged to terminate their tenancy of the premises; but the association is doing its utmost to collect a sufficient sum of money in order eventually to build a house suitable for their purpose. Further information may be had from Rev. A. W. Frater, minister of English Church, Middelburg and Flushing, Holland.

Sunday Cargo Work Abroad.

British merchant ships are notorious for working cargoes and coals on Sundays when in the harbours of our Crown Colonies and of foreign lands.

A Scripture Reader of the Missions to Seamen, stationed in a port abroad for the service of the shipping, reports: "One of the seven wonders appeared in this harbour on Sunday. There were four British ships in port, on board three of which the crews were not working cargoes or coals. The result was that the engineers of two ships attended Divine service ashore, some in the English church and others in the Wesleyan chapel, both morning and evening, whilst a number of seamen and firemen visited the Sailors' and Soldiers' Home in the evening. Meanwhile, words of Divine truth were read and quoted in each forecastle, and good books distributed and read. A captain remarked that 'it does one good to have a quiet day like this. Even if we do not take heed to all you advise, still, it affords us time to consider our position.'"

Sunday cargo work, it should be pointed out, is not permitted in the British home ports, nor in the self-governing colonies.

THE BOOK WORLD.

The Victoria Painting Book for Little Folks. (1s. Cassell and Co.) Hundreds of outline pictures, specially adapted for painting in water colours, make this a book which will rejoice the hearts of our boys and girls.

Sowing and Reaping. Letters from Dr. Griffith John. (6d. net. John Snow & Co.) These letters by the veteran missionary in China describe several inland journeys and the Gospel triumphs that were noted. They well deserve publication, and their perusal ought to stir up prayer and liberality.

Hooks and Eyes. By Rev. F. Langbridge. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) This writer is in his element when discoursing to juveniles; and these chapters, so full of "little helps to little folks," will increase his reputation. Humour and good advice are beautifully blended. The poems and pictures will not be overlooked—especially the poems.

Captain Allen Gardiner, Sailor and Saint. By Jesse Page. (1s. 6d. Partridge.) A capital book, describing Gardiner's remarkable travels in Zululand, as well as his well-known labours in South America. Good as biography, and forcible as a constructive missionary appeal, this work deserves a place in all village and Sunday-school libraries.

History of the Girls' Friendly Society. Compiled and edited by Agnes L. Money. (2s. 6d. Gardner, Darton & Co.) Many workers among young women will be glad to study the origin, constitution, and development of the G.F.S. This tastefully-produced book gives portraits of some of the principal workers, and as a frontispiece there is an excellent portrait of the Queen, who is the patron of the Society.

The Lord's Prayer: A Practical Meditation. By Newman Hall, D.D. (4s. 6d. T. & T. Clark.) We welcome a third edition, revised, of this work, useful as a theological treatise, excellent as a devotional study, on the prayer which the Lord taught his disciples. The wealth of information and thought digested in the compass of this handy volume, explains the fact that it has reached its third edition, in which it will, it is hoped, continue its instructive and edifying ministry.

The Life and Letters of Elizabeth Prentiss. By Rev. G. L. Prentiss, D.D. Tenth thousand. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.) We welcome a new and cheaper edition of the memoirs of this famed American author. Such lives, in which daily influence and gifted labour alike prove a blessing to others, are the grandest and most convincing evidences of our Christianity. Her book "Stepping Heavenward" would alone qualify her for a place among the world's benefactors.

Discipline and Service. By Thomas Davies. (S. W. Partridge.) Some are called to glorify God in the stern battle of life; others in the school of suffering. Among the latter was Arthur Henry Davies, whose biography is given in this sympathetic record. For long years pain and weariness were his close and constant companions, but through all the suffering he showed such courage, patience, mental activity, and Christian cheerfulness as made his life a continued channel of blessing to those who surrounded him. May these memorials prolong the influence of his noble testimony.

Honey Gathered and Stored: Helps towards "Handling the Word of God." By the late Rev. John MacNeil, B.A. (2s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.) While this volume, compiled by Mrs. MacNeil from the papers of her husband, will be deeply interesting to all who knew the lamented Australian evangelist, its pages will be specially welcome to preachers and teachers for the useful skeletons and seed-thoughts with which they are filled. The "gathering" shows diligence and the "storing" tact. We cordially commend the book to busy workers who may be on the look-out for well-arranged schemes of Bible study.

The Christian Doctrine of Sacerdotium, as contained in the Scriptures and taught in our Formularies. By Rev. N. Dimock, M.A. This is a paper which the author read at the annual meeting of the South-Eastern Clerical and Lay Church Alliance, held at Dover, on June 2. The pages show convincingly that ministers of the Reformed Church can make no claim to any sacerdotium such as Rome arrogates, inasmuch as for centuries church orders have been conferred without any intention as regards sacrificial power or function. This essay is the result of much research, and deserves a high place in an important controversy. (1s. 6d. Elliot Stock.)

Preparing for the Better Land. By J. C. Smith. (James P. Mathew & Co., Dundee. 6d., 1s., and 1s. 6d.) The numerous illustrations in this new and enlarged edition of Mr. Smith's work will give it additional interest and favour, and about the verses themselves there is a directness, as well as a simplicity, which wins us. "Thy name is as ointment poured forth," and the sweet savour of that Name pervades the volume from end to end. We may demur at some of the rhymes, and sometimes at the rhythm. Nor is there the least attempt at ornate style; but the earnest purpose of the author stands him in good stead, and is evident in all that he says. In many a cottage home, especially, the book would be hailed as a treasure.

A Missionary Family. By Rose Jay. (3s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.) This story, manifestly written with the purpose of awakening and deepening interest in missionary work—written too, avowedly "for Him" and "in his name"—has, for these reasons, a special claim upon our attention and sympathy. The tone is excellent, and some of the characters are very winningly drawn, whilst the sunny side of the intending missionary's outlook is the one kept before us. There is nothing depressing or martyr-like about the anticipations of this missionary family, and as for Master Bobbie (one of the leading spirits) he is a particularly enterprising young gentleman, whose "nice little plans," though they turned out well, must sometimes have been rather embarrassing. There is no lack of incident about the story, which possesses indeed, a full share of those elements which ordinary readers—including the "grown ups"—pronounce to be "nice."

Foster's Bijou Guide to Ilfracombe and Neighbourhood is a booklet that will prove of real service to visitors to the North Devon coast. (Free for 1d. stamp from W. R. Foster, The Granville, Ilfracombe.)

The Popedom Defined and Defended by the Pope: A Dispassionate Review of the Encyclical of Pope Leo XIII. upon the Unity of the Church. By Dawson Burns, D.D. A useful contribution to a great controversy. (6d. Ideal Publishing Union, 19, Memorial Hall, E.C.)

Miss Emily Headland is nearing the completion of her excellent series of "Brief Sketches of C.M.S. Workers." The latest issue is a sketch of the life of Rev. Wm. Augustine B. Johnson, missionary in West Africa 1816 to 1823. One more "Sketch" will complete the series of twenty-five. (2d. Nisbet & Co.)

Glimpses of Popular Preachers in North London. By G. F. Freemantle. This first part of a series contains biographical sketches of Rev. Alfred Rowland (Crouch End), Thomas Allen (Archway-road), and Charles Brown (Ferme Park). There are portraits and other illustrations. (2d. McKinnon and Cook, 33, Park-road, Crouch End, N.)

Students and Missions.—A book of unusual interest to Christian students will shortly be published by Messrs. Nisbet and Co., entitled, "Strategic Points in the World's Conquest; The Universities and Colleges as Related to the Progress of Christianity." Its author, Mr. John R. Mott, is probably the most widely known of the leaders of the national and international organisations among Christian students. Receiving invitations to attend student conventions in many parts of Europe and Asia in 1895 and 1896, he determined to make a thorough study of the organisations of this nature existing in every country, and "Strategic Points" is a record of his observations. The tour extended over twenty months, widening and deepening in its scope as it progressed.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

From Mr. James Bowden.—The Sorrow of God and other Sermons. By John Oates, North Finchley. (3s. 6d.)

From Messrs. Marshall Brothers.—Shall we continue in Sin? A Vital Question for Believers Answered from the Word of God. (2s.) Words on Work. By Rev. R. V. Faithfull Davies, M.A. (1s.) Christ and the World; Six Addresses by R. B. Girdlestone, M.A. (1s.)

Coalies at Hampstead.

An interesting gathering took place on Tuesday, last week, at Sunnyfield, West Heath, Hampstead, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. R. Rickett. The Christian coalies who form the working men's committees of the Mission to Coalies (London City Mission), with the merchants who manage its affairs, responded to the kind invitation of their president and his wife to spend the day in their beautiful grounds. Having been cordially welcomed by the host the men listened to cheery addresses by Messrs. F. Tite, T. G. Nevill, and C. Rickett (coal-merchants), and several coal-porters gave their testimony of blessing received through the efforts of the mission.

Thus ended a happy and profitable day, showing that merchants and men can and do sometimes forget class distinctions, and can play cricket together or praise and pray together. Through the generosity of one of the merchants, an additional agent (the fifth) has been appointed to this special work. Reports and particulars of the work will gladly be sent on application to the treasurer, Mr. Fred Tite, Bridge Wharf, Cambridge Heath, N.E.

Help for Impoverished Gentry.—On the invitation of General Gordon, a drawing-room meeting in aid of the Distressed Gentlefolks' Aid Association was held on Thursday last at his house in Earl's Court. Col. Knollys presided. The Association not only dispenses money help to poor members of educated and gentle-nurtured classes, but also assists in securing employment for those who are well enough to undertake the same. Col. Knollys emphasised the fact that many societies exist to help other classes, but few for poor gentlefolk, and also that the Association had no offices, all secretarial aid being voluntary, so that all sums subscribed go to the work. The hon. sec. of the Association is Mrs. Finn, 75, Brook Green, W.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

REV. S. R. JAMES, of Eton College, has been appointed to the head-mastership of Malvern College, vacant by the resignation of the Rev. A. St. John Gray.

The living of St. Paul's, Dock-street, Whitechapel, lately vacant by the resignation of Rev. D. Greatorex, has been accepted by Rev. E. G. Parry, senior curate of Bromley-by-Bow.

The sixth annual council of the Church Lads' Brigade, held at Leeds, reports the work as most encouraging, 253 new companies and twenty battalions having been enrolled during the last year.

The venerable Bishop Clark, of Rhode Island, has asked for a Bishop-Coadjutor, on the ground of age and infirmity. He was born on July 4, 1812, and was consecrated bishop Dec. 6, 1854.

A notable item in the programme of the Church Congress, which is to open on September 28, will be the Bishop of Ripon's address on "The Progress of Life and Thought during the Victorian Era."

Mr. W. F. D. Smith, M.P., has given the site for a parish house in Clare Market, and laid the memorial-stone. The building will include a hall, working-men's club, recreation rooms for boys and girls, a soup kitchen, wash-houses and a crèche.

The twenty-first annual conference of the Evangelical Union has been held in York, Archdeacon Eyre, of Sheffield, presiding. Canon Faussett read a paper on "The Signs of the Times," which, he said, presage the coming of the Lord.

Mr. Alfred Holdsworth, widely known as a popular lecturer on Church history, has been appointed secretary of the Church Reform League, and the headquarters of the league have been transferred to the Church House, Dean's Yard, Westminster, S.W.

Mr. W. Nicholson, of Basing Park, Hampshire, intends to transfer £20,000 India three per cent. stock to the Clergy Sustentation Fund for the diocese of Winchester, the income to be applied to the augmentation of the stipends of the rural clergy in Hampshire.

A new parish is to be formed at Blackpool, to meet the requirements of the increasing population. The parish, which will be designated All Saints, will be carved out of the parishes of St. John's, Blackpool, and of St. Paul's, Marton, the former containing, at the census of 1891, a population of upwards of 12,000.

Congregational.

The church at Baldock is arranging for the purchase of a site for a new chapel.

Rev. Ossian Davies is gathering large congregations, chiefly of young men and women, at Paddington Chapel.

The new church has been opened in Station-road, Bexhill-on-Sea, with sitting accommodation for 555 persons.

Rev. Dr. Hodgson, Principal of the Edinburgh Theological Hall, has been elected an honorary director of the London Missionary Society.

Medland Hall, the philanthropic institution of the London Union, shows for the last six months an enormous amount of work for the benefit of homeless men.

Rev. Peter Price is resigning the pastorate of Great Mersey-street Church, Liverpool, in order to follow a course of study at Cambridge for the next four years.

Mr. Arthur Stanley Ramsey, M.A., son of Rev. A. Averell Ramsey, of Dulwich, has been elected a Fellow of Magdalen College, Cambridge, and has also been appointed lecturer in mathematics.

The Congregational churches of South Australia have celebrated their "diamond jubilee." The first church was founded by Rev. T. Quintonstow, of the Colonial Missionary Society, who landed at Adelaide in 1837.

The Wave Lodging House, which is worked in connection with the Mansfield House Settlement, continues in a very prosperous condition. There is accommodation for about 120 visitors, and generally every bed is filled.

The Young People's Union connected with the Congregational Union will hold the examination in Religious Knowledge early in March next. The subject for examination is "Church History of the First Three Centuries of the Christian Era."

Rev. D. Burford Hooke has sailed for Cape Town, accompanied by Alderman Evan Spicer, who is to meet Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson in Madagascar. Mr. Hooke will represent the Congregational Union of England and Wales at the Annual Assembly of the Union of South Africa in September at Cape Town.

A brass tablet is to be placed in the new church at Niamkolo, near Lake Tanganyika, at the cost of surviving missionaries and their friends. It reads: "In loving memory of lives laid down for Central Africa. Rev. J. B. Thomson, died 1878; Rev. A. W. Dodgshun, 1879; Rev. J. Mullens, D.D., 1879; Rev. D. Williams, 1881; Dr. E. J. Southon, 1882; Rev. J. Penry, 1883; Rev. J. H. Dineen, 1883; Mr. J. Dunn, 1884; Mr. J. Roxburgh, 1885; Rev. J. Harris, 1885; Mr. A. Brooks, 1889; Mrs. Mather, 1892; Mr. A. Carson, B.S., 1896."

Calls.—Mr. M. Williams, B.A., to Oakengate, Shropshire; Mr. W. Stevens, of Wolverhampton, to Cannington, Bridgwater.

Resignations.—Rev. James Johns, B.A., Totnes; Rev. A. P. Sanders, of Crewton, Derby.

Baptist.

The chapel at Bourne has been considerably damaged by a fire which broke out in its neighbourhood.

Reopening services have recently been held at the chapel at Ringstead, North Hants, which has been entirely renovated.

Rev. James Clark will supply Hope Church, Bethnal Green, until the end of the year, with a view to the pastorate.

The members of the Women's Circle of the First Baptist Church, Indianapolis, have decided to remove their hats in church.

Rev. W. H. Holdsworth, M.A., who has resigned the pastorate of the church at Linley, Huddersfield, will shortly proceed to Australia.

Rev. M. Lister Gaunt, of Helston, Cornwall, has accepted the pastorate at Sandown, Isle of Wight, and commenced his ministry last Sunday.

Rev. Kirk Bryce, of Chatteris, Cambs., has accepted the pastorate of the Nottingham Tabernacle. Mr. Bryce, who is only twenty-eight, is a preacher of great promise.

A new York millionaire, Joseph Richardson, has left a gift of 50,000 dollars to his pastor, Rev. H. M. Warren, of the Central Park Baptist Church, and a further sum to pay off the mortgage on the church.

The Society for Assisting Aged and Infirm Dissenting Ministers has just issued its seventy-ninth report, from which it appears that £977 was disbursed among seventy-six pastors. This is the largest number of grants made during the existence of the fund.

The foundation-stone of a new chapel has been laid at Tenison-road, Cambridge, by Mr. J. Sturton. The church will be under the pastorate of Rev. J. P. Wiles, M.A., minister of Hope Chapel, Paradise-street.

Calls.—Rev. F. D. Tranter, of Driffield, to Barnsley; Mr. E. A. Phillips, of Pastors' College, to a newly-formed church at Wellingborough; Mr. S. S. Sarson, of Pastors' College, to Gorse-hill, Swindon.

Resignation.—Rev. Ernest H. Howard, West-green, Tottenham; Rev. J. S. Haggett, of Forton, Gosport; Rev. G. J. Cliff, of King-street Church, Wigan; Rev. C. L. Gordon, of Hatherleigh; Rev. F. J. Walkey, of Sherborne.

Methodist.

Rev. W. D. Judson terminates his superintendency of the Leeds fifth Primitive Methodist circuit in 1898.

Memorial-stones of a new schoolroom in connection with the chapel in the High-street circuit, Huddersfield, have been laid.

Rev. George W. Olver, B.A., the senior secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, has broken down in health, and has been ordered complete rest.

A site has been secured for a new church at Walthamstow, at the foot of Church-hill and Hoe-street. The foundation-stones are to be laid early in September.

Rev. W. T. C. Hallam has celebrated his third anniversary at Stepney-green (P.M.) Tabernacle. During the year the entire trust debt of £800 has been cleared.

After four years' ministerial labours in the second circuit at Chesterfield, Rev. M. B. Stamp is removing to Sheffield to take up duties in the second circuit (Stanley-street).

The Mayor of Manchester has laid the foundation-stones of new premises in Queen-street, Hulme, which will include a hall to seat 1000 persons, a school for 1000 children, and nine class-rooms.

At the meetings of the South Wales district, recently held at the "Hope" Chapel, Neath, it was stated that there had been an increase of nine members during the year, making the total 2190.

One of the nominations to be made to the Conference is for the appointment of Rev. C. H. Kelly as ministerial secretary of the Committee of Privileges, in place of the late Rev. J. Ernest Clapham.

Dr. Stephenson estimates that there are about 1500 Methodist children and 500 other Nonconformist children in workhouse schools, the religious training in which, from a Nonconformist point of view, is not satisfactory.

The report of the Central Wesley Guild Council to the Conference will be of an encouraging character. The movement shows extraordinary progress. The Wesley Guilds throughout the country number 616, with a membership of 35,644.

Mr. James Duckworth, J.P., has lately laid the foundation-stone of the new wing of the Theological Institute, Manchester (P.M.). The College by this enlargement will be able to accommodate twenty-five students, instead of sixteen as at present.

News has been received that the Artizan Mission (P.M.) party have broken down on their way to the Zambezi, beyond Palapye, at the Nalia River. The oxen were killed by rinderpest. Every effort is being made to send food supplies and other necessaries.

The family of the late Rev. J. S. Jones, minister and chairman of the Exeter district, have founded a scholarship at Kingswood School, Bath, as a memorial of their father, where ministers' sons are educated, to be given for proficiency in mathematics. The school will commemorate its third jubilee next year.

Rev. Henry Haigh will shortly proceed to Bangalore, to work on the revision of the Bible under the auspices of the British and Foreign Bible Society. In addition to his platform advocacy of missions in all parts of the country, Mr. Haigh has been devoting a large amount of time and thought to a new translation of the Bible into Kanarese.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. Ross has been elected to the Moderator's chair for the next year.

Rev. E. Humphreys, of Rochdale, has been elected secretary of the Presbytery for the ninth year in succession.

Mr. Roberts, of Oswestry, has presented Bala Theological College with an exhibition of the value of £10 a year.

Rev. H. L. Mackenzie, Moderator of Synod, has decided to return to China in November to resume his missionary work.

Rev. Dr. Lorimer, of Tremont Temple, Boston, will occupy the pulpit of Marylebone Church from July 18 to August 29.

A conference has been held in Edinburgh of the Union Committees of the Free and United Presbyterian Churches. Various sub-committees were appointed.

A site for a new church has been secured in the populous district of Tyne Dock, South Shields, in which locality there are already four flourishing congregations.

Rev. W. R. Murray has lately celebrated his semi-jubilee at Brunswick-street Church, Manchester. An interesting statement was given of the progress of the church during his ministry.

The Sabbath-School Society's Committee has forwarded a special prize to a youth who had not been absent on a single occasion from Clougherney Sunday-school for the past nine years.

At the London Presbytery South, Rev. W. B. Macleod, of Jersey, accepted a call from Hamilton Free Church, Port Glasgow, and the Presbytery agreed to his translation. Mr. Macleod's labours at Jersey during the past five and a-half years have been very successful.

Rev. Andrew Gillison, M.A., who has accepted the call to Northumberland-square Church, North Shields, is a Scottish Free Churchman who was for some years pastor of a church in the United States of America, and who, since his return to this country, has been occupying the pulpit of Free St. Cuthbert's, Edinburgh.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. BEN. THOMAS, one of the most respected of the Liverpool City missionaries.—Rev. ELEAZER RICHARDS, Wesleyan pastor of Cross Inn, Carmarthenshire.—Rev. ALFRED KNIGHT, senior curate of St. Michael's, South Shields.—Rev. CHAS. LEE WINGFIELD, honorary canon of St. Albans, and formerly rector and rural dean of Welwyn.—Rev. THOS. EDWARDS, for twenty-six years vicar of Cwmdanddwr, Radnor.—Mr. H. MACKENNAL, M.B., Ch.B., eldest son of Rev. Dr. Mackennal, of Bowdon.—Rev. W. LLOYD, Congregational minister, Holyhead, one of the founders of the Liberation Society.—Rev. IVOR HARRIS, son of the ex-president of the Welsh Baptist Union.—Mr. JAMES BARLOW, J.P., a generous supporter of Cannon-street Baptist Church, Accrington.—Rev. DONALD CAMERON, for twenty-six years minister of Kilmonivaig, the largest parish in Scotland.—At Quernmore, Lancaster, aged eighty-four, Mr. JAMES BIBBY, one of the oldest and most generous supporters of Methodist undertakings.—At Belfast, Mr. WM. FRAZER, aged fifty-four years.—At Dublin, Mrs. McDOWELL, wife of Dr. Thos. McDowell, an earnest Christian worker.—At Bradford, Mrs. GEORGE HAZLEY, formerly of Dublin, a devoted Christian.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, July 12, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of THE CHRISTIAN.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

Request for Prayer.—That a mission for sailors and soldiers in Alexandria may be attended by much blessing.—For a great revival in a mission in South India. —Thanks for answering prayer at the last month's meetings for the Deepening of the Spiritual Life at Ipswich.

Alexandria.—The Armenians of this city recently held a special service in commemoration of the Queen's Diamond Jubilee. It was very touching to see how the crowded congregation invoked the blessings of the Lord on the heads of Her Majesty and her subjects, for the help given to the distressed and oppressed Armenian refugees. Their prayers were offered up with great fervour, and with open arms, and many of them were seen shedding tears. H.B.M. Consul-General and Vice-Consul were present, as well as a number of notables, (not Armenians). I have had a good deal to do with the refugees, and I can certify to their gratitude for the great assistance they have received from England.

WILLIAM J. TAYLOR, Secretary.

Office: 200, Euston-road, London, N.W.

Reports and other papers sent post free to any address on application.

BEFORE SIXTY YEARS AGO.

The Special Claims of The Society for Promoting Female Education in the East to recognition on the occasion of this year's grand National Celebration are

(1). That it was the only Society for both Zenana work and School work existing in the Empire at the time of the Queen's Accession.

(2). That it was then already carrying on Zenana work in India, Harem work in Egypt, and School work, in China, the Straits, Egypt, and India.

(3). That it was the pioneer of all subsequent efforts in Zenana and Harem work, for which it prepared the way, by encountering, and, to a certain extent, overcoming the greatest initial difficulties.

(4). That it still occupies a wider sphere than any kindred Society in existence.

(5). That by the help of God it has continued steadfast unto this day "in the Apostles' doctrine," and in the work of sending the Gospel to the heathen women and girls of the East.

The Committee urge these claims, and APPEAL for HELP to their COMMEMORATION FUND, to enable them to strengthen and extend the work of the Society.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

Patron:—

Admiral of the Fleet H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, K.G.

No more fitting way could be found of celebrating the Diamond Jubilee of our beloved Queen's glorious reign over the greatest maritime Empire of the world than by generously helping to extend to our sailors, on whom the very existence of that Empire depends, a share of the religious and social privileges which we ourselves owe in a large measure to Her Majesty's noble life and influence.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN has one hundred and forty Chaplains, Readers, &c., working amongst seamen, afloat and ashore, in sixty-eight seaports in every part of the world, including the Port of London, San Francisco Harbour, China, Japan, and Australian waters.

Sixty-seven Mission Vessels and Boats and Eighty-five Seamen's Churches and Institutes, are in constant use winter and summer.

INCOME, £38,294 : 9 : 10.

Increased Contributions, Offertories, Drawing-room Meetings, Collections, &c., are urgently needed to maintain the existing work and to extend it to other Ports. They should be sent to Commander W. DAWSON, R.N., The Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE Queen's final letter of thanks to her people for the extraordinary loyalty displayed during the Jubilee celebrations finally disposes of one uneasy but widespread rumour that had somehow gained currency—the rumour of her probable abdication owing to advancing age. The letter closes in these words :—

I shall ever pray God to bless them, and to enable me still to discharge my duties for their welfare as long as life lasts.

Her Majesty's personal messages to the nation are always full of interest, but she has probably never written anything that has given greater pleasure to her subjects than this sentence. The triumphant way in which her constitution has stood the strain of the past few weeks, and the admirable tact and wisdom she has shown in all her utterances, prove that age has not as yet touched either her physical vigour or her mental powers. "Long live our noble Queen" is the nation's answer to her warm and affectionate greeting.

The newly published programme of the forthcoming Church Congress at Nottingham in September contains many subjects of living interest, and is eminently practical in tone. The devotional meeting on the Friday is to be devoted to a consideration of "the Doctrine of the Incarnation as determining the character of (1) Individual Life and Prayer, (2) Church Corporate Life, and (3) The Ministry." A discussion, in which Rev. E. A. Stuart will take part, will also be carried on dealing with Practical Religion in Citizenship and in Commerce and Business relationships. The Church and Dissent will occupy one session, and Differences between different branches of the Anglican Communion, with special references to the Order of the Holy Communion, another ; while a third will deal with Industrial problems and the Duty of the Clergy in Trade Disputes. The outline of subjects contains a happy union of the theoretical and practical aspects of the religious life.

Mr. Diggle's manifesto in view of the approaching School Board Election in London contains the reassuring statement that the Moderate Party intend to take their stand on the Compromise of 1871, and are pledged neither to raise an issue of religious controversy themselves, nor to permit its being raised by others.

This is the voice of wisdom—if it prevails ; but the tone of the Church Times in commenting on this matter is not altogether reassuring. Every effort should be made on both sides to fight the battle on other lines than those which marked the last election ; neither religion nor education is likely to be benefited by the resurrection of a controversy so full of bitterness and personalities. It is doubtful, however, if the leading spirits of the High Church Party will be governed by such counsels of moderation. The general public, however, have no desire for the renewal of ecclesiastical strife on this question.

In the course of the recent Augustinian Commemoration, needless and provoking confusion was caused by the use of ambiguous language. Possibly because, at the Council of Clovesho in 747, Augustine was assigned a festival for having "first brought to the English nation the understanding of the faith," the Collect used in public worship at St. Paul's Cathedral embodied precisely similar terms. Eleven hundred years ago "the English" meant the Angles as distinguished from other sections of the population ; now the word is of wider meaning, and it is misleading to employ it in the old and limited sense. Besides, the ecclesiastics who said such great things of "St. Augustine, Archbishop and Confessor," overlooked other important agencies in the Christianisation of the British Isles ; and it is not right that we should perpetuate their erroneous impressions and consequent misrepresentations.

While there are reasons to believe that even the Angles were not altogether unevangelised when Augustine landed, it is one of the brightest facts of our history that for generations devoted men from Ireland and Scotland had been itinerating Britain with the Gospel. What with efforts antecedent to and contemporaneous with those of Augustine, the Church of Christ became a great power in our land, independently of the Italian Mission which, though conducted with much vigour, was beyond question directed to ends ecclesiastical rather than evangelistic. Moreover, though Gregory who originated the Mission was the Pope who indignantly repudiated the title of "Universal Bishop," stigmatising it as anti-Christian, yet the fact remains that Augustine's work had for its consequence and remoter result the Papal conquest of our island.

Not so much to Augustine and his disciples as to Aidan and his followers must be attributed the work of "bringing the English race out of darkness and error into the clear light and true knowledge of God," to use the language of the Collect. An esteemed correspondent has summarised a few of the facts :—

Augustine is said to have landed at Ebbsfleet in A.D. 597. Was he the apostle to Britain? What are the historical facts? No positive date can be assigned as to the introduction of the Gospel into our land, but as early as A.D. 314, bishops of the British Church represented it at the Council of Arles ; again at Nicea, A.D. 325 ; at Sardica, A.D. 357; and at Ariminum, A.D. 359. When Augustine landed on the shores of Kent a Christian bishop was resident at the court of King Ethelbert, and later on he was met by seven bishops of the British Church at the famous "Synod of the Oak."

We do well to praise God for all that his servants departed this life have done in his fear and by his favour; but if this be our concern we shall have to go through a long list of British worthies before coming to Augustine. It would be well for all Christians to study the careers of Aidan and Columba, Patrick and Columbanus, Birinus and Chad, Finan and Cedd, who showed piety as well as activity, and were missionaries as well as devoted overseers of the flock of God.

Nothing but sympathy will be felt for Mr Courtney, M.P., on account of his failure of eyesight. He has been a courageous, high-minded public man, who has had a sincere desire to add to the well-being and contentment of the people. He is meeting his affliction with the same unflinching hopefulness and resolution as have marked the careers of not a few public men. Fawcett, Campbell, and Milburn have shown us how much may be done by the blind ; and thousands who live in obscurity would teach us as high a lesson were the facts of their brave life-battle told. More models, proportionately, for a worthy life might be found among the afflicted than among their more fortunate brethren.

Miss Sutherland, an earnest worker in Victoria for the Neglected Children's Aid Society, has been giving her impressions of London. There is no hope for the masses ; they herd in houses not fit for dogs ; our workhouses are a disgrace ; our churches are out of touch with the people ; all efforts at reform are confronted with vested interests ; our Sunday is a holiday, not a day of rest.

Nothing short of a consuming fire from heaven, which will wipe London off the face of the earth, will do any good.

This is a dark picture to have drawn for us ; but it is no use to wrap ourselves in a cloak of smug respectability and refuse to look at it. But things would be far worse if it were not for the existing Christian agencies, which is an encouragement to those who are at work, though it is cold comfort to those who are not.

How surprised we are sometimes to find that close to some rich and pleasant part of London slums of the dirtiest description abound. Westminster is as infamous for filth and crime as it is famous for its Houses of Parliament and its venerable Abbey. Camberwell, not so long ago suggestive of snug houses and quiet gardens, has a plague spot which makes a vestryman who knows its houses say that "it is impossible to paint them blacker than they are." One small house is, or was quite recently, inhabited by twenty-eight persons ; one room has a family of nine who live and sleep in it. And so the condition of things goes on. It is easier to report and describe and denounce than to hit upon the right remedy. Meantime the law should be constantly applied to prevent these rookeries becoming hotbeds of vice or crime.

A Christian gentleman remarked the other day that he would gladly help in any mission work among the poor in London on the Lord's Day, but "did not know where he was wanted." The harvest everywhere is plenteous, and a reply post-card to the secretary or superintendent of any mission would speedily bring an answer to such a query. Failing that, it may be taken as a rule that it is harder to find one in which helpers are not needed, and the addresses of such spheres of work are easy enough to find.

"Where are the men?" asks a correspondent, as he looks around and sees in the field so many valuable Christian workers of the other sex. He finds plenty of men in every place where they should not be, but pleads for more of them, manly, able-bodied, tender-hearted, to come forward to reclaim and evangelise their fellows. Our friend perhaps hardly realises how many there really are at such work, but there is always room for hundreds more. The P.S.A., where its meetings are conducted on Gospel soul-saving lines, is doing much in this direction, but Jeremiah's cry (only multiplied a thousand fold!) is as urgent to-day as ever—

"See if ye can find a MAN."

In a room across the street opposite to my window lived a couple who did tailoring. They worked very hard. I usually rose at 6 o'clock, but before that time every morning they were on their board close to the window stitching away. When I went to bed at night I could see their shadows on the blind. They were still plying their needles.

So writes one of the nurses of a London hospital. Work is good; it regulates heart and mind, and imparts freshness and vigour to the whole being. But this is not work, it is slavery, which robs life of its light, and the body of its health. Yet so thousands toil by day and night to pile up the riches of others. But the day of reckoning will come. The tower of wealth, like Babel, may rear its head, but what when "the Lord comes down to see"?

Evangelical members of the Church of England are often perplexed in choosing a summer holiday resort on account of the prevalence of "High" services. A correspondent sends us a list of nearly eighty towns in England and Wales where he says:—

There is no place of worship for Protestant Churchmen to attend.

We sympathise with those who find themselves in this dilemma, but would not necessarily advise them, as our friend does, to "carefully avoid these places." In most, if not all of them, there are Nonconformist places of worship, and it would be a graceful act, and one not without profit to themselves, for such visitors to intermingle with their Nonconforming brethren. The latter would also reap an advantage. Interchange of fellowship is always good. Churchmen and Dissenters will unite in worship in heaven; why not here?

With every desire to be charitable, it is difficult to regard the findings of the South African Committee regarding the "Raid" and the administration of the South African Company as perfectly satisfactory. The one uncompromising note in it is the denunciation of Mr. Rhodes as the true instigator of what the minority report calls "one of the most disgraceful episodes in our nation's history." The South African Company's Board is exonerated from complicity, except Mr. Beit and Mr. Maguire; the Colonial Office is also freed from the charges brought against it. But no reason is given for the suppression of the famous telegrams, and while that mystery remains it is impossible to suppress painful doubts. The Committee has done no real good, because it has declined to go to the root of the matter. No wonder that foreign comments are such painful reading. An inquiry that refuses to be thorough invites something more than criticism—it provokes suspicion.

The course of affairs in Constantinople is as variable as the rise and fall of the thermometer in April weather. The subtlest alternation of feeling among the Powers are still taken advantage of by the Porte with a skill that is perfectly astonishing. Now we hear of an unconditional surrender, and again some new aspect of the question is opened up, requiring reference to the respective Governments, and renewed delay. The time has surely come for straight speaking on the deplorable helplessness of the Powers in spite of their boasted unanimity. The Spectator leads the way with these striking words:—

The position of the Christian Powers is disgraceful, but there is no use in blinking facts. All Europe has exerted itself for six months to control Turkey and Greece, and the only result of its exertion is that Turkey is rehabilitated and Greece destroyed. Civilisation was astounded by the massacres of the Armenians; it rose in horror and majesty to prohibit a repetition of them, and the total result of its rising is that it is ten times as easy for the Sultan to glut his hatred on the unhappy people as it was two years ago. He has succeeded, and everybody else, especially Great Britain, has deplorably failed.

Professor Patrick Geddes, who has spent much time abroad, tells a representative of The British Weekly that he has been specially interested in the association of the decline of ancient Rome and of modern Spain and Turkey with the gradual deterioration of their soil caused chiefly by the cutting down of trees, which has altered not only the soil, but even the climate of the countries bordering on the Mediterranean. The deeper question which the thoughtful Christian asks, is: How did the moral deterioration begin and develop? We believe for want of a religion that controlled the conscience and heart of the people. The inner condition of the soul comes at last to write itself upon the face of nature.

The Catholic Times, in a leader on "Nonconformists and the Catholic Church," affirms that if any great movement took place among the various Nonconforming bodies there are many signs that it would not be towards union with Anglicanism but toward union with the Roman Catholic Church. This hope of gathering in the men who have always been farthest away from Rome is based on "their personal love and devotion to our Lord."

Once let Nonconformists grasp the truth, which is the central fact of the Catholic religion, and round which all the Church's gorgeous ritual, her magnificent functions, all her religious life in monasteries and convents, all her zeal and devotion, all her missions centre, and the day when they will return to the True Fold is not far off. And when once they move towards Rome they will not travel via Russia.

What with the joy, which is afforded by the way in which High Churchism is feeding Romanism, and with the satisfaction felt at a supposed new movement among Nonconformists, Rome's cup is running over. But this is counting the chickens before they are hatched.

The special report on the growth of Roman Catholicism in England submitted by Mgr. Sambucetti to the Pope contains the "astonishing" conclusion that "the decrease" of Methodism is largely due to a transference of membership from that faith to the faith of Rome. This has roused The Methodist Times, in which it was stated last week that with exceptional sources of information at hand there was no record of one solitary Wesleyan minister or layman becoming a Roman Catholic. If isolated cases occurred they would be quite free from significance, for there is always a certain drift from one extreme of religious faith to another. The many conversions that continually take place from Romanism to Protestantism often find no record in the newspapers; but the Catholic papers never allow contrary events to pass without being blazoned abroad.

As a matter of fact, the boasted advance of Romanism in this country only needs to be put to the test of figures to be recognised as a fiction. Cardinal Manning stated at the close of his life that there were then only 200,000 English Roman Catholics, the rest being Irishmen. Edmund Burke estimated the numbers at the close of last century to be 30,000. This increase is insignificant in bulk, and does not even keep pace with the increase in population. Absolutely, the increase has been in the other direction. A century ago, there were about twice as many Romanists as Protestants in the world; now they are about equal, and at this rate the former will soon find themselves outnumbered. The impression to the contrary is due to two simple facts: First, Romanists with all their internal differences present an outwardly unbroken front to the rest of the world, while Protestants are only beginning to realise their unity. And, secondly, Romanists never lose an opportunity to use the public press to exaggerate their importance, and advertise the most insignificant of their gains.

The Bishop of Truro objects to evening communion on the ground that it is written: "They that seek me early [R.V. "diligently"] shall find me," and also because "manna was gathered in the early morning by the hungry folk who could not otherwise have breakfasted." The absurdity of such "reasons" is amusing enough, but the way in which they wrest the Scriptures is the reverse.

Englishmen do not always carry their Sunday habits with them when they go abroad. In the harbours of our Crown colonies and of foreign lands British merchant ships work their cargoes and coals on Sundays. It is a marvel, now and again seen, that the crews have a quiet day. And the men do not all waste the time. They may go to some English service, should such be held in the place, or they may pay a visit to the Sailors' and Soldiers' Home.

"It does one good to have a quiet day like this," said a captain. "Even if we do not attend to all that you advise, still it affords us time to consider our position."

If cargo work is not permitted in British home ports nor in self-governing colonies, it should also be dispensed with in Crown colonies. As for foreign ports, can the spirit of greed not allow our British crews a quiet Sunday even there?

There is something to reflect upon in the report of the visit to Germany, paid by Sir Philip Magnus, Gilbert R. Redgrave, Swire Smith, and William Woodall, M.P., to ascertain the recent progress of technical education in that country. Pupils, it seems, enter the evening classes with a better preparation for technical instruction than our own students, owing to their elementary education having been continued to the age of fourteen, and to "the system of instruction, which in many ways is more formative of sound habits of thought." It is an honour to Germany that "child-labour has practically disappeared in factories, as in no case at any works visited by us did we see any children employed." If child-life is not properly fostered and developed, the man cannot be at his best. If we destroy children we cannot have men.

From Sir Matthew White Ridley's statement on the recent Home Office vote, it would appear that there was considerable doubt about the appointment of a woman superintendent-inspector. We hope the Home Office is not thinking of abolishing a department which, during its brief existence, has done some really excellent work. Women-inspectors are essential to the proper oversight of women workers. There are points and grievances connected with their employment which men cannot know, or, knowing, cannot sympathise with. Sir Matthew is known to be among the most humane of men, and will, we hope, give effect to the views of the deputation which waited upon him last week.

Sayings of Jesus.

THE Sayings of Jesus are "true sayings of God." As many as hear his voice love its accents; they regard his utterances as Divine oracles. "Never man spake like this Man!" In the simplest speech of Jesus there was matchless charm; his every word of command was with authority. In word as well as in deed, He was "full of grace and truth." No wonder that children and women were drawn to Him, and men of all conditions followed Him with astonishment. "All bare Him witness, and wondered at the gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth."

At the beginning of his Gospel, St. Luke refers to the fact that many had taken in hand to narrate the story of Christ's life and work on earth; and Christian history of the first four centuries affords evidence of surprising literary activity. Not only were "Gospels" prepared for various communities, but the words of Jesus were collected and made the subject of discussion and comment.

As devout souls have read Acts xx. 35, James i. 12, and other allusions to Sayings of Jesus not found in the Holy Gospels, they have with legitimate longing thirsted for more of such "words of life and beauty." Moreover, expressions which have been with reason relegated to the margin in carefully prepared editions of the Greek text have competed with certain Sayings found in patristic literature for recognition as the Logia spoken of by Papias and Eusebius. Apart from any theory of a so-called Primitive Aramaic Gospel, this longing has been entertained by many, and in a large degree stimulated by the important discoveries of recent years. Among these may be specified "The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles," the earliest church manual; the "Apology of Aristides," the first work of its particular kind; and the "Diatessaron of Tatian," the earliest harmony of the Gospels.

At length some Logia, or Sayings, of Jesus, have been discovered in Egypt, the land of antiquarian treasure.* This interesting papyrus and its octave of Logia, two of them undecipherable, has been reproduced in booklet form. With manifold other ancient documents it was found last winter on the edge of the Libyan desert, 120 miles south of Cairo, and on various grounds it is held to date from 150 to 300 A.D. Some of the Sayings on the fragment are admittedly words of Jesus; they are familiar to all who have read the Gospels. Others may also be by Him "whose words all ears took captive;" but in some instances, where the drift is not obvious, the origin may well be questioned. The editors of the work show becoming caution, and evince no great readiness to declare such expressions as are new to be undoubtedly from the lips of Jesus.

Whereas in the New Testament Christ's sayings have graphic introductions, these Sayings merely begin, "Jesus saith." One of the most interesting Logia reads as follows: "Jesus saith, 'Wherever there are...and there is one...alone, I am with him. Raise the stone, and there thou wilt find Me, cleave the wood, and there am I.'" The first part of this Logion is generally parallel with Matt. xviii. 20: "Where two or three are gathered together," etc. The second part is mystical, like other Sayings that have been attributed to our Lord outside the canon of Holy Scripture. In another, Jesus is made to say, "Except ye keep the Sabbath ye shall not see the Father." The Sabbath phrase is Levitical (Levit. xxiii. 32). The line is crucial; possibly it indicates "tendency." Singularly enough, almost every expression in these Sayings that is wide of the Gospel vocabulary has a difficulty either inherent or suggested.

Of course, scholars everywhere will want to study these Sayings; somehow the fragrance of Christ's words invests with interest whatsoever is in any way associated with his Name. These Logia (utterances, sayings) appropriate as a designation the word which in the New Testament is rendered "oracles" (Acts vii. 38; Rom. iii. 2; Heb. v. 12; 1 Pet. iv. 11.) That word occupies an impressive place in the Septuagint version of Psa. cxix.; standing many times for God's Word as command, sanction, or promise. "I rejoice at thy Word, as one that findeth great spoil."

"The Heavens do Rule."

THOUGHTS ON DANIEL I. TO VI.

MUCH of the force of Scripture argument is lost to us through our habit of reading the different books of the Bible in a disjointed way, instead of prayerfully seeking that grasp of the object of the inspired writers which is best obtained by a connected study of the book or the epistle as a whole. We should not think of reading other books, nor even important letters, in the way in which too many Christians read their Bibles.

The Book of Daniel is no exception to the rule, as a careful consideration of the first and the last chapters will show. The testimony is emphatically one, although the book, in some respects, seems to fall naturally into two distinct parts, the second part beginning with chap. vii.

The lessons of the early part of the book would seem to be so plain and simple that even the cursory reader could hardly miss them. And yet, as a matter of fact, it is precisely the simple, practical, "every-day" lessons which we are in danger of overlooking, in the Book of Daniel as well as elsewhere.

Our object in these brief thoughts is to invite the consideration of nineteenth-century readers of the Bible to a few of these very lessons—lessons which in the earlier chapters of Daniel are so strikingly brought before us. Not less are they needed now than they were in the days of Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar.

The title given to Jehovah in this Book, and also in the Book of Revelation, is one which arrests our attention, and seems characteristic of the special teaching of the history detailed here. "The Most High God." Brought nigh to God through the Lord Jesus Christ, we know Him now by names and titles more near and more intimate, but we can never afford to forget, nor does the reverent worshipper wish to forget, that no title or attribute of God is a lost or an obsolete one.

It is good to keep in mind that the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ who permits us also to call Him "Our Father" is still The Most High God, and that in our approaches to Him we, his faith-begotten children, lose much and gain nothing if we in any wise forget the reverent homage which is his due. Of all persons his children must be the last to MINIMISE HIS ROYALTY.

Strange, is it that such a caution should be needed, but is it not needed? Perhaps it is partly because of our want of due reverence that we seem sometimes also to lose sight of the fact so solemnly reiterated in the histories recorded here, a fact so elementary that it is in danger of being too much taken for granted without the practical recognition of it being found in the daily life and conversation.

Is there no apathetic acquiescence from which we need to be startled by a more vivid remembrance that "wisdom and might are his," and that it is He alone who gives "knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom"? Just as directly and wholly is it the Lord's doing when we are, as Daniel was, "brought into favour and tender love" of those from whom our fidelity to God might be expected to estrange us; and the remembrance of this should teach us to hold such "favour" in trust for God, rather than using it as a reason for making compromising concessions.

"There is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets" is an assurance which should hush the uneasy consideration of many a difficult social and political problem, now as then.

Still more practical, perhaps, are the lessons of the third chapter, and full of encouragement for those who, even in these days, feel the need of standing for the truth of God. For one cleaves to the hope that, in spite of appearances to the contrary, there still are truths and principles so dear to us that we would die for them, if needs be; although these are times surely when the question of our Saviour takes on a new and startling significance: "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" (Luke xviii. 8).

Perhaps persecution would teach us somewhat of the value to us of truths which, in these easy-going days, seem to be given away, as it were, by professed leaders of religious thought—truths not less important than those for their allegiance to which these Hebrew worthies braved the fiery furnace, as Daniel braved the unmuzzled lions, and in later times martyrs smiled at Smithfield fires.

Dan. iv. sets before us, in striking language, the patient dealings of God with Nebuchadnezzar, in order to teach that haughty monarch this one lesson, "that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever He will." Nebuchadnezzar failed to heed the warning word, his heart refused to acknowledge that the supreme Gentile power of which he was the embodiment was God-given (chap. i. 2); his pride still exalted itself, and then God taught him in the more terrible ways of judgment that which he declined otherwise to understand.

> Love threatens that it may not strike, and still > Unheeded, strikes that so it may not kill.

The strangely solemn sentence passed upon him had one meaning, and one limit was set to its execution, "Till thou know that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever He will." Men are more slow, perhaps, to learn that the Lord is Supreme Ruler on earth than to acknowledge Him as Ruler in heaven; but God's lessons must be learnt sooner or later. They are often "turned" lessons, but his infinite grace and mercy are seen in his insistence that it shall be mastered, as well as in the assurance, "Thy kingdom shall be sure to thee, AFTER THAT THOU SHALT HAVE KNOWN THAT THE HEAVENS DO RULE," with the significant reiteration, "Seven times shall pass over thee, UNTIL THOU KNOW THAT THE MOST HIGH RULETH IN THE KINGDOM OF MEN, and giveth it to whomsoever He will." It surely is not by accident, nor without solemn significance, that these words recur again and again—the very words of God!

The Keswick Convention.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

AFTER another year spent in the valleys of worldly activity and conflict, the tribes of our modern Israel have again come up to this mountain retreat for a week's holy convocation with God and one another. We have long since arrived at the period spoken of by the Saviour, when men shall worship the Father "neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem"; wherever the true and humble heart is, there the altar fires may burn, there the sacrifice may be consumed. Yet there seems a wondrous fitness in having a convention for the deepening and the strengthening of the spiritual life in such a beautiful and restful spot as Keswick. All the natural surroundings—and who is not affected by his environment?—are of such a sort as to help the soul in its quest for a fuller vision of God and a more real sense of life's highest possibilities. The encircling hills, mirrored in the depths of the lake, speak eloquently of the power of God to revolutionise the aspect of things seen and temporal. Will not the same mighty Worker mould and fashion the spirits of men so that they shall not only be fair to the view, but shall accomplish his benign purposes in holy living and in blessing to their fellow men?

Writing before the Convention actually begins, it is impossible to indicate its scope or character; but the prevalent impression appears to be that this year will register a lowered attendance. It is thought that the recent Diamond Jubilee, the multiplication of similar conventions throughout the country, the holding of a similar gathering in London some months ago, and other causes will combine to reduce the tale of visitors to Keswick. However that may be, it is certain that the conference will be large and representative. Several additional trains reached Keswick on Saturday, each bearing its precious freight of human souls that will be influenced by the proceedings of the week. Succeeding days will bring still larger contingents, and there will be no lack of material on which God may work through the words of his servants and the power of his Spirit. As an index of the widespread area from which the Convention draws its attenders, I may note that when waiting on Saturday afternoon at Carlisle station for a train, I saw two brethren bound for Keswick, one hailing from Aberdeen and the other from Brighton. I happen to know of some dwellers in South America who will be present, and probably most lands under the sun will be represented. Missionaries in esse or in posse will be in strong force as usual; the C.I.M. has a large detachment of workers here, to get a lift before returning to or going out to face the antiquated superstitions of the Chinese.

Judging from the printed programme, the platform will be more comprehensive than in any former year. It contains almost all the familiar names and others besides. One conspicuous exception is that of the Rev. Hubert Brooke, whose health, presumably, will not permit of his presence. Mrs. Baxter is added to the well-known four ladies who conduct the meetings of young women and girls. As last year, meetings are arranged to be held both in the large tent and in the pavilion, though the number of gatherings in the latter will be fewer.

Convention weather is always an item of much interest in these parts. Without venturing into the realm of prophecy, it may be said that there is every indication of a week of glorious summer days. As I write in the early morning, the mists are slowly lifting from the mountains, and the sun will soon pour down its wealth of sunshine from a blue and speckless sky. All the omens, therefore, bespeak an access of health both to body and soul. Before entering on any detailed notice of the meetings it may be of interest to give from the programme the following words of advice offered to those attending the Convention:—

(1) Come waiting on the Lord, desiring and expecting blessing to your own soul individually. (2) Be ready to learn whatever God may teach you by his Word, however opposed to human prejudices and traditions. (3) Heartily renounce all known evil and even doubtful things "not of faith." (4) Lay aside for the time all reading except the Bible. (5) Avoid conversation which has a tendency to divert your mind from the object of the meetings. Do not dispute with any, but rather pray with those who differ from you. (6) Eat moderately, dress simply, retire to rest early.

THE SATURDAY EVENING PRAYER MEETING

was not so large as I have frequently seen it, but there was a strong muster, a large proportion of those present being young women. Among the friends on the platform were Mr. Robert Wilson (chairman), Principal Moule, of Cambridge, Rev. Charles Inwood, Rev. G. C. Grubb, General Hatt-Noble, Capt. Tottenham, Mr. A. A. Head, Mr. W. R. Lane, and Mr. Henry Edwards, of Brighton. After a brief period of silent waiting upon God, all joined in a well-known hymn, in which occurs the aspiration that God would > Make our hearts thy dwelling-place,

> And worthier Thee.

Prayer was offered by Mr. Inwood that God would come and shut us in with Himself. "Thou art waiting and willing to bless the whole world through this Convention; let us get low enough down to be used." "May the coming week be the most marvellous we have ever known for the revelation of God to our own souls." Such were some of Mr. Inwood's fervid utterances. Another hymn was sung, and the chairman remarked briefly on the solemnity of being once more assembled in the tent in the presence of the Master, and devoutly desired that the power of the Holy Ghost might overshadow the place. A part of our Lord's prayer for his disciples, recorded in John xvii., was read, and Mr. Grubb further led in earnest prayer for rich blessing on the Convention.

A short address followed from Rev. H. B. MACARTNEY, of Melbourne, based on 1 Samuel vii. 8, 9, relating to the prophet's prayer for Israel when hard pressed by the Philistines, and the setting up of the stone "Ebenezer." The life of prayer, he said, is the only life worth living; the only life which exactly resembles that of the Lord Jesus. Alluding to the narrative of Samuel's intercession, the speaker said that we shall never have power in prayer unless our idols are put away and broken, and until the heart has experienced the death of all idolatry. For it is possible to put away an idol and break it, and in an hour of temptation to set it up again and worship it. There are forms of idolatry very subtle indeed; it may be a clinging to some one little luxury that has become a necessity of life. Besides the putting away of idols there was with Samuel the pouring out of that which, I suppose, corresponds to the penitential tears for what is past and the confession of sin. A time of gathering is a time of danger. There are roots of bitterness in every heart—for I do not believe in eradication—which if they spring up will trouble a whole convention. There are elements of discord in all our minds, coming as we do from different cradles, and having been differently nourished. We want the light and power of God amongst us so that we may be of one heart and one mind. Who knows but that this Convention may be the Christian Parliament of the Diamond Jubilee year, that may retrieve the national honour and shape the national destiny, as well as be a power in Europe and the whole world? In the closing remarks of his address, Mr. Macartney mentioned as matter for thanksgiving a message he had just received from Mr. Eugene Stock, of the C.M.S., that the Society's deficit had been finally wiped off by one gift of £3000.

Another hymn and prayer by Dr. Moule closed the preliminary prayer meeting.

A goodly company gathered in the tent early on the Sabbath morning for another season of prayer. Mr. A. A. Head presided, and many petitions ascended to God that the coming Convention might be a time of the right-hand power of the Most High.

Sermon by Rev. C. INWOOD.

The "overflow" meeting in the tent on Sabbath forenoon was memorable for a powerful discourse by Rev. Charles Inwood on "Taking hold of God," his text being Isa. lxiv. 7, "There is none that stirreth up himself to take hold of Thee." He said:

The word here translated "taking hold," is a most expressive and suggestive one. It means really two things—to take fast hold, and to keep fast hold. It denotes not a temporary, not a wild or convulsive clutch, like that of a drowning man seizing a straw, but rather the stern grip of a strong man under the power of a resolute purpose—a purpose which will not relax its grip until the petition is obtained. In verse 9 of chap. xli. the same word is used to describe the tenacious hold which God has of his ancient people, a hold so tenacious that He will not relax it until their final and glorious restoration. Is it not singularly instructive that when God comes to speak to us about prayer He should use the same term; that it is our privilege to take fast hold and keep fast hold of Him? I cannot tell why, but it has been borne definitely in upon me that our message this morning must be on the subject of prayer, in order that we may secure for ourselves and others the largest possible blessing in the present Convention.

The first thought then suggested by the text is simply this, that all real prayer takes fast hold on God for a definite purpose, and with a persistence which is not released until its object is attained. Herein is the secret and the measure of the power of prayer. You may have much prayer which never grips God, which never touches God, which never rises above the ceiling of the room in which you offer it, yea, which is not intended or expected to grip God. Only on that ground can we interpret the powerlessness of the tremendous amount of praying that is continually going on in so many of our churches. Prayer which does not take hold of God is a waste of time, a mockery in God's sight. It accomplishes no more than the poor Tibetan accomplishes by swinging round his praying wheel. We may utter texts of Scripture, we may pour out numbers of sentences, we may kneel, we may groan; but if in our prayers we do not take hold of God, all our praying is absolutely valueless in the sight of Him whom we profess to believe.

All unknown to ourselves we have allowed the infidel attacks on prayer to paralyse our own simple belief in the almighty efficacy of prayer. We have come to think (I have met it constantly in the course of my ministry) that there are some realms, at all events, in which prayer is useless, and that answers to prayer, such as we read of in Scriptures, are a thing of the past. We imagine that there is something in nineteenth-century civilisation that paralyses the arm of God, and so our power to bring down blessing on the world has been paralysed by the infectious, nebulous scepticism which is found, unfortunately, in a good deal of our religious literature, as well as in infidel attacks upon prayer.

Only last Monday I was going over those most interesting carriage works at Wolverton Station, where the carriages are made for the London and North-Western Railway. Amongst other operations I was permitted to inspect, there was one in connection with the making and the completing of the wheel of a railway carriage. There is, first of all, a tremendous ring of steel, hardened and tempered to the very highest point. Inside that ring there is a sort of ring of wood, blocks of wood fitted in, and all leading to the centre, which is the axle of the wheel. If there be the slightest bit of pressure more on one side than on another, the wheel, we were told, would break down in a very short time. But the operation which impressed me most deeply was the pressing into that ring of steel of this inner ring composed largely of wood. The gentleman who accompanied us said, "I will show you how we use compressed air. We once used hydraulic pressure (the power of water) but we have now learned to use the power of air." It looked a very easy thing to do, as, little by little, when the compressed air began to operate, the wood was pressed inside the ring of steel. Yet no merely human power could have done what we saw done in a few seconds. Man could never have done it, but God had locked up this marvellous power in the compressed air, so that what would be impossible by human hands can be accomplished in a short space of time. It was a lesson to me, and I want to pass it on to you. There is nothing in us, or in our knowledge, but the power is in God—in taking hold of Him and letting Him display Himself.

We read in the first verse of this chapter a cry which is the longing of many hearts here, "Oh that thou wouldest rend the heavens and come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence." You have been looking at the mountains, and you are beginning to see mountains in your own life and your own work, which you feel powerless to deal with. What you need is to get God to deal with them. When Theresa was starting her marvellous Christian and philanthropic work, the building of a great hospital, she had only three-halfpence, you remember. She said, "Theresa and three-halfpence can accomplish nothing; but God and three-halfpence can do everything."

God has shown us within the last twelve months how quickly He can deal with obstacles. Ecuador was closed against all Christian work with as many bars as the devil could forge to hold it, and we had a sort of feeling that all the rest of South America might be opened, but Ecuador would be irrevocably closed. But God stepped in, in the most extraordinary fashion, and touched a secret spring, so that the place is now open to the preaching of the Gospel, as much as the rest of the continent. It is not we who are going to grapple with the evangelization of the world, with the lapsed masses, with the heresies and evils that are cursing and blighting us. God only wants a chance to get at them. "He toucheth the hills and they smoke." We are utterly helpless in ourselves. Our only power is in laying hold of God. When we take hold of Him we have gripped the supreme reality of almightiness; and almightiness can work almightily and only almightily—as it was in the beginning, is now, and, praise God, ever shall be.

But then there is the human side of it; and that is the grip of God. The first thought on that point is this: it is the grip of the whole hand; the grip of the whole soul. You cannot grip with your finger, or two fingers, or three or four fingers. To be a grip, the whole hand, the whole soul must be there; there must be the full strength and activity. Let no one go away with the idea that prayer is a listless, lazy, easy way of dealing with difficulties. If you have read Mr. Macgregor's address on "Labouring in prayer," you will remember his thought of agonising and striving. Some of us seem to think we have only to put out the finger in a lazy fashion, and that somehow God will work miracles. He has never done it along that line yet.

Then, also, it is the grip of an empty hand. Some of us will have to fling away a good deal at this Convention before we can understand experimentally what it is really to take hold of God in prayer; and not merely big things but little things. Have you noticed sometimes, when trying to grip a glass cork in a bottle, that the hand slipped and slipped. I have found it so, and I discovered that, perhaps unknown to myself, I had touched a little grease or oil before trying to move the stopper. That made it impossible to get a tight grip, and I had to wash my hand before I could grip it successfully. So there are little things that prevent the grip of the soul on God—a little flurry, a little self-indulgence, half an hour's reading of a novel, or a few words unkindly spoken of some Christian or some worker. Beware in this Convention of everything that would loosen the grip of God. And if God shows you, even through frail human lips, that there is something on the hand of the soul preventing a tight grip, do what I did with the stoppered bottle—go and wash your hands. The blood of Christ cleanses away the small as well as the great stains.

Another thought: it must be the grip, strange to say, of absolute weakness. I must mention that, because you might run away and say that it is only the strong Christians and those of deep experience that can grip God in prayer; that you are too weak. That is the way the devil is tripping up thousands of folk. It is not the masterful spirit, the self-conscious, the self-reliant Jacob that gets everything in prayer. Jacob at Peniel was for the first time brought face to face with a Man whom he could not master. He had mastered everybody since he was a lad by his skill, his subtlety, and his scheming; but now his struggle with this Man was the measure of the strength of his masterful self-will. He never could have conquered along that line. God loves us too much to let us overcome that way. When nothing short of that would do it, God Himself touched Jacob so that he could not wrestle, and with the want of power went the will, which was a bigger thing for Jacob. All he could do now was to cling; what he could not get by masterful wrestling he got gloriously by that clinging of utter weakness and helplessness. It is the same still. We are not weak enough. We think God can do some, and we can do some; or God can do much, and we can do a little. Christ says: "Without Me ye can do nothing"—nothing, NOTHING, NOTHING. The grasp of weakness accomplishes what the wrestling of strength utterly fails to win. "He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might He increaseth strength." Let us not forget that his strength is perfected in our weakness. While the weakness is all mine, praise God, there is a power other than mine that moves through the weak grip of the weak man—the power of the Spirit Himself. As Tauler puts it, "It is the same grace that moves the heart to pray that moves God at the other end to give you what you ask."

One other thought: God grips the man who grips Him. Do you know what it is to be gripped by God, to take hold of Him in prayer and to discover to your glad amazement that another power has gripped you? Though in one sense it is your grip of God, in another and much more wonderful sense it is God's grip of you. I can recall the day last February when God gave me the call to give spirit, soul, and body, up to Him for this special work; to let go of church, home, friends, and all else, if He called me, for his glory. In the quiet of my own study I learned as never before to know that grip of God. Oh, that is what we want, for God does grip the man who grips Him.

Then God grips other people through him. (At this point the speaker quoted an incident related in the "Recollections of Reginald Radcliffe,"* telling how the evangelist's preaching one day did not move the congregation, and all dispersed when an after-meeting was announced. Then Mr. Radcliffe called together the disappointed workers for prayer, and as he prayed the people gradually returned to the church in large numbers, and there was a time of great converting power. Mr. Inwood strongly commended all to read this book, as giving illustrations of the power of prayer.

* Morgan and Scott. 4s. 6d.

God's complaint is that there is none who stirs himself up to take hold of Him. What a pathetic thing is here. I would fain stir you up this morning by the thought of the promises of God, by past answers to prayer, by the stress of your need and that of others; but time does not allow. I must refer to one plea, because God uses it here—by the disappointment of God. In the first verse of chapter lxv. there is a sentence somewhat obscure, which will be much more clear if I read what seems to be one of the best translations one can get hold of. It relates to this very subject, and God says:—"I have been to be inquired of by those who ask not for Me; I have been to be found by those who sought Me not; all the day long I have been saying, 'Here I am, here I am,' to a nation that did not call upon Me." How intensely pathetic it is—God waiting, God longing, God pleading to be tested, and waiting, and longing, and pleading in vain! It is the sorrow of God that his own people make so little use of Him; give Him so little opportunity of showing forth his almighty power. I want you to pray as never before for this Convention. Oh, the responsibilities of standing here, speaking almost to the ends of the world; it is almost intolerable, unless God the Holy Ghost come down upon you to pray for those of us who are his messengers, while we are speaking. Saintly old John Vassar used to pray when he heard any striking message, "Lord, send it home!" I have seen a whole meeting lifted up twenty degrees in spiritual temperature by two or three praying souls, who held up my arms while I was preaching. You do not know what you can do. As far as I know how, I have taken hold on God for this Convention, and I would say:—

> Lord, I will not let Thee go,
> Till the blessing Thou bestow;
> Hear my Advocate Divine,
> Lord, to his my suit I join;
> Joined to his it cannot fail,
> Bless me, for I will prevail.

Principal HANDLEY MOULE

was the preacher at St. John's Church at the same hour, his appropriate theme being, "He shall glorify Me." We append in substance the closing portion of the thoughtful and impressive discourse:—

We have come here that we may grow in the life that is in Christ, and by Him and for Him. We want to go away not merely pleased by certain deliverances and utterances which may be framed in a dialect we have learned to love. Our desire is that we may find something which shall make us, in the countless varieties of our homes and lives, our ministries, our missions, our company, and our solitudes, ready for the Master's use, and therefore at everybody's service for whom He cares to use us, whether in things spiritual, or, as we are accustomed to call them, things temporal. If this is our desire, and it is; if our blessed ambition is that out of this place there may be diffused countless streams of blessing, then we need that the Holy Ghost should glorify Jesus Christ in us as never before.

Observe the special phrase that our Lord uses, "He shall glorify Me." Elsewhere He is spoken of as the witnessing Spirit and as the Comforter. He was to make articulate the facts and statements of revelation concerning the incarnation, the life and the death of the Son of God. But this does not exhaust the office of the Spirit with respect to Christ. It is one thing to be certain of a fact; it is another to get light upon it. It is one thing to accept, or, as we may say, to clasp a creed as that for which we, perhaps, feel we could die; it is another thing to know it, to enjoy it, to live in it and walk in it as our salvation, and with an inexhaustible desire to glorify God. It is this which the Lord said the Holy Ghost should do. "He shall glorify Me. He shall not only say that this is true about Me. He shall shed the light of eternity and of eternal life upon it all. He shall not only make distinct the outlines of our Lord's life, as these glorious mountains may be distinct upon the dullest day against a leaden sky; He shall make them look as they look in the dawning hour of a summer morning, when the sun is preparing to rise and the clouds with their perspectives and their colours are like a fragment of heaven, dropped down upon the earth. God be thanked for any fragment of such manifestation. But the promise here is that the Holy Ghost shall glorify the Lord Christ in the heart of him that looks, and claims, and cries, and waits, and opens the windows of his being, so that Christ shall be manifested to the heart constantly and in all things. It was so of old with Peter at Cæsarea Philippi, with Paul on the road to Damascus, with Lydia by the riverside; and what was of old is true to-day. Many hearts in this church know what these things mean. We will begin, continue, and end our assemblies of this week by asking that it may be his blessed pleasure, as it shall be, to give us the experience of such a glorification of Christ.

Rev. J. B. Figgis was the preacher at the Congregational church; while Mr. Walter Sloan ministered to the Wesleyans, and some lady members of the Pentecostal League testified to the Primitive Methodists.

The usual service for children was held in the tent on Sabbath afternoon, when a large company of little folk gathered, besides older friends. Mr. W. Wilson presided, and gave a suggestive address suited to the capacities of his youthful hearers. Some further words were spoken to the children by Mr. R. Callender, assistant-secretary of the Children's Special Service Mission, and altogether an interesting time was experienced.

Gospel services were held in the tent afternoon and evening, conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane, who is in general charge of the evangelistic efforts made in connection with the Convention. The afternoon audience in the tent being mainly Convention people, Mr. Lane gave, instead of a purely Gospel address, an interesting exposition of the earlier portion of Romans v. He found in the passage "five looks"—a backward look, "justified by his blood"; an upward look, "saved by his life"; an inward look, "the love of God shed abroad in the heart"; an outward look, "tribulation worketh patience"; and an onward look, "rejoicing in the hope of the glory of God." The treatment of the subject was fresh and helpful. At the evening hour Mr. Lane delivered a very telling and convincing Gospel argument, founded on the later portion of the same chapter, showing how man is lost in Adam, and potentially saved in the atoning work of Christ. A deep impression seemed to be made on the large gathering, and there was some hopeful soul-dealing with individuals at the close. Gospel meetings are to be carried on in the market-place each evening on and after Tuesday, and some special efforts to reach the people of the town will be made on Sunday next.

The evening "overflow" in the tent was addressed by Rev. H. B. Macartney in a suggestive but rather discursive review of the incident of Philip and the Ethiopian eunuch. Many points were mentioned, and the interest of the discourse was fully maintained. The evening sermon in St. John's Church was by Rev. J. Harford Battersby, who dealt with the question in 2 Samuel xx. 9, "Art thou in health, my brother?"

PRAYER FOR IRELAND.

The friends of the sister isle always muster in strong force at Keswick, and for years past the evening meeting of Monday has been set apart for a consideration of the spiritual needs and claims of the distressful country. This year the gathering was wholly given up to prayer and praise, no addresses being on the programme. Captain Tottenham presided, and very fervent prayers were offered by Rev. Charles Inwood, Rev. G. C. Grubb, Professor Mackintosh, and A. A. Head.

Mr. Inwood uttered deep and hearty thanksgiving to God for the wondrous things He has wrought in recent times through the agency of the Open-air Mission, the Colportage societies, and the Evangelistic movements in the large centres of population. He praised God for marked conversions among policemen and soldiers, and for marvellous transformations effected in the case of degraded sinners in the city of Belfast. He prayed for a spirit of greater manifested unity among the Protestant churches in Ireland so as to remove stumbling-blocks from the minds of the Roman Catholic population. Mr. Grubb was intensely earnest in his petitions on behalf of the three millions of "Roman Catholic heathens," worshipping gods and goddesses of their own making; for the priests; for the work of Mr. Thomas Connellan, in danger of his life through the machinations of his Romish enemies; for the work of the Irish Church Missions; for Mrs. Smyly, Miss Sanders, and other well-known workers; and also for the political or fighting Protestants who need to be baptized more into a spirit of love. Mr. Mackintosh pleaded specially on behalf of the young students of the island, and Mr. Head bore up in his prayer the multitude of Irishmen abroad. Before the hour had gone many friends scattered through the tent presented the names of different cities, towns, and other places in Ireland for which they desired prayer, and the whole company silently joined in these desires for blessing. It was a very solemn and stimulating season of prayer, and we may look for abundant answers in the days and years to come. Mr. Grubb expressed the confident faith that Ireland would yet be a free and glorious land, because of the exaltation of Jesus Christ among the masses of the people. So far as the weather is concerned Monday has dawned splendidly, and there are all the signs of a settled barometer. Crowds will flock to the town to-day for the opening meeting this evening.

THE OPENING MEETING.

The tent was very crowded for the opening meeting on Monday evening, with numbers standing, but no meeting was held in the Pavilion.

At 7.45 Mr. Wilson, chairman, called for a season of silent prayer, after which was sung a hymn of invocation for the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

Dr. Elder Cumming led in prayer, confession, and thanksgiving; and another hymn having been sung, Rev. Evan Hopkins continued the petitions at the throne of grace, pleading for a deeper work in human souls than ever before. The Chairman then read part of John xv., and made brief comment on Christ's love and the love of the brethren.

Dr. Handley Moule gave the opening address on 2 Corinthians iv. 10, the subject being life through dying. We have come, he said, once more to give ourselves to our King. We have no new Gospel or new truth to offer; it is eternally old and eternally new. We want to make this a week of prayer and waiting on God more than anything else. Our text gives the secret of Paul's life and work. His was a busy life, but Christ shone out through it to all around. All our intercourse or suffering ought to manifest Christ. We have to carry about in our body the presence given in our soul, not carelessly but trustfully. It is not a thing for Sunday best but for anywhere and everywhere, as God may guide. The expression used by Paul is not so much the supreme act of Christ's death on Calvary, as the process that led up to it. He could have avoided this dying by the exercise of his omnipotency, but he chose to be weak so that his enemies could do with Him as they liked.

How can we carry about in our body Christ's death process? By giving ourselves up to a crucifixion and death that will glorify Him.

is not atoning or vicarious. Yet we all have to be nailed to whatever cross He assigns to us. This may sound unpractical in statement, but it becomes most practical in the details of daily life. There are many aspects of this experience. It comes out in our first great conviction of sin, when we must die to the dream of anything availing before God but the sacrifice of Christ. Further on in the Christian life there is a dying implied in the joyful welcoming of God's power in sanctifying and keeping. A hundred self-complacent thoughts are then pulled to pieces. Beware of an artificial humility, which may only be a secret pride in self. There must be death to the craving of being first in all its thousand applications at home or in the foreign field. While firm for principle on Christ's account, we must yield what we regard as our right. We need grace not to call pain pleasure, which is a delusion, but to love with a natural welcome every cross that comes by the will of God. Let each make application for himself. While this death has in it a bitterness of tonic power, there is yet an ineffable sweetness in submitting to this death to self. May Christ's glad contagious readiness for God's will be ours, in our special circles and special paths, so that other weary ones may be refreshed. Such is our immediate gaol. Life is great in that sense by its losses and crowned by its crosses.

The foregoing is but a bare outline of an address that struck a nobly Christlike keynote for the Convention that many are praying may be the most really fruitful Keswick has ever seen.

After prayer by Mr. Inwood, the audience quietly dispersed in the deepening twilight, it may be hoped to ponder over the deep, if simple, teachings of God's servant. Dr. Moule remarked, in the course of his address, that Rev. Charles Fox is absent through indisposition.

A refreshing rain fell on Tuesday morning, and the atmosphere was much cooler.

Great interest is focussed in the morning missionary prayer-meetings in the Pavilion. The room was filled on Tuesday morning, and a stream of brief pointed petitions went up to God for workers and work in many lands, not forgetting God's ancient people. General Hatt Noble presided, in the absence of Mr. Eugene Stock, and very profitably guided the proceedings. It was mentioned that Rev. J. Hudson Taylor is detained in London by weakness and suffering.

Openings in Greece.—Mrs. W. M. Green, of The Cottage, Boar's Hill, Oxford, sends us the following extract from a letter from an Athenian lady, Madame Kephala:—"We have on hand here in Athens and provinces near about 100,000 women and children, who dare not go back to their homes as long as the Turk is in Thessaly. Tired, almost worn out with work, tending the 14,000 to 15,000 Cretans daily, and 6000 to 7000 women and children of our reserve forces, to-day our brave band of ladies have been asked to open more soup-kitchens for the refugees from Thessaly in Athens, and all along the shore of Phthiotis. I wish we had four or five experienced English ladies who would be glad to come and help us. I cannot leave Athens myself, being the president, but I could send some of my ladies with those desirous of starting these kitchens in the provinces." Mrs. Green will be glad to hear from any lady willing to undertake such a work of mercy in Greece.

Ecuador.—A short while ago we called attention to the plans of the Kansas Gospel Union for aggressive work in Ecuador. Those who are following the remarkable movement in that South American Republic will read with interest a picture of things as they were nine years ago. It is from the pen of W. E. Curtis, U.S. Commissioner to South America: "One-fourth of all the property in Ecuador belongs to the bishop. There is a Catholic church for every 150 inhabitants. Ten per cent. of the population are priests, monks, or nuns, and 272 out of the 365 days of the year are observed as fast or feast days. The priests control the Government and rule the country as absolutely as if the Pope were its king. As a result 75 per cent. of the children born are illegitimate, and the social and political condition of Ecuador presents a picture of the dark ages." At length this land has been opened to the light of the Gospel, and some particulars of present efforts and prospects are given in the July issue of Regions Beyond.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, July 25.

"Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the briar shall come up the myrtle tree."—Isa. lv. 13.

HERE are the substitutions of grace. It would have been much to root up the thorn, and to cut up the briar, so that the soil should be rid of weeds, but God does more. He substitutes fir trees for thorns and myrtles for briars, and he does this for his name's sake, and as a sign for evermore.

He will do this in your character. There are thorns and briars there, you must confess it to your cost. Now, do not be satisfied with their extermination, but seek that God should substitute their opposites, so that the site of some old evil may be commemorated by the growth of some fair grace. Where the thorn of cynicism and sarcasm grew, there the graceful and sprightly fir of forbearance; where the briar of malice and envy, there the sensitive delicate myrtle of charity. This is the triumph of grace in the believer's heart.

He will do this in your home. You have a thorn in that husband, or a briar in that child. Once you used to look for relief in death. You almost questioned whether you might not hasten yourself out of such terrible and perpetual suffering. It seemed as though you were being scourged with thorns. But God will do much better than this. He is able to transform those trying dispositions. That husband will become your evergreen fir-tree: that child your myrtle.

He will do this in your trials. There are briars besetting every path that call for earnest care. Many beside Paul have thorns in the flesh. But his grace is sufficient to change our biggest curse into our greatest blessing. Look for this. Ask God to transform the conditions of your life which have cost you excruciating anguish, into sources of benediction.

MONDAY, July 26.

"Even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer."—Isa. lvi. 7.

Who are these favoured souls? Ah, it is a miracle of grace and comfort to find that they were once, like ourselves, Gentiles after the flesh, separate from Christ, alienated from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promised, dug from the same hole of the pit to which we have belonged! And if they were lifted to such holy nearness to God, if this be indeed a true picture of God's dealings with Gentiles, then let us take heart, and ask that not one of these good things should fail in our own experience.

But mark the conditions, as detailed in verse 6. We must be joined to the Lord in an indissoluble covenant; we must minister to Him in daily holy service as his priests; we must love his name; we must diligently serve Him; we must abide in the Sabbath-keeping of the inner rest of the heart; and we must hold fast by his covenant. These are indispensable conditions to test the calibre and quality of the souls who are admitted to his inner presence. You must conform to them if you would be among those whom God brings in.

To what does God call such souls? To mountains of vision, whence they look out on eternal landscapes, and stand above the taint of this world, its smoke and dust. To joy: He makes them joyful in his house of prayer, for all true prayer has in it the seeds of everlasting joy. To that acceptance which fills the soul with calm and hallowed delight. Such things are within our reach, not too great or high for our feet to attain, because God will bring us in. He gathereth the outcasts, He collects his flock when straying, and leads them up to the dewy pastures of the mountain lawns.

TUESDAY, July 27.

"I create the fruit of the lips."—Isa. lvii. 19

Our words should be like fruit. Fruit is the final cause and reason of a tree's culture, and is it not to bear fruit that we have been redeemed and cultivated with infinite solicitude? Fruit reveals the nature of its parent tree, and is there anything that more quickly shows what we are than our talk? "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." Fruit is sweet to the taste when it is ripe, but beneath these luscious qualities there is always the ultimate design of securing the propagation of the tree through its seed; so beneath the wit, or laughter, or strong common-sense of our words, there should be the aim of sowing in others the life-germs of our own vitality and fruitfulness.

It seems impossible that our poor words should resemble fruit in these various respects, but God says, "I create the fruit of the lips." In other words, He makes Himself responsible for the creation of such a character in us as will result in words resembling fruit.

How often, when we get into conversation with comparative strangers or our friends, we are at a loss to turn it into the right channels. Then, let us lift our thoughts to God, and say, Create in me now the right word, which shall refresh and help those whom I address. The answer will always be one of peace. "Peace, peace to him that is far off and to him that is near." Let our lips ever ring with the silver notes of Peace, Peace: Peace, Peace.

WEDNESDAY, July 28.

"The Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones; and thou shalt be like a watered garden."—Isa. lviii. 11.

These are only a handful of the cluster of promises with which this chapter abounds. Let us ponder them; they are full of comfort. To be guided continually, to be satisfied when all the world around is athirst, to be prosperous and fair to see, to be as a fountain of living water to those who come in contact with our life—are not such blessings good to seek and keep? But there are certain conditions that must be fulfilled. Before we break the seal and appropriate the money within, we must be sure that our name is on the envelope, and that we are intended by the designation.

First, we must undo. If we have injured others by word or act, or if we are still doing so, we must retrace our steps, and so far as possible undo the wrong (6).

Next, we must remember the Lord's words in Matt. xxv., and be willing to do deeds of love to the bodies and souls of men, as though we were doing them to Him (7).

Lastly, we must ever remember to maintain within our hearts the spirit of Sabbatic calm and peace. Not fussy, nor anxious, nor fretful and impetuous, but refraining our foot and refusing to do our own ways, find our own pleasure, and do our own works. It is only when we are fully resolved to act thus that we enter on our heritage of blessedness, or are brought into the enjoyment of the continual guidance and blessing of which we have spoken. Then thou shalt delight thyself in the Lord, and I will make thee to ride on the high places of the earth.

THURSDAY, July 29.

"This is my covenant, saith the Lord: my Spirit that is upon them and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart, etc."—Isa. lix. 21.

This is a very precious promise, especially to God's ministers and to all who are using their voice and lips in his holy service. These may claim its fulfilment up to the hilt; and it is no doubt due to some pious ancestor claiming these words that there is so often a godly succession of ministers in one family bearing the same honoured name.

But these words are often quoted promiscuously and carelessly. Notice there are two traits of character distinctly noted and specified.

We must receive the Holy Spirit, and we must utter the words which He puts into our lips. They are one, because when the Holy Spirit fills the soul the lips are touched as with a live coal from off the altar. "They were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak." Oh, bend your head low beneath the anointing of the Great High Priest. Let Him breathe on you, and say, Receive the Holy Spirit; and then go out to be a witness for Him. Thou shalt be taught in the same hour what and how.

It is a marvellous thing that God should enter into covenant with man to keep on blessing his seed for his Word's sake. Yet He does so. He keeps his blessings for thousands of them that love Him and keep his commandments, whilst He punishes only to the third and fourth generation of them that hate Him. Long after you have gone, if only you have earnestly done God's work in the world, He will be gracious to your children and to your children's children.

FRIDAY, July 30.

"Arise, shine; for thy light is come."—Isa. lx. 1.

For long the night had brooded on Mount Zion, and the beautiful city had sat desolate and afflicted; but at last the watchers see the sky brightening into the splendour of dawn, and the cry goes forth that the day is at hand, calling to new vigour, love, and holiness.

Whenever the glory of the Lord rises upon thee, be sure to reflect it. Arise, shine. Arise, to catch as much of it as possible. Shine, that others may catch as much as possible also.

Sometimes Christians seek release from their positions in business or social life, on the plea that they are so uncongenial and ungodly. Yet these are the very circumstances under which Zion is bidden to arise and shine. Because darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the people, there is the more need for her towers to gleam with light. The Lord has given us the light of his countenance that we may flash it forward, just as bonfire signalled to bonfire on the Jubilee night, and from peak to peak the congratulations sped. The darker the landing the more need for the candle!

Would that the Lord might arise upon us, and that his glory might be seen upon us! Like a searchlight resting on a stone-white steeple, rising above the city, in the dark night. Beholding his glory we shall be transfigured into the same likeness.

SATURDAY, July 31.

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me."—Isa. lxi. 1.

We can never disassociate these words from that memorable scene at the Jordan, when, after the Lord's baptism, the heavens were opened, and the Spirit, like a dove, rested upon Him. Forty days of fierce temptation could not deprive Him of that holy anointing, and He came into Galilee, stood up in the synagogue at Nazareth, and announced the anointing He had received.

If the Master needed it, how much more do we. If He did not attempt to bind up the broken-hearted, proclaim liberty to the captives, or the opening of the prison to the bound; if He would not preach, or comfort, or communicate joy, until that memorable unction had been imparted, how absurd it is for us to attempt similar works till we, too, have received similar qualification.

What a marvellous forecast is here of the mission of Christ through his church to the world, during the present age. She is sent to take up and pass on this blessed ministry. What a true forecast also of the needs of mankind. It is as though the Holy Spirit desired to reveal the salient characteristics of the great sad world, that it would be full of the broken-hearted, of captives, prisoners, and mourners, needing Divine assistance and ministration. Man is so fallen and helpless that he needs the entire Trinity: The Lord God, the Father; Me, the Son; and The Spirit, the Holy Ghost.

When Jesus quoted these words He stopped at the comma in the second verse, which stood therefore for at least 1900 years which intervene between the proclamation of the year of mercy, and of the day of vengeance. The time for repentance is lengthened out, since God desires not the sinner's death, but that he should turn and live.

More than a Conqueror.

Rom. viii. 36. 37.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

WE have passed across Paul's battlefield at Ephesus, and come to the conclusion that it was no child's game. At every point his position there bristled with difficulties. There were enemies entrenched in the temple of Diana, in the workshop of Demetrius, and in the synagogue of the Jews, as well as in the heavenly places where wicked spirits had their seat. There was need, therefore, for strenuous fighting; hard knocks were given and exchanged; there were times when the Apostle had the sentence of death in himself; but as he reviewed the whole from the distance of the years he asserts that he was a conqueror, and more.

Let us Verify this Assertion. Let us turn to the Acts of the Apostles, and ask if Paul were indeed more than conqueror. The answer is unmistakable. After three months' conflict with the Jews in their synagogue, the Apostle was driven to the course he was wont to adopt under similar circumstances—he moved his disciples to the schoolhouse of one Tyrannus, and taught there daily, as soon as noon was past, and a pause put alike on the labours of the schoolmaster and the artisan. In consequence of these ministrations, "all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks"—a very strong statement, when we bear in mind the populousness of that crowded province. Even the silversmiths who caused the riot acknowledged that not only at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, Paul had persuaded and turned away much people; and there was great danger that the temple would become depleted of its worshippers, and Diana be deposed from her magnificence.

With respect to the trade in amulets and charms, it fell off so seriously that the craftsmen realised that unless they bestirred themselves their gains would be at an end.

With respect to the strongly-entrenched position of the magicians and exorcists, they were utterly baffled and confounded by the much greater miracles which were wrought through Paul; so much so that the handkerchiefs he used to wipe the sweat from his brow and the aprons in which he wrought at his trade were made the medium of healing virtue as they were carried from his person to the sick and demon-possessed. So mighty was the impression that Christ had secrets superior to the best contained in their ancient books, that many of them that had believed came, confessing, and declaring their deeds. And not a few of them that practised magical arts brought their books together in some great market-place and burned them in the sight of all. So mightily grew the word of the Lord, and prevailed.

With respect to the exorcist Jews, they, too, were silenced. It would appear that the name of Jesus, spoken even by those that did not believe in Him, had a potency over evil spirits such as no other name had, and it had even been blasphemously used by strolling Jews, who had taken upon themselves to call that sweet and holy name over some that were possessed. But in one notable instance the demon himself had remonstrated, crying, "Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?" and he had leapt on them, and mastered them, so that they fled from the house naked and wounded.

Let us Consider the Talisman of Victory. If we turn from his outward life to study the diary of this wonderful man, who seemed single-handed in his conflicts and victories, we find a pathetic record of his sorrows and trials. Writing during these eventful months, he speaks of himself as a man doomed to death and made a spectacle to the world: for Christ's sake, a fool, weak, and dishonoured; suffering hunger and thirst, when work was scant and ill-paid; having no certain dwelling-place, because unable to hold a situation long together, through the plotting of his foes; hated, buffeted, reviled, persecuted, defamed; made as the filth of the world, and the offscouring of all things (1 Cor. iv. 9-13).

When he tells the story of the affliction which befell him during his residence in Asia, he says that he was weighed down exceedingly, beyond his power, insomuch that he despaired even of life; that he was pressed on every side, perplexed, pursued, smitten down, groaning in the tabernacle of his body, and always bearing about the dying of the Lord Jesus. In addition to all these things that were without, there pressed on him daily the care of all the churches. There was also his anxiety about individuals, as he ceased not to admonish every one of them night and day with tears (2 Cor i. 8; iv. 8; xi. 27, 28.)

There is nothing more pathetic in the records of human suffering and patience than the story of his Ephesian experiences, as he summed them up on the shores of Miletus, in his parting address to the elders of the church.

In this passage also he quotes the old words of the Psalmist, about being killed all the day long, and counted as fit for the slaughter; and enumerates tribulation, anguish, persecution, famine, nakedness, peril, sword, as ingredients in his cup. Added to this, there was the constant suffering caused by the stake in the flesh. As the result of it all we wonder how such a man, under such drawbacks and in face of such opposing forces, could be more than a conqueror. Evidently we are driven to seek the source of his victory outside himself. It was

THROUGH HIM THAT LOVED.

He not only overcame, but he was more than an overcomer; he overcame with ease; he brought off the spoils of victory — and this because he was in daily communication with One who had loved, did love, and would love him, world without end; and who was ever pouring reinforcements into his soul, as men will pour fresh oxygen air to their comrade who is groping for pearls in the depth of the sea.

The only matter about which the Apostle, therefore, felt any anxiety was whether anything could occur to cut him off from the living, loving Lord. "Can anything separate me from the love of Christ?"—that was the only question worth consideration.

Taking the extreme conditions of Being, he carefully investigates them, knowing that they include all between. First he interrogates the extremes of existence, "death and life;" but death is only the door into Christ's manifested love, and in life we have his promise never to leave nor forsake. Next, the extremes of created intelligences, "angels and principalities and powers;" but angels will only gladly help the maintenance of open channels of communication, and devils cannot cut the bond that was forged at Calvary. Next, the extremes of time, "things present and things to come;" but the love of Jesus is timeless and eternal. Next, the extremes of space, "height and depth;" but the love of Jesus partakes of his omniscience and omnipresence, and is always the love of the I AM. Lastly, the extremes of the created universe, "any other creature;" but the love of Jesus is that of the Creator.

Each of these extremes has thus passed in review, and he has eagerly peered into its depths. He is like a man proving every link of the chain on which he is going to swing out over the abyss. Carefully and fervently he has tested all, and is satisfied that none of them can cut him off from the love of God; and since that is so, he is sure that nothing can ever intercept those supplies of the life and strength of God that shall avail to make him more than a conqueror.

We strangely misjudge the love of God. We think that our distresses and sufferings, our sins and failures may make Him love us less, whereas they will draw Him nearer, and make his love exert itself more evidently and tenderly. In the home, it is not the troop of sturdy children that so engross the mother's care as the puny withered life that has lain in the cot for the last eleven years, unable to help itself and reciprocate her love. And in the world, death and pain, disease and sorrow, failure and sin, only draw God nearer, if that be possible. So far from separating from his love, they bind us closer.

Oh, blessed love that comes down to us from the heart of Jesus, the essence of the eternal love of God dwelling there and coming through Jesus to us—nothing can ever staunch, nothing exhaust, nothing intercept it! It will not let us go. It leaps the gulf of space unattenuated, it bridges time unexhausted. It does not depend on our reciprocation or response. It is not our love that holds God, but God's that holds us. Not our love to Him, but his to us. And since nothing can separate us from the love of God, He will go on loving us for ever, and pouring into us the entire fulness of his life and glory, so that whatever our difficulties, whatever our weakness and infirmity, whatever the barrels of water which drench the sacrifice and the wood on which it lies, we shall be kept steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, gaining by our losses, succeeding by our failures, triumphing in our defeats, and ever more conquerors through Him that loved us.

A Plea for Orphanages.

MAY I be allowed a little space to plead for the orphans? Of late I have been visiting several of our orphanages within twenty-five miles of London, and holding services for the dear children, which I cannot doubt the Lord has blessed, and have been much impressed with all I have seen of the excellent arrangements, and the beautiful manner and spirit in which these noble institutions are carried on.

But in visiting one of them there was something that saddened me, and I felt sure that if the matter was brought before your readers it could be easily remedied. The National Orphan Home, Ham Common, Surrey, is a fine and spacious building, containing beds for 150 girls, but unfortunately not 100 of them are occupied!

How is this? Is it that there are no little orphans needing the loving care and Christian training of such a Home? Ah me! I wish such were the case! But the sad truth is that the children cannot be received, because there is not money enough to pay for their food and clothing! For, mark, the only expense is for food and clothing. The splendid airy buildings are there; the expenses of management and education are already met, and must be met for those now in the Home; but there are more than sixty empty beds, and they could be happily filled with needy applicants for the bare cost of food and clothing.

Merely a few hundred pounds a year would cover that, so that looking upon it from an economical point of view, it would be the best way of employing a little money in the most remunerative manner. It pains my heart at every remembrance of those empty beds, and I only wish that some abler pen would plead the cause of these children, but it will be a source of sincere thankfulness if through this simple statement of facts some of the Lord's people will send prompt help to the secretary, Mr. E. Evans Cronk, 12, Pall-mall, London, S.W., who will gladly send to intending subscribers two little books giving further information.

I have also been to the Royal Albert Orphanage, Camberley, Surrey, and find that they too are so short of funds that twenty beds are empty. The head master, Mr. Alfred Mitchell, B.A., told me that they are sadly in need of a playroom for the girls, and a very unpretentious one can be built for the small sum of £125, towards which he has collected £75, but the committee cannot allow it to to be commenced until the remaining £50 is in hand, as they are quite unable to spare anything for the purpose from the general fund. I trust the room will be started at once, and got ready for the coming autumn and winter.

Rev. William Spendlove.

MISSIONARY ON THE MACKENZIE RIVER.

THE Church Missionary Society has been peculiarly successful in securing various types of missionaries for its many fields of service. Men and women of different degrees of mental, physical, and spiritual endowment, of varied tastes and inclinations, have been attracted to the work, some exhibiting a large proportion of the many qualities and qualifications which combine to make a real and efficient missionary.

REV. WILLIAM SPENDLOVE, the missionary whose portrait we give this week, is well known to hundreds of the Lord's people who read these lines. He was born October 15, 1853, in a small Northamptonshire village. Very early in life he heard the story of William Carey, and resolved to go and do likewise. When only eight years old he sought and obtained employment as a keeper of sheep. Too delicate for school, too poor to obtain education, he set to work and mastered simple books by the wayside and night at home.

At the age of twelve he had mastered nearly every department of agricultural labour. His mother, however, decided that he should no longer follow the plough, and secured for him a year's schooling, after which he went to business. Several occupations were tried, but something trivial (evidently Providential) turned his course each year, until he said, "Mother, I shall one day become a preacher; I am off to London." He entered a large house of business in the West End, and in the rooms of the Y.M.C.A. he found the Saviour. With eyes full of tears, and a heart full of love to Christ, he sought and brought others to Him who alone can pardon and give eternal life.

Mental and spiritual faculties quickly developed, and at length he became active in many Christian operations. The Y.M.C.A. proved to be his college; he took part in ragged schools, mission hall work, and open-air preaching, visiting the haunts of vice in the great city, and finding ample scope for abounding energy.

In 1874 he became an active worker on the Y.M.C.A. Committee, Regent-street, and Aldersgate-street. Then came the great revival under Messrs. Moody and Sankey, in which this timid, unobtrusive worker took special interest. Many souls were led by Mr. Spendlove to trust in Jesus. The Bible became a new book to many a young man; and he was one of the most energetic in promoting its study among young men in business houses, and with others formed the Bible Class Union, of which, in 1877, he became secretary.

Rev. E. W. Moore found our friend a patient and useful worker, "sticking to it" when so many grew faint. It is difficult to include in a brief sketch all the various classes of voluntary work to which time, thought, and prayer were given. The Lord was training his servant for still more arduous duties. He called him to the foreign field.

The Church Missionary Society entertained doubts as to physical and mental fitness; but the candidate told them, and others, that no committee, no society, could stop him. After preparation he was sent to the Arctic regions of Northern Canada, to a region of almost perpetual ice and snow, an immense territory twenty times the size of England and Wales, a trackless desert which includes the barren lands on which roam the musk oxen, the huge inland seas, Great Slave Lake and Bear Lake, and the majestic Mackenzie River. There are almost interminable pine forests in this Greater Lone Land, which extends north of the Dominion of Canada proper to the Arctic Ocean. Here the Red Man still lives a nomadic life, under great difficulties, and in conditions of deep poverty and intense cold procures the fine furs which are so valuable in commerce.

Among these people Mr. Spendlove has lived and suffered—for life is constant suffering there—since 1879. He has acquired their languages, travelled long distances on snow-shoes and with dog trains, paddling birch-bark canoes in summer amid myriads of mosquitoes. Thus, "in dangers and perils, hunger and cold, weariness and poverty," the Gospel has been preached to many of the wandering Red Indians.

Mrs. Spendlove, too, is a brave missionary, a heroine and helpmeet. She has shared with her husband the loneliness and duties of a rough missionary career. It is no easy task to rear white children in such surroundings, living for many years between two and three thousand miles distant from civilised settlements. Her love for the Indians, and her good works among them, have abounded to the praise of God. She has attended their sick, and trained their young. Yet she has brought up seven children of her own!

(From Photograph by Mrs. S. Powell, High-street, Rushden, Higham Ferrers.)

The work of the mission is evangelistic, medical, scholastic, in addition to the multifarious duties of fishing, building, and even hunting for needful food. The well-known books of Rev. Egerton Young graphically describe the kind of missionary work in which Mr. and Mrs. Spendlove have been engaged. After a brief furlough these brave Christian missionaries set sail for their distant sphere in April last, leaving their dear children in England. While in this country Mr. Spendlove visited many large towns, bearing testimony to the success of missions to aboriginal tribes in North-West Canada. The Gospel of peace has caused goodwill among men to extend and abound between Chipewyan, Slavi, Loneheaux, Indians, and Esquimaux. We all honour the intrepid explorer who, from scientific motives, spends two or three years in polar regions making use of materials, comforts, and conveniences to insure success. Let us not forget such heroes as the subject of our sketch, who from higher motives, and without the explorer's means of comfort, spend their lives in Arctic regions which are really more frigid than extreme polar regions. The Church of Christ wants more men of such fibre, combining courage with piety, practical ability with devotion to the cause of Christ.

When "at home" Mr. Spendlove's address is Diocese of Mackenzie River, North-West Territories, Canada. His correspondent in this country, in connection with the Missionary Leaves Association, is Mrs. Godsell, 18, Ridgway-place, Wimbledon.

Through English Villages.

How few know of the darkness in our little villages and hamlets, where in so many cases there is no Gospel preached, and where house-to-house visitation is unknown. God has richly blessed the efforts of those who are endeavouring to take the Word of Life to some of our "home-heathen." Some go from place to place in a caravan when able, taking a tent large enough to seat 200 people. Every evening except Saturdays, which is the children's "tub night," a service (early) for children is held, followed by one for adults, to which many of the elder boys and girls remain. How thankful these people are! In some cases many come from three outlying villages to hear the words of life and salvation.

Many interesting striking cases of conversion might be cited. Here is a female who has been prayed for for ten years, and who has often turned the back. She comes to the adult service, and at that first meeting is broken down under the conviction of sin, gives herself to the Lord, and is now working in the village for Him, and gathering the girls round her. Another, a lad of seventeen, is convicted of sin at a second meeting. Some days afterwards he is seen sitting by the roadside reading the Bible, and rejoicing in the truth of Romans v. 1. An old shepherd cries out in the middle of service, "I can hold out no longer," and thus finds Jesus the Great Shepherd; and from that hour seeks to find like stray sheep. Conviction of sin is the work which we look to the Holy Spirit to perform in the hearts of the hearers.

Will not all who are interested in our villages ask God to lay upon their hearts their own responsibility, and if they are not able to go, to give themselves first in prayer; and then, as God enables them, to assist those who are able to give their time? Why should not each county have its own caravan and tent missionary?

Should any wish to know what is being done in Surrey, and how they may help, information will be given by either Col. Clarke, C.B., F.R.S., Boldrewood, Red Hill, or Mr. D. C. Apperley, Hethersett, Reigate, Surrey. T. C.

India's Need—A Call to Prayer.

THE special meetings for prayer and conference, to be held on July 28, 1897, are timed as follows:—

12 to 1.—Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, N. Chairman, Colonel J. F. Morton.

Arranged by Central Y.M.C.A.:

- 12 to 1.—Young Men's Christian Association, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C (three minutes' walk from General Post Office). Chairman, Sir George Williams.
- 1 to 2.—Devonshire-house, 12, Bishopsgate-street Without (opposite Great Eastern Station). Chairman, R. C. Morgan, Esq.
- 1 to 2.—Central Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

4.30 to 6.30.—Conference Hall, 6, Ecclestonstreet, Buckingham Palace-road (five minutes' walk from Victoria Station). Chairman, Rev. H. E. Fox.

The attendance of Christians is earnestly desired, and they are also requested to make known the need at this time for prayer on behalf of India. Communications regarding the meetings should be addressed to Mr. N. R. Hughman, 2 Pall Mall East, S.W.

Bible Motives for Evangelisation.*

II.—FELLOWSHIP.

By Rev. Dr. A. T. PIERSON.

NOW we come to the second great department of the subject. May the Lord help us to look into this wondrous thought of fellowship, "Lo, I am with you alway." This is a fellowship with God; and it is brought out in the New Testament as a fellowship with all the Persons of the Trinity. Note 2 Cor. vi. 1, "We then, as workers together with Him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain." Next, Colossians i. 24, the most marvellous verse in the New Testament, "Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the Church"—that is, co-operation with the Son in suffering. Once more, in John xv. 26, 27, "When the Comforter is come, He shall bear witness of Me: and ye also shall bear witness." Co-workers with God the Father, co-sufferers with God the Son, co-witnesses with God the Holy Ghost. Think of that, fellowship not only with one Person of the Trinity, but with all three!

First, fellowship of the mystery. For many years I read Eph. iii. 1-9, without seeing its meaning. "If ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you-ward; how that by revelation He made known unto me the mystery which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit." What is this mystery of Christ? "That the Gentiles should be fellow heirs and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel: whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power."

Let us see what Paul thought of the privilege of this fellowship. "Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; and to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ; to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the Church the manifold wisdom of God."

ANGELS DESIRE TO LOOK

into this, and will never be able to do so until the Church makes it possible for them to understand the mystery of Christ. God had a great eternal purpose which He did not make known in ages past, not even in the days of the Lord Jesus Christ except by the faintest intimations, until Christ was risen from the dead. When the Holy Ghost came down and made the words of Christ pregnant with meaning, and illumined the minds of the disciples, then they began to know what was the eternal purpose of God. To the Apostle Paul, especially designated as the Apostle to the Gentiles, it was given to know this by special revelation.

God has expressly made known to us this eternal secret, that we may be sharers in the working out of this mystery. Missionary is Apostle spelt Latin-wise, and Apostle is Missionary spelt Greek-wise; and both men are sent forth from God to share this mystery. Do you know how God works it out? I wonder if others have been struck as I have been with two conspicuous passages from the Bible, in which we read of "the ends of the earth." One is in Psa. ii., and the other in Acts i. 8. God says He has given unto his Son the ends of the earth for his possession; and Christ says to his disciples, "Ye shall be witnesses to Me unto the ends of the earth." The way in which Christ is to have possession of the ends of the earth is by your witnessing; and He will never have them if you do not carry his witness there. Think of it—the fulfilment of God's promise to his Son is, providentially and in the grace of God, made dependent upon your witnessing for Him to the ends of the earth. He is not going to the ends of the earth, you have to go for Him; only that, when you go, He goes. You are called an ambassador. What is that? A man who goes from one Court to another, from one Government to another; and as long as he acts within the body of his instructions, it is the Government which he represents, it is the message of the Government which he delivers, and the Government is behind him. So long as you, an ambassador of Jesus Christ, confine yourself within the limits of your instructions, the whole authority of the Godhead is behind you.

I am grieved when I see ministers of Christ in these days descending from the lofty pedestal of an ambassador for Christ, to talk about what other men can deal with just as well, and sacrificing their dignity thereby. I take solid satisfaction to myself that during the thirty-five years in which I have been preaching the Gospel, I have never so descended. God has enabled me by his grace to stand firmly, never preaching anything to a congregation except his Word. Let me deal with that marvellous word travail in Gal. iv. 19. In Isa. liii. —the ruby chapter of the Old Testament, full of love—we read, "He shall see of the travail of his soul, the birth-pangs of his soul, and shall be satisfied." And Paul says, "My little children, of whom I travail in birth again in you," applying to himself the same language as is applied to his Lord. Your Lord is going to have children by pangs and travail, and He wants you to join in these things and to bring forth children unto Him.

FELLOWSHIP IN THE MYSTERY OF CHRIST.

We come now to the fellowship of history; for it is history in which the mystery is worked out. There is a Divine and supernatural history, and there is a human and natural history. The Divine and supernatural belongs to the realm of the unseen; and I was going to say that the seen and the unseen in history move side by side, the unseen within the circle of the seen. A great many never see this supernatural element in human history.

Remarking that we are called to be observant of history, Dr. Pierson illustrated this point by a rapid review of the rise of modern missions, from the last century to the inception of the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union. He continued by saying that not only have we been observers of such history, but actors in and makers of it, by the grace of God. We Christians are to write the new Acts of the Apostles, and these chapters are to be written by living pens dipped in the blood of Christ and in our own blood.

In Eph. ii. 15 we have Christ abolishing "in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in Himself of twain one new man, so making peace." I have often wondered at the reference to the purple robe of royalty which the soldiers put upon Him. It was a compound colour, made of blue, which is the symbol of the promises of God, and of scarlet the symbol of atoning blood. My dear friends, God lets us mix the colours and make the purple; and if you will take the promises of God to a dying world, and hold up the scarlet blood which makes for their redemption, you will help to dye the garments of royalty with which God's King is going to be clothed. It is a precious privilege to be admitted to this fellowship of making history.

We are also permitted, under God, to experience the fellowship of miracle. This is the way by which the mystery is made known and incorporated into history. Isa. lv. 13, "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the briar shall come up the myrtle tree: and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off." God never says of any other sign, that it may not cease; but here is an everlasting one which is to be for in this world. In the individual soul and in society, depraved, unholy and degraded, the plant of the Lord shall appear.

I venture to say, under this concluding point, that every miracle of the flesh has its counterpart in these days in miracles of the Spirit. What did Christ say to Paul, Acts xxvi. 17? "...unto whom now I send thee, to open their eyes, and to turn them from the power of Satan unto God." There is a modern opening of the eyes and a modern resurrection from the dead. Every missionary and Christian worker is a miracle worker—an earthen vessel, we confess; but in this dispensation the Spirit is poured out upon believers, not upon unbelievers. Vessels are needed for the conveyance of God's power, and He uses only disciples for this purpose. You never heard of a community being revived unless disciples were there, because the Holy Spirit is not poured out upon communities where no disciples are present. If you will be a vessel, He will convey his grace through you.

We sometimes say that Christ's death saves. Does it? How would men know about it if somebody did not tell them? How should they believe without a preacher? Here is the missing link. Until the disciple touches, as it were, the outstretched hands of Jesus on the cross, and becomes the link of connection between the Saviour and a dying world, the witness of Christ does not come to unsaved hearers. If we share Christ's travail here, we shall share his triumphs; and we know from our own histories, something of the actual results, how, through human instrumentality, God can open the blind eyes, and turn men from darkness unto light, from the power of Satan unto God.

National Morality.

MRS. JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER and the Federation for Public and Legislative Morality she helped to found have had their usual International Conference, held last week at Brussels, under the distinguished auspices of M. Beernaert, Ministre d'Etat and Président de la Chambre des Répresentants (House of Commons), who in his opening address attacked the system of Police des Mœurs, against which this Federation contends, as "a veritable legislative abomination." M. Begerem (the Minister of Justice for Belgium) and M. Le Jeune (ex-Minister of Justice) were sympathetic platform supporters. The English delegates included Mrs. Josephine Butler, Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., Mr. James Stuart, M.P., Mr. W. A. Coote (of the London National Vigilance Association), and several others. Dr. Fiaux and Dr. Lutard (of the famous Parisian Hospital, St. Lazare), and Dr. Roussel (Senator), and Dr. La Boarde (of Brussels) were also present. From the Continental point of view, papers condemnatory of the system of Governmental licensing, or regulating, or countenancing sexual vice were read by Dr. Lutard and Dr. Vinkhuysen (of The Hague), M. de Meuron (of Geneva), M. Pierson (of Zetten), and many others. Of the British delegates, Mrs. Josephine Butler addressed the Conference on points of detail in the crusade, and speeches on the English and Indian aspects of the subject were made by Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., and Mr. Stuart, M.P.

A feature of the Conference and the work of the Belgian Society for Public Morality, under whose local auspices it was called, was the question of impure pictures and literature. On this topic the great paper of the occasion was read by Mr. W. A. Coote, secretary of the National Vigilance Association, London, with the President of the Belgian House of Commons in the chair. The three main points made by Mr. Coote were these:—(1) That in regard to the traffic in immoral literature and photographs, the English judges were sound, were abreast of the public opinion, and their judgments were a reflex of that opinion; (2) that at least one English Act of Parliament defined "indecent" literature in terms, which fact was a great weapon against the traffic; and (3) that the English police had been found by his Association to co-operate with enthusiasm, having caught the public desire to obliterate this traffic in obscene books, etc., from our social life. The distinguished chairman and the Belgian Press and public were manifestly impressed with this very pronounced eulogy of the London police acting under Sir E. Bradford and Dr. Anderson. Some crowded public meetings were held under the auspices of the Conference.

Theatrical Women and Girls.—Mr. William Forbes took a second party to Enfield on Wednesday last week. Mr. and Mrs. George Spicer kindly provided tea at Wood's Retreat, and gave the guests beautiful bouquets of flowers. After tea a brief address was given by the Rev. H. S. Toms, of Christ Church.

Three Bundles.

I EXPECT that the readers of this page will this week be divided into three classes. There is a little girl, who represents the first, and she looks what a boy I know calls, "as pleased as Punch." Her face is as bright as the sunshine, and her step so light that she hardly seems to touch the ground. In her hand she is carrying a bundle. It is very light just now, but before Sunday, unless she is very careful, it will have become so heavy as to nearly weigh her down.

Do you know what it is called? Look at the name upon it—"SUCCESS!" There are some other girls and boys, walking a little way behind her, with bundles of the same material, though of different sizes, and all smaller than hers. But they will all have to be very cautious how they carry theirs. Have you ever tried to walk straight with your head screwed round? You would not find it very easy. What do you mean when you say of a person, "Oh, his head's turned"? You mean that he is doing some queer thing which a more careful, thoughtful person would not do. Success often makes persons do that; it "turns their heads," and makes them say and do things which in their calmer moments they would scorn to do.

Little bearers of this bundle called "Success," ask the Lord Jesus to help you carry it in such a way that you may go straight on in the right path, without straying into the side-ways of conceit and pride.

Now, here comes another party, also carrying bundles, which look black and heavy; and the blackness and heaviness seem to reflect themselves on to the faces of the boys and girls who are carrying them. And there are some tiny mites among them for whom I feel so sorry. One strange thing, though, is how that big boy got in among them. I expect he is not so old as he seems, or he would surely have been in the other group. But oh, how cross some of them look, and those who are not cross look very sad. I wonder if their mother ever does to them what mine used to do to me when I was "in a wax"—make them go and look at themselves in the glass. How I used to hate that. It generally made me so ashamed of my ugly face that I used to try hard to get the wrinkles out.

Dear little folks, whose names do not appear in the lists this week, dry your eyes and cheer up. Many of you have done your best, I'm sure, and your bundle, called "FAILURE," is very heavy I know. But

> If at first you don't succeed,
> Try, try, try again.

and remember that Jesus has seen your work during the quarter, and the things you have learned about Him in "The Bible Searcher" are a prize in themselves.

Ah! here is the third group with their bundles. They are marked "INDIFFERENCE," which means that these young people have not been in for the competition at all, and therefore don't care who get prizes and who do not. Just a word to these. Some of you think Bible-searching is "all very well for kids"! but that you are too big or too busy, or—shall I say too bumptious?—for it. I think these are mostly boys; but even boys have hearts, and can often show very great interest in letters from those they love when they are away from home (especially when the letter has an enclosure of something good!). The Bible is God's letter to us, and He is so pleased when, in return for his love to us, we show our love by reading it; and I shall hope to find a lot of you carrying No. 1 bundle at the next Competition in September.

How to Learn the Books of the Bible.

THE Proverbs, like a goodly string of choicest pearls appear;
Ecclesiastes teaches man how vain are all things here.
The mystic Song of Solomon exalts sweet Sharon's Rose,
Whilst Christ, the Saviour and the King, the "rapt Isaiah" shows.
The warning Jeremiah apostate Israel scorns,
His plaintive Lamentations their awful downfall mourns.
Ezekiel tells in wondrous words of dazzling mysteries,
Whilst kings and empires yet to come Daniel in vision sees.

Sixth Prize Competition.

BELOW I give the list of successful competitors, and the prizes, etc., awarded to them. The papers have for the most part shown considerable pains and careful reading of the Scriptures, which are the principal objects of the Bible Searcher, I should like to have seen more care in the writing and general get-up of the papers, in which there has been some falling off. I must give great praise, however, to MARY ELEANOR CLARKE, whose paper was so splendidly done, both in contents and appearance, that I have felt bound to award her a SPECIAL PRIZE, which stands higher than the first.

SPECIAL PRIZE, Mary E. Clarke. Age 14 (Div. III.)

FIRST PRIZES.

DIVISION I.—Gladys M. Phipps, Vera C. Dickinson, Gladys Calvert, Constance J. Gabbett.

DIVISION II.—Isabel W. Phipps, Ada E. Palmer, William Aston, Eleanor M. M. Wallace.

Personal.

WILLIE FINDLAY.—Glad to hear you are having such a good time in Canada. BESSIE MILLAR.—Your answers are very well done, but your writing is not always good. FRANCES BENNETT.—By all means continue the Searcher. FRANK MEDCALF.—Next time I hope to be able to give you a star. Very glad you are joining again. WINIFRED THOMSON.—If you were to write your paper more neatly you might get a star; lined paper might help you. L. K. HUGHES.—You could enclose the stamps with your next week's Searcher, wrapping them in a separate sheet of paper on which you must sign your name. E. B. BLACK.—Many happy returns! ETHEL LAY.—Unfortunately you made a mistake this week. Do not give up, but try again. META TROTTER.—Thank you for your letter. I, too, am sorry you could not enter this time. MARGARET STABB.—I hope you will all have a very happy holiday.

UNCLE TOM.

The Voice of God in India.

THE great Ruler of nations often utters his voice of warning to the people and princes of this world when they, alas! heed Him not. His voice is always a voice of mercy. Like a kind loving Father He first speaks, He then warns, and if his erring creatures will not hear, at last He strikes a gentle blow. If that does not suffice, the blow is repeated, and each visitation becomes more and more severe, not only, nor chiefly, to punish, but to arouse to a sense of duty and danger those who are succumbing to the effects of the soporific draught of sin.

Again and again will God in mercy call, and knock harder and harder; but if all such calls of mercy take none effect, at last He is sure to visit the impenitent with such remedial judgments as will compel the heedless to hear. If the delinquent will then turn from his evil ways, well; but if he will, like Pharaoh, still harden the heart and resist God, then utter destruction will follow.

Have we not good reason to fear that India is fast approaching this terrible crisis, both as a nation and as a Government? I know it is the fashion in these days of worldly policy to decry such sentiments as these; but I make bold to ask, Is it wise to do so? Are we not warranted by the history of God's people in the Bible to come to such conclusions? The Book of God is full of the most striking instances of his judicial irritation on both his own stubborn people and on rebellious Gentiles, who would not hear the warning voice of the Most High.

To my own mind it seems most strange, yea and most sad, that it is so much the custom in these days of carnal security, that even so few of God's own people should recognise the hand of Him who takes cognisance of the actions of his creatures, and who will not pass by the guilt. Some people would fain tell us that with "the march of intellect" things have changed. But let such not forget that sin is as sinful and as hateful as ever in the sight of God, and that He knows no "change" nor "the shadow of turning." Despite all the boasted "march of intellect" among men, the great need of the day is the study of God's dealings, in the light of his own holy Word.

I ask, Is not the God of heaven in these days dealing in the most evident way with our Indian Empire—dealing, I say, with both its people and its Government? Here we have time after time a repetition of famine and of failure of the opium-producing poppy plant, and now the land is visited with plague and with earthquake. Is there not a cause?

In all this we see the sin of her people and the sin of the rulers evidently set forth in a lurid light. The people, after many years of the free offer of the Bread of Life, through the Gospel of the grace of God, refuse the choicest boon of Heaven. And now the God of heaven, whose glory is above the clouds, holds back the rains (read Jer. xiv.), and the millions who reject the Bread of Life die for want of the bread that perisheth. Can we not read the nature of the sin in the character of the visitation?

And what of the Christian (?) Government? It suffers in its most tender part — in its financial loss. The millions gained by its monopoly of opium and excise traffic, by which it has spread destruction wholesale in China and in India, in spite of all the warnings from men and from God—these millions of blood-money have now to be paid out of exhausted coffers to try and repair as far as possible the awful ruin caused by a fourfold visitation of famine, plague, earthquake, and riot. (See Amos iv.)

And, now, one is led to ask—What will the end be? This depends on the practical use which the people and the rulers of India will make of these evident judgments of heaven. If, like Nineveh of old, the people and the Government will hear, repent, and reform, God may—nay He will—in mercy spare the guilty; but if, like the Canaanites, and like the cities of the Plain, all remedial means should prove profitless and vain, what can we possibly expect but the awful vengeance of a retributive judgment that will deal the crushing blow—not only to India, but also to the mother-country, which, as the Imperial authority, is far more responsible than the local Government of its servants in India, for the political crimes in vogue in that land?

Should not all Christians of England lay all this to heart, and unite as one man, first of all in the deepest depths of penitent humiliation before God, and then in earnest prayer, that the present kind light of Divine visitation in India may open the eyes of both people and Government to see the need of obedience to the God of heaven before it is too late. God grant it, and God enable us all to see it.

The Famine in India.

REV. J. HAYTHORNTHWAITE, of St. John's College, Agra, has been very active in relief work. During March he relieved 1237 persons; during April, 12,701; and from May 1 to 25 the number rose to 13,629. The average daily number of persons relieved from May 22 to 25 reached 670. Mr. Haythornthwaite says: "During June and July when the distress will be most acute, the daily number relieved will average 10,000, and if further funds reach us, this number will be still more extended. The relief has gradually become so efficiently organised that imposture is practically impossible."

Miss Fallon, writing from Allahabad, N.W.P., says:—"We are most grateful for the liberal help given for the poor starving and unclothed people during this awful famine time. I now have regular days for visiting districts; and although it is holiday time, our teachers are willing to go every day, if I wish it, to relieve the poor. But the need is too great for even their devotion to overtake. We have over 200 children to relieve daily, and several babies have been saved by procuring milk of us regularly. We are finding it most difficult to make ends meet in the Converts' Home. Things are twice as dear, and we are getting no more money. We are much in need of another Converts' Home for a poorer class of women, where some industry may be taught. There is no doubt that, in God's mysterious providence, this famine helps to bring souls to Christ, and many hungry ones find the Bread of Life."

Mrs. E. C. Avetoun, of Calcutta, writes that the Jubilee year has proved an extremely sad one for India. Plague, famine, and earthquake have carried off uncounted numbers of the poor natives of this land. Betweeen five and six thousand people in Assam alone were swept away in a moment by the earthquake. It is impossible to give the number of those who have perished from plague and famine, and the latter is even now at its worst. Whilst everything is excitement and rejoicing at home, what a sad contrast is the state of things here! Everyone is sad and gloomy and the depression is general. Even the "Diamond Jubilee" must pass without even so much as a royal salute from the fort, for fear that the houses damaged last week may fall and that more lives may be lost.

Famine work in Aligarh is the burden of a long communication from Mrs. J. C. Lawson, of the American Methodist Mission, who, with her helpers, has been almost worn out by constant nursing of sick orphans. The rescued children are learning to work on farming and in other ways. Under date June 15, Mrs. Lawson says: "We now have 209 children. Before two months are over we want to have at least 300 in all—200 boys and 100 girls. This is all a work of faith. When no money was in sight we began this work, and God honoured our faith and has supplied our daily needs. A few months ago I, like many others, would not have had the courage to look further than the rupees in hand; but my Father has taught me the secret of asking Him for what I need. I am not afraid to trust Him. We have made our wants known, and He has opened hearts and purses. A Christian woman told me she had a strange dream. She thought the Lord was at her door, and went to meet Him. It seemed as if He had been in her drawing-room and had stripped it of all its pretty but useless decorations, piling them in a heap on one hand, while on the other were crowds of famine children clamouring for food. God would not deprive us of every pretty thing; but when the people on all hands were dying of hunger, the Lord's people certainly have a chance to practise self-denial."

As the result of a suggestion made by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., at the meeting in aid of Christian Succour to India, in the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W., reported in our columns last week, Lord KINNAIRD presided over a gathering of some fifty members of Parliament on the evening of the 12th inst. Miss DAVIS and the Revs. C. HOPE GILL and L. PARSONS addressed the meeting. While speaking in full appreciation of Governmental efforts to mitigate the calamitous effects of the famine, these missionaries said that the resources of India and the funds hitherto subscribed are still quite inadequate to meet such deep and widespread distress as exist amongst masses of the native population. Several Members of Parliament spoke in favour of an imperial grant for the relief of the sufferers, especially of the starving orphans and utterly destitute agriculturists.

Another meeting was held next day in Eccleston-street Conference Hall. Messrs. Gill and Parsons repeated and supplemented the testimony to which we referred last week. Emphasis was laid upon the necessity not only for largely increased pecuniary aid, but also for the exercise o practical Christian sympathy towards the starving and perishing sufferers, with care for their souls as well as for the poor bodies. Missionary societies afford most efficient machinery for really adequate relief as distinguished from the mere staving off of actual starvation. Widows and orphan girls are in imminent danger of moral ruin through privation, though much has been accomplished in the way of preventive succour by the devoted exertions of the Pundita Ramabai for the protection of her own sex.

Details were given of much alleviation of suffering secured by industrial facilities afforded through Rev. L. Parsons, particularly in connection with the fund administered by Lord Radstock. Schooling under Government inspection is also undertaken, with marked progress not only in education but in spiritual blessing. The care of orphans, so terribly numerous just now in India, has not only its philanthropic and moral side, but the evangelising opportunities afforded thereby are most valuable; for a large proportion of native converts and workers for God come from the ranks of Hindoo orphans and other children under Christian care.

The enormous extent of the suffering endured by the famished millions of India was indicated, to some extent, by Lord RADSTOCK in extracts from missionary letters, the testimony covering vast tracts of territory, and indirectly showing much Christian heroism on the part of Christian workers. His lordship declared that Christ's followers in our own favoured land are bound to take hold of the great need in a truly adequate measure, realising individual responsibility, particularly in the light of personal expenditure.

Savourless Salt.

TRODDEN beneath by the careless feet,
Mixed with the foul and lost to the sweet,
Are those who, wedded to earthly fame,
Have lost in life's journey their twofold aim.

It was not meant they should tread alone
The path so sweet they had claimed their own;
The Master wanted their love and care,
And He offered them some of his work to share.

But they heeded not his wisdom's plan.
Nor tarried awhile their ways to scan,
And they missed the joys He had meant to give,
And so by the highway they scarcely live.

And only because of the depth of love
That brought the Lord from his home above
Are they left in pity on earth to stay,
Mixed and crushed with the mire and clay.

And 'tis thus alone, 'mid blow and smart,
They can learn to bear and do their part;
And warned by their folly, the Lord will raise
The meek of the earth to proclaim his praise.

Is My Bible Really True?

WHERE DID WE GET IT?

By Rev. CHARLES LEACH, D.D., Manchester.

OUR ENGLISH BIBLE.—VIII.

WE have now traced the Bible to its source. Step by step we have walked backward until we have reached the fountain from which came the water of life. Henceforth we shall always understand how to answer the question, "Where did the Bible come from?" We now know that the New Testament we have is the New Testament which the churches possessed in the closing years of the first century. The Gospels which are in our hands to-day were in the hands of the Christians before the last of the Apostles had passed away. The Epistles, which we possess as a sacred heritage and treasury of the highest Christian knowledge, were in the hands of the bishops and officers of the churches eighteen hundred years ago.

The same words of hope and love and light which inspire and quicken us, came to the Apostolic Fathers with all their force and power. The story of our Lord's life and death, resurrection and ascension to heaven, which our Gospels unfold, is the same story which the Apostles unfolded in the hearing of the men and the contemporaries of the men who put our Lord to death. It is the same story which two of the disciples and two of their friends and companions wrote in the fourfold picture of our Redeemer which the Gospels contain. All this should deepen our love for the New Testament.

And as to the Old Testament, we are equally confident. It is the Bible which our Lord and his Apostles possessed, and which was the sacred Scriptures of the Jewish nation and all converted to the faith of the Hebrew people. It is helpful to feel that when we teach our children the stories of the Patriarch, the sweet music of the Psalms, and the eloquent words of the Prophets, we are teaching them what Jewish parents taught their children

IN THE TIME OF OUR LORD.

Nay, our Lord Himself was taught these same things when He was a child, and we see how the Scriptures entered into his very life.

We have now another question to deal with, rather different from the one we have answered. The Old Testament was originally written in the Hebrew language, and the New Testament in the Greek language. To Englishmen these are strange and foreign tongues. They are languages which the masses of our people do not know. But we have the Bible in English. When and how was it put into the language of the English people?

This is a most interesting question, and I will answer it as well as I can. In answering the question where the Bible came from, I have taken you backward step by step. But in answering the question of the translation of the ancient Scriptures into the language spoken by the English people, I shall adopt a different method. I shall go back to the earliest information I can get, and then bring you forward step by step to our own times. A short history of our English Bible should not be without interest for us.

THE FIRST ENGLISH VERSIONS.

St. John, in his Gospel, tells us that Pilate placed on the cross of Jesus the words, "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews," and Luke says the same, and that the words were in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin. These three are the languages which have had much to do with the sacred Scriptures. The Old Testament was written in Hebrew, the New Testament in Greek, and by the middle of the second century both Old and New were translated into Latin. It was in Latin that England had the Scriptures at first, and so far as we know, for many centuries it had to get the story of the redemption from this language.

I do not think anyone can tell when the English people first had the Scriptures in their own tongue. It is quite certain that at a very early period the Latin Bible, known as the Latin Vulgate, was the Bible of the clergy and that used in public worship. It may have been that some portions of the Scriptures were translated into the language of the people at a very early date, but it is doubtful if many of them were able to read. Our English version is and cannot be ascribed to any one man. The Old and New Testaments in the original languages were the work of many men, and not simply of one. God used a multitude of agencies, and sent us his revelation through a number of human channels. In like manner, the production of the English Bible in its latest form, the Revised Version, has been secured by many men, working in different ways, each doing his share, God guiding the whole, until we have now what many hold to be the best English Bible the world has ever seen.

I cannot take you through the history of all the translations; that would take too long; but I will tell you of a few. I propose, first, to tell you briefly of some of the early workers at our Bible. Then to tell you of the work of Wycliffe, and of Tyndale, and a few others.

ST. JEROME AND HIS VULGATE.

If ever you go to Bethlehem, and visit the church built over the spot where our Saviour is said to have been born, the guide will take you to the Chapel and Tomb of St. Jerome. This man, whose name was Eusebius Hieronymus, though best known as Jerome, lived for thirty years at Bethlehem, engaged in useful work, pious devotions, and learned studies. He was one of the most scholarly men of his times. About 383 A.D. Jerome went from Bethlehem to Rome. The Bishop of Rome at that time was named Damasus, and he at once asked Jerome to undertake the task of correcting and improving the Latin Bible then used in the Western churches. He consented, and in 385 A.D. he completed the revision of the New Testament; and when in the sixtieth year of his age began a new translation into Latin of the Old Testament from the Hebrew, a task which not many men in his time were competent to perform.

His work was known as the Vulgate, and was the only Bible which the English possessed for some centuries. For more than a thousand years it was the Bible from which every version in English was made. It is the Bible followed by the Roman Catholics in all their translation work; what is called the Douay Bible, with the Rhemish New Testament, was made from the Vulgate.

In my next article I will tell you a little about the venerable Bede and King Alfred, and their work in translating the Scriptures.

Open-Air Temperance Work at Kingstown.—The Dublin Total Abstinence Society having successfully carried out open-air work in Dublin, thought the experiment ought to be tried in Kingstown; and permission having been given by the Harbour Board, the meetings were commenced last week. A large number of people attended, and the best of order prevailed amongst a very mixed assembly. The interest excited on the first night increased each evening. On one occasion the crowd reached 2,000 persons of all classes.

The Damascus Railways as described by Dr. E. W. G. Masterman in the July Quarterly Statement of the Palestine Exploration Fund, seem to be well conducted. There is one line from Beirût to Damascus, another from Damascus to Mezerib in the Hauran. Dr. Masterman says:—"The management of these railways is, on the whole, good—the passenger service remarkably so. The trains run punctually, no severe accidents have occurred, and the officials are usually polite. Their smart uniform forms a striking contrast to the slender and ragged clothing of their neighbours, especially in the Hauran; though for the matter of that this contrast is nothing compared with that afforded by the modern red-tiled roofed station-houses standing in close proximity to the ruins of Hauran's ancient civilisations."

Open-Air Mission Holiday.

SOME two hundred of London's open-air preachers spent an enjoyable day on Tuesday, last week, at Trent Park, the residence of Mr. F. A. Bevan. On arriving, they were welcomed by their host and hostess in the name of their one Lord and Master, and right royally were they entertained. Cricketing in the fields, boating on the lake, bowls on the lawn, or croquet on the tennis ground were chosen by the various brethren according to their tastes—for these had all been provided by the thoughtfulness of Mr. Bevan—whilst several disciples of Izaak Walton were soon deeply engaged in the gentle art of fishing.

The beautiful park and grounds, consisting of 470 acres, were looking at their best, and it was a pleasant change for hard-worked labourers from busy centres to roam at their sweet will through such sylvan scenery, and rest within such shaded woods. After having dined in a marquee a short account of a trip to Palestine was given under the trees by Mr. Lord, and then the friends were again free to ramble "midst Nature's beauteous scenes," whilst some of the friends were glad to exchange notes and illustrations, and tell of what God had been doing through them since last they met.

At five o'clock tea was served, at the close of which Mr. Bevan gave a short talk full of pithy thoughts; in bidding them "God speed" in their work, in which they had the sanction and the example of their Divine Master, he exhorted them in words of sound doctrine to go forth and preach "as the Spirit gave them utterance." Mr. Bevan then introduced Rev. Marcus Rainsford, jun., who gave a short and racy address, in which there was little clericalism, but much apposite and sanctified witticism. The gist of his speech may be outlined.

He bade his brethren in Gospel ministry to set forth two promised truths to the people. One, that while God has made provision for the salvation of all, yet man has to give his consent to be saved, and to come over on the Lord's side. Jesus Christ stands helpless before any man until the man is willing to be saved. The second truth to be enforced is—when man has given his consent to be saved he must begin to bring forth fruit in his life, in order to show his acceptance of the Divine life. An old man, who was a notorious drinker, once went to the preacher and said, "I've been waiting these forty years for the still small voice to speak to me. The reply was, "You miserable old boozer, you can hardly hear my voice, let alone the voice of God. Get quit of your sin, cease to do evil, learn to do well; then you may have some hope of hearing God speak to you."

The meeting was over all too soon, and after another hour's wandering through the park we returned to our work, encouraged and inspired afresh by the loving liberality of our beloved host, and the brotherly words of Mr. Rainsford. As was only meet, Mr. F. Cockrem, the secretary of the Open-Air Mission, tendered the united thanks of all the members to Mr. F. A. Bevan for his kind invite extended to them. Carolus.

New Court Chapel.

REV. CAMPBELL MORGAN, of New Court Congregational Chapel, preached on Sunday evening his farewell sermon before leaving for the Convention at Northfield. His text was Matt. xxii. 37-40. He said, "Obey God, and love will follow. Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all else will be added. First submit to his kingship, and in the King you will find the Father." It was a Scriptural, thoughtful, and eloquent discourse, a Gospel exposition and appeal of the Apostolic type, not read but preached.

A brief after-meeting filled the centre of the large building. After a hymn the preacher explained his purpose—to lead to immediate, absolute, and unconditional surrender. Brothers and sisters were asked to pray briefly to this end. An aged brother responded with definiteness and precision; others followed; and though the sisters were not heard by all, their prayer was felt, and it was heard in heaven. Those four petitions occupied less than five minutes. After two verses of a hymn were sung, and a few quiet, solemn words were spoken, enforcing the King's business in which we were engaged, then all heads were bowed in prayer, and those who had come to decision were asked to rise and then resume their seats. Several accepted the invitation, and after another hymn the meeting closed.

C.M.S. Farewell.

PLATFORM and auditorium were crowded last Thursday evening at Exeter Hall, when a meeting was held to take leave of many missionaries proceeding to various parts of the world for Gospel work in connection with the Church Missionary Society. The great gathering included some thirty Bishops of the Church of England, representing Exeter, Carlisle, Crediton, Derry, Ballarat, Waiapu, Colombo, Osaka, Huron, Madras, Caledonia, Jerusalem, Moosonee, and other places. There were also present the Archbishops of Dublin and Rupert's Land, and several American Bishops.

Among the prospective voyagers, the Bishop of Sierra Leone is returning to his diocese; Bishops Tugwell, Phillips, and Oluwole to Yoruba; Bishop Tucker to East Africa; while other spheres represented are the Niger, Uganda, N.W.P. India, the Punjab, Tinnevelly, South, Mid, and Western China, and Japan.

In the chair was the president of the society, Sir John Kennaway, and after the proceedings had been opened with praise and prayer, he apologised for calling friends together on a hot July evening, because it is desired to keep the first week in October clear for simultaneous missionary meetings, which it is hoped to hold then all over England. Very cheerily did he remind the outgoing workers that the hope of all God's people is in the coming King, to whom we owe more than human allegiance, but who is too often practically ignored. In Him is the secret of our hope, the power of our struggle, our stimulus to exertion, and the encouragement of our labours. Cheering prospects in the varied spheres represented were hopefully reviewed by the chairman. It was, he said, cause of rejoicing that the sorrowful news of two years ago regarding terrible events in China is outweighed by the hopeful outlook in that land at the present time.

Rev. H. E. Fox, hon. secretary, announced that this gathering at an abnormal time is to be supplemented by similar gatherings later in the year. Interesting particulars regarding the fifty-one labourers leaving England were given. Of these no less than nineteen are going out for the first time. As each name was read out by the secretary, with the brief addition of a few particulars, the worker designated rose from his or her seat in order to recognition by the meeting; and, as this was done, signs of kindly sympathy were not wanting in the great assembly.

Describing the occasion as more representative of Christ's Church generally than of a society, Bishop Tugwell earnestly besought the prayers of friends under the great responsibility laid upon him in connection with his sphere of labour for Christ. He expressed the firm conviction that God, who opens doors, will also provide the men for them, if we wait upon Him. Then he asked praise for the devotion which characterises workers now in the field of West Africa, some of whom he named, and which also marks the band of godly ladies now leaving England.

Bishop Phillips also asked prayer in view of the necessity laid upon him to open inland stations where the Gospel may radiate all around. The services of European missionaries have to be economised, and native agents must be largely used in the forefront of the work. How needful it is, therefore, that communities of native Christians shall be centres of spiritual light; and, in that connection, much prayer on their behalf is desirable.

Not as a matter of form, he declared, did Bishop Oluwole describe the field of Yoruba as white unto harvest while the labourers are few. Prayer for the maintenance and increase of spiritual power in native Christians is much needed. Training in the schools must be supplemented by efforts to spiritually benefit native children and youth. Open doors undoubtedly existing call for supplication that heathen hearts may also be opened.

The Bishop of Sierra Leone, finding the letters "V.R.I." everywhere just now, utilised them as a text for his remarks. Pray, said he, that we may be Visibly Victorious over self, the world, and the evil one. Incidents in the life of King David illustrated this point. In view of heavy trial in various mission fields, difficult to understand in their mystery, how needful that workers be Resigned and Rejoicing. It is also desirable that God's labours be Invoking God-ward and Inviting man-ward.

As representing returning missionaries, Rev. Edward F. E. Wigram dealt in a very suggestive way with the conditions and needs of the various lands to be served.

The universities and the new men going out were represented in words of gratitude and praise to God for his providential leading, from Rev. F. W. Rowlands. It is a special honour, said he, to serve God in foreign fields, because this involves special need, responsibility, and joy in pioneering where the Gospel had not previously penetrated. Mr. H. E. Maddox, who is going to Uganda, also spoke as a representative of business men from whose ranks he comes forth to serve his Lord. Rev. C. H. T. Ecob (Holloway College), also destined for Uganda, exhorted to the full Christian utilisation of commercial development in Africa.

Words of cheer and encouragement to workers constituted a closing address from the Archbishop of Dublin. The looking of God upon anything is connected with the putting forth of Divine power, Judges vi. 14. Gideon's strength was not in himself, but was derived from faith's gaze into God's eyes. As we blend our wills with God's, we become almost omnipotent. The promise to give Divine strength accompanies the command to go in that strength. Exodus xxxiii. 14 also contains a command and a promise. Never does God's presence fail his faithful servants. All down the ages that promise has been fulfilled, and it formed an Old Testament presage of the Master's words, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

The Bishop of Carlisle led in the closing prayer; and the Archbishop of Dublin then dismissed the great gathering.

Hyde Park in 1897.

BY CHAS. COOK.

WE are rejoicing in the results of a well-won victory. We are triumphing in the power of the glorious Gospel. We are glorying in the Cross of our Lord Jesus. For some years past a perfect Pandemonium existed, quite a Babel scene was enacted daily; but after much prayer and a good deal of work, including many appeals to the "powers that be," new rules have been issued forbidding anyone to collect money for any purpose. Now there is perfect order, and few speakers but those who have the courage of their convictions are found in this beautiful Park of the West End.

By reason of our having always abstained from mentioning money in the open air, and our plain speaking as to the abuses to which the Park was put, we have had to endure a good deal of scoffing and some annoyance in times past; but we have gone on without reviling again, believing that God would bring all things right. Now we rejoice that the Gospel is drawing very many to boldly confess Christ. Last evening, at the close of our meeting, seven men, besides several women, publicly declared themselves willing to become followers of our Lord. There has been no meeting held this summer but what at the close we have seen men and women deeply anxious about their souls.

On Monday evening this week a gentleman said, "I've a bad conscience." He had been attending the Park services for some time. He came into Hyde Park Hall, and during the meeting (which always succeeds the Park service) broke out in praise and thanksgiving, blessing the Lord for bringing him to decision. A few nights before one of our elder brethren brought his brother-in-law to the meetings; he was in great trouble and was out of work. We exhorted him to turn to the Lord, to trust his soul in his keeping, and promised to find him work if he would do it. He accepted Christ on the Sunday, and was engaged by a Christian Master on the Tuesday; and last night he stayed at home and took charge of three little children in order that his sister might attend the park meeting. Surely this was the spirit of the Gospel. A few weeks ago a friend who had been converted in the park sent £10 as a thankoffering for the salvation of his soul. Christianity is a practical thing.

Our Sunday evening meeting, which has been conducted on, or near, the same spot for the last twenty-six years, is large and interesting, and truly cosmopolitan. When journeying through America and Canada, on one occasion, in every city and town save one I met people who had received blessing there, whilst the converts during the past twenty-six years represent twenty-four nationalities. Only last evening there were two young Jews deeply interested, and two Germans, who came in to the after meeting, besides a Swede, a Dane, a Cingalese, and a negro who were present at the park service.

Among last Sunday evening's congregation was an ex-Cabinet Minister, who stayed to the close of the address, and left as we were singing a hymn.

I believe, however, that our weeknight meetings are more wonderful and more blessed than those of Sunday evening. Often do we see at least 1000 men standing till 9.30, listening intently, whilst the solemnities of eternity are brought to bear upon the careless and the thoughtless; and when the story of the Blessed Master, the Divine Son of God, stooping from Deity to dust, from the throne of the universe to the cross of Calvary, is told out, stout hearts are overcome, stubborn wills are subdued, and often do we see not only women but men, with tears in their eyes—evidence of the penitence of their souls.

Madame Annie Ryall, by her sanctified singing, has greatly added to the interest this year, and at the close of the Park meeting, when we adjourn to the hall close by, all the seats provided are full, and people have had to stand—this at a meeting which begins at 9.30. God is with us, and we praise his holy name. Our prayer-meeting on Saturday is full, our workers are in loving unity, and our gracious God is cheering his servants.

The outcome of these Hyde Park services has been the opening of Hyde Park Hall in 1874, and the large Metropolitan Hall in 1875, both of which we have rented. The first is used by us exclusively, and the latter only on the Sunday. A year or so ago we were offered a site in the Edgware-road, where we could have built a large Assembly Hall to hold 3000 people, but listening to the advice of friends I declined the responsibility of raising some £10,000, though part of it was promised. We have used the Metropolitan Hall for twenty-two years (which seats 2000), and invariably the place has been crowded.

But this building has just been pulled down, and is nearly rebuilt. It will, when completed, seat 3500 people, and if the way is made clear, I see nothing else to do but to take it for Sunday services. It will mean a greater output of strength, both physically and mentally, but as Hyde Park Hall only holds some three or four hundred, there seems nothing else to do but to "strengthen our cords" and "lengthen our stakes."

But it will also mean an increased rental and much heavier expense, and while we are still willing to give ourselves to the work, and lay out our strength to win the careless masses, I dare hardly incur this fresh responsibility, unless those who know the work that God has put into our hands are willing to encourage by furnishing the needful means.

Except when I have been visiting foreign prisons, I have given my life to this particular work, with results known to the readers of The Christian, and if it commends itself to them I shall be glad of their sympathy in the matter of taking the New Metropolitan Hall for the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. I shall have to see the proprietor very shortly, and make arrangements. I commend this work to the prayers of God's people, that guidance and help may still be given for the winning of precious souls for the glory of our coming Lord.

6, Frithville-gardens, W., July 15.

The Convent Supervision Memorial movement should stir the hearts, not only of Christian people but of all lovers of civil and religious liberty. Friends of the cause are invited to secure memorial forms from the secretary, Mr. S. J. Abbott, 8, Gray's Inn-place, W.C., and to help in the circulation of a rousing tract, "Are Nuns Practically Prisoners?" to be had from the same address.

"The Bishop Hooper Protestant Van."—The evangelist in charge of this Church Association van (Mr. Samuel Bradfield) has just concluded a very successful mission at Abergavenny. The people came out in crowds night after night, and listened to addresses on the following subjects:—"The Doctrine of Confession," as taught in the Bible and Prayer-book; "The Ancient Way of Pardon or Absolution," by God, through the prophets and apostles; "Hymns Ancient and Modern;" "Altar, Sacrifice, and Priest." The Ritualistic teachers have been much disturbed. One of them preached a sermon against the evangelist and his work, but that only increased inquiry and interest.

THE EVANGELIST.

Plucked from the Burning.

By Rev. GEORGE COATES.

SAM O' SAM'S.

SAM was a young fellow who had given himself body and soul to the devil. He was a fitter in a machine shop, and in receipt of good wages, the greater part of which found its way into the publican's pocket. Being of a jovial disposition, he was the central figure of a band whose sole aim seemed to be the worship of Bacchus. Although not starving his wife and children, yet money that was needed at home went to swell the landlord's coffers.

Sam was a wonderful fellow for driving a bargain, and had he been reared under more favourable circumstances, and given the chance of a good education, he would soon have become a successful merchant. I have known him to keep steady for weeks and not go near a public-house. At such times he would buy a lot of smallware or anything that came handy, and go to the market of a neighbouring town and there sell the lot at a substantial profit. This would continue until he had a balance in hand of four or five pounds, and then, instead of making good use of the money thus obtained, he would be off on a grand "spree" for two or three weeks, until the money was all gone and his credit at stake.

I went to assist in some special services in the village in which Sam lived, and during the second week he was induced to come to the chapel. At length he signed the pledge, and, better still, gave himself to the Saviour. He at once became an out-and-out Christian. No half measures with him! He stood up bravely for the truth as it is in Jesus, and whether at home or abroad he was never tired of inviting others to taste and see that the Lord is good.

For a time he had a lot of persecution at his work, and his old companions and others tried all in their power to drag him down to his former level. For many weeks he bore all with meekness and Christian patience, until he was forced to stand up in self-defence. During a time of very hot persecution he was seen to drop suddenly on his knees and begin to pray; then, rising, he went to the middle of the shop, and, rolling up his sleeves, said:—"Three months ago there wasn't one of you that would dare to lift your little finger to Sam o' Sam's, but now because I'm a Christian you think that I've lost all my courage. Not so. I believe that I've stood this kind of thing as long as the Lord intends me to stand it, and now I'm going to fight. There was once a battle fought and a victory won, and the battle-cry was 'The sword of the Lord and of Gideon'; and now, if any of you want to prove what sort of a man I am to-day, come on and face the watchword—'the Lord Jesus Christ and Sam o' Sams.'"

From that day forth he was let alone, and soon won the respect and esteem of all who knew him.

NED O' PAUL'S.

In the town in which I lived for several years lived a once drunken sot called Edward Wood, or more commonly known as Ned o' Paul's. If a search had been made within a radius of ten miles, I do not think it would have produced a more degraded, forlorn, sin-disfigured specimen of humanity than he.

Shunned by respectable people, kicked out by the landlords, the name of Ned o' Paul's filled everyone with disgust. How his wife clung to him through the years of sorrow and misery was a mystery. At length matters were brought to a crisis. On entering the house one day, his wife was horrified to see him hanging at the stairs rail. After the momentary shock was over, she had the presence of mind to lift him, and thus take the weight from his neck. Her screams soon brought help, and prompt measures soon restored him to consciousness.

Such was the contempt in which Ned was held by the public, that the general expression of opinion was, that it was a great pity that she did not let him hang a little longer. During the following day, as he lay in bed ill from the effects of the shock to his system, he was visited by a grand and noble Christian named Hollingworth. At first Ned gruffly asked him what he wanted, and appeared to resent his presence. After a few kindly remarks, our friend left him.

Day after day the visitor called, and at last got his consent to pray with him. When he was brought up at the Police-court on a charge of attempting to take his life, Mr. Hollingworth was there, and pleaded so strongly for his release that the magistrates were glad to hand him over to his care.

By the mercy of God Ned was at last turned from the error of his way, and became as a little child. Work was obtained for him at one of the mills, his home was brightened, he was well fed and well dressed, and daily gave evidence of a thorough change of heart and life.

Never shall I forget the first lovefeast which he attended at our chapel. When he rose to speak, for some moments his feelings overcame him, and he was unable to utter a word. The tears streamed down his cheeks, and great sobs shook his frame. As he spoke of the loving kindness of God, and with beautiful pathos told his experience of the never-dying love of Jesus, the congregation was melted to tears, and surely the angels would weep for very joy.

OLD WILL JOHNSON.

When I first met Old Will he was in his seventy-second year—a hardened old reprobate. I went to conduct a mission near where he lived, and his wife got him to come to the chapel. His wife was a member of the church, his son a local preacher, and his eldest daughter married to a local preacher. The only remaining child, a young woman, was saved on the third night of the services, so that he was the only one out of the fold. The Spirit of God laid hold of him, and he could not keep away from the chapel.

One night I had been trying to induce him to go into the inquiry room, but, like a great many more, he hung back till a grand girl, who had been saved the night before, came to him, and, putting her arm round his neck, said, "Come, let me lead you to Jesus. He saved me last night, and I have been so happy all day. Don't wait any longer. I'm sure He will save you."

He was constrained to yield, and after a long struggle was enabled to receive the message, "Thy sins which were many are all forgiven thee." Passing his house an hour later the sounds of prayer and thanksgiving were heard; and while in heaven the angels were rejoicing, there was joy in that earthly home over the return of him who had so long wandered from God.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. William Hill, well known in South Africa as an evangelist whom God is using for the salvation of many souls and the edification of Christians, has concluded a fortnight's mission in a large tent at Durban, Natal. Much prayer had been made for blessing, and these prayers were not in vain. Mr. Hill's addresses drew large numbers of people, and the Spirit carried many an arrow of conviction home. It was a marked feature of the mission, and one for which there is much cause for thankfulness, that so large a proportion of those who received blessing were men, most of whom were not in the habit of attending any place of worship. As the mission proceeded, the interest and attendances increased. The closing meeting will long be remembered. Time failed to permit of all taking part who desired to give their word of testimony to blessing received. Quite a number, however, praised God for the mission, and the hope was earnestly expressed that Mr. Hill would soon find his way round to Durban again. A. C. P.

Mr. F. Glover has concluded a fortnight's mission in his Gospel Tent at Bishop's Hall, Taunton. We praise God for much blessing received by both children and adults as a result of the meetings. Prayer is asked for a similar series of meetings at Ruishton.

Mr. Henry Thorne has been holding meetings at Margate with much encouragement.

Mr. Charles Minor has been lending a hand in Gospel work at Cockington, Torquay, in connection with the People's Mission conducted by Mr. Levi Powell.

Mr. B. H. Angel has just concluded a six-weeks tent mission at Blindley Heath, South Godstone, Surrey. It proved a time of much blessing, some very remarkable cases of conversion being reported. One of the converts, aged ninety-three, had been brought to the tent in a bath chair, after having for over twenty years had no desire to hear the Gospel. Mr. Angel is now engaging in Bible carriage work in Sussex villages.

Mr. Brunton's Gospel tent is at Blindley Heath, following up the good impression made by the evangelist.

Temperance Review.

PROBABLY temptation to excessive drinking is nowhere so great for soldiers and volunteers as when under canvas. The canteen is the centre of life in the evening, and many a well-intentioned young fellow has succumbed to the temptation there. We are glad to hear, therefore, that an army order has been issued authorising the establishment of temperance canteens. (But what sorry stuff most temperance drinks are! Here is a field for inventive enterprise.) Considering the extent of drunkenness and social vice in the army, the only wonder is that so few counter-attractions are provided for the men. Why should not their better inclinations be officially catered for?

The gala day of temperance workers at the Crystal Palace on Tuesday last week was an unalloyed success. Some 30,000 people were present, and found it possible to have a thoroughly enjoyable day without the aid of intoxicating liquors—all the bars of course being closed. This fact in itself is an object-lesson worth noting, and an argument which should have some influence on the mass of British workmen. The possibility of working without alcohol has been fully demonstrated by ample evidence in the past; and these monster fêtes will go to show that it is equally possible without alcohol to spend a holiday which shall not only be fully enjoyed at the time, but which shall impress the mind with gratifying and helpful memories when the day is over.

At one of the meetings on the terrace Rev. J. Watkin struck a very hopeful note by reminding the workers of the change which had been produced in the churches, the medical profession, and in Parliament with regard to temperance principles during the last half-century. He did wisely, too, in the present state of affairs, to emphasise the fact that we are not merely economists and philanthropists; the question should be approached from these standpoints, but we must, above all, bear in mind that we are fighting God's battle against sin, and must go to the field believing that because God is in the van ultimate triumph is an absolute certainty.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson has done right to publish his letter to the Inland Revenue Department, calling attention to the sale of liquor in the House of Commons without a licence, and it is not satisfactory to read the reply that the Department does not propose to take any action. This is clearly a case of one law for the rich and another for the poor, and is not calculated to bring honour either to the law or law-makers. Nothing is so calculated to cause disgust and contempt among the people as action of this kind.

A temperance worker is much concerned lest he and his fellow labourers have been "living in a fool's paradise," as to the actual progress of temperance in this country in proportion to the increase of the population. It is certain that the facilities for drinking are more numerous than ever, in spite of an alleged increase of teetotallers in sixty years from 150,000 to eight millions. He doubts strongly that there are so many as that to-day, and thinks it a great mistake for temperance advocates to rest comfortably under such an impression. But accepting the figures as correct, he raises a still more important point when he reluctantly admits that if there are so many they must be doing very little practical advocacy of the cause that they profess to have at heart. Better face the truth on whichever side it lies.

The Band of Hope Union is making arrangements for enrolling a million new members. On a certain Saturday in the autumn, 32,000 visitors will knock at a million doors, and make a strenuous endeavour to make at least one child sign the pledge in each. This is the third time a general appeal has been made; the first being by Mr. Samuel Morley as president of the Union in 1886, who sent out a million appeals to parents; the second, by Sir George Williams, in 1891, urging the people to bring up their children abstainers. The idea of canvassing for recruits is even better than disseminating literature. There is nothing like personal influence, and if the work is well done, it is sure to result in good, and that not only to the children; through them many of the parents will be accessible.

Christian Union for Social Service.

THE first report was presented at a meeting of friends and supporters in the Chapter House of St. Paul's on Friday last, the Bishop of Hereford presiding.

A full account was given of the work and the Lingfield Colony. In conclusion, the report said:—

"The committee were prepared for a considerable loss on the agricultural operations of the year. Even in the best of recent conditions a surplus is hard to win. But the arable land at Lingfield was foul, the labour employed was of the poorest, and a summer of protracted drought was followed by a winter of equally protracted rain. Still, the first year's valuation showed that we had held our own, and the committee gratefully welcomed this fact as conclusive evidence of the special ability of their hon. director.

"Men, however, cannot be managed from a distance as effectively as land, and in view of the great and growing responsibilities of the position they have invited Mr. Brooks to fill, they are deeply impressed with the necessity of speedily building on the Colony a house for the director, and so securing his constant presence and undivided attention. And as an annexe to this house they would add a temporary home for crippled children, about whom they have been for some months in correspondence with the Ragged School Union, which has made this class of sufferers a special object of its care. They would seek thus not only to give the little cripples a refreshing holiday in the garden of England, but also to teach them such industries as they could prosecute at home, so bringing a fresh interest into their frequently aimless lives, and enabling them to add to the scanty resources of their parents. Another house most urgently needed is one for the reception of inebriates, a fearfully numerous and miserable class of men, of whom we can scarcely entertain any hope except under separate and special treatment.

"For these buildings we want £2,000. We should be thankful to go to work at once, making our own bricks out of the specially valuable clay we are proved by experts to possess, and, by laying up materials before the winter, effecting an important saving in both time and money."

The hon. sec. of the Union is Rev. J. F. B. Tinling, B.A., 4, Dalmeny-road, Tufnell-park, N.

A Converted Soldier's Influence.

J. G. H. W. (Col.) appeals for £80 per annum to support a Scripture reader, to be permanently attached to his regiment. Gifts may be sent to our care. He says:—

There is a splendid field for such a man to work. A soldier brought to a personal knowledge of Christ Jesus through his Word becomes a powerful witness for Him to his comrades. As an instance of what a soldier may do, an officer told me a short time ago that he was brought to Christ by reading a tract which a sergeant in his regiment had asked him to read.

A Caution.

Mr. John Kirk, of the Ragged School Union, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C., writes to warn the public against a lady who has been collecting money in East London in aid of "The Bowyer (sic) Crippled Children's Fresh Air Fund."

Mr. Kirk thinks it is important for the public to know—(1) That the "Boyer Drift and Crippled Children's Mission" is now amalgamated with the Ragged School Union; and (2) that Mr. C. L. Boyer has returned to America, and is not in any way connected with the mission formerly bearing his name.

Lavender Bag Mission.—Will friends kindly help us again this year by sending lavender to fill little muslin bags to send to our sick soldiers in hospital at home and abroad? These little gifts are greatly prized; a text-card is always attached to each bag, and God has often used these little messengers in his service. Army Scripture readers and missionaries have desired us to thank the kind friends who last year gave us lavender and texts, enabling us to send off nearly 2000 bags. Boxes or parcels of lavender will be gratefully received by Miss E. Alice Puckle, The Hollonds, Langton, Tunbridge Wells.

Livingstone College.

IT may interest many to know that Dr. Harford-Battersby, who recently left for a short trip to his old mission field on the River Niger, West Africa, has so far been greatly prospered by God on his journey. He has left behind in England several important branches of work, in which he is actively engaged. For all of these, he has a deep heartfelt interest, but perhaps for none so much as Livingstone College and the East London Medical Mission.

Livingstone College, which provides a training in elementary medical and surgical knowledge for men proceeding to foreign spheres of mission work unprovided with qualified medical aid, has just closed its fourth year. Already seven students have entered for the new session in October, and it is desirable that others wishing to join should make application without delay.

The College bears to a considerable amount the expenses of the East London Medical Mission, and Dr. Barnardo, under whose auspices the Mission was started many years ago, still continues a grant towards its working expenditure. There remains, however, a sum of about £150 per annum necessary, which the Giver of all good gifts sends through his stewards. £80 is just now urgently needed to close the year free of a deficit, and I am sure it would greatly cheer Dr. Harford-Battersby's heart if I could write to him in a week or so to say the whole sum had been subscribed.

The Mission has increased considerably in the number of its patients and its usefulness during the past year, and the Council have under consideration alterations to the premises in order to meet the demands upon the space at our disposal. Contributions should be sent to Dr. Harford-Battersby, Livingstone College, Stratford, E.; or to the treasurer, R. L. Barclay, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

W. McAdam Eccles.

The Lowly Place.

It is not mine to front the battle, Lord,
To bear aloft the Spirit's gleaming sword;
Not mine to face the danger, smoke, and din,
Or lead the fainting solders on to win.
But just to stand in weakness oft and pain,
And watch afar the deadly battle-train,
And sometimes to the stricken hold the cup,
Or stretch a trembling hand to lift them up.

Not mine a bold ambassador to be,
To other lands a message bear from Thee;
Not mine to speak in searching words of flame,
Of thy great love, and sacrifice, and shame.
But mine it is to bear as in thy sight,
Thy crown of suffering which is sweet and light.
I know Thou lovest one, and 'neath thy hand
I bow—although I do not understand.

Not mine to sing for Thee to waiting throng—
With thrilling tones to sway them with the song,
To weave thy name in golden harmonies,
To ring thy praise through all the echoing skies,
But mine it is, in earth's gigantic choir,
In one low note of prayer to string my lyre;
Unnoted—drowned in music grand and sweet,
It trembles upward to my Master's feet.

So when I see the warriors in the field,
And reapers gather in the harvest yield,
He lays his hand on my hot, restless heart,
And answers, "No, in these thou hast no part,"
And so, 'tis only mine, in pain or loss,
To keep my place close to the Master's cross,
Where I can gaze into his lovely face,
And gather there some portion of his grace.

The Bible Flower Mission.—The Secretary, Mrs. Turton, in a circular letter from 110, Cannon-street, E.C., says:—"We earnestly ask all those who are able, to help as much as possible by sending flowers, writing texts, and visiting the sick, so that the work may not be hindered. June has not been a good month for flowers, and we have been often disappointed at the small supplies sent up. We trust, however, that July may be better. One of our hospital visitors relates how she met a woman last month who had been in the hospital on a former occasion, utterly indifferent to her spiritual state. The texts given her from time to time were the means of awakening her, but it was not until after she left the hospital that she was fully decided to accept God's gift of eternal life through Jesus Christ, and now she is leaving the hospital again, incurable, but with no fear for the future, having a bright hope of immortality."

Letters to the Editor.

"THE SECRET OF ENGLAND'S GREATNESS."

Dear Sir,—The interesting correspondence given in your issue of the 15th inst. should finally dispose of the question in dispute. That correspondents of the secular press should describe the familiar story as "a myth" is not to be wondered at, but that the religious press should join with them is not so easily understood. If any further evidence were needed it might be found in the following story:—

Some years ago I reprinted the Young Protestant's hymn, "We won't give up the Bible," written by the late Dr. Whittemore. I headed the slip with the motto, "This is the secret of England's greatness." I ascribed these words to the Queen, and forwarded several copies of the hymn to Her Majesty. (At that time I had never heard the authority doubted.)

In reply, I received the following letter from the late Sir Thomas M. Biddulph:—"Lieut.-General Sir Thomas M. Biddulph has received the Queen's commands to thank Mr. Lapworth for sending the copies of the hymn which accompanied his letter of the 20th inst. "Buckingham Palace, March 25, 1874."

I think, therefore, that we may fairly conclude that the Queen herself accepts "the laconic and familiar sentence as a fair and natural summary" of the letter which she directed the Earl of Chichester to write to the Prince Sagbua.—Yours faithfully,

Joshua Lapworth.

Sir,—I have a distinct recollection of the visit of the African chiefs to this country, in the reign of William the Fourth. They had an audience of the king, and, subsequently, of the good Queen Adelaide, when she presented them with a Bible, with the words "Here is the secret of England's greatness."

The incident was widely known at the time, and I can recall the appearance of a wood-cut representing the Queen presenting the Bible to the chiefs, which headed an account, in booklet form, of the interview. It would be easy to anyone who had access to a file of old newspapers to find out in which year of that short reign the African chiefs came over, and probably the incident would appear in the same paper.—Yours truly,

E. Ryland Trestrail.

GOSPEL ADVERTISEMENTS.

Dear Sir,—Doubtless many of your readers have been interested in the short Gospel paragraphs which have been appearing for some time on the front page of several of the London morning newspapers.

The chief object in inserting these paragraphs is to arrest the eyes (and hearts) of any who in no other way would read or listen to the Gospel. Much prayer is being made that many may, by this means, be led to Christ, and we feel sure that this effort will bear fruit to the glory of God.

It is also hoped that many Christians may be emboldened to draw the attention of companions to these paragraphs (good opportunities must often occur during the railway journey), and thus become helpers together in the Gospel. There are many hearts tired of sin which would be blessed by being brought face to face with these Gospel messages.

If any of your readers know of definite cases of conversion to God or blessing to Christians through these Gospel advertisements, perhaps they would kindly send particulars to the address below. I shall be glad to send, on application, all the paragraphs collected in a tract.

Asking a continuance in prayer for the Divine blessing on these world-wide messengers of mercy.—Yours faithfully,

J. S. Dodington.

"DOLLS FOR INDIAN CHILDREN."

Dear Sir,—I was much grieved on reading in the last Christian a statement made by "A Correspondent in India" that "dolls sent to Hindu children are utilised in idolatrous worship." I have been for the last twenty-five years in the habit of regularly sending a large box to an orphanage in India, which always contained dolls and other toys, as well as clothing, etc. Each year when acknowledging the box, the missionaries requested me to send more and more dolls, the special plea being that children who had been accustomed to play with dolls acquired a contempt for images, and would not worship them. I have read letters from missionaries all over India, and all ask for dolls. Of course if dolls are given to adults who are not under Christian influence, as presents, the case might be different.

R. S.

[Our correspondent complained that dolls somehow find their way to heathen altars, and replenish the stock of idols.—Ed.]

The Y.M.C.A.

MR. AND MRS. C. H. WOODFIN, of Trinity Villa, entertained a large party of members and friends of the Trowbridge Association, to a garden party and jubilee festival in their grounds.

Through the kindness of Colonel Luce, the Malmesbury Y.M.C.A. has received the use of the old Cottage Hospital at a nominal rent. It is hoped that the Association will now be enabled to increase its efficiency in every department of its work. The new premises will be entered in September.

In Dumfries there are several Church Fellowship Associations, as well as a Y.M.C.A., and there is some hope that these may be brought together in an United Y.M.C.A. Summing up his experience, Mr. Wright (travelling secretary) reports that "the real hindrance to the formation of a Y.M.C.A. in not a few places is the lack of earnest young men."

The Aberdeen Association reports much interest being taken in their summer reading class. The handbook in use this year is Professor Laidlaw's "Foundation Truths." The class is conversational, and two hours are very profitably spent at it by the members weekly. This Association's cycling club has had "a most favourable and successful season." "Last year," we learn, "three fellows were led to the Association through it, and also to Christ."

The City of Dublin Association opened their new building on Tuesday last. The building was formerly the head-quarters of the "Irish National Land League," and is in a fine situation on the great thoroughfare of Sackville-street. Mr. James Stokes, of New York (in the absence of the founder, Sir George Williams, who was not able to be present), declared the building open, and able speeches were delivered by Colonel Edward Saunderson, M.P., Mr. J. R. Wigham, president, Mr. W. A. Black, Belfast, Rev. Wesley Guard, M.A., Rev. Dr. Wm. J. Clarke, Pastor Hugh D. Brown, M.A., Rev. Samuel Prenter, M.A. The building cost £7000, of which £3000 has been promised or paid, It is hoped that before long the balance of debt will be wiped off. The general secretary, Mr. Wm. A. Boyd, is to be congratulated on his efforts on behalf of the noble work he has accomplished.

At the Cannon-street Hotel, last week a meeting was held under the presidency of Mr. R. L. Barclay, M.A., to consider the feasibility of organising during the forthcoming autumn and winter throughout the whole or a part of the metropolis, a series of great mass meetings for men, on the subjects of gambling, intemperance, and vice, similar to those so successfully arranged in East London in the early weeks of the present year. The proposal was warmly approved by Sir George Williams, Lord Kinnaird, Mr. T. F. Victor Buxton, Ald. Belsey, and others, as well as by many influential friends who were unable to attend; and resolutions were passed referring to a representative committee, the organising of a series of such demonstrations, for either the whole or part of London as may be found expedient; and appointing Mr. R. L. Barclay, chairman and treasurer, and Mr. Porter (gen. sec. Hackney Y.M.C.A.), honorary secretary pro tem. Several promises were received of substantial financial support for the undertaking.

The Y.W.C.A.

ON Wednesday last week, at Liverpool, about 150 members of Bromboro' and Sandon Houses enjoyed a Jubilee fête at Annesley, by the kind invitation of Mrs. W. Crosfield and the committee. The ramble through the lovely grounds of Otterspool, the tea under the shade of a tree, and the various amusements, the perfect weather, and the extreme kindness of Mrs. Crosfield and her friends, all united to make the fête an occasion long to be remembered.

Irish Notes.

THE committee of the Presbyterian Sabbath School Society of Ireland has forwarded a special prize to a youth who had not been absent on a single occasion from Clougherney Sunday-school for the past nine years.

A plot of ground worth £150 has been handed over anonymously to Rev. Henry Montgomery and two other gentlemen in Belfast, for the purpose of erecting a model lodging house for tramps and men out of work upon it. It is expected the building will cost about £500, and that it will accommodate each night seventy men.

Request for Prayer.—For continued blessing on tent meetings being held every night at High-street, Acton, and Church-road, Willesden (Evangelistic Mission). Praise.—That the Lord has graciously provided the worker so greatly needed for Singapore by the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East.

Obituary.

MRS. L. G. TURNER, MADRAS.

THE death is announced at Madras of Mrs. Lydia Gordon Turner, aged thirty-eight years. She was the youngest daughter of Mr. Ebenezer Gordon, for many years a deacon in the London Mission Church, Davidson-street, Madras. Her husband was also a deacon in the same church, and herself a devoted member, doing much to keep Gospel light burning in the midst of heathen darkness.

REV. JOSEPH ROWLANDS.

A large section of Welshmen in London will hear with regret of the death of the Rev. Joseph Rowlands, formerly of Chelsea, which has taken place at Llandudno, at the age of sixty-one. Mr. Rowlands entered the Congregational ministry in 1862, his first charge being at Beaumaris, where he continued for eighteen years. In 1880 he accepted a call to the Radnor-street Welsh Church, Chelsea, and remained for eleven years, when he returned to Talysarn, Carnarvonshire, the scene of his father's ministry.

MRS. ELIZABETH HEWSON.

The beloved wife of Arthur M. Hewson, many years a worker in the Y.M.C.A. at Stafford Rooms, Tichborne-street, W., and King's Cross, suddenly fell asleep in Jesus on the 13th inst. She "remained by the stuff," but encouraged her husband in the work among young men. Often when he has been unwell and wished he had not to take the Bible-class at King's Cross, she said: "Go, dear, you will come home well, and with your strength renewed like the eagle's." During the lesson hour she supported him in prayer, and her expectations of refreshment for the worker were thus realised. A quarter of an hour before she entered into the presence of the King, she took part in reading Revelation vii. at family worship.

SIR GEORGE BROOKE-PECHELL.

By the death of Sir George Samuel Brooke-Pechell, Bart., of Paglesham, Essex, and Alton House, Hants, the Presbyterian Church has lost a faithful member and office-bearer. Sir George was ordained elder of Broad-street Church, Birmingham, in 1854, and on removing with his family to Southampton was admitted elder of St. Andrew's there during the ministry of Dr. Wright in 1861. A year or two later he bought Alton House in the town of the same name where he resided until his recent decease. In 1864 a Gospel Hall was opened at Alton, wherein evangelistic services were kept up for several years. Sir George and Lady Pechell attended these services, and when, in 1880, the building and congregation were attached to the Presbyterian cause, Sir George was among the first elders. He was well known in Presbytery and Synod, and did much valuable work in connection with the United Kingdom Alliance. For the last five years his health has failed, and he has been too great a sufferer of late to take active part in God's work, though his interest therein continued to the end of a useful life.

Marseilles Sailors' Home.

ON Monday, July 12, we opened an extension of our premises, including a reading-room and a suite of bedrooms for officers, so that now we are able to provide for all grades of seamen. We had a goodly company to the opening, including the British and Swedish Consuls, the British chaplain, and most of the French Protestant pastors, including Pastors Monod, Mouline and Shackleton.

This extension was very much needed, as we have felt very cramped for room during the last six months. Over 3000 poor Armenian refugees have passed through here. Then we have had three shipwrecked crews at the Home, also a number of volunteers returning destitute from the Greek war, who were helped with food and money. We have been able to distribute over 5000 meals, mostly to destitute seamen, and during the last six months over 6000 men used our Institute for reading, writing, and recreation. During the same period 250 men have had board and lodging in the Home. Each morning and evening we have gathered a little company in our large general reading-room, and held a service of prayer and Bible-reading. Then on Sunday nights we have Gospel meetings, and on Friday nights a temperance or lantern lecture.

The ships have been visited daily, and the sick in hospital three times a week. Many are the letters that we have received from parents and friends, thanking us for the good some sailor-boy has received while under our care. We need sympathy in our work, for our responsibilities seem ever to be growing. We want more and more to make our dear seamen to feel that while we feed and clothe their bodies we wish to win their souls for God.

(Capt.) A. WALKER, Manager.

Personalia.

Mr. Charles Inglis has changed his address to 24, Greenhill-road, Harlesden, N.W.

Rev Prebendary Webb-Peploe is leaving England on July 27 for six weeks' quiet rest in Switzerland, and no letters but those marked "Urgent" will be forwarded to him during that time.

Colonel W. Ward, hon. treasurer in England of the Sailors' and Soldiers' Institute, Alexandria, Egypt, has recently removed from Rothsay Gardens, Bedford, to reside at 3, Quarry-bank, St. Leonards-on-Sea.

Miss Adelaide Spranger, who is engaged in evangelistic work in the South of France, desires to meet with another lady, having some means, who would undertake part of the work. Address, care of the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN.

Pundita Ramabai, as we have reported from time to time, is doing a good work among girls who have come under peculiar peril through the famine. Her work has, however, been attended with much difficulty, for only recently she was ordered by the Government to remove a hundred of them from Poona within two days!

Rev. T. B. Pandian, the native evangelist and philanthropist of Southern India, has given a series of lectures and addresses in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Eastbourne. Having brought with him a large collection of garments, idols, sacred vessels, etc., Mr. Pandian illustrates his lectures by dressing as the village husbandman, the monk, the devotee, or the high caste gentleman. He has also told the story of his life and work—a story of thrilling interest, which will not soon be forgotten by those who heard it.

Pastor Frank H. White, of Talbot Tabernacle, Notting-hill, has been the recipient of a token of love from his church, in connection with his twenty-first anniversary. The occasion chosen was the ordinary week-night prayer-meeting, at which, the week before last, Sir Richard Thorne, K.C.B., on behalf of the church and congregation, and other friends, asked his acceptance of a handsomely-illuminated and framed address, together with a purse containing about £260. Dr. Robert Anderson and Mr. R. Cope Morgan also spoke, referring particularly to the loving and faithful services which had so long been rendered by the Pastor. The Pastor made a characteristically gracious reply, after which earnest prayers were offered that God would long spare him to continue his ministry amongst a loving and devoted people.

Pure Literature Society.

THIS society makes grants at half price to school and other libraries. It has carried on this good work for over forty years. The report for 1897 opens with a hearty introduction from the pen of Colonel Douglas Jones, R.A., who says:—

"How often does not the suggestive novel prove to be the first eye-opener to evil among the young of all classes; and is it not a well-known fact that a very large proportion of youthful criminals who find their way to the police-courts, prisons, and reformatories trace their decline to their minds having been contaminated by evil books or periodicals which they have devoured so eagerly?

"Shall we sit still and do nothing to stem the torrent of undesirable literature which is flooding the land, our homes, schools, libraries, working men's clubs, etc., entering into the souls of multitudes at the 'eye-gate,' there to germinate and finally destroy both soul and body, when we have at our doors this valuable Society which is only limited in its field of work by the amount of support it receives?"

The offices of the Society are at 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C., Mr. Richard Turner, secretary.

Southern Morocco.—In Mr. Budgett Meakin's recent article on Southern Morocco, the American mission at work in Morocco should have been specified as the Gospel Union of Kansas, which in some parts has joint stations with the Alliance Mission. The province mentioned in the article as Sousse should have been Soos.

South London Police-court Mission.—During the last fourteen months we have housed, fed, and clothed no less than 295 boys in this Shelter Home, the object of which is to assist our police-court missionaries in preventive and rescue work among the young. We admit those whom few if any other Homes or charitable institutions will help, e.g., friendless young and first offenders, wanderers, orphans, and many more to be pitied than orphans—lads with vicious parents. We are in great need of funds to carry on this work, but our most pressing want at the moment is new or left-off clothing. Nearly all who come to us are in so filthy and deplorable a condition that their clothes are fit only to be burned. EVAN GRIFFITHS, Secretary.

Paul's Ministry in Corinth.—Acts xviii. 1-11.

Golden Text.—"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."—1 Cor. iii. 11.

WE do not like the places where we have failed. A place may be so associated with our trouble that its very name makes us shudder. So Paul hurried away from Athens, and only once, in all his writings, does he hint at his experiences there. He sails to Corinth, forty miles away. It was the London and Paris of the first century, filled with money-making, pleasure-seeking people, the very place where a Paul was most needed. Note—

I. He is in Good Company.—Paul entered Corinth alone, but his need made him seek at once those of his own craft, and so he met a Jew, Aquila, and his wife Priscilla. They had been expelled from Rome by the edict of Claudius. He was not able to distinguish between Christian and non-Christian Jews, and certain disturbances being attributed to the Christians, he expelled all Jews. Paul and these people were mutually helpful. They became Christians, and were afterwards notable in the Church (Acts xviii. 26; Rom. xvi. 3; 1 Cor. xvi. 19). By these Paul was comforted and aided in his work, and through them his interest in Rome was first aroused. (Acts xix. 21.) It is needful to keep good company. We rise or fall with our friends. They influence us unconsciously. Make a Friend of Jesus. We shall be out of place in heaven unless we have learned to love the company of the righteous.

II. The Dignity of Work.—The great Apostle to the Gentiles was not too proud to work with his own hands. "He who does not teach his son a trade, teaches him to steal," was a wise saying of the Rabbis. Every Jewish boy of whatever rank was taught a trade. Paul a maker of tent coverings. No disgrace to do manual labour. Indolence is not the mark of a gentleman. Many a beggar is as lazy as though he had twenty thousand a year, and many a nobleman as busy as though he hadn't a penny. Labour is "the girdle of stalwart manliness; it preserves the body from effeminate languor and the soul from polluting thoughts." He who came to save the world was a common carpenter of Nazareth, and so dignified all toil.

III. Teaching in Corinth.—He preached in the synagogue every Sabbath without much result, but when Silas and Timothy came, bringing inspiration by their presence and monetary aid from Philippi, Paul took this as a sign from God (5) that he was to throw himself more ardently into preaching. He taught more boldly that Jesus is Christ. The effect was that the Jews violently opposed him, and ridiculed the idea of Jesus being the Messiah. It was useless thus to "cast pearls before swine," so he determined to leave the Jews to their own prejudices, and, so far as Corinth was concerned, preach to the Gentiles. May every young Christian be righteously indignant when his Master's name is ridiculed or blasphemed. Paul's teaching now consisted in the simple Gospel truth that Jesus lived and died to bring men back to the love and righteousness of God. He could no longer appeal to the Scripture as he had done before the Jews. But by illustration from his Corinthian surroundings, he tried to lead the Gentiles to Jesus as Saviour and King.

IV. Results of the Teaching.—Work in the synagogue was not altogether in vain, for Justus (a Roman) and Crispus (chief ruler of the synagogue) believed (8). But Paul saw that now the church must be separate from the synagogue, and so resorted to the house of Justus for preaching (7). To this house doubtless many Corinthians came, who would not have entered the synagogue, and believed and were baptized (8).

To have all this going on so near to them very likely irritated the Jews, and perhaps Paul feared another persecution, which would ruin all the work he was doing. This may account for the encouraging vision which God gave him (ix. 10). We need to be assured sometimes that God is with us, and that we are still doing the work He wishes. "I have much people in this city," was quite enough to make Paul go on with redoubled energy to win that "much people" for God. The man who does the Lord's work need have no fear. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. When we are fainting in our service may the inspiring vision be given which says—

> Workman of God, oh, lose not heart,
> But learn what God is like;
> And in the darkest battlefield
> Thou shalt know where to strike.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Many dioceses have entirely ignored the Queen Victoria Clergy Sustentation Fund.

Canon Sutton has been elected president of the Birmingham Clerical Society for this year.

In connection with the Colonial and Continental Church Society, the Dean of Norwich will dedicate a new church at the Rhone Glacier on July 27.

It is reported that the Archbishop of Dublin has received an additional endowment of £50,000 from a friend of the Church. This will make Dublin the richest see in the Irish Church.

Rev. L. G. Pollard, who has been curate of Gorleston, Yarmouth, since 1894, has been appointed by the Dean and Chapter of Norwich as vicar of St. Peter's, Permountergate, Norwich.

The conference on Sunday Rest, held in Brussels the second week of this month, has been a complete success. The Belgian Government, through its Labour Minister, showed an active and friendly interest in the congress.

Rev. A. Grey Edwards, M.A., Incumbent of the Welsh Church, Chester, has been appointed Association Secretary for the Church Missionary Society for South Wales. Mr. Edwards is an able speaker and preacher in English and Welsh.

The Archbishop of Dublin, at a luncheon held at the Church House, said that the work of the Church Army was absolutely necessary in large towns, in order to raise the unfortunate from the degradation into which they had fallen.

For the concluding service of the Lambeth Conference at St. Paul's Cathedral, on August 2, at 10 a.m., two tickets for reserved seats will be forwarded to each member of the conference for his friends. No other tickets for reserved seats will be issued.

The Bishop of St. Andrews, who presided at a meeting in the Church House, on behalf of the English and American dioceses in Japan, spoke of the great need for more Mission-workers. There is a population of 17,000,000 in the missionary jurisdiction of Tokio.

The Liverpool Post says that the Bishop of Chester has withdrawn his patronage from the Free and Open Church Association for the dioceses of Liverpool and Chester, believing that by this course the Association will be freer to deal with Church matters in its own way.

The new report of the Church Missionary Society issued last week is very encouraging. The number of adult baptisms being very noticeable, and the list of missionaries shows a decided advance. The aggregate total of labourers—European, Eurasian, and native—now in the field is 6693.

It has been resolved to hold the forthcoming conference at Worcester, on October 12 and 13. The following subjects have been selected for discussion: (1) Betting and Gambling; (2) Church Reform; and (3) The Government proposals in regard to secondary education. The first subject will be introduced by the Dean of Worcester.

The efforts of the Church Missionary Society to promote self-government among native congregations in the Punjab have not been successful, and at a recent conference on the subject, where most of the speakers were natives, it was proposed that foreigners and natives in their various congregations should work together under the wing of the mother Church.

Congregational.

An eligible site for the permanent buildings at Tetherdown, Muswell Hill, has at length been secured.

Rev. D. Evans, who recently received a call to Swan Hill, Shrewsbury, has decided to remain at Audley Range Church, Blackburn.

The Cymanfa of Merionethshire Association has been held at Towyn. The meetings throughout were of the most successful character.

Centenary services have been held at Paul's meeting, Taunton. The meeting dates from 1662, and the first meeting house from 1672.

About September Rev. J. A. Mitchell will leave St. Helen's to take up his duties as Principal of the Theological Institute at Nottingham.

The new church in Jubilee-road, Barmouth, has been opened. The building will seat 400, and has provision for a gallery to hold 120. The cost has been £3000.

A new church, which is to take the place of one built over 100 years ago, is being erected at Queenborough. The old building will be utilised for Sunday-schools.

The Congregational Union has appointed a special committee to confer with the American Congregationalists at the International Council, to be held in Boston in 1899.

Rev. D. D. Green, late of Bangor College, has arrived at Corwen from Madagascar, being compelled to return on account of a serious illness and the continued unsettled state of the country.

Rev. A. D. Philps and Mrs. Philps have declined the invitation of the Paris Mission to visit the States, as they are unable to give such time to the work as is thought desirable by the American auxiliary.

Dr. Llewellyn Bevan, who has been on a visit to this country since May, has sailed for New York. Dr. Bevan intends paying a visit to Canada and to several cities in the United States before returning to Melbourne.

Mr. A. E. Hutton, M.P., the ex-chairman of the Young People's Union, has consented to act as examiner for the essays on "The Churches of Cromwell," in connection with the next examination for the young, to be held in March, 1898.

Baptist.

At Ipsley Green, Redditch, memorial-stones of a new church have been laid.

The 228th anniversary of the church at Tilehouse Chapel, Hitchin, has lately been held.

Rev. J. R. Cooper, of Portland, South Australia, has just returned to this country, where he proposes taking up a pastorate.

The eighty-third anniversary services in connection with the school of Bildeston Church (which is the oldest Baptist cause in the county) has recently been held.

Junction-street Church, Derby, which has been a branch of St. Mary's-gate Church for some forty years past, has been formed into a separate church. The newly-formed church has 250 members.

The Baptist congregation which has for some time worshipped in Regent Hall, Douglas, Isle of Man, under the ministry of Rev. R. A. Burrows, has just opened a new church. The building is of two storeys, the upper one being used as the church. It is capable of seating 340 people.

The property of the Baptist Missionary Society in India has suffered more from the earthquake than was at first thought. The chapels at Dacca and Monghyr have been destroyed; the famous college at Serampore has seriously suffered. No estimate can yet be formed of the monetary loss, but it is feared it will reach some thousands of pounds.

Calls.—Rev. W. Brampton Taylor, of the Broadway Chapel, Chesham, to Hamlet-road Tabernacle, Southend; Rev. J. Swainson Langley, of Newcastle, Staffordshire, to Burnley-road, Padiham.

Resignations.—Rev. W. F. C. Rose, of Oxford-road Church, Reading; Pastor J. Bryan Marshall, of Tenbury, Worcestershire.

Methodist.

Rev. F. B. Turner has been appointed financial secretary to the North China Methodist New Connexion Mission.

London District of Bible Christians has requested Conference to establish a "sisterhood" for social and evangelistic work.

The ninth report of the Manchester and Salford Mission is a remarkable one, showing an increase of 217 members and 740 on trial.

Rev. Dr. Watson, of the Primitive Methodist College, Manchester, has been appointed the Hartley lecturer at the Leeds Conference next year.

It is proposed shortly to begin the erection of a new chapel and schoolroom at Castleton. The trustees have secured a site on the Chapel-en-le-Frith-road.

Mr. G. Butcher, who is working at Willesden, in the Kilburn (P.M.) Circuit, has applied to the general committee to be recognised as a permanent lay evangelist.

Rev. Thomas Allen, superintendent of Highgate circuit, London, will probably be elected at the ensuing conference governor of the Theological College, Birmingham.

Rev. William G. Beardmore has been appointed to Wesley's Chapel, City-road, the retiring superintendent, Rev. W. J. Brown, taking his place at Hammersmith.

The Bible Christian denomination reports a net increase of 790 full members at home and 793 abroad. There is also an increase of 177 on trial, and of 301 juveniles.

Rev. W. Bowell, acting under medical advice, has relinquished the pastorate of (U.M.) Manor Chapel, London Fourth, and has accepted an invitation to Newquay, Cornwall.

The Synod of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Germany has recently met for the last time. The Church will henceforth be merged with the Methodist Episcopal Church of America in its German branch.

The Wesleyan Missionary Society has been asked to supply fifteen additional men for various district Synods in India, Burma, and elsewhere. Every application has the full sympathy of the committee, and would be responded to at once but for the lack of means to support the extra men.

The United Methodist Free Church representatives have done well in electing Rev. Dr. Swallow to be their president. By thus following the lead of the Congregationalists in the appointment of a missionary to the chief office among them, they are doing much to assure the workers in foreign fields that they are not cut off from home friends. It places missionary work, too, where it ought to be—in the forefront of Church enterprise. Dr. Swallow's evangelistic and medical work in China, extending over half-a-century, will enable him to speak with authority on mission effort in this vast continent of the East.

Presbyterian.

Three meetings will be held in London on November 25, to celebrate the 250th anniversary of the Shorter Catechism.

Rev. Dr. Lorimer, of Boston, U.S.A., the well-known Baptist, is occupying the Marylebone pulpit till the last Sunday in August.

Great difficulty is found in obtaining missionaries for the foreign field. The English Presbyterian Mission in China are requiring two or three new missionaries.

At a meeting of the Birmingham Presbytery a site for a church and hall for the Central Hall congregation, Nottingham, was decided upon, and steps were taken for calling a minister.

The London Presbytery North reports the congregations within the Presbytery as giving very substantial help. The roll contains forty-seven ministers and forty-seven elders, and the state of the Sustentation Fund over the whole church was satisfactory.

Rev. Dr. Mathews, secretary of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance, will visit the Reformed Churches of Russia, which are embraced in four or five Synods, in August. On leaving Russia he will proceed to Persia to attend the Synod of the native Syriac Church, which is to meet in Urumiah.

Fallen Asleep.

At Bristol, Miss Matilda Dickson, for ten years superintendent of the Protestant Orphanage, Nazareth, belonging to the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East.—At Ballynaleck, Poyntzpass, Ireland, Mr. Jas. Hanna, an earnest Christian worker, and for thirty-five years a ruling elder in the Cremore Presbyterian Church.—At Dublin, Wm. Potter, a devoted member of the Methodist Church.—At Bristol, Rev. John Philp, Wesleyan minister, who has held appointments at Demerara, Calais, Southampton, Swansea, Neath, and Bristol.—Rev. Geo. Prowde, thirty years vicar of Faceby-in-Cleveland.—Rev. J. H. Reibey, forty years rector of Denbury.—Mr. Jas. Mills, for thirty years organist of Albion Congregational Church, Ashton-under-Lyne.—Alderman E. W. Beard, of Colchester, a trustee and liberal supporter of Lion-walk Congregational Church.—Rev. Dr. Bryan Halliday, pastor of the Beecher Memorial Church at Brooklyn, and formerly the associate of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher.—Mr. George Lewis, an earnest supporter of Doddridge Congregational Memorial Church, St. James, Northampton.—At Sumba, Congo, Mrs. Pople, widow of Rev. George Pople.—Rev. Jas. Imrie, late of Gillespie Church, Glasgow.

Clothing for Poor Ministers.—The annual meeting of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Poor Ministers' Clothing Society was held recently, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon presiding. The report stated that forty-four parcels of clothing had been sent out, valued at £298 15s. 9d. The object of this society is to assist poor ministers in supplying them with clothing for themselves and their families. Many of the members in country places have only £50 or £60 a year, and a parcel containing new or partly-worn garments is a great boon to them. Parcels or donations addressed to the Society, at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, will be duly acknowledged.

CAMPING OUT.

THERE is a question which every year exercises many youthful minds (and a few older ones) with us—"Shall our camp this year be by the sea or in the country?" for I must confess that we have not yet found an available camping ground by the sea which embraced, with our other varied requirements, a typical rural environment, breezy commons, sheltered lanes, woodland paths, straggling hedgerows with all their interesting phases of animal life and wealth of form and tint in leaf, flower, and fruit.

It is always a big relief to me when a chorus of voices shout their vote for "The country, sir; the country, sir." For all the time we are camping out by the sea I cannot help feeling uneasy lest some inexperienced or foolhardy boy, indulging in a surreptitious bathe (the regulation bathe is amply safeguarded by two or three officers and myself being in the water armed with a clothes-prop or hop-pole, to drive back any daring rascal who would venture beyond the limit thus protected) should get out of his depth or be seized with cramp with a fatal result, in spite of earnest, cautious, and continual supervision.

Somehow cricket, football, fishing, hedgerow explorations, picnics in a forest, haymaking, helping to tend live stock or poultry—these are the pursuits that schoolboy tradition seems to have linked in our boys' hearts with camping out.

Last year I had an intuition that we should find an eligible site for our camp near some common or village-green in that lovely district which lies between Horsham and Petworth, and the moment in my first exploring drive I saw Wisborough Green I felt if only I could secure a private field for the camp proper and be sure of a good supply of water I had discovered an ideal camping ground.

The local arrangements and necessary preparations at headquarters were completed without a hitch till, the very day before we started, a telegram arrived announcing the sudden death of the kind miller who had let us have two of his fields for our camping ground; but his widow kindly wished that the sad occurrence should not interfere with our arrangements, so on Wednesday, August 5, we journeyed down to Billingshurst (L.B. and S. C. R.), and while some of our tiny fellows from our Greenwich branch rode in a big wagon, the rest of us tramped the three miles or so to Wisborough Green.

The village (pop. 1600) stands 100 feet above the sea-level and commands splendid views of the surrounding country. Nearly all the houses fringe the wide Green, which was large enough to afford ample space for our boys to play several games of cricket simultaneously (and in the evening some scrambling football) without encroaching on that part upon which the local cricket club had bestowed some care.

Through a gate and down a private road about thirty yards lay the field where, just inside, were pitched our Gospel Tent—behind that, five rows of bell tents which supplied sleeping accommodation—and at the end of the field the large tents used for meals, kitchenwork, and store-room purposes. Another field sloped down to the river, where the tents for washing, etc., were erected.

We were favoured with very fine weather. Through God's mercy we were preserved from any sickness or accident worth recording. The conduct of the boys was excellent, and the tone amongst them, throughout, was very encouraging to us all.

In many instances camping out gives us quite a new insight into their characters, and reveals traits that we had failed to discern in the daily routine of life at home. I do not say the traits are always pleasant surprises, but I know the discovery of them, good or bad, is most useful to us in giving us that knowledge of different dispositions so valuable in training the units by the study of whose individualities we can alone secure a harmonious family.

The people of the neighbourhood not only received us very amiably at first, but as they got to know the boys and see how groundless were the fears that some of them not unnaturally entertained as to the safety of their fruit and the peace of their live stock, they simply heaped kindnesses upon us.

The boys were asked out to tea, etc., in little (and big) batches, supplied with fruit, taken for drives, etc. The Lawn Tennis Club, with the camaraderie so happily characteristic of all English outdoor recreation, gave them the unrestricted use of their courts.

The climax, however, was reached when towards the close of our stay the boys were entertained by the inhabitants of the village to tea on the Green with sports and quite valuable, useful prizes, which were publicly presented with many very complimentary remarks upon their conduct—and a most hearty invitation to "come again next year" was carried amidst great cheering. "The Camp" entertained the village children on a subsequent afternoon and carried out a little programme of amusements with some simple gifts to successful competitors.

Both these functions passed off with great éclat, and were voted two of the happiest reunions in the annals of Wisborough Green.

Every evening the inhabitants of the village gathered in our Gospel Tent and the usual evening prayers for the boys assumed the form of an evangelistic service. On Sundays people flocked from the villages all round and the canvas walls had to be taken down so that the assembled hundreds might see and hear as one body. The interest manifested was most encouraging, and not only did several at the time tell us of the definite blessing they received at these meetings and assure us that they were the happiest hours they had spent in Wisborough Green, but others have since written from different places sending gifts towards the work in the Homes as thankofferings for spiritual mercies vouchsafed to them at these gatherings.

On Wednesday, 26th August, after a very happy three weeks under canvas, we struck our camp, and packed all our paraphernalia away in some dry storage, and with much affectionate leave-taking and hearty cheering our little army buckled on their knapsacks with as much apparent cheerfulness as they could muster for the occasion and tramped off to Billingshurst Station, and eventually found a hearty welcome home awaiting them from many kind neighbours in Southwark.

We are now preparing for this year's outing, and two items of outlay are giving us some exercise in faith and prayer.

(I.) After many years' hard wear the "Camping Out" suits of strong gambroon (a cheap kind of khaki drill), which we serve out to the lads so that they may potter about and climb and scramble to their heart's content, need renewal. The 200 suits will cost about £80.

(II.) We want a much larger Gospel Tent. The novelty of "The Camp," the presence of such a number of boys in uniform and the hearty singing of new hymns, attract people from miles round (many of whom it would be very difficult to get to any ordinary service), and I feel we ought to have a tent big enough to protect them in case of rain.

This is a magnificent opening to spread the Gospel message, especially in a county like Sussex, where under the influence of rank and wealth such determined efforts are being made to push the doctrines and practices of the Church of Rome. This tent and the extra seats will cost about £105.

There is no time to be lost if this splendid opportunity is to be used for the furtherance of the Gospel, and if any of my friends will entrust me with this tent I will make myself personally responsible for the utmost possible use being made of it.

Let me say that I regard this Camping Out as a work of mercy to our poor boys, and I believe nothing in the course of the year is a greater benefit to them than this prolonged holiday in healthy country environment under happy spiritual influences.

It gives them a peep (the first many of them have ever had) of English rural loveliness, it gives them a stock of vitality that will not be confined within the dwarfed frames of bygone days of want, but insists upon expansion of the body in chest and limb, it brings them into social contact with kindly industrious country people, and gives them an insight into cottage family life, it instils into them a wholesome love of outdoor recreation under the blue sky, it is a cherished memory when far away across the sea of "the Old Home on the Corner," and all the loving friends who helped to care for them when sheltered there, it links in all their hearts some of the brightest hours of their lives with the Gospel-story in speech and song in the quiet of a village evening after a day of ecstasy at cricket on the Green, tossing the fragrant hay, gathering blackberries in some shady lane or waterlilies in some still pool. What happy, healthful influences! What sweet, holy memories!

It is a unique opportunity of spreading the Gospel under circumstances which not only attract great numbers, but predispose them most favourably to listen with interest and earnestness to the Word of Life.

* * * *

The time for making necessary preparations is very short, as I have felt it was better not to mention our poor boys' holiday this year till the Jubilee celebrations were all over.

I believe I am the inventor of Camping Out, now so much in vogue as the means of a healthy, inexpensive holiday for boys of all classes; and I hope, amidst all the other appeals for seaside camps, etc., some will remember the claim that "Nobody's Boys" have on Christian sympathy, and even send a little extra help this year so that our waifs and strays may have just a little share in the record year rejoicings.

Will you kindly help us to make our Camping Out for 1897 a comfortable, happy one for our waifs and strays, and under God a season of much blessing to those into whose midst He may lead us?

J. W. C. Fegan.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Punch sometimes treats its readers to a series of "Infelicitous quotations," and even Scripture is sometimes victimised into wrong use. As for example the following sentence from a letter just received from a reader abroad :—

I am glad to hear you are arrived at home from your "going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it"!

It is well, when making any quotation, to ascertain the relevancy of the context before making use of it.

There will be universal rejoicings at the authentic news that the Powers have at last convinced the Sultan of the necessity of surrendering to their award as regards the frontier-line of Thessaly. One great stumbling-block to peace has been removed; but when all is said and done, we are only where we were before the outbreak of the war. The condition of Crete is probably as bad, and her future almost as unsettled as ever; while Armenia is being in all likelihood slowly stifled. In addition to this we are told on good authority that from Western Thessaly news comes of Turkish lawlessness more unbridled than ever, perhaps owing to the prospect of the approaching evacuation. Houses, churches, and monasteries are being sacked throughout the western districts, and plunder is being transported incessantly across the Macedonian frontier to Elassona, Diskata, and Grevena. Many women and girls are being carried off to adorn Turkish harems or are otherwise missing. One girl, the daughter of a citizen of Trikkala, succeeded in effecting a timely escape disguised in men's clothes.

Mohammed used to boast that where once his war-horse trod no grass ever grew. The present Sultan is an apt pupil of the Prophet.

The election of Rev. W. L. Watkinson to the post of President of the Wesleyan Conference will give satisfaction far beyond the boundaries of his own denomination. He is known as a powerful preacher of Evangelical truth, who has the gift of illuminating his teaching with striking illustrations gathered from the world of science. His views on sin much resemble those of Dr. Whyte, of Edinburgh, for their deep and searching nature. That he should ever have found his way into the ministry is a wonderful thing, when his early difficulties are considered. But he has stood in its ranks for thirty years, although "the only spell of higher education" he ever enjoyed was six weeks spent at Richmond College. We cordially wish him and the denomination he serves a year of great blessing.

The sudden death of Mr. Mundella removes from public life one of its most striking personalities. He was a self-made man, and rose into high political office by sheer force of character and singleness of purpose. His services in the cause of popular education are second only to those of Mr. Forster, and will never be forgotten. A consistent and convinced Churchman, he was always an enthusiastic upholder of religious liberty, and he stood out strenuously against every attempt to make elementary schools an arena for theological controversy. His career was the product of a stirring time in the social development of this country, and he lived to see many a principle which he championed as a forlorn hope written indelibly on the Statute-book of England. Before entering Parliament he had done much to obviate strikes and lock-outs; he was, indeed, one of the earliest workers in the good cause of industrial arbitration.

As one acknowledged leader after another is thus removed from public life, one looks anxiously around at the ranks of the younger men, and asks, Who are to step into their place? The last generation was remarkable for the number of statesmen who combined a high civic ideal with a strong religious motive. The present generation has plenty of men who have inherited the civic ideal. Can we with equal confidence affirm that they manifest the religious enthusiasm which can alone give that ideal practical force? One thing is clear from the history of the past—the expansion of English liberties and power has been mainly the work of religious statesmen, and it is only such men who can carry this development on to its fulfilment.

Mr. Rudyard Kipling has written a great many things we wish had never seen the light, but his poem in The Times—"Recessional"—is something to be thankful for. The solemn and searching refrain running through it all is a powerful sermon in itself. "Lest we forget—lest we forget!" His idea is that the Jubilee, with all its pomp and splendour, has receded—God remains; his truth remains; may He be with us, lest we forget!

The tumult and the shouting dies—
The captains and the kings depart—
Still stands thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

If, drunk with sight of power, we loose
Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe—
Such boasting as the Gentiles use,
Or lesser breeds without the Law—
Lord God of hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

The idea and inspiration have evidently been taken from Deuteronomy vi. 12. We trust that Mr. Kipling will give us more of such poetry suggested by the Inexhaustible Book.

Turning to another subject, we can well believe Mr. Kipling when he says that he never yet came across a man who holds the Victoria Cross for valour who had not the strictest notions about washing and shaving, and keeping himself quiet and decent on his way through the civilised world.

It is the man who lives the well-regulated daily life who is fit to meet an emergency when it arises.

Little bits of pure inspiration very seldom come to, or are acted upon, by slovens, self-indulgent, or undisciplined people.

Similarly, the Christian who lives ordinarily at a low level of grace, whose Christian life is depressed and feeble, is unable to seize on great opportunities of usefulness when they occur. It has been said that "bright thoughts do not occur to ignorant people," neither can they, for there is nothing within to suggest them. The daily, ordinary level determines the height to which we can rise on rare occasions.

The introduction of Boys' Brigades into Sunday-schools and other religious institutions has naturally given rise to considerable difference of view. One party has asserted that such training as is given in the brigades would lead to a military life, and the other party has pooh-poohed the fear as a bogey. A good deal of light is thrown upon the ultimate result of the movement by the proposal of Lord Meath to form a National Boys' Brigade, and by the enthusiastic and persistent support which the proposal is receiving from the editor of The Review of Reviews, who remarks :—

Such rudimentary military training as is given to the Boys' Brigade is an education by no means without its uses, and quite as much deserving to be recognised as a subject for Government grants as many of the other studies that entitle the Evening Continuation Schools to appeal to the Education Department for a grant.

Mr. Stead hopes to make an announcement next month about a meeting of persons interested in forming a National Boys' Brigade.

Here, then, we have not a comparatively small number of boys voluntarily choosing a military life consequent upon the training they receive, but the great body of our eligible boys being straightway made a portion of the Army—wholesale enlistment, with Government grants, the army drill sergeant, and the provision of weapons of war. How long will the truly religious element survive under the system? We hope there will be a forcible protest from the teachers against such a perversion of the Brigade from its original purpose. If their protest is unheeded, there should be a wholesale withdrawal.

We congratulate the National Lifeboat Institution upon its vindication by the Select Committee appointed by the House of Commons to inquire into its administration and the adequacy of its organisation. The Committee considers that the thanks of the whole community are due to the committee of the Institution for the energy and good management (often in very difficult circumstances) with which they have for so many years successfully carried out the national work of life-saving, and this without reward or payment of any sort.

It is quite right that "the fierce light" of publicity should beat on all public institutions, and that whatever receives public aid should be beyond suspicion. Should doubt and suspicion arise, then the sooner they are allayed the better. Such a deliverance ought to bring a fresh inflow of help. At the same time, criticism ought to be careful and fair, and founded only on trustworthy information.

While attacks on missionaries and their work are common enough, there are never wanting remarkable and disinterested testimonies to their value. The attacks may teach care and wisdom, the testimonies may serve to encourage workers abroad and impart satisfaction to supporters at home. In the Dublin Review, Mr. E. H. Parker, who has served as a consul in China, Korea, Burma, etc., approves the method of medical missions as mitigating the contempt expressed for Europeans. Were he asked, "What shall we missionaries do to save the souls of the Chinese?" his reply would be, "Fill your pockets with quinine, stomach-pumps, and eye-ointments." One wonders whether this method would have suggested itself to him had he not seen it in successful operation.

The Roman Catholic press is paying a good deal of attention to Nonconformists just now. Years ago Dr. Dale promulgated in a manual of Congregational principles that the Lord's Supper is not a mere commemorative rite, but a veritable channel of Divine grace. Dr. Berry, Mr. Crosbie, Mr. Silvester Horne, and Dr. Whiton, of America, are instanced as disciples of the same tenets of sacramental grace, the real presence, and the Eucharistic sacrifice. These brethren have not yet taken the opportunity, so far as we have seen, of explaining themselves in any other sense than that which our contemporary attributes to them; and, indeed, we are bound to say that their language appeared to us to mean just what "the organ of the Catholic body" now says it does mean. It twits them with fearing that Nonconformists will be stamped out, and urges them to go all the length of the new idea, consistently urging that—

> A Christian altar and a Christian temple without a Christian priest are really too great anomalies to pass muster.

We shall look for some reply from the brethren referred to, with a good deal of interest; they do not mean to play into the hands of Rome, we are sure, but it is a large admission to say that "the full significance of the Lord's Supper has got to be recovered and adopted." The Catholic Times may well call this "High Congregationalism." The question is—Is sacerdotalism true? We say, "No; it is one of the greatest impositions of the age, and 'no lie is of the truth.'" Our work, as disciples of the New Testament, is to oppose it in every form. Otherwise, we have introduced to us sacrament, altar, miraculously changed bread and water, and the full-blown priest.

A "Bookmaker," writing in a contemporary, admits the existence of an appalling amount of gambling among working men and women. Most of them risk only a few pence on any given event, but they are as excited over the issue as moneyed men who have risked their thousands. Errand boys club together to make up a required sum, and some factory girls are quite adepts, and "show a surprising knowledge of the turf generally." One young married woman staked her wedding-ring on the Derby, and at the St. Leger of the same year she obtained a bill of sale on her furniture, and ruined herself and her husband on the event.

Another sad development of this passion among working-men is the "gambling-school" found in the North. Large numbers gather together in all weathers in a quiet place, usually on the Lord's Day, and devote themselves for the day to a complicated system of pitch-and-toss. The writer grows eloquent on the honourable way in which such "games" are carried on, and says there "is not the faintest suggestion of cheating permitted." But the whole system is one ferment of unhealthy excitement, and behind the love of sport lurks the pitiful passion for gain which has not been earned. It yields only a barren pleasure at the best; at the worst, and in the end, ruin. "They lose," naïvely says this bookmaker, "oftener than they win." Of course they do.

A pointed correspondence in The Echo last week drew attention to the lack in our day schools of real instruction in the conduct and duties of life. If conduct, as Matthew Arnold was never tired of repeating, is "three-parts of life," while knowledge and art only occupy the fourth place, it is the duty of those who have the daily training of the young to instil into their pupils the principles of industry, honour, obedience, prudence, etc., and these can be reinforced by religious motives without in any way touching on disputed theological points. It is to be feared that the raising of the "religious question" in Board schools has tended to check teachers in fulfilling this duty.

Mr. Kingston, Premier of South Australia, in an interview with a Daily News reporter, expressed his astonishment at the number of women, apparently respectable, who crowd our gin-palaces, and at the manner they openly consume alcoholic beverages. In the colony he represents, few decent women would dream of calling at a public-house or drinking at a public bar. They have a well-respected Sunday Closing Act in South Australia, as in other colonies. Even in the States there is a self-respect among the women which puts our national habits, in the matter of drink, to the blush. A saloon-keeper in New York who attempted to introduce barmaids into his establishment had to alter his plans in a week. It is quite time some stringent reforms were introduced here.

Miss E. P. Hughes made a suggestion at the recent annual meeting of the National Home Reading Union, presided over by the Marchioness of Lorne, which has failed to appear in most of the reports. It was that mothers should enter more into the mental life of their daughters by joining them in their course of reading and discussing the books they read together. There is no doubt that the frequent charge brought by parents against adolescent children that they can make nothing of them, nor gain their confidence, is by no means always the fault of the young people. Many of them are left utterly without guidance and help just when their natures are in a ferment of awakening thought and sentiment, and when they long to throw themselves on a sympathetic heart. Miss Hughes's wise advice is one way for fathers as well as mothers to win the trust of their children, and tide them safely over the "awkward age."

Another gold-fever is setting in—this time towards the bleak and inhospitable regions of Alaska and British Columbia, where an extraordinary find of nuggets and gold-dust has been made. Some fortunes have already been acquired, and men who started last year without a penny have brought home treasure to the value of hundreds of thousands of dollars. There will be a rush to the diggings; companies will be floated, and the usual frenzy for money-making will result. There is no passion so irresistible as this once it lays hold of human nature. Those who seek their fortunes in Alaska will have to undergo hard times in pursuance of their venture. The climate is arctic; the summer lasts only for three months; the winter is one long and desolate night; and all provisions have to be carried 500 miles over an almost untraversed and frozen country. And yet we may be sure there will be no lack of adventurers who will risk limb and life for the uncertain treasure.

Sir Richard Martin's charges against the Chartered Company's administration of Rhodesia will need to be carefully weighed, as soon as the Raid business is finally disposed of. He got his information from the Commissioners of the Company, and his dispatches to the Colonial Office show that the labour system forced upon the natives has been scarcely, if at all, distinguishable from slavery. One of the worst features of the system has been the employment of the police in recruiting labourers where the chiefs have failed to provide the requisite number. This matter cannot rest where it is. Our national honour is just as much implicated in our treatment of subject races as in our attitude towards border States.

The Times correspondent at Simla telegraphed on the 22nd inst.:—"The Bill which gives effect to the new policy of the Government in the matter of contagious diseases affecting the British garrison was passed to-day." It is a Bill which reinstitutes all the objectionable features against which the nation protested in the C.D. Acts at home, and the regulations in India. So the worst has come. There is nothing for it now but an uncompromising battle against this infatuated policy of Army men, soldiers, and politicians. India is the key of the situation—if we can recover that, we can preserve home; if not, we shall have the system at our own doors again.

The rapid concentration of wealth in the hands of a few millionaires in America is becoming a source of great uneasiness to thinking men in the States. More than half of the total wealth of the country is in the hands of some 45,000 people; and if the present rate of concentration is kept up, ere long the whole of the Western States will practically belong to a few men. The political remedy is to be found in a new method of taxation, for the present system, national and local, taxes the poor ten times as heavily as the rich. But that will not touch the real root of the matter, which is the consuming passion for wealth that pervades the whole community. Is the pulpit doing its part in dealing faithfully with this insatiable passion?

In dealing in The Leisure Hour with Mr Charles Booth's great work on the poor of London, Rev. F. W. Newland, whose honourable record of work in Canning Town is so well known, points out two salient features of the book. First, it is pervaded by a buoyant hopefulness of outlook. And, secondly, it proposes no heroic remedy. "The investigation is largely one of environment, the prescription is based very much on the regeneration of the individual." A few years ago many schemes were started, each professing to be a panacea for the evils of poverty—the Palace of Delight, Settlements, General Booth's "Darkest England Scheme," and so on. Most of those agencies are doing excellent social work, but no one would now propose any or all of them as "a solution of the Sphinx's riddle." That must come from the older forms of Christian effort patiently continued, of which these are the skirmishers that clear the ground.

Messrs. Weaver Brothers are holding a fourteen days' mission in Byrom Hall, Liverpool. The meetings have been well attended, and resulted in manifest blessing. F. G. W.

"The Heavens do Rule."—2.

THOUGHTS ON DANIEL I. TO VI.

THE question for us is whether the lesson we esteem as elementary is one which we have ourselves, individually and nationally, really learnt. Can we, at every crisis, hush our feverish hearts by the remembrance that, as one forcibly puts it, "God's ways are behind the scenes, but He moves all the scenes He is behind. We have to learn to let Him work, and not think too much of men's busy movements; they will but accomplish God's. The rest will perish and disappear."

The effect upon Nebuchadnezzar of the reception of the truth thus painfully learnt is briefly put, "At the end of the days I Nebuchadnezzar lifted up mine eyes unto heaven, and mine understanding returned unto me; and I blessed the Most High; and I praised and honoured Him that liveth for ever, whose dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom is from generation to generation... all whose works are truth, and his ways judgment; and those that walk in pride He is able to abase." Simple words, but they tell us that the work of God in one rebellious heart had been fully accomplished, they tell out forcibly the tale of repentance and renewal.

"I lifted up mine eyes." We look too much around us, and about us, and within us, but it is when our glance is directed upwards that we truly live and learn. "In the morning will I direct my prayer unto Thee, and will look up." (Ps. v. 3).

The first requirement our Saviour made of the restored sight of the blind man at Bethsaida is suggestive of the same lesson. "He made him look up" (Mark viii. 25).

Hastily passing on to the fifth chapter of Daniel, we find, amongst many other solemn teachings, this one pre-eminently, that Jehovah expects us to learn from his dealings with others.

The primary offence of Belshazzar was that he had disregarded all that he knew of God's dealings with his grandfather, "And thou his son, O Belshazzar, hast not humbled thine heart, though thou knewest all this." The evil doings enumerated in the succeeding verse (23) gain their terrible significance in God's esteem, from the fact that they were sins against light and knowledge. He had had one unmistakable object-lesson before his eyes, and he had acted in defiance of it. Solemn consideration for those who, with a hundred-fold greater opportunities of knowing the mind of God, are still found disobedient to the voice heard alike in history and in revelation! It is no light thing, in God's esteem, to disregard the lessons He teaches by his dealings with others. "Though thou knewest all this," is an argument which may well awaken many a soul hitherto dormant to its awful responsibility.

We must only briefly glance at those other words in the charge against the wretched and insolent king. "The God in whose hand thy breath is, and whose are all thy ways hast thou not glorified." Here is an indictment which might have been brought against many a moral man, and even many a professor of religion in these days. Let us not seek to blunt the edge of this "sharp sword," which may, perhaps, reach to writer and reader, "to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit." God takes cognisance of negative sins, and even if we do not feel ourselves under the necessity of living for God's glory, He will not hold innocent those to whom He has to say: "The God in whose hand thy breath is, and whose are all thy ways, hast thou not glorified."

Perhaps we even forget sometimes that momentary dependence upon Him in whose hand our breath is; but what statement of the case could be more emphatic? A weak heart, diseased lungs, an accident, even mistaken treatment, all these factors are speedily recognised; but, after all, they are mere accessories of the true case of us all. The closing of that patient but often disregarded hand is the true close of life. Each added breath is drawn from the Divine fingers. If this were true of any human hand, how anxious men would be to please and conciliate the one on whom they were so dependent! Shall we seek less to make friends with Him in whose hand our breath actually is?

Nor should the child of God overlook the strong consolation found interwoven with the most solemn warning. Our very breath is in the hand of Him who loves us with an everlasting love. Whilst grateful for every human help and alleviation, they can afford to sit loosely to all earth-born helps who realise that they are immortal till their work is done, and that

> Not a single shaft can hit,
> Unless the God of love sees fit.

The sixth chapter of this wondrous Book of Daniel emphasises in a new way, and perhaps in a way even more clear and unmistakable, the teaching of those which precede it. We must not add to these fragmentary thoughts by comments upon it, but would earnestly commend it to the further study even of those most familiar with the sacred story, and may the Spirit of Truth guide us into all the truth hidden in it.

LUCY A. BENNETT.

Harvest-tide.

While the earth remaineth..harvest..shall not cease.—Gen. viii. 22.

(Tune: 507, "Sacred Songs and Solos".)

'Tis harvest-tide, the field is wide,
And swift the moments flee;
Thy grace we claim in Jesu's name,
On all who work for Thee.

(Refrain.)

Bless all who work for Thee,
Wherever they may be;
Each loving heart that takes a part
In harvest work for Thee.

It was thy power sent sun and shower,
The needed sun and rain;
And now indeed thy help we need,
Who gather in the grain.

To Thee belong the weak, the strong,
Of high and low degree;
Each willing mind a work may find
In winning souls for Thee.

And some through stress of weariness
Reap on with steadfast will;
While others glean, the sheaves between,
Thy purpose to fulfil.

When labour past, rest comes at last,
What gladness then will be,
The harvest done, each garnered one
An endless joy to Thee.

E. ELLEN TRUSTED.

The Connellan Mission.—Steadily and quietly the work of preaching the Gospel and testifying for the truth goes forward under Rev. Thomas Connellan, whose monthly paper, The Catholic, is now in the sixth year of its existence, and has been eminently useful in helping Irish mission work. A great change for the better appears not only in Dublin but all over Ireland in regard to public toleration of Protestant preaching. Mr. Connellan's work is essentially a pioneer movement of rapid growth, and workers have to be multiplied in proportion. The headquarters are at 51B, Dawson-street, Dublin. Letters are constantly being received, showing that side by side with priestly intolerance of Romanists reading even the Douay Bible, secret inquiry prevails to a great extent, and has frequently issued in spiritual enlightenment and salvation.

Niagara Bible Conference.

BY MRS. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.

THE twenty-first annual meeting for Bible study has again convened at the familiar, lovely, and restful spot, Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario.

Truly, salvation beautifies the meek, and they who trust in the Lord renew their strength as the eagle, and even in old age are full of sap and green. Those who thus met again, after twelve months separation, had each bowed their hearts before a common sorrow in the loss of Dr. J. H. Brookes, the beloved President of the Conference. From the opening day it was manifest that the tokens of favour with which the Holy Spirit had stamped this gathering in former seasons were to be repeated and renewed.

In the first testimony from the platform, based on Philippians, Dr. H. M. PARSONS, of Toronto, gave the key-note. It was laid upon the conscience of each believer that they were to recognise the unity of the body of Christ, and in an especial manner personally to endeavour to preserve that unity. The important exhortation was manifestly sealed to many hearts, for from the commencement of the meeting a beautiful spirit of unity, tenderness, and yieldingness seemed all pervasive.

Clear and helpful expositions have been given, covering a wide range of topics drawn from the Prophecies, the Gospels, and the Epistles. Studies in the minor prophets were made the special feature of this year's programme, with daily studies on the Holy Spirit. All have been so profitable that it would be difficult to designate which should take precedence. It may be suitable, however, to say, that those who gather at Niagara Conference, are in a very pronounced sense "Lovers of Israel." Hence, the addresses of Prof. E. F. STROETER, missionary to the Jews, were received with particular pleasure by the listeners.

Dr. W. J. ERDMAN, the faithful secretary of so many years, has presided as usual, directing affairs with graciousness, modesty, and patience. What the Orient is to a pearl, what the brilliance is to a gem, is Dr. Erdman's Lord's Day morning Bible-class to the whole convention. It is a point of light that brightens all the other days. Around Dr. Erdman, on the public platform, or in the secluded grove, where business is wont to be transacted, have been seen the familiar faces of the teaching brethren, Messrs. Parsons, Moorhead, Stroeter, Munhall, Cameron, Needham, Wardrope, Stewart, Norton, Kyle, Congdon, Bates, and others whose fellowship is of more recent date. One session of the convention was devoted to a memorial service in memory of the late Dr. J. H. Brookes.

The brethren meeting at Niagara may not, and do not, see eye to eye in all points of truth, particularly propheoy; but as all are agreed on the facts of a literal and pre-millennial return of Jesus Christ and a restoration of the Jewish commonwealth, their harmony in the Spirit is unbroken and remarkable. They thoroughly apprehend their duty as saved ones to give the Gospel to the unsaved; hence missionary zeal and missionary benevolence are strong features of the Conference. But this principle, like the undertow of the sea, is so quietly exercised that the Day of Judgment alone will reveal how many foreign or home missionaries were born under the Niagara pavilion.

Plainfield, N.J.

The Gospel in Spain.—Looking back to 1868 when a revolution took place in Spain, which was in itself a protest against Romish tyranny, the feeling arises that early anticipations have not been fulfilled. The Committee of the Association for the Diffusion of the Gospel in Spain recognises that the Protestants, though more numerous, are still only a small minority; and yet during these thirty years a succession of men and women has been maintained, ready to suffer the loss of all things for Christ's sake. Mr. Armstrong, however, who has seen nearly thirty years' service in Spain, says that, in spite of enormous difficulties, the Gospel does make decided progress among Spaniards. In the south-east Mr. Simpson, another evangelist, has undertaken work in the provinces of Murcia and Jaen; and very encouraging is news from Mr. Nisbet of the extension and prosperity of the Valladolid work, and of the wide door which God has opened before him in the villages of old Castile. Mr. B. F. Babcock, of 9, Tithebarn-street, Liverpool, is one of the secretaries.

The Keswick Convention.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS.]

THE Convention of 1897 was eagerly anticipated by hundreds, and will be looked back upon by hundreds more in coming years as the beginning of a new experience of the blessedness and power of a life of full consecration. It has been characterised by the strength and depth of the teaching from the platform, and the all-pervasive sense of God's presence in the vast audiences. From the first there was much quiet power in the gatherings, so that the Convention seemed to begin at a point which in some former years it had only gained at the middle of the week.

The attendances reached the average of former years. An impression to the contrary had arisen from the fact that the pressure for apartments was not so great; this is accounted for by the number of new houses springing up in the growing town. Then the young men's camp has not been a feature of this Convention, because the Student Volunteers summoned their annual gathering this year at Cliff College. The absence of so many athletic young forms, in cricketing or boating attire, has detracted considerably from the picturesque element; to say nothing of the loss of their enthusiasm and fervour in the young men's and other meetings. We hope they will not be lacking in future gatherings.

There were not so many after-meetings held this year as in former Conventions; indeed, it was not until well on in the week that any definite attempt was made to bring matters to an issue. It can scarcely be doubted that the wise directions given on such occasions have been of the utmost value in directing souls to the attainment of rest and peace. The after-meeting often affords opportunities for dealing with special difficulties, and enabling the seeker to realise the simplicity of the appropriating act of faith.

Whilst listening to the addresses one felt that there was no small danger of an intellectual surfeit. The utterances were of a high order of Biblical teaching, in which the choicest stores of the Bible student were laid out with the acumen, force, and illustration of ripe culture. Another marked feature of the addresses, speaking generally, was their searching and practical character.

These Keswick gatherings are remarkable for the sacred hush which pervades them, for the sweet and plaintive singing, for the spirit of prayer and supplication in which every address begins and ends. But we sometimes wish there were less conversation and friendly greeting at the close of a meeting, in the enclosure and street. We have felt the impression of some powerful address vanish as, emerging from the tent, we have been assailed with the buzz of conversation. Probably this is, to a large extent, inevitable for those from the ends of the earth to whom Keswick is a convenient meeting-place; yet we think it is possible to imagine a time when God's presence and power shall have been so manifested that each soul shall pass out under the very awe of the Eternal.

On three successive evenings Rev. John McNeill addressed great crowds in the market place with his inimitable power. In his first address on John ix. there was, perhaps, rather an excess of native humour, which rather diminished the force of his fervid appeals; the second address on "the man with the withered hand" was altogether admirable, and a very manifest impression was made on the audience.

Altogether, the week has been a memorable and blessed season. The teaching, we think, is becoming every year more Scriptural, thoughtful, and helpful; more in harmony with the general consensus of the best teaching on holiness which has characterised the Church of every age. The teachers themselves, we are sure, would be far from saying that their utterances comprise the whole of God's truth. They would say, and we agree, that one week in the year is well spent in reiterating the great and imperative need for holy living, and its true method by faith in the power of the Holy Spirit.

In subsequent pages we have given four of the earlier addresses given at the Convention; others will follow in succeeding issues, as space may allow.

The Keswick Mission.

None of the meetings of the week are anticipated with greater pleasure and more genuinely enjoyed than the gathering on the Wednesday afternoon to hear accounts of work and progress connected with the Keswick Mission. The origin of this effort has often been told in past years, and there is no decrease of public interest in its operations. There are now fifteen workers in different parts of the world who are definitely attached to the Keswick Mission; Dr. G. W. Guinness and Dr. A. C. Hall having joined it during the past year. The fact was emphasised at last week's meeting that all of these, while receiving partial support from Keswick, are affiliated with some recognised missionary society by which they are also helped. The list of workers may here be given:—

Miss Amy Wilson-Carmichael, Tinnevelly, India.
Miss K. Barthorp, Batala, Punjab, India.
Miss Ethel Jacob, Batala, Punjab, India.
Miss Ruth Brooke, China.
Miss Mary Hodgson, China
Miss Fugill, Hamada, Japan.
Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Green, Nkanga, Pondoland, South Africa.
Miss Eva L. Carmichael, Swaziland, South Africa.
Miss Eileen White, Algeria.
Miss Barry, Dublin.
Dr. G. Whitfield Guinness, China.
Dr. A. C. Hall, Old Cairo.
Miss Townsend, Shefamer, Palestine (Hon.).
Miss Luce, Benares, India (Hon.).

Besides these permanent toilers in the foreign field there are, of course, casual missioners, to whom reference will be found in the following report.

The meeting of Wednesday afternoon was very largely attended, and Mr. R. Wilson presided. He read an extract of a letter received from his adopted niece, Miss Amy Wilson-Carmichael. Writing from Palamcottah, South India, on June 26 last, she told of a new effort in the Tinnevelly district, and asked that at the meeting special prayer should be made to God that He would stir up the native Christians to a deeper and more living life. The chairman led the assembly in prayer for this and other objects relating to the work. He then briefly submitted the figures of account relating to the Convention for the past year. These showed that £158 less than in the former year had been donated to the Keswick Mission, and £199 more to other missions. The total amount received was £1572 3s. 8d.

Some readers may recollect that a year ago the management of the affairs of the Keswick Mission, as distinct from the Convention itself, was handed over by Mr. Wilson to a missionary council, consisting of the six trustees, ex officio, and twenty other elected members (ladies and gentlemen). The report of this council (of which General Hatt-Noble is chairman) was submitted to the meeting by Rev. J. Harford-Battersby, and it contained many interesting statements. After referring to the encouraging labours of the friends whose names we have already given, mention was made of the visit of Rev. C. G. Moore to the Continent, of Rev. J. Gelson Gregson's tour in India and Burmah, of visits to India by Revs. Edgar Thwaites, W. S. Standen, and Bacheler Russell; of Rev. F. B. Meyer's meetings in New York and Boston last spring, and of Dr. Harford-Battersby's work on the Niger now in progress. Mrs. Constantine had also visited India under the auspices of the Mission, and hopes to return thither in the autumn. An important item of projected work is the visit to Canada next month of Rev. Charles Inwood, Rev. John Sloan, and Rev. F. S. Webster, who will address a series of conventions in the principal towns of the Dominion. Mr. Inwood has been led of God to relinquish pastoral work for the present, so as to give himself for a season to this special service; and he will be ready, after the Canadian visit, to answer calls from India and China, or wheresoever the Lord may direct.

As treasurer of the Keswick Mission, Mr. A. A. Head read the past year's balance-sheet, which showed the amount given at last Convention, and subsequently, to be £1041 1s. 8d. After payment of the allowances to missionaries and deputation missioners, about £315 remained in hand at the end of June. Mr. Head said it was reckoned that for the next year's operations £1100 would be needed for allowances, and £400 for deputation work; he appealed warmly for generous help from the attenders at the Convention. The statement as to the amounts subscribed during the week for the various missions will, no doubt, be duly published when the respective totals are ascertained.

Some deeply interesting addresses followed. Miss Bradshaw, a member of the council, told of encouraging communications received from all the young ladies working abroad in connection with the Keswick Mission; their great desire is the continued and unremitting prayer of fellow Christians at home. She laid it as a special burden on the Christian ladies at the Convention that they should both pray for, and help to support, these young sisters who have devoted their lives to the cause of God among the heathen. Mrs. Constantine had some interesting things to say about the unwearied devotion of the workers she had met in India, as well as about the overwhelming needs of the work. She sincerely thanked God for having sent her out, and rejoiced at the prospect of soon going back.

A statement followed by Rev. J. G. Gregson as to his recent visit to India, and specially as to some work he had been enabled to do among the Syrian Christians at Travancore. Conventions had been held in each Indian Presidency, and in many towns in India, Burmah, and Ceylon. The work in the last-named place has developed from one little village mission to three others. A friend who had visited and seen the work sent £100 to build a better house. He prayed that God might multiply critics of that sort. The invitation of Travancore came from twenty or thirty priests to the ancient Syrian Church there. He went, and afterwards paid a second, longer visit. Now they desire him to return for a period of three years. His passage is taken to sail in November. Mr. Gregson said there are half a million native Christians in the district connected with this church, and he spoke with enthusiasm of their readiness to hear and to receive thorough-going testimony on the life of holiness. There are also openings for work among the women there, by Christian sisters. As to India generally, the speaker said that many are longing for this teaching, and the need is for workers to go among them filled with the Holy Ghost. He told of a paper read at an ecclesiastical gathering there by one who had never been to Keswick, powerfully setting forth holiness teaching. It was the Keswick doctrine without the Keswick label.

Rev. F. B. Meyer followed with a succinct and much-enjoyed narrative of his memorable meetings last February in Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, particulars of which we published at the time. Mr. Meyer added that he hopes, if God wills, to spend next January and February in different parts of the United States, holding meetings of the same description, and he entreated the prayers of his fellow Christians for a great blessing on this effort.

On the motion of Prebendary Webb-Peploe, a message of hearty greeting and Christian sympathy was sent from the meeting to Mr. Moody, at Northfield, by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, who sailed from Liverpool for America on Saturday last, with Dr. A. T. Pierson.

A few closing earnest words came from Rev. F. S. Webster as to the forthcoming mission by himself and Messrs. Inwood and Sloan in Canada; for this also much prayer was asked.

The Missionary Meeting.

The teaching meetings of the week are very properly followed on the Saturday forenoon by a great missionary rally. For it must not be forgotten that the Christian is saved and sanctified that he may become a channel of the like blessing to others, both near and afar off. The practical missionary interest developed of recent years at Keswick has saved the Convention from the otherwise inevitable charge of Christian selfishness—if such a contradiction could be. The meeting of Saturday was quite as large as the limits of the tent, and it lasted, as usual, for three hours. Each minute was charged with real and ever varying interest, as the thought was directed from one point to another in the great world-field. The platform was filled with missionary brethren and sisters.

Mr. R. Wilson presided in the opening part of the proceedings, and, after a song of praise had been sung, led in prayer. He entreated a rich blessing, not only on the 200 missionary workers present, but on those now in the high places of the field—that some of the blessings experienced at Keswick might fall on them. Then the reins of the meeting were handed over to Mr. Eugene Stock, of the C.M.S. After the announcement by him of many gatherings to be held on the following days for the furtherance of different kinds of home and foreign mission work, some warm words were spoken by Mr. A. A. Head respecting the fifteen Keswick mission work and workers, for whom he asked earnest and continual prayer. Mr. Stock remarked on this point that there is a partnership between the Keswick mission and the organised societies, as each of these fifteen is attached to some society which is partly responsible for their due support.

At the call of Mr. Stock, a goodly company throughout the tent and on the platform rose of those who had been in the field and are going back. Another contingent stood up of those who are accepted candidates. They were mostly young of both sexes, but not all young. The two sets stood together while a suitable and pathetic hymn of cheer and encouragement was partly read by Mr. Stock and partly sung by the audience; Rev. E. H. Hopkins thereafter commended the missionary friends to the Lord in earnest prayer. The Jews were also remembered at God's throne of grace by Rev. J. J. Luce.

It was stated that requests had come for workers from many specific parts of the field, but the only of these mentioned were poor persecuted Armenia, and the great foreign ports, such as Alexandria, Cairo, Shanghai, Hong-Kong, Calcutta, which are deemed the hardest places because of the presence of so many nominal Christians. Mr. Stock referred to the vast unevangelised spaces of the world in different continents. Some of them he specified, and made brief prayer that these dark places might speedily be lighted up by the Gospel message.

The first speaker was Mr. O'Neill, of the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union, who pointed out the tokens of God's distinct working in connection with the operations of that movement. He said that Mr. Mott, who has recently been round the world in the interests of the Students' work, has been able to establish seventy Christian unions in different countries, binding the Christian youth of these lands together in one simple endeavour to carry the Gospel to the whole world in this generation. The speaker alluded to the way in which the movement is finding sympathy and co-operation in the Christian Churches on both sides of the Atlantic. There is just now a real crisis in the movement by reason of the lack of money to send out those who are offering themselves for the work. A leading society in America has recently declined to send out some picked men because of the want of means.

The fair island of Madagascar, five times as large as England, was represented by Mr. Shaw, of the L.M.S., who described the former persecution there by the reigning queen, and the present difficulties in connection with the French occupation of the island. At the close of the first-mentioned trouble, the Christians in Madagascar numbered twenty times as many as at the beginning, and we trust in God that He will bring a like good out of the existing situation. The native pastors and evangelists are the chief sufferers to-day through the machinations of the Romish priests. One of the most faithful native pastors in the island was falsely accused of disloyalty and ultimately executed.

Pastor Fanstone, of Brazil, spoke for South America, the whole of which, he said, is now open for the preaching of the Gospel. Here is a loud call to Christians. Peru is now open, so is Ecuador, and so is Brazil; though no one can say how long these opportunities may be ours. Many of the people are waiting and anxious for the truth, and there have been some notable Gospel triumphs. Mr. Fanstone was intensely earnest in his representation of the vast dark stretches of South America that need to be lighted up, and in his plea for more workers.

Much interest attended the appearance of coal-black Archdeacon Crowther (son of the late bishop) who is labouring in the delta of the Niger, in connection with Independent and self-supporting African churches. A case of fidelity for Christ's sake even to martyrdom was related by the Archdeacon, as a proof of the power of the Gospel in Africa. But, said the speaker, it is far easier to die for Christ than to live for Him; and there is much cause for gratitude in the faithful lives of the converts. The climate there is deadly for Europeans, and it is sad to hear of so many missionaries who have had to lay down their lives in the work. Who will fill the vacant places?

The singing of a missionary hymn was a welcome relief to the strain of listening to such engrossing recitals. After this, the missionary envelopes for the contributions of the audience were distributed.

Miss Hanbury, from China, told how at Keswick, ten years ago, she received a distinct call to foreign service. She told of much progress in the district in vast China in which she has laboured. She regarded that the secret of what success they had seen is the weekly united prayer meeting, at which all their cares and difficulties and needs are laid before the Lord, and left with Him.

Dr. Edith Brown, of the Women's School for Medicine in India, entered an earnest plea for medical missionary work as one of the most important agencies for reaching the women of that country. These native sisters will come in some cases sixty miles for medicine, and thus hear the Gospel. Others are in the hospital for a time, and there learn the saving truths of the Christian faith. The work must be largely done by native women trained as nurses, compounders, and doctors, and the school in the north of India does this work of training. Prayers and more workers are the great need.

Miss Davis, of the Zenana and Bible and Medical Mission, addressed a telling message to those of her sisters present who had not stood up as missionaries or intending missionaries. She laid on them the terrible responsibility of coming repeatedly to Keswick for individual blessing and still not taking the water of life to those living in dry and thirsty lands. She appealed to daughters to give their lives to this glorious work, and to parents that they should not hinder their children from going.

Mr. Bacheler Russell, who has been in India, briefly spoke. He exhorted older friends who longed to witness in heathen lands not to give up their desire to go; God may yet open the way and give them the wish of their heart. He told of a striking case of divine healing on board ship, which was greatly blessed to other passengers. Speaking of the spread of real consecration life in Ceylon and India, Mr. Russell threw out the suggestion that many English Christian friends, and even clergymen well on in life, should go out and settle down there, forming centres of blessing in these less favoured lands.

Mr. Darroch, of the C.I.M., in a short address, sought to lead his hearers on from consecration teaching to consecration living and light-giving in dark places. He pointed out some "small corners" in China where their light might shine.

The work in the great Congo region was commended to God in prayer by Mr. W. Sloan. Special mention was made also of Dr. Harry Guinness's missionary journey in Peru and other parts of South America.

Uganda, which has never before been represented at the Saturday missionary meeting, was this year represented by Mr. Roscoe. He told how it is the overflowing of the Great Victoria Nyanza in Central Africa, in the rainy season, that makes the Nile annually burst its banks and carry fertility to the land of Egypt. This is a speaking parable of what Keswick ought to be to the dry and parched world. It is also a parable of the spread of evangelisation in the region of Uganda. Mr. Roscoe went on to report of the triumphs of the Gospel and of the Holy Ghost work among that people. From the capital, Mengo, the work spreads through the land. There are more than 800 native missionaries being supported by the native church. They preach as much by the life as by the lip. The fruits among the people have been wonderful in the eyes of the Christians.

The short exhortation, by Rev. H. B. Macartney, which is reproduced elsewhere, was given, and then all sang two verses of the hymn—

> When I survey the wondrous cross,
> On which the Prince of Glory died;
> My richest gain I count but loss,
> And pour contempt on all my pride.

The leader of the meeting addressed himself in a few loving words to all parents present who desired to give their children to God in prayer. Some such stood up in token of this sacred purpose. Those in the tent whose hearts were moved to offer themselves in consecration for missionary work were also given an opportunity to indicate the same by rising. About a hundred responded, most of them being young women, and these were commended in prayer to God's teaching and guidance as to their future course.

The closing word of the meeting and of the Convention came from Mrs. Baxter, who gave as the foundation of her parting message 1 Thess. v. 24—"Faithful is He that calleth you, who also will do it." The first examination, she said, that young people may have to pass will be to show patience and obedience at home, so that the hearts of parents may be led to assent to their going abroad. But all who have surrendered themselves to God's leading and governance are, or ought to be, missionaries, wherever their lot is cast. Paul's Epistles written, and prayers offered, in prison, were as truly missionary work as when he planted churches all over Asia Minor. Paul's word comes to us, "Faithful is He that promised, and He also will do it." Let us add the "Amen" of faith. There is need for praying missionaries as well as working ones. We are weak, but linked to Christ we are his partners. We have seen signs in these days that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, and we need much economy in our lives that our time may not be wasted. If we are faithless sometimes, let us not forget that God is faithful to impart the spirit of prayer and dependence upon Him.

Prayer followed by Rev. E. W. Moore, and after singing "All hail the power of Jesus' name," the deeply impressive proceedings of the three hours' "dedication service" came to a close.

The Earl of Jersey and Destitute Children.

By the kindness of the Earl and Countess of Jersey, the annual fête of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children was held in the beautiful grounds of Osterley Park to about 600 boys and girls, including the sailor lads from the Arethusa and Chichester training ships. Lord Jersey also gave a similar entertainment at Osterley Park to the working boys of Fordham House and the lads of the Technical Home (Queen Victoria's Jubilee Memorial), Shaftesbury-avenue, on Saturday last. These Homes also belong to the Society of which his lordship is president. The proceedings were greatly enlivened by the excellent brass bands from the Boys' Home, Twickenham, the Farm and Shaftesbury Schools, Bisley, and the Sailors' Band from the Arethusa and Chichester.

Communications relative to the work should be addressed to the secretary, Mr. W. Bristow Wallen, 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, W.C.

Florence Orphanage for Girls.—Since its establishment this orphanage has given shelter and education to a large number of children of Protestants from all parts of Italy, most of whom would otherwise have remained uneducated or have been subjected to Romish training. Many of these are the children of pastors or colporteurs who have given freely all they had to give—time, strength, and talents—to the service of Christ; and surely the children of such parents are in a peculiar manner entitled to the help and sympathy of all Protestant Christians. The Ladies' Committee of the Italian Aid Society in London testify that the school is going on well in its quiet way, under Madame Le Forestier, whose whole heart appears to be in this work for God. Communications may be addressed to the Secretary, Miss Alice Hall, 4, Via Nazionale, Florence.

Boys and Girls in Barbary.

I WISH some of you could have been with me this morning at the "breaking-up" of a school for Moorish girls. There were thirty of them, looking so clean and tidy, but dressed not at all as you would imagine, for to begin with they all wore some sort of kerchief on their heads, mostly white, but some coloured, tied on like hoods; their coloured tunics and their white pinafores being fastened down the front with a close row of knobs for buttons, and girded in with stiff silk sashes six inches wide. There were several chubby boys, too, who sat on the ground in front, one of whom, about three years old, sang "Jesus loves me," so prettily, in Arabic, of course, for that is the only language they know. Most of them were white like you, but one girl and one boy were black as black! One thing that struck me very much was that many of the biggest girls were in the "infant class," for as they teach girls nothing at home in this country, those who do not come young to school are a long way behind. One of the smallest and cleverest was the niece of a younger but bigger girl by her side, and some could tell tales of very unhappy and godless homes, if they deserve that name.

What will you think when I tell you that there are only one or two schools for girls in Morocco! The Moors say, "Teach not thy daughter letters; let her not live on the roof"—for they often have rooms on their flat roofs here. Yet the other day the father of one of these girls was so pleased at her learning to read that he actually came to ask Miss Jay, in whose hands the school is, to teach his daughter to write. Miss Jay has written to you sometimes in this page, and as she is going to England next week, some of you may be able to hear her and learn something more of this work and how you can help it.

First of all we had a pretty hymn, and then the children repeated the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, Psalm xxiii., John x., and fifteen selected texts right through each without a pause, all together in a sort of sing-song these Orientals love. Then one of these bigger girls told the story of Jonah in her own words so prettily, but we had all we could do to keep from smiling when she told us how Jonah, when he got to Jaffa, went on board a steamer! But she told the story as well as any of you could have done, I am sure. Besides this, we had reading and multiplication tables, though they learn these very differently from you, and do not promise great things at arithmetic. After that we had singing again, and then came the prizes—dolls sent by friends in England for needle-work and lessons, and pretty striped towels to wear on their heads for attendance. But one or two kept whispering something about an unexpected feast, and sure enough a native cake was put into each pair of hands as they put on their shoes and tied up their heads to go out, besides which a lady present gave them a silver coin apiece. Then you should have heard them clap and try to say "Thank you" in English, and finish up with a funny tremolo sound the women here make in their throats when rejoicing.

You may say, perhaps, that after all it was not a wonderful school when you think of your own, and all the advantages you have, but you will be thankful for what you have when you think of the millions of Mohammedan women who grow up like cattle without any exercise for their brains; till when the missionary ladies go amongst them very many have hardly the wits to understand the good news they bring. Thank God that there are at least thirty in this town who will grow up with a knowledge and an understanding of the truth. May they have your prayers that God may open their hearts, too, as well as their minds, and that they may all become his own children?

A few weeks ago, at Casablanca, another port of Morocco, I saw a number of orphan and neglected boys, whom Mr. Edwards, of the North Africa Mission, to which also Miss Jay belongs, is training in much the same way, but teaching them also to dig and plant, that they may earn an honest living. And so the seed is being sown, here a little, there a little, where the soil seems good and the weeds few, for there is no time to begin like childhood, whether to serve Christ ourselves or to teach others to serve Him. The Cripples' Bathing Machine.

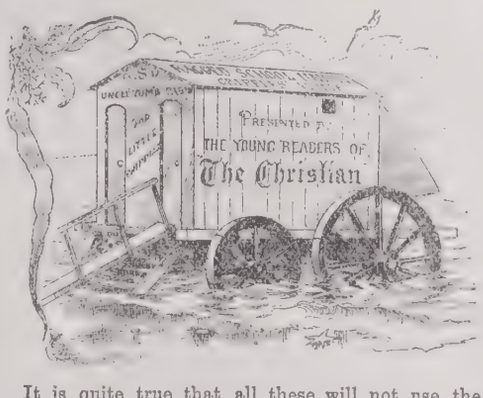
Dear Friends,—There was quite a commotion amongst the cripples as the machine hove in sight. What could it be? It was something like one of Wombwell's menageries, but it would not be big enough for the elephant. It did not look like the lion's den, for there were no bars. Yes! It must be the new bathing machine! And so, indeed, it was. When once it was pitched immediately in front of the home, and with its foremost wheels actually washed by the waves, the excitement increased. In a very short time the little ones were having their first dip from the steps of the machine.

The machine has two front doors, with a partition down the middle, with, of course, openings and steps for the water. The painter has yet to complete his work, but it is already proved from practical experience that the bathing machine is "just the thing," and that it has come just at the right time. It is true there is nothing wasted upon ornament, but one has only to think for a moment what dear children are using, and will use the machine, to realise that there is a lot of poetry about it. Why, in the course of the year we shall have some 500 different children from our London slums, all more or less maimed or suffering, staying for a holiday at the Home.



It is quite true that all these will not use the machine, but I do know that this latest addition to the Home will greatly increase the pleasure of the children and the benefits of the Institution.

I am so glad that "Uncle Tom's Cabin" has been given by children, and most heartily do I join with Uncle in tendering sincere thanks to all concerned. I trust every donor will have a very pleasant holiday. I am quite sure the enjoyment will not be lessened by the consciousness that joy has been given to others less favoured, both physically and socially, and so, in the name of the little cripples, we very heartily and gratefully say, "God bless you!"—Yours, on behalf of the cripples, John Kirk.

How to Learn the Books of the Bible.

Of judgment and of mercy Hosea loves to tell;
Joel describes the blessed days when God with man shall dwell.
Among Tekoa's herdsmen Amos received his call;
Whilst Obadiah prophesies of Edom's final fall.
Jonah enshrines a wondrous type of Christ our risen Lord.
Micah pronounces Judah lost—lost, but again restored.
Nahum declares on Nineveh just judgment shall be poured.

Summer.

How lovely is summer! Her morning so bright,
Her noon's restful shade, and her soft balmy night!
Her glorious flowers, her meadows of hay;
Her fields where the children and cows love to stray.

There the butterfly plays through the long golden hours,
And the busy bee hums 'mongst the gay fragrant flowers;
And the happy birds sing in the cool leafy trees,
And the sweet country perfumes are borne on the breeze.

O summer, I love thee! Who made thee so fair?
Thy smile turns to plenty, earth, ocean, and air.
Who planned thy glad coming? Do, Summer, tell me,
For sure He must be even lovelier than thee.

My child—it is God who made me so sweet;
He spreads the soft green for my joy-bringing feet;
He decks me with sunshine and flowers—and then
My hands with rich plenty He filleth for men.

And wouldest thou know Him? Then study his ways;
His works are all round thee; consider and praise:
And study his Word, too, for there thou shalt see How this God of greatness and beauty loves thee.

Quite an Imposing Procession might have been seen the other Sunday evening wending its way to the North London Nursing Home, laden with tokens of love and consideration for the sick and needy in the shape of bunches and pots of flowers.

The inmates of the Home were at first alarmed at the sudden invasion of their quiet resting-place, but soon delight was depicted on all faces, when they learnt the object of the juvenile deputation, which was composed of members of the Finsbury Park Working Lads' Institute, whose annual flower service had just been held. The matron and nurses returned hearty thanks for the gifts of flowers and for the small sum collected at the service, adding that the behaviour of the lads reflected the greatest credit on themselves and on the Institute to which they belonged.

The Institute is situated at Clifton Hall, Poole's Park, N., and the hon. director is Mr. Arthur Willis.

The Darkey's Mule.

A Negro down South was riding along a road on an old mule, and beating it with a big stick at every step.

"What's the matter, Uncle?" a man asked him as he passed by. "Is your mule lazy?"

"No, sir," said the old darkey, "he ain't lazy. He's only got a thick skin and a short recollection!"

I think I know some boys who have got the same.

Little Curiosity Shops.

"Fill a room with children, and give them all the toys they want to play with; and tell them that they can have the toys, but they must not open the organ to see what is inside. Then go out of the room for a few moments, and you'll find when you come back that all the children have dropped their toys and are around the organ trying to see what is in it. This is not only curiosity; it is disobedience."

I cut this from a newspaper the other day. I wonder if the description would apply to any of you.

"It is too hot!"

I think many of my young friends have found it a little trying to do much Bible Searching in the hot weather we have been having. Consequently there have been fewer papers sent in the last week or two. This is a pity, but I am helping them by setting easier questions, and now we are in a new quarter I shall be glad to find that more instead of less are competing. Would it not be a good opportunity while you are at the seaside to try and get some new readers? Will each of you try to get two or three fresh ones to join?

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, August 1.

"For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest...I have set watchmen upon thy walls, they shall never hold their peace day nor night... take ye no rest, and give Him no rest."—Isa. lxii. 1, 6, 7, R.V.

We have here the unresting Christ. Day and night He pleads for the city that crucified Him, and it is in answer to his supplications that he will one day arise from her ruins. Is it not also true that He ever lives to intercede for us, praying when we are silent, watching when we sleep? His prayer rises for his people night and day. Perhaps we should not pray for ourselves, if his intercessions did not incite. Certainly they would drift beyond hope, if He did not pray for his sifted Simons.

Next, we have the unresting watchmen. Christ's intercession must be supplemented by ours, whether for the restoration of the Jews, or the upbuilding of the Church, or the salvation of individuals. There must be oneness of prayer between the Intercessor before the Throne, and his remembrancers on earth; and there will be, if the Holy Ghost is allowed to exercise his chosen ministry of making intercession with us on behalf of the saints according to the will of God. Lastly, there is the unresting God. He, too, has no rest. The rest of God is crowded with thought and care for his own. The image of Buddha presents the conception of an impassive deity whose one aim is to rid himself of all that might trouble his repose. In our God, on the other hand, together with the perfect serenity and satisfaction of his nature, there are the eternal tides of desire and gracious help, which are ever sweeping out towards men to bless and save them. Amid and through this unresting activity He causes rest.

MONDAY, August 2.

"As the cattle that go down into the valley, the Spirit of the Lord caused them to rest."—Isa. lxiii. 14.

It is the noonday glare in Palestine. The sun's rays like spears of flame are striking down upon the parched sand wastes, and all the land burns like a furnace. Away yonder is a sequestered glen, where mosses line the margins of streamlets and pools, and rich pasture keeps green in the shadow of the hills. Thither the cattle descend at noon. As the shadows creep down the mountain sides they follow them, and presently the herd browses on the succulent herbage or reclines beneath the shadows of the spreading trees, while the brooks purl past clear and cool. Similarly Isaiah says God brought his people through the wilderness, leading them as a horse that might not stumble, and finally conducted them into the rest of Canaan.

But how fit an emblem is suggested of our Father's dealings with us. The scorching sun of temptation shines around us. The glare of publicity, the fever of money-making, the strife of tongues, torment the children of men. But for God's beloved ones there is a secret place by Him, a green and verdant nook, watered by the river of God. Over its portals these words are written: "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest." There remaineth a rest for the people of God.

When once we learn to trust our Father's unfailing love, we are caused to rest. Notice that forcible expression, the Spirit of the Lord caused them to rest. Here is a new thought of the omnipotence of love. It can also reveal itself that it almost compels rest. Cause us to lie down, O Lord, we pray Thee.

TUESDAY, August 3.

"Thou meetest him that rejoiceth and worketh righteousness—those that remember thee in thy ways."—Isa. lxiv. 5.

Even when visiting judgment upon the unrighteous, God remembers mercy for his people. He meets them as daily Helper and as eternal Saviour. Those who lovingly walk in his ways, remembering Him in continual praise and prayer—these he meets most graciously, and to them He dispenses abundance of Divine goodness and succour.

This meeting of his servants has ever been one of the ways of God. Like as Melchizedek of old met Abraham after a great conflict, so Christ comes upon his people after many a hard duty and severe contest with evil, and ministers heavenly refreshment. It is his joy to give, as it is theirs to receive, all the good that comes of his blessed appearances unto them in times of storm and stress. But we must remember Him "in his ways"; we must "abide in Christ," or we shall not prevail with God.

To be thus met by God is a glad Christian experience. At morning prayer it gives strength and joy for the entire day; at eventide it is an inestimable consolation and encouragement. If we walk in the ways of God—if we walk in the light—we shall enjoy this exalted fellowship, and realise marvellous help along the busy highway of life. Christ will come, "not to sojourn, but abide." Those whom He meets He will accompany in the way; those whom He accompanies He will succour and sustain. Lord, help us ever to remember Thee, to keep thy ways and do thy will; then shall we have thy strong and tender hand upon us, and be held in continual communion and holy joy.

WEDNESDAY, August 4.

"Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth, and the former things shall not be remembered nor come to mind."—Isa. lxv. 17.

The heavens and earth that are now were not produced in their present shape in a day, but through long periods, which are chronicled in the strata of the earth. God was at work building them up. So beneath the scaffolding of history and human affairs it may be that the Creator is already at work laying the foundations of the new era which shall soon be unveiled. But the creation of the new is much more difficult than of the old, because there is so much undoing to be done. Amid the crash of empire, the rock of revolutions, the blood and tears and anguish of the present, God is preparing the new heavens and earth in which dwelleth righteousness.

Just think of these exquisite words!—"Never remembered, nor come to mind!" Our bitter sorrows transmuted into such exquisite blessedness that for very joy of heart we shall have no room for remembering what seemed once intolerable. We shall not recall the nights of pain, the years of enforced inactivity, the failures, the partings, the bereavements. The betrothed will forget the long years of waiting. We turn to the Book of Revelation for further particulars, and there learn that the blessed future can only be explained in negatives. What heaven will really be is as yet hidden, that the surprise may be the greater; but it is certain that each of the elements of present distress will be eliminated. No more sorrow, pain, death, curse, tears, or separating sea. Christ will make, is making, all things new; and, best of all, He is making us new to enjoy them.

THURSDAY, August 5.

"As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you, and ye shall be comforted."—Isa. lxvi. 13.

There is the mother as well as the father in God. We are familiar with the thought of the Divine Fatherhood, let us not forget the Divine Motherhood. All the soft, gentle touches of mother's hand, unlike any other hands; all the tender pleading, yearning affection; all the utter selflessness that never recks what it expends for the objects of its solicitude, are equally in God. But as men get mad with drink and sin and refuse the sweet mother-love which would gather them, until worn-out and weary they come back to it wrecked and forlorn, so we have drifted from God's mother-heart, getting to ourselves pain and loss, and missing its exquisite solace. Fools that we are.

Come back to it, children. Like wayward runaway babes, at the end of the long summer's day, who, shamefaced and sorrowful, hardly dare present themselves to those tender eyes, with their torn clothes and grimy faces; yet have no alternative, and know they may count on the most tender reception. So come back to Him. He will receive, forgive, cleanse, comfort.

A mother's comfort! Estimate it at its full. Remember how your mother comforted you, as a little child, as a man at the death of your young wife, as a maiden when love had disappointed. How much more God! Look out for his gracious surprises, tendernesses, alleviations.

FRIDAY, August 6.

"Then said I, Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak: for I am a child."—Jer. i. 6.

A sense of helplessness is of prime importance as a preparation for ministry. Those who count themselves able to speak will never become God's mouthpiece, those who have no words of their own will be surprised to find how forcible and perennial the stream of holy speech will become through their lips. Though you cannot He can. And your sense of inability is the condition that the Spirit of your Father should speak through you. Of you, too, it shall be true, "the words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself, but the Father that dwelleth in me doeth the works."

How many of the greatest men have been broken under a sense of their insufficiency! That passage in the life of John Livingstone comes back to me as I write. He had spoken at the yearly communion at Kirk o' Shotts on the Sabbath, with marvellous power, and had been requested to preach on the following morning, which he promised to do on condition that his friends should spend the night in prayer. But as he awoke in the morning he was so overwhelmed with the sense of his incompetence that he went three and a-half miles out of the town, to be brought back, however, and to preach so marvellously that 500 souls were converted. He who has had the pleasure of providing these daily homilies can never forget the comfort that this passage gave him in early boyhood, when he anxiously feared that he never would be able to exercise the ministry of the Gospel. He now testifies that God has been faithful.

SATURDAY, August 7.

"They have forsaken Me, the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns that can hold no water."—Jer. ii. 13.

In a fruitful valley a fountain rises, full of living, sparkling, delicious water. But all the able-bodied inhabitants have left their houses, climbing to the rugged rocks above their homes, and are engaged with incredible labour in hewing them out those rocky cisterns which travellers tell us abound in Eastern lands. The heights resound with the ringing notes of hammer and chisel, but when all is done the cisterns are apt to be broken by flaws, and to provide but brackish water at the best.

Such is the picture painted by Jeremiah from life, but how truly it represents the spirit of the world. Leaving God, in whom every thirsty spirit can find satisfaction and thirst-quenching, men with infinite labour hew out for themselves cisterns of gold and silver, cisterns of splendid houses and reputable characters and deeds of alms, cisterns of book-learning. From any of these the hewer thinks he will obtain sufficient supplies to last him for his life. At the best, however, the water is brackish, wanting the sparkle of oxygenated life; hot with the heat of the day; sometimes, also, the cistern is empty through a secret leakage.

Come ye to the fountain. Drink, beloved, abundantly. Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely. The love of God is as rivers of water in a dry place.

Rev. H. B. Macartney, of Melbourne.

AMONG the many acceptable and experienced speakers at last week's Convention in Keswick was Rev. H. B. Macartney, of Melbourne, one of the two exhorters from foreign lands; the other being Dr. Pierson. Mr. Macartney not only bears an honoured name as the son of the late revered Dean of Melbourne, but is held in much esteem on his own account. He is a tower of strength in the ranks of the Evangelical clergy in Australia, and his frequent visits to the old country have brought him into touch with the forward religious movements of our generation, especially the modern movement for the promotion of a deepened spiritual life in the churches.

Instead of furnishing detailed biographical notes of Mr. Macartney's life, we reproduce here, as a sample of his helpful and stimulating utterances, the little address he gave towards the close of the great missionary meeting in the tent at Keswick on Saturday last.

FEEDING ON GOD.

I seem to hear a voice from heaven saying to-day, "Arise ye and depart, for this is not your rest—not the tent, not Keswick, not your own dear homes." I hear a voice from the Friend that sticketh closer than a brother saying, "Arise, let us go hence"; and I hear a voice from Him who is the Lover of our souls saying, "Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away; I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." I hear, too, some sentences, coming one after another, from the lips of our Great Commander, "Arise, ye princes, sons of the King of kings, and anoint the shield." "Arise and cross this Jordan, and take possession of the land that I have given you."

But before we strike the first blow, I hear Him say again, "Arise and eat, for the journey is too great for thee." For all that lies before us, at home and abroad, we need strength; we need to accept the invitation, "Come and dine." We need to eat the Bread of Heaven, and feed on Christ Himself, that He may become part of us indeed, and we part of Him.

The Church of England Thirty-nine Articles commence with these words, "There is one Living and True God, without body, parts, or passions." God has no passions, in the English sense of the word; but, bless his Name, He has a Passion. The first great Passion of his soul is centred on his Son, the Son in whom his soul delighteth. And his next great Passion is round about the poor sinner, and especially the poor saint. Have we a passion like that? If we have not, we must feed on God. The moment we do that, God imparts Himself to us, and we begin to burn and to glow, and to love as God loves, because we have got Him in the veins and in the blood. Then we are able to say, "I place myself at God's disposal for poverty, or pain, or any form of service." When the soul feeds on God we drink in John iii. 16 as part of ourselves, and say, "I so love the world that I give my favourite child." When we feed on God the love of carnal and temporal things withers and dies, and we say:—

"Take my silver and my gold;
Not a mite would I withhold."

This time in which we live is the opportunity of the ages for perfecting holiness in the fear of God. There never was such a supply of Bibles, with their references and their appendices; never such a supply of Christian and holiness literature; never so many conventions; never so many living, moving, breathing human images of the Lord Jesus Christ up and down the world. We are surrounded with an atmosphere of help and teaching for perfecting holiness in the fear of God.

And I think that since I came to Keswick I have seen something that I never saw so perfectly before—

"And this I do find,
We too are so joined,"

that it is not possible to know which is which. In John's Gospel Christ speaks of two dwelling-places that He has: "At that day ye shall know that I am in the Father, and I am in you." Christ is to be in you, believer, as He is in the Father, if you let Him have his own way. A believer said not very long ago: "I am lost whenever I think of Christ and myself as two." The creed of Scripture is that we are one not only in Him, but one with Him; partakers of the same Spirit. And that settles the whole question of our devotion to God.

Let me say that this is also the opportunity of the ages for the people of the whole world. Bishop Thoburn was travelling in India, and came to a great wide plain, where he saw a mountain crowned with a temple. He went and talked with the anchorite who kept it. "How long has it lasted?" he asked. The man told him the number of centuries. "How long will it last?" "Not long; not long," said the aged man. "Why?" said the Bishop. The man sprang to his feet, and, waving his arm right round the horizon, he said "Jesus!"

Dr. Newman Hall on Sunday week preached twice on Hampstead Heath; in the afternoon, with the Salvation Army, on the top; in the evening, with Dr. Horton's Society, at the band-stand, to a very large and orderly concourse.

Chamberi Mission, Madrid.

Pastor C. E. Faithfull writes thanking the two unknown donors of £5 each who kindly responded to his letter of Feb. 11; their gifts were applied to the school purchase fund, which still shows a balance of £350 on the wrong side. Mr. Faithfull says: "On submitting the architect's plans to a reliable builder, I was agreeably surprised to find that a storey can be put above the two built for the small sum of £650, thus enabling me to provide suitable and airy class-rooms for both boys and girls and reduce current expenses by the sum of £40 per annum now paid for rental. Let me lay this matter of the daily Christian education of 400 children upon the heart of your readers, and urge a speedy response so that my time and energies may be wholly directed to the work of the ministry, increasingly responsible as the church's needs become greater with increasing numbers.

"In April, five more confessed their Lord by baptism, one a direct fruit of the boys' school, another a teacher for some years in the schools, and a third the young lady referred to in my last and who found peace on the first Lord's day of this year. In the same month there were three weeks' special services nightly, except Saturdays. I had sought to stir the brethren to seek out individuals rather than trust to bills distributed, thus giving a personal interest in some soul; the result surpassed my expectations, for the chapel was crowded nearly every night, and we know of several who received blessing. One, a fervent Roman Catholic, after attending every meeting and subsequently for several weeks, now testifies to enjoyment of peace with God. At my weekly inquirers' meeting lately two professed to have received blessing the previous Lord's day, and two others have since declared that the Lord has saved their souls.

"Last month the usual annual examinations were, despite intense heat, excellent opportunities for reaching many hundreds of souls, and it would have amply repaid kind donors had they been able to witness the intelligence shown by the large majority; the answers to Scripture questions clearly proved how carefully their Christian teachers had sought to instil the grand doctrines of grace."

Genoa Harbour Mission, begun in 1853, is now a well established institution. It is under the superintendence of the Rev. Donald Miller (4, Via Peschiera, Genoa), assisted by two missionaries, Capt. Clucas and Herr Farnes. Gospel meetings, social gatherings, and reading rooms are in full operation. A large proportion of British sailors visiting the port show their appreciation of the efforts made on their behalf. Of course there is a class who have not yet come under the power of spiritual religion, and who prefer the Friday evening social entertainments to any other gatherings, but it is sought to give a high tone to these latter meetings, and to make them profitable as well as pleasant. The work among Scandinavians, too, has been both interesting and encouraging.

The Red, White and Blue Christian Institute for Lads.—This work in Cumming and Collier streets, Pentonville, is growing a pace. The incursion of a very rough class has caused some anxiety; but the conclusion was soon arrived at that duty demanded effort to link even costers, street roughs, and professional thieves to a higher life. Real improvement has taken place in the behaviour of those who attend. Every night the Institute closes with prayer and a hymn, if possible; and these few minutes' are often utilised for urging the claims of a purer and nobler life. Occasionally, there is a ten minutes' address in the middle of the evening, generally on a Saturday, when the Institute is fullest. Mrs. Dresser and Miss Jay act as hon. secretaries

BIBLE READING

By Prebendary WEBB PEPLOE.

AFTER reading verses 7, 13, 16, 24 and 25 of 1 Sam. xii. the speaker said:—At the commencement of our convention it seems to me an imperative duty that we should pause and consider; that we should stand, if possible, face to face with God in the humble attitude of self-examination, and hear what God the Lord will say concerning us. Then shall He speak to us concerning Himself. When we have heard the voice of the Lord as to our own position and condition in his sight, and as to his power and purposes, it may be we shall be better fitted as followers of the Master to go forth and help the world that lies in darkness and in the shadow of death.

We gather here, as men would say, to seek for a very special blessing from the Lord. Those who have never before attended such gatherings may imagine that from the outset their souls will be uplifted into the highest possible altitude of fellowship with God the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ. They will be painfully, perhaps bitterly, disappointed, for a little while. There can be no uplifting until there has been a descending. The Lord Jesus Christ, in order to be uplifted as man to the throne of God, had to come down to the lowest depths to which man had fallen, and take his place where the sinner should lie. And if the Master was willing to take the place of humility, his servants need take to themselves no sense of shame if they have to come where He once lay for their sins.

In the commencement of our search for blessing, I think the process that God will take will be to bring us very low. It may be we are not yet ready to go so low as He would take us. After some years of watching as to the persons who get to the highest point of blessing, I have no doubt that they are those who are willing to go down into the depths; then God can raise them up to his right hand in the heavenly places, not merely judicially, but experimentally, for power.

WE DO WANT POWER,

but not for its own sake. We do want blessing, but not simply in order to have it. We want power for God's service, and we want blessing in order that we may communicate it to others. We seem to have yet to learn what is God's thought concerning us, and what is our position really, for the most part, in the sight of God. Evil, sadly evil, I believe is the position in which God's people are found; and until they have learned the extent of the evil—what are its causes and its possibilities of removal—they cannot be used of the Lord as He would wish to use them. Therefore we must be very low at first, so as to take the mind of God concerning ourselves.

How shall this mind of God be discovered? It can only be by that which Samuel charges here on Israel—standing still as prisoners at the bar. For that is the exact force of the term used in verses 7 and 16 of this chapter. It is as a prisoner called before the bar to give account of himself. Again, we read that Samuel speaks to the people as one who would reason with them. The term used is that of a judge (as in so many lands other than our own), taking on himself the process of acting as prosecutor, who examines the character and conduct of the prisoner until he has searched him to his depths. So Samuel takes the attitude of the judge and says: "Stand still and look, prisoner at the bar, that I may search you, while I rehearse before you the righteous acts (or as it is in the margin 'the benefits') which the Lord hath done towards you." That is Samuel's first interruption.

The second interruption is in verse 13, where he calls them to pause again—"Now therefore"—I wish we could observe the "therefores" of God; they are amongst the most instructive of almost any portions of his Holy Word. God designs by his interruptions to teach men something, and they ought to be willing to hear what He will say. So here, taking Samuel as the voice of God to the people, we find three of these interruptions in this one short address. The third of these interruptions is in verse 16, "Now, therefore, stand and see."

As we look at these verses what are the thoughts they suggest? We cannot fail to see in the first case that Samuel is calling on Israel to realise

THEIR OWN POSITION IN REGARD TO SIN.

Remembering the works of God, he asks them to consider whether they have returned to the Lord anything like what He had a right to expect, by a process of gratitude and devotion corresponding to the righteous acts He had wrought on their behalf. In the second case the prophet is calling upon them to behold the consequences of their sin in the determination to take human guidance in place of Divine guidance. They had determined to have a human mediator, or leaning-post, as it were. God granted their desire, and now behold the effect of it. In the third case they were to stand and see what the Lord would do. I do not think it refers so much to the thunderings by which the Lord terrified and convicted them. It is a calling upon them to behold the whole of the future.

So these three great interruptions of Samuel's argument are, first, in reference to the past, second, in reference to the present, and third, in regard to the future. He sums it all up by saying, "Only fear the Lord and serve Him." It is the voice of God that speaks that one little beautiful word "Consider." That is what we are here specially for this morning, and I invite your humble attention to these voices of the Lord in order that we may hear what He would say to us. To consider is the last thing that men are prepared to do in any age; and in this peculiar age it is perhaps the utmostly last thing that men can be persuaded to do—to stand still. The rush of the age is so great that even the most faithful servant of God has to acknowledge, partly with shame and partly of necessity, that men do not stand still to hear God speaking. It is idle to say it cannot be done; it must be done. If our souls are to be blessed, and if we are to be vessels in any degree meet for the Master's use, it is an absolute necessity; just as much as air is a necessity for breathing and health. In the midst of the rush in which we live, no matter how great the strain, or how severe the distress, even the most hurried businesses claim from their masters and workers times for pause. Machinery demands it. Balance-sheets require it. Half-yearly audits are known, I suppose, even by the most over-pressed business men here. There is not one who would dare to expect that his earthly business could prosper if there were no times for striking a balance and seeing what the remainder is that is left.

So it is in regard to spiritual matters. Every one of us, not mad or foolish, must understand that necessity is laid upon us not merely, as Paul said, to preach the Gospel, but to pause before God, and let him speak to us. It is for that you have come to Keswick really, however unconsciously. It is the mercy of God that has brought you hither, not merely to crave a great blessing, with an emotional determination setting your face towards it. No; the Lord has brought us here, I believe (including the speaker) to pause for a time before Him, that we may hear Him speaking to us—first, it may be to ourselves most bitterly. For God can write bitter things against us without crushing us, as man would; as man does. If you are prepared to hear you will sit still and think. Have we ever thought what the purpose of our life really is—that we are all simply placed at school for a while? It is a process of education carried out in our mortal life on earth, that we may be prepared at a certain time to pass from school to home, and so to work with our Father in his business through all eternity. Did you ever hear of a child who could learn his lesson without being still? Did you ever know a child who could take in the teaching it was meant to, from book or master's voice, without listening to the things to be taught? It is all summed up in Psalm xlvi. 10: "Be still and know that I am God. I will be exalted among the heathen. I will be exalted in the earth." You will not get a blessing till you come to the point where you are prepared for God to be exalted and to be known as the power unto salvation in every sense of that holy word.

When we look at the wonderful passage in 1 Sam., how beautifully there come before us the simple methods that God will take to bring about blessing to a large gathering of people. The nation is assembled in the presence of the preacher. Samuel is not here as a priest, remember. We need no priestly intercessor now; we have One above, and we want no other. It is very striking to observe in God's Book how some of the grandest reforms were not wrought through the priests. We are told in the present day that there is no other way by which men can draw near to God than the human agent, the priest. But God takes the boy Samuel as he ministers before the Lord, and makes him his blessed messenger to the people, because he had been faithful to the trust committed to him. Samuel is one of the few men in the pages of human history of whom no direct fault is told. He stands out faithful as a minister of God. And let me say (though it may put the speaker to shame this morning) that we shall never carry power towards our fellow-men further than the life we are living before the Lord. We must be real to our convictions if we would be a blessing to men round about us.

God gives his servant a definite message, and then he is to go and deliver to the people what God the Lord has said to him. It is striking that in these days this should come before us so prominently. Whence comes the power to impress the human heart? Not from the human agent. It has often been said that the speakers at these Conventions are by no means the most highly intellectual, or the greatest orators of the day, in any sense whatever. Yet the Divine message has come to the world with power. When some men are putting the priestly function before that of the prophet—the utterance of God's message—strange to say we find that exactly in proportion as the priestly office is exalted, people retire from the preaching of the word in our congregations. Where there is much of a priestly performance, half the congregation, I am told, leave before the sermon commences. I pray you to remember that it was by the message of God, through his humble servant, that a mighty change was wrought in the whole nation, as appears here. The means that God deigns to adopt are: first, the messenger fitted to deliver the message, then the message faithfully delivered,

COST WHAT IT MAY TO THE MAN.

And now as to the message itself. The message given by Samuel as it refers to the past was, "Now, therefore, stand still, that I may reason with you before the Lord, of all the righteous acts of the Lord which He did to you and to your fathers." Will you tell me now what possible claim you can have upon God at this moment unsatisfied already in his mighty provision? You say, "I am his creature." True. But has He neglected his creature? Has He ever left you without full provision for every lawful need and requirement? "I am his helpless fallen creature." True. You were born in to the world in that condition. And the careless, thoughtless worldling of to-day sometimes says: "If He allowed me to be born into the world with sin that is no fault on my part." Can you who are met here to-day as God's people say that He has made no provision for your spiritual need as a helpless ruined creature? The God of love is a God of omnipotence, and the God of omnipotence is a God of love. Has He not made provision in Christ Jesus for every spiritual need? You know that He has. Have you taken the Christ? So you cannot bring forward a single point in which your being has a claim on Him as the God of providence, or of grace, or of love, or of omnipotence, for which He has not made full provision.

What return have you given unto the Lord? Hear what Samuel says concerning Israel: "When they forgat the Lord their God, He sold them into the hand of Sisera, and into the hand of the Philistines, and into the hand of the king of Moab, and they fought against them" (ver. 9). "And prevailed," we might add, with reverence. So it has been with us. How we have come under the power of the Canaanite, of the Philistines, and of Moab—the Canaanites meaning, I think, in their typical significance, the great forces of evil—principalities and powers in heavenly places; the evils of the world all around us being the Philistines, and the workings of the flesh signified by Moab. These are the things that have overcome God's people. Because they forgat the Lord their God, He must sell them into the hands of their enemies. He called you in youth. He pleaded with you in your young manhood and womanhood, yet He has had to sell you.

I WONDER WHAT IT COSTS GOD

to sell his children? It must fill Him with pain and sorrow inexpressible, I think. "The heart of the Eternal is most wonderfully kind." You could not sell your child to-day for nought, could you? You could not sell him for money, could you?

Yet see what we are told in the next verse: "They cried unto the Lord." That is the beginning of the Keswick Convention. "We have sinned because we have forsaken the Lord... but now deliver us out of the hand of our enemies, and we will serve Thee." You came to a convention; you got stirred up, and confessed and pleaded for blessing, and He gave deliverance. But then came a fall again. You said: "I see that others have human provision, human governors—something of the earth, in fact, which they have taken in place of the Divine. I, too, will put my trust in the things of earth."

Ye who have been with me for twenty years at Conventions here, have you never done what I have done—forgotten the real secret of the Divine life and looked again to some earthly power? That is taking a thing like the land of Ammon. Has it been the Higher Criticism, or science, or missionary work, with intellectuality as the power thereof? God knows; but I fear, if we are honest to-day, and look back upon the past, we shall have to say, as Israel had to say, that the heart was not content to rest in God alone. No wonder it has brought us into trouble.

God gave the Israelites the finest man in the whole nation as king; he was a head and shoulders taller than any other, and more beautiful perhaps than any other. We speak not now of the low carnal appetites that rule over the man, but of some beautiful earthly thing, some great Saul that is above all others. And I think that perhaps the "Higher Criticism" is the human Saul of to-day, upon which, more than any other, God's people are resting as a power for deliverance, instead of taking the Lord and his Word alone. 'Look to me," says God. Are you content to set up man's judgment, and say that because the environment of the second part of Isaiah betokens to your mind a Babylonish surrounding, therefore there must have been a second Isaiah? That is no reason whatever. God could throw his servant forward two hundred years into another environment by his Spirit in prophecy. Oh, to take God as our God alone. That is what He is demanding now. Are you satisfied? I speak in all humility, but I have never known a "higher critic" yet, calmly resting and

REJOICING IN THE LORD.

I trust I am not slandering my brethren. I do not say there are not such, but I say I have never known one who could testify of that joy he once knew of the blessed Jesus. If we take Christ alone, then the study of the Book will become, as God meant Saul to be, a blessing to us.

Now let us take the last passage. As you are convinced of sin and learn that Saul, however beautiful, cannot deliver, then God speaks and says: "Stand and see this great thing which the Lord will do before your eyes." He will cause the voice of the Lord to be heard. This phrase, "the voice of the Lord," is seven times spoken of in Psalm xxix. It speaks with the thunder; it is heard in the wilderness; it breaketh the mountains. I ask whether God's voice has not been heard in England lately. He allowed us to have grand, blessed rejoicings at our Jubilee festival. Now He has sent us this beautiful word from Rudyard Kipling, "Lest we forget." Did you read it in The Times under the Queen's letter on Saturday? "Lest we forget; lest we forget." Oh! brethren, God has not only been speaking to us with the voice of the poet. He has spoken to us with the voice of the thunder in India, by famine and pestilence and earthquake. Is there no voice all over the land like the thunder—not meaning to crush or destroy, but to warn us? God could restore the wheat broken down by thunder and the lightning and hail that came with it. He has spoken to make us think. Then he turns round and says in the opening of the Convention, "Fear not; ye have done all this wickedness; yet turn not aside from following the Lord, but serve God with all your heart. For the Lord will not forsake his people, for his great name's sake, because it hath pleased the Lord to make you his people." Thank Him this morning that it hath pleased Him to make you his people. Take Him at his word. Instead of turning aside again to anything however beautiful or attractive, or apparently powerful, in others, take the Lord and stand firm for him. You shall find that He will bless you and make even your king, though not one of his appointing originally, a blessing, so long as he does not come between you and your God.

Pride in the Christian.

By Rev. CHARLES INWOOD.

"All of you gird yourselves with humility to serve one another; for God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble" (1 Pet. v. 5, R.V.).

It is very humbling to remind ourselves that these words were spoken, not to rebels, but to Christians and Christian workers. They deal with an evil more subtle more persistent and more perilous, than any other in the life and service of the average Christian worker to-day. We are accustomed to speak very strongly of sins of the flesh, and by all possible means to warn our fellows against the deadly mischief which they bring to body and to soul. We ask others to pledge themselves against the sins of intemperance and impurity. We plead with them in the name of Jesus to take up and to maintain an attitude of stern and uncompromising hostility to these and all kindred evils. And may God keep us faithful in our protest against the sins of the flesh, especially the sins that mark our own luxurious and selfish civilisation. But if there be one sin more than another which may be truly called Satanic, it is not a sin of the flesh; it is the sin of pride. The sin which tore the crown of purity and bliss from the brow of Satan was not a sin of the flesh, like sensuality, or murder, or drunkenness; it was a sin of the spirit. It was the refusal to yield the homage that is always due from the creature to the Creator. It ought not, therefore, to surprise us that pride is perhaps the great sin and curse and weakness of our Christian life to-day. I know we are told that even holiness makes its possessors proud. Well, the holiness which makes a man proud is the holiness of the devil, and not the holiness of God the Holy Ghost. No man is entirely sanctified in whom there is the slightest welcome or the slightest place given to the smallest measure of pride. Do not let the devil deceive us. It is no wonder, therefore, that when Augustine was asked what were the three most important things in the Christian life, he said: "The first is humility; the second is humility; the third is humility!"

I want you to glance at some of the forms which pride assumes in the life and service of Christian people. I acknowledge at once that this means pain to the speaker and pain to the hearers; but we must not in this Convention shrink from the probing knife because of the pain it may give us. I am speaking in obedience to a very solemn call and command from God Himself. And He knows I desire to speak as much to my own weak, wayward heart, as to the heart of any brother or sister in this large congregation. Let us ask God to shine into our hearts, and show us where there is pride in us, and what its form may be.

It is not necesssry to stay even a moment to deal with what one must call that mark our Christian life and service—what one has felicitously called "the pride of race, or the pride of face, or the pride of place." There are other, and perhaps more subtle forms of pride, which, in God's name, I would desire to discover to you. Take the realm of character. Do we know what it is to hear a secret voice bringing before us our own intellectual and moral qualities in such a way as to be a temptation to pride; perhaps through the lips of those around us, or perhaps through the direct suggestion of the great enemy of souls. We are reminded of the strong points in our character. People will come to you and say: "You have force; you have strength of conviction; you have great courage; you are a born organiser; or an indefatigable worker." Or they point out the intellectual and moral qualities that make up your character, and you find, unknown to any but God, that there is a secret inflation of spirit, as these qualities which God has given you are thus brought up before your view.

How much more true, perhaps, this is of what one must call our spiritual character. How ready the tempter is to point out what he tells us is strong in us spiritually; how he will remind us that we have a deeper spiritual life than others who do not come to the Convention; more spiritual power in our service and in prayer than others in our congregation or sphere of work; that we have a deeper insight into the deep things of God. These things that make up our spiritual character may become subtle temptations to pride in the secret recesses of our hearts. Should there be one particle of pride of that kind in our hearts this morning, I pray that God the Holy Spirit, the one and only true Revealer, will discover it to us in all its peril and all its guilt.

But let me come a little closer, talking as I am to Christians and Christian workers. What about this prevalent lust for leadership and authority and prominence in Christian work? How many Christian people to-day are and when we get them they breed a secret inner satisfaction. Then we begin to expect the deference and unchallenged submission of others. We expect our co-workers to consult us about everything; and sometimes open anger, or, at all events, secret chagrin, comes because we are not immediately and sufficiently recognised by those round about us. Do you remember how slighted you felt, and how secretly in your spirit you chafed against it, when you were set aside for somebody else; when you were not put in the chair at a public meeting, or someone else was asked to fill the pulpit; when you were not asked to teach in the Sunday-school, but somebody else whom you thought intellectually and spiritually your inferior was entrusted with the task; when you were passed by, and someone else elected president or secretary of your local Christian Endeavour Society, your local Y.W.C.A., or some other department of work. I know of a flourishing Christian Endeavour Society that was utterly wrecked when the first election of officers came round. All this is a real peril, and it will play terrible havoc with our power in God's service if we do not listen to Him. When the House of Commons was being reconstructed, a painter sent in a request to the authorities to this effect: he asked permission to paint one of the large frescoes. He went on to say that if that could not be granted, he would like permission to paint one of the small frescoes; and he added that, if they could not grant that request, he would like permission to mix the paints for the man who did the painting. Oh, that a spirit like that might fall upon us—a willingness to let anybody else take the places that will attract attention; glad to be the least of those who serve others, as our dear adorable Master stooped to serve the lowest and weakest of his disciples.

Shall I say a word about the realm of success? How often pride comes in there, too. Here is someone who has been successful in his business. He began life as a poor man. By industry, indefatigable work, and attendance to business, and by the wise employment of the gifts God had given him, the man has wealth, position, and power. The Christian man I am thinking of stands to-day and surveys his position and contrasts it with that of twenty-five years ago; and in his heart, if not on his lips, there comes the word, "Is not this Great Babylon that I have built?" I have seen Christian men actually, in one's presence, swell with inflation and pride, "You know I am a self-made man." If the devil is tempting anyone in that fashion and in that direction this morning, let me ask: How much have you really contributed to the sum total of your present success? Who gave you the father and mother who trained you to love work and believe in God? Who gave you the brain-power and the physical strength to do the work that has contributed so largely to your success? If there is a Christian man here who has been prospered in temporal things, I plead with you, be on your guard. Thousands of men are going down, because of this sort of temptation to pride.

Now, specially, a word about success in Christian work. It is a sad thing to suggest or even to think that that should minister to pride, but there is no blinking the fact. Here is a man who is an author. God has given him power to influence tens and hundreds of thousands of people whom he has never seen and never can see. He writes his book. It is criticised in the public press, and there is a secret resentment in his heart against the criticisms, either just or unjust, that appear. Or, perhaps, the book "takes," as we express it; then there is the temptation to think his book superior to one written by another man on the same subject. Or perhaps you are a teacher in the Sunday-school, and somehow your class is always a large one, and God blesses and uses you to keep hold of the scholars. Beware lest you begin to be proud that you have a large class and a growing one, while some other teacher has a dwindling one. It is sadly possible to be proud of success in a work like that. I am sure there are many here who publicly proclaim the Gospel and engage in evangelistic work. What shall I say of the possibility of pride in that realm of service? What of the insatiable desire among many such workers to tabulate the number of converts and to record their work in the religious press; of the efforts to get someone else to call public attention to one's work? I once heard an evangelist, in the presence of a large congregation, contrast his own work and success with the success of Mr. Moody. He told the large congregation that his converts stood far better than Mr. Moody's did. I felt as if I had been stabbed to the heart, and could not help asking what the Master must think.

I want to speak of another realm which perhaps more than any other ministers to pride—the reputation that grows out of success. Have you ever paused to remember that the very desire for a reputation is itself an indication of the presence of pride; and the desire for a reputation leads you to seek that which will create it, and foster and perpetuate and increase it. It will lead you to choose lines of action, and adopt methods of work, and put forth efforts which show that a reputation is the goal towards which you are moving. Then there is the reputation—it is dreadful almost to talk about it—of being

A SPECIALIST IN CHRISTIAN WORK.

You have made a special study of some doctrine, or of some particular method in Christian work. People begin to call you a specialist, and defer to you, and treat you as a sort of authority on the matter. You are asked to write essays and deliver addresses on this, that, or the other, to large congregations. There is a serious peril behind this name of being a specialist in any department of Christian work. I do not mean to say that a man must not be a specialist. The ground is so broad to-day that no man's energy can cover the whole; but if God has called you to the study and knowledge and advocacy of special truth, to the championship of a special cause, take care lest pride get into the hidden places of the heart, so that it will ultimately paralyse all that you would accomplish for God.

Or perhaps it is this: Do you know what it is to smart when people in your circle, or people in your church, call you "a faddist" because you believe in holiness, or in the inerrancy of Holy Scripture, or in Divine healing, or in the near approach of the advent of Jesus Christ to reign? A kind of twinge goes through you as though you had been hurt, because somebody called you by the opprobrious name of faddist. That twinge indicates that pride is living within you. Or perhaps you are proud of your loyalty to evangelical truth when others, who went to college with you have drifted away into error; or proud of being a loyal Churchman, or a staunch Nonconformist, of being true to this, that, or the other department of public life or service. You have got the public ear, and you draw a crowd when your name is advertised. Oh! there is peril behind it—the peril of the reputation you may acquire. You may perhaps be proud of being called "a safe man" in the teaching of holiness, or proud of being looked upon as a free lance in Christian work. One of the best things that could happen to us all to-day would be the utter destruction of all man-made reputations. Oh, that God would send down such a fire of the Holy Ghost upon us in this Convention as shall burn up utterly all the reputations of speakers and workers and people. We should then step out in a liberty to which some of us are now strangers.

I would like to have spoken of the pride that springs out of our sacrificing. There is such a thing. We can even get for God and truth, our support of foreign missions, and so on. We can be proud of "my gifts, my work, my experience, my view of things, my convictions." But the time is nearly gone. These are some of the things that rob our testimony of its power; these are the things that cause nine-tenths of the rivalries, the jealousies, the frictions, the differences, the divisions that mar and paralyse Christian work at home, aye, and abroad in the mission-field. I pray God that He may discover them to us. I do not think there is any other peril so subtle and so far-reaching in its deadly effect on Christian life and service as this pride. That being so, do you wonder that God resists it? He resists the proud worker, and it is well He does. He might destroy instead of resist. He did so with Nebuchadnezzar, when He said, "Is not this great Babylon that I have built?" One sentence; but God stretched out his finger, and in one moment that imperial brain had shrivelled into idiocy. It is love that leads God to resist us in our pride as we work for Him. He wants to discover the truth to us, and to limit the evil in us, to save us from our pride, to prick the bubble of our reputation, to burn up the dross. I do not care how humbling the process may be. Oh, that God, here and now, by the fire of the Holy Ghost would cleanse our hearts from all secret pride. May He bring us low enough down to be filled, low enough down to be used, low enough down to go anywhere, and do anything, and suffer anything for the glory of Him whose we are, and whom we serve.

Thoroughness.

By Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR.

I have been led very strongly to speak of something that for some of us may lie before full consecration, In Ephesians we are told that Christ loved the Church and gave Himself for it, that He might sanctify it to Himself. The rendering of the word "sanctify" there, is to set apart for God, and the rendering of the passage is that He sets it apart after having cleansed it with the washing of water by the Word. This cleansing is something that precedes consecration. I want to speak of the need of being thorough in dealing with God about this matter of cleansing.

In Jer. xlviii. 10 there is a very solemn, searching verse, "Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully; that keepeth back his sword from blood." The Bible is an exceedingly thorough book. One reason why it is so disliked by many is that it is so thorough. It is altogether an extreme book. It does not advocate compromises. It says, without scruple, "The wicked shall be turned into hell"; "He that believeth not shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him;" "Ye cannot serve God and mammon;" "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." It gives absolutely no sympathy to that which so many people desire to be—half-and-half. And I feel that this mark of thoroughness is a mark of its Divine origin. For surely God is absolutely thorough. He does not leave his work half finished.

This comes out very markedly in our text. You remember its historical application. It refers to the word of judgment against Moab. We read a good deal about Moab. He was a relation to Israel, but like other close relations in actual life, he was a most troublesome relation. All through their history he was a thorn in the side of Israel. In connection with Balaam he had a part in the seduction of the people from walking in the ways of God. Then when Moab pretended to be friendly to Israel, the friendliness was more dangerous than the enmity. After the reign of David, Moab is always represented as the irreconcilable foe of Israel; it was constantly harassing and troubling the nation. At last the word of God went out that Moab was to be destroyed, and the Chaldeans were appointed to this work of judgment. They were

COMMANDED TO SLAY AND SPARE NOT.

They were called to the work with this tremendous warning: "Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully (or, in the margin, 'negligently'), that keepeth back his sword from blood."

What Moab was to Israel, sin and self are to us—closely related, and working in our very innermost life. God says to us that we are to make no terms with sin or with the self life; and that we are to be absolutely thorough in our dealing with them. As long as sin exists within us we are not to be content. We are to fight to the very death against this evil thing. And He pronounces this solemn curse against those who will not do the work thoroughly.

This should come as a word of warning to many of us in these conventions. I fear that we deal with this matter of sin very negligently. I fear lest these conventions for the deepening of spiritual life should have the effect of shallowing it. It is of vast importance that we should ask God to teach us the need there is of deliverance, of cleansing, of salvation from the hidden sin that lies lurking within us.

There are three directions in which we need to be convinced of our negligence in this matter of dealing with sin. The first is our unwillingness to search for sin in our lives. Did you ever notice how severely God called for thorough searching on the part of his people? Read about idolatry in Deuteronomy xiii. 12, and you will find that Israel was commanded that no idol and no idolater should remain in the land. No doubt it was troublesome to search, but that was no excuse. They were to be so thorough in the extermination of idolatry that the very rumour that it existed was to be the signal for setting on foot an urgent inquiry. In connection with the cleansing of the houses in view of the Passover, God also commanded a most thorough search for leaven. The house was to be searched with a lighted candle, and every corner examined, so that no leaven should remain in the house.

He demands like thoroughness of us in the matter of sin, but our negligence often amounts to a refusal to engage in the search.

THERE IS SOMETHING TERRIBLY SAD

about the unwillingness of some people to set themselves to the work of self-examination. We will not listen to the Apostle, as he says, "Examine and prove your own selves."

There are ever so many motives that lead men to this negligence. Some will not honestly engage in the work because they are afraid if they do they will find that they are not Christians at all. You come up to the Convention, and you take it for granted that you are a Christian. You have at the same time an uncomfortable feeling that if you examined yourself in the presence of God you would discover you have never come to Christ at all. So you avoid the search. In these conventions there are lots of unconverted people; those who have not learned the first lesson, and who need to come humbly as sinners to the feet of Jesus Christ to receive pardon for sin.

There are others who avoid this thorough search because they know there are things in their lives they would have to remove. A cursory negligent self-examination they can get through, but if it were thorough it would mean immense change in their lives. There is perhaps a poor relative whom they have neglected; they do not want to be reminded of that relative, and so they will not enter honestly on the search. They would in that case have to care for the neglected one, or else give up a profession of Christ. Or there is something in the life that you do not want to be reminded of and that keeps you back from self-examination.

Others will not engage in this search, not because of anything that they are conscious of in their life. They shrink because they are afraid they would discover something that would humble them in their own eyes and the eyes of those round about. This is a thing that besets convention-goers with special force. Those who have at some former Convention received a great blessing from God may have wandered away since then, and they would need to go over the cleansing again. Others shrink because such a thorough search would drive them absolutely to give themselves over to God, and they are not ready for that.

But that is not all. Negligence is seen also in our

UNWILLINGNESS TO FACE THE SIN.

We search, and in some hidden corner we find a bit of leaven. Then we cover it up and say nothing about it. We do not drag it out into the light and confess it there and then. Some look into their lives and they say: "It is quite true that I have a very sharp temper, but then that is not a sin. It is a constitutional infirmity inherited from my great-grandfather"; or it is "the result of long bodily illness." They will not confess it. Some are given to the habit of worry, distrusting God as to his power to keep, or murmuring at the straitness of their lot or the hardness of their circumstances. "That is no sin," they say. "How can you expect a man in business like myself to avoid worry? If you were in my place you would worry too." In other lives there is some self-indulgence, which they do not regard as a sin—excess in eating or in dress, smoking, etc. So there is an unwillingness to confess and condemn in God's presence the things that we are conscious, down in our hearts, keep God's power and glory out of our lives. I am convinced that the reason why God does not seem able to lift some of us to an eminently higher knowledge of Himself is that we are not honest and thorough in this matter of condemning the sins that are revealed to us.

Our negligence appears still further in our unwillingness to slay. How many of us keep our swords back from blood. The thing is there staring us in the face. We know it to be wrong, to be sin; yet it is not put away. We delay and we dally. Some of my hearers are doing that at this very moment. God has laid on your heart that quarrel to be mended, but you say "Not yet; I will do it when I get home." Do not keep back your sword from blood. Or, you are convinced that you should make an apology to the man you have wronged. "I know I ought to do it, it is pride that is keeping me back; but I will do it the next chance he gives me." Keep not back your sword from blood. It may be some act or habit of self-indulgence; some worldly practice. You feel condemned about it, and you say: "I will give it up at the new year." You are keeping back your sword from blood. As you sit there before God, say: "O God, in thy strength the sword shall be put out and the evil thing shall be slain here and now." That is the thoroughness that God wants, in searching, in confessing, and in slaying the sin that He shall reveal.

Do you know what the curse is, spoken of in the text? The first element in it is

THE CURSE OF BLINDNESS.

God asks us to deal definitely with sin in our life, and to put it away. We say: "No; this is too severe; I cannot deal thoroughly with it." What will happen? After to-night you will become less capable of discovering the sin in your life. Perhaps you will go away thinking it is all well with you, though everyone round about you sees most fatal inconsistencies. If there is anything that I dread in my own experience it is that sort of blindness. God make us intensely sharpsighted to the evil in our lives. God has such a lot to do with us all yet. If we turn away from the dealing of his Holy Spirit the curse of blindness begins to fall. Every minister of Christ sees it. I have watched it in my own congregation. I see people come up to a point when God says: "Be thorough, and I will lead you into all blessing." The soul refuses, and from that hour goes back. The most appalling blindness falls on it.

A second element in the curse is that of callousness. This is an infinitely worse one than the other. You will come to say, "I do not care." I do not know anything more awful than for a soul to be brought to that. There are those who come to Conventions; they go through these holy days; God deals with them, and calls them to absolute thoroughness in consecration and search. But they do not obey the call. They go back to their homes and churches, and they find that the preaching that used to move them does not touch their hearts at all. Instead of their spiritual life being benefited by a visit to this holy and beautiful place, a spiritual blight comes over them. It all arises from negligence in responding to the call of God. That is why I feel that such gatherings are so solemn, and in their way so dangerous. It would be infinitely better never to hear the call to full consecration than, having heard it, to despise it. God wants absolute thoroughness and honesty. Let us get down before Him on our faces, and ask for grace to obey. Then do not be afraid of any revelation of the sin within you that God may give. Because "where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." You will hear, as the days go on, of the blood of Jesus Christ that cleanseth us from all sin.

Grieving the Holy Spirit.

By Rev. S. A. SELWYN.

"Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye were sealed unto the day of redemption." (Eph. iv. 30. R.V.)

To whom were these words written? Were they written to people outside the kingdom or to people inside; to members of the Church at Ephesus, or to those around it? Of course, to those who were members of the church. The text says they were people who were sealed by the Holy Spirit unto the day of redemption. Yet of course the words are applicable to those outside the boundaries of the kingdom, so they are applicable to us all this morning, whether we belong to the Lord Jesus Christ by real living union, or whether we are outside the boundary still.

Very deeply important words they are. There is a matter that has been puzzling the Christian Church a great deal during the past few months: How is it that with all the organisation and hard work going on in our country and beyond its boundaries, there are not more results to be seen? We are living in the dispensation of the Holy Spirit. People are asking for more of the Spirit. The windows of heaven are opened; we have not to ask God to open them; it is our hearts that are not fully open; some hearts indeed have been up till now closed to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Well, then, something is going on wrongly. There is much toil and even much prayer, and, so far as human eyes can see, little result. When we hear of two or three conversions in our church we are more than glad, but almost astonished. Ought this so to be? We thank God with all our hearts when even one soul is brought to love Jesus Christ by the power of the Holy Spirit; but what about all the others? Many have received the Lord, but what about the multitudes who are getting harder and harder? There is not a minister of the Gospel here who has not to bewail the fact that whilst there are some few joining the ranks of Christ, there are many who go regularly to church and give sometimes to the utmost of their power, but who have never yet given their hearts to Christ.

How is this? Does the text give the answer to the puzzle? Can it be that as individuals and as churches we are grieving the Holy Spirit in any way? I cannot help thinking that it is so, more or less. God forbid I should say a word against any other minister here or anywhere else; but let me put out a few lines of thought so that we may ask ourselves whether it is not possible that some here may, in their ministerial work, be grieving the Holy Spirit of God. Is He not grieved by the formality He sees in many churches? I am not speaking of one denomination more than another: here we are 'all one in Christ Jesus," thank God. Formality is working like

A DRY ROT IN ALL DENOMINATIONS.

It does not depend on Prayer-book prayers, or on "prayers from the heart," as they are called. We can be equally formal in one way or another. We have heard prayers spun off the reel—sometimes with the Book and sometimes without—that were sadly formal. We have heard chapters in the Bible read seemingly without any thought except one—a speedy getting to the end of it, and turning to the next thing. We need to remember as Christian workers that, however much the preacher may be in earnest about his message, the reading of God's Word is the part of the service from which one ought to expect most, for it is all God's Word, and the other is in great measure man's word. But, alas! how formal is the reading of the lesson oftentimes. Does not this grieve the Spirit of God and cause Him to remove his power? As we think of the formality of our service to-day it is a marvel that the Spirit has done what He has done among us.

Then in our singing, do we not grieve the Spirit by bringing unspiritual men and women into our choirs and placing them at our organs? How can we hope that God will use unclean vessels in his pure and glorious service? If these things be wrong, ought they not to be given up, at any cost, at once; not postponing it, but doing it in our hearts to-day?

Then does not worldliness grieve the Spirit? Alas, we see it inside as well as outside our churches. That most important principle, spiritual men for spiritual service, ought to be carried out all through the churches. There ought to be spiritual officers, spiritual churchwardens, spiritual deacons, as well as spiritual ministers, Sunday-school teachers, district visitors, temperance workers. Is this so? I remember going, not long ago, to a northern seaport town. Walking along the road, I saw the announcement, "Grand Bazaar." One feels inclined in such a case to walk on the other side of the road; but there was the name of the church in large red letters, and underneath Mdlle. So-and-so (I forget her name, thank God), a noted ballet-dancer, who was going to bring in the money to the church fund by her exercises! Is there not an awful lot of worldliness in the Church? What I have mentioned is only a type of what is going on—an exaggerated one, perhaps; but at all events, it is a fact for which I can vouch with my own eyes. This worldliness is from the churches of our land. How can the Holy Spirit be anything but grieved at such work? If a church is built on such foundations, how many souls can the Spirit save in it? I repeat, it is a marvel that we are allowed to see as much fruit as we see within our boundaries.

Once more, is not the Holy Spirit grieved by the disunion that He sees within our ranks? Yes, and even after a glorious mission you will find too frequently that the devil has been allowed to get a little wedge in between two workers who have been jealous of each other. Ministers and other officers have to be very careful not to allow Miss So-and-so to be put with someone else, lest they fall out. My experience is that after a mission the devil seems to be stronger—he is certainly more cunning—than ever, and more busy, because so many may have been taken from the ranks of his followers and have gone across the line. These are only some of the awful ways in which the Holy Spirit must be grieved. And again one says: Thank God, for his love and patience in allowing us to see any results at all when such things are going on.

The chapter tells us of another way in which the Holy Spirit is grieved, referring more to personal work and individual grieving of the Spirit. "Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour." Remember, these words were spoken to Christian people. The very statement of them causes wonder that such a verse should be written of Christians; and yet if we have walked along the highway of life for any length of time, we can see how necessary is the warning. Is it true that Christians need to be told not to lie? It was true then, and it is true now. There are social lies, political lies, and business lies, being told by professing Christians. There are men and women whom we have met, and of whom we are told, "Be very careful what you say to that person. It will be passed on and added to"; and the addition is the lie. There are social lies, as when you hear people using all sorts of insincere expressions one to the other. There is no feeling of real affection, for instance, between two ladies who may be heard saying to each other, "I am so glad to see you." It is a falsehood. You go and ring the door-bell at the house of some society lady, who professes to be a Christian, and there will perhaps be the reply that she is "not at home"; it is not true, and it ought never to have been said. Then when people get round the five o'clock tea-table, are the things they say about their neighbours always true? Let us hope not. Surely we need to be more truthful to each other. These are times when people seem to abandon themselves to forgetfulness that they are God's children, and therefore God's servants. These things must grieve the Holy Spirit infinitely. People go from the reading or repeating of some idle tale to do some bit of Christian work; can they be surprised if God does not bless them in it?

And there are political lies, in which both sides of politics are equally bad. There is no use turning from one to the other, thinking that there is truth to be found. Thank God there are many who speak the truth absolutely—socially and politically—but how the Spirit must be grieved by the political lies that are bandied about up and down the country

AND THERE ARE BUSINESS LIES.

Some will say, "What do parsons know about that?" We know more than some people think. We admit we are not business men as a body. But sometimes Christian young men or young women, assistants in shops, come to us—perhaps for guidance after they have received some real spiritual blessing—and they will say, "Sir, can you find us any other sort of position than that in which we are?" "Why? Cannot you be Christian men and women in your business where you are?" "At our business we have to lie or else step out." When such things are said time after time by different people who do not know each other, and in different towns, must there not be some truth in it? Yes, there are business lies and business liars. Need we be astonished, in view of these things, that God is grieved, and that He refuses to bless our work.

In verse 27 we find another warning: "Neither give place to the devil." In other words, we are not to yield for one moment to the evil one. Temptation [of itself is no sin. We must be tempted and tried right on to the very end, but we need not yield to it, even for one moment. He has made grand provision. We are told in his blessed Word that He will help us and give us the filling of the Spirit to counteract the powers of evil. The flesh is pulling one way; the Spirit is pulling in the other; and we get the victory through the love and power of the Lord Jesus. In this passage we find the ways in which, in little things, it may be, we find ourselves yielding to the power of the Evil one, so that the Spirit is grieved, and there is no blessing in life or service.

Take verse 28:—"Let him that stole steal no more." That is strong language, and we may be inclined to say: "Well, we have not got many thieves in our churches." We may not have; but is it not possible for people to stand up in church and say, "I believe in Jesus Christ our Lord"—we go right on through the life of Jesus, and we believe it all, but all the time we are stealing something from the very One in whom we say we trust. Is not that robbing? It is quite possible that we are taking what belongs to someone else; and yet we say we are believing people. Is not the Spirit grieved in this way?

WE ROB A MAN OF HIS REPUTATION,

perhaps, by a shrug of the shoulder—taking away the thing that he feels that he must have whatever else he loses, else how will he live with any credit? Let us not steal anything from that dear Saviour, who withheld nothing in order that He might become man and redeem us as man. Let us not take away from Him our time, or our gifts. Our bodies belong to Him. If you say: "I cannot go so far as you go. I want to be a Christian, but I do not want to give my will up even to the Lord Jesus Christ," then you are robbing Him. You may think you are going to enjoy life because you are to have a little more freedom than those wholly consecrated to the Lord. But there are only bitterness and sorrow and failure in front of you, and an awful curse at the end.

In verse 29 we read, "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth; but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers." I believe the word "corrupt" here means worthless, flippant talk. Is not this one of the sins of the day, even among Christians? Probably there will be the temptation to yield to it before the day is over, so that the good which may be done in the tent will be driven away by the flippant talk outside. It is like the birds which follow the sower wherever he goes, and take up some of the seed he has so carefully and prayerfully sown. It is not only flippant conversation after the meeting is over which drives away the blessing, but that which goes on through the day among so many Christian people. We do need to ask God to take care of our lips and tongues.

We have in verse 31 another way in which individuals grieve the Holy Spirit of God. "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice." "Wrath"—that which boils over in a minute, and is soon over; "anger," that sulky sort of demeanour which some people show when their feelings have been touched to the quick. Instead of turning the whole heart towards Jesus Christ and saying to Him, "Lord, keep me now," or, still better, "Jesus saves me now," this sullen anger burns on, as if to say, "I will have my revenge one day." All these things are to be put away; and we are brought to this point, "Can we live such a life?" Nay, but

JESUS WITHIN YOU CAN AND WILL.

We shall share his victory over sin and self. Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

What is the result of this grieving of the Spirit? That constant ebb and flow, up and down, from which the Christian suffers so often. Other people watch us; they have got keen eyes, and they say, "Well, if that is the Christianity that is got at Keswick, or anywhere else, I do not think I should like it." So that, besides the sorrow and failure in our own hearts and lives, we are repelling other people. What shall we do? In Isa. xliii. we read of God's promise of pardon—past transgression all blotted out. And in the beginning of the next chapter we have the promise of water to be poured on him that is thirsty. That means the filling of the Spirit. We want these two great blessings, do we not—full pardon and full power? The two will go together. As we heard in the pavilion from Mr. Macgregor last night, we must be more thorough in our search for sin, and in our confession and slaying of it. Let us bring out all these hidden things before God, and confess them as sins by which we have been grieving the Holy Ghost. Then we may claim from God his pardon. And let us ask him now to pour out the fulness of his Spirit on our cleansed hearts, that we may never again, so far as we know, grieve the Spirit of God. Then we shall be clean vessels, ready and meet for the Master's use.

Dan Ryan.

A STORY FROM THE HOP-FIELDS.

IT was a happy thought on the part of Pastor J. J. Kendon that, more than thirty years ago, gave birth to an organised effort to meet the spiritual needs of the thousands from Slumdom that annually visit our Kentish hop-gardens. Most pleasing results have followed these efforts in renewed hearts and homes, and not the least interesting is the latest that has just come to light.

"Just a Bermondsey boy, and a rough one at that!" was the verdict of the City missionary as he told me the story of Dan Ryan.

The missionary knew him; for, in his work over the wide parish of Bermondsey, he had often met him and received a goodly share of banter and rough horseplay in return for his efforts to reclaim Dan and his companions from the paths of evil.

That he was an Irishman his name indicates; he avowed himself a Roman Catholic; his lip and life proclaimed him a veritable son of sin.

He eked out a precarious existence, picking up a casual job when and wherever he could; often at his wits' end to find sufficient food to keep body and soul together. Thus it happened that he found his way into Kent with many others of his class from the lanes and courts of Bermondsey.

In the neighbourhood of Goudhurst the Hop-pickers' Mission was in full swing, seeking to "lift up the fallen"; and among our workers was the good missionary from Bermondsey.

The season was exceedingly wet and trying. In the whole twenty years of our connection with the Mission we never remember another such terrible time for the poor "hoppers" as September of 1896. Many of them, instead of laying in a stock of health by their immigration to Kent, as in former years, found, alas! when too late, they had sown the seeds of disease and death. The incessant rains also seriously interfered with our ordinary mission-work; still, what we were able to do was "not in vain in the Lord."

Dan was not a little surprised one morning to see his Bermondsey missionary step up to the bin for a friendly chat; but, under the usually civilising influence of our Mission, he did not receive him unkindly nor attempt his usual banter. He even consented to come to a hoppers' tea and evening meeting in a neighbouring barn, provided by a godly farmer and his wife.

The missionary arrived early at the intended sanctum, with some misgivings as to whether Dan would keep his promise; but Dan was there before him, and ready to lend a hand wherever it was needed. That assistance was needed may be gathered from the fact that the barn was full of farming implements; a plough, chaff-cutter, harrow, wagon or two, and sundries. With a good will our two missionaries in charge of the tea and meeting faced the work involved; but Dan's help was very acceptable. In spreading the tables, in afterwards clearing for the meeting, in distributing tracts and hymn-sheets he was much in evidence as one who had determined to make the meeting "go."

It was noticeable how eagerly—yea, hungrily—he listened as the missionaries told the story "of Jesus and his love." And not in vain did he thus hang on the preacher's lips for the Word of Life, as we subsequently learnt.

Months rolled by, the season and its services were well-nigh forgotten by us in the ever-present and pressing claims of daily duty.

In his casual visits to the infirmary our Bermondsey missionary was startled one morning at hearing his name faintly called from a sick pillow. Stretched there was the wasted wreck of a once stalwart, strong young man, so pale and haggard that the missionary failed to recognise the poor fellow. But Ryan knew him, and with grateful tears he told his tale of Divine mercy. The terribly severe weather of September had been too much for him; he caught the chill which sealed his death warrant, but he found Christ through the message of that meeting in the barn, and was now ready for, and almost eagerly awaiting, his approaching end, able with the Psalmist to say, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me."

Though the Hop Mission work is emphatically a "work of faith," both the season and sphere of service being limited, and much of the seed sown by the wayside, to be gathered in "the great harvest day," yet it would not be difficult to multiply instances of this kind in proof of the usefulness of the Hop-pickers' Mission, as our sketches in these pages, in former years, bear witness.

Among the many pressing claims upon the generosity of God's stewards, there is a danger lest old-established, well-tried missions may be forgotten, and languish for want of funds; hence this "reminder."

The need is as great as ever; and help sent in promptly will be well and worthily bestowed. The season only lasts through September; it is therefore obvious that those who would have fellowship with us in this good work must send at once, and thus enable us to measure our means and place our men in the field without delay.

Students at Northfield.

THE Students' Conference at Northfield began on Friday, June 25. It has been marked by much enthusiasm kindled by the burning words which fell from the lips of Mr. Moody and from the numerous speakers he had gathered around him. Intervals between the meetings were fully utilised for excursions and varied forms of recreation in which students delight.

The "College Association Work" rally held by Mr. JOHN R. MOTT was one of the most interesting and useful gatherings of the second day. He emphasised the need of continual and systematic Bible study, which should include a devotional method for the building up of spiritual life; the practical method in which study is coupled with personal effort; and the scientific method, which covers critical study, care being taken that the latter is not so used as to minimise the other two. Discussion on the means of maintaining such study brought up delegates from a score of colleges, who briefly gave interesting reasons why their several Associations had experienced a decided increase of usefulness in the past year.

In the course of a stirring address upon "A View of the Bible with Christ out of It," Rev. HY. VAN DYKE said: "Blot out Christ, and there is no Captain of Salvation, no Conqueror of Satan. But Christ is God; we give thanks that He is a reality, and that, through Him, wonderful illumination shines out from the pages of a Book which without Him can bring no ultimate benefit to mankind."

In the evening 500 students gathered on Round Top, and were addressed by Rev. Mr. Conkling, Mr. J. R. Mott, and Mr. Beach. From night to night the meeting in this place has been devoted to a mental journey round the world, investigating the spiritual needs of the nations; and representatives of various lands have spoken.

On the first Sunday of the Conference Mr. MOODY was the morning speaker, and continued a powerful discourse upon the Ten Commandments which he had commenced the night before. In referring to the first, he showed that it is not necessary to go to heathen lands for false gods, seeing that so many are around us in the shape of gods of money, gods of family, and so forth. Satan is willing we should worship even the Bible, provided it is the Bible only, and not God in it. In connection with the command anent the Sabbath, the preacher denounced Sunday newspapers and cars and Sunday bicycling.

At the big hill-top meeting in the evening, a fine address was given by Mr. ROBERT P. GALLEY, Princeton's famous football player, who, while a powerful athlete, has also been a constant Christian worker. He leaves for mission work in China next March, meanwhile travelling amongst the colleges of his native land.

A very practical address was delivered on the evening of the fifth day (June 29) by Dr. MCKENZIE, of Cambridge, Mass., upon Paul's declaration that "We know in part." He remarked that a man never makes a mistake if he does what Christ tells him. Let us never be beguiled by doubts, imaginations, and theories of man. When we come to Christ, we learn from Him what God would have each one of us to know, in our individual capacity. When there comes to me the man who can tell me what life is, I will tell him what the Holy Trinity is. The grandest truth in the universe is the being of God, and yet it has been quarrelled over more than anything else. Oh, the folly of lending an ear to theories of foolish men! The knowledge which God has given us is all-sufficient for every useful purpose.

The fifth night of the Conference meetings was memorable for a rousing address from Mr. MOODY upon "Qualifications for Christian Service." Faith, courage, enthusiasm, perseverance, Christian love, and human sympathy were dwelt upon and illustrated in Mr. Moody's inimitably homely and powerful style.

One morning meeting was taken up with the answering by Mr. J. R. MOTT of questions previously collected; as a result, much practical and wise counsel was given. This also was characteristic of the evening hill-top meetings. After the addresses, Mr. Mott met delegates from foreign countries, and with them discussed methods of work. Time was devoted, in this way, on one occasion to the countries of the western hemisphere, and Delegate OSUNA, of Saltello, Mexico, gave an intensely interesting talk on the slow awakening of his country, its needs, and the terrible effects of Romish influence upon the people.

Dr. A. F. SCHAUFFLER, of New York, spoke and presided at a meeting of the Women's National Sabbath Alliance, which was attended by the many women delegates to the Conference. An address in the evening by Dr. MCCAUGHAN, of Toronto, was one of the strongest utterances of the Conference. It dealt with Christ's miracle of healing the palsied man, as an ideal picture of how to bring men to Christ, with the lessons to be derived from the helpless condition of the man and from the kindly qualities which marked the friends who bore him to the Saviour.

On Friday morning members of the International Committee took useful counsel together on the subject of extending the work of Christianising the Colleges of America. At night, Dr. SCHOFIELD, of Northfield, spoke upon faith, the sealing of the Spirit, and the filling with the Spirit. If we trust in what God says, we are sealed with the Spirit of promise; and through this, as we are told in the Epistle to the Ephesians, we have an access to God which is just as real as access to an earthly parent. Filling with the Spirit makes a singing heart, which gives thanks unto God always, not only when things are pleasant and serene, but even in the midst of reverses.

The Students' Conference, on Saturday morning, was again in the form of a question and answer gathering. In reply to one of the former, some useful suggestions were made on the important point of how to make organised efforts against impurity in colleges. Mr. HUGH BEAVER, of the International Committee, made a very strong appeal against the evil. At the great forenoon gathering, Mr. MOODY spoke upon "How to Study the Bible," starting with the necessity of being rooted in the firm conviction that not one jot nor tittle of the Word shall pass away before all the world has passed away. He knew of nothing more convincing to a sceptic than a fulfilled prophecy; and if a man spends a month in the study of the Atonement, he is bound to believe it all his life. If one lacks assurance and confidence, let him read up the subject of Atonement, and he cannot then have any doubt about his salvation. Other topics touched upon in this connection were repentance, the new birth, and separation from the world, in their Bible aspects as distinguished from popular misconceptions.

Oral Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb.—A very useful and benevolent work was founded about thirty years ago by the late Baroness Mayer de Rothschild. With the title of the Association for the Oral Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, it continues to be carried on under influential patronage, and is controlled by an efficient board of management. The organisation, superintended by Mr. William Van Praagh, is dependent upon voluntary contributions for its support. A school for children and training college for teachers in connection with the Association, is in operation at 11, Fitzroy-square, W., and here public lessons are given on Wednesday at 3 p.m., to which those who desire acquaintance with the work are invited. Those who have been instructed on the new method are able to converse with strangers, though previously they could only communicate with persons who knew finger alphabet. The applications for qualified teachers far exceed the number which the Association can supply.

The Wesleyan Conference.

FROM A MINISTER.

THE twenty-fifth conference in Leeds opened on Tuesday of last week, in the Brunswick Chapel. Not far short of a thousand ministers assembled at the opening session. At the first Leeds Conference John Wesley presided over some forty brethren, which included several clergymen of the Church of England, amongst others the apostolic Grimshaw, of wild Haworth, and the humble men who under God founded Methodism in the busy Yorkshire centre; John Nelson, the heroic evangelist who combined hewing stone in the daytime with preaching at night; and William Shent, the barber in Briggate, in front of whose shop the first services were held in the open air by those consecrated men who faced the dangers of turbulent mobs and subdued the angry passions of men by the proclamation of the Gospel of Christ. From such humble beginnings have sprung the spacious sanctuaries, the living churches, and the multifarious activities of Leeds Methodism.

Rev. W. L. WATKINSON, whose name is widely known as a writer and preacher beyond the limits of his own Church, was by a large vote elected president. He is one of the most distinguished of the sons of Methodism. Of frail body and at times of feeble health, he nevertheless has done great service to the cause of God. His volumes of sermons, including "The Transfigured Sackcloth," "Mistaken Signs," "Noonday Addresses" in Manchester and Leeds, have been widely circulated, while his Fernley lecture on "The Influence of Scepticism on Character" was a masterly study of the relations of creed and conduct and a scathing exposure of the moral inconsistencies of some fine writers of modern times. Mr. Watkinson has read widely in science and philosophy, and a keen sarcasm and ready humour enable him to deal most effectively with the claims and positions of sceptical thought. In his preaching he is strongly Evangelical, and remarkably insistent upon the reality and the consequences of sin.

His inaugural address to two thousand ministers and people who crowded the Conference Chapel at the open session, which combines the President's induction to his high office with the Conference prayer-meeting, made a deep impression. Solemnly he urged the concentration of power and thought upon the great evangelical work God had given them to do. He bore emphatic testimony to the fact that there was no doctrinal unrest within their borders. Never were the great doctrines that created Methodism held more firmly, more loyally, more intelligently than to-day. There were two kinds of theologians—the systematic academic theologian, and the theologian who considered great doctrines in the light of experience and practical reason. They had theologians of both types, and there was a remarkable concurrence between them in those Evangelical doctrines on which their Church was based.

Amidst manifestations of approval, the President proceeded to urge that they must pay more heed to the dynamics rather than the mechanism of the Church. They would not fritter away time or power on mere machinery, but would to the utmost seek to make the complex organ of Methodism accomplish the great spiritual purpose for which it exists. The problem of civilisation was not political, nor intellectual, but spiritual. Righteousness was the fundamental and determining force of society, and if they brought men to God and built them up in sanctity of character they were really shaping, uplifting, and transforming all things. What was the inmost significance of the great procession of the Diamond Jubilee, with its perfect "milky way of princes." Was it not the triumphant procession of purity? The coronation of truth and justice and kindliness and peace—the splendid virtue of a distinguished Queen, and the splendid virtue of myriads of lowly men and women in the cities and villages of the land? Had not Methodism made a contribution to that?

In common with the other Evangelical Churches, they had made a large and real contribution to the wonderful improvement in the liberty, the wealth, the virtue, and the contentment of this great people. He desired, as one of the brethren had suggested to him, that his year of office might be marked with passionate spirituality. They were agreed as to the main questions. There was a grand future before their Church, if it was faithful to the dream of its youth. It would be the spiritual home of myriads of living men, and to myriads of dying men it would become "the gate of heaven." In the prayer-meeting which followed Dr. E. E. Jenkins, Mr. H. Price Hughes, and others led the petitions of the great assembly.

A memorable feature of the first week of the pastoral session was the visit of Rev. Dr. MILLBURN, the blind chaplain of the United States Senate, and a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America. He was introduced to the President by Rev. Dr. Stephenson, who appropriately referred to the service rendered to the sacred cause of peace by his venerable friend in the prayer he offered in the Senate of America at a time when the air was filled with rumours of war. Dr. Millburn delivered an eloquent address, lit up with many happy touches of humour. It was pathetic to look upon the upturned face of the speaker as he spoke of the great men who sat on the platform of the conference forty years ago, when he visited the Conference as an American representative. "Even as you are all hidden from my earthly sight," said he, "it is almost as easy for me to see them there in the Church triumphant as it is to conceive of you in the Church militant. Speaking of the bonds of unity of the two nations he said, "The blood in our veins is the same as yours—the blood of history, valour and power. The ashes of our forebears are lying here in the churchyards of England, awaiting the trump of the resurrection side by side with your forefathers. He could not entertain the conception that ever a fratricidal war could take place between England and America. He declared that the influence of the Queen held fast ties between the mother and daughter. Remembering, too, the influence of Methodism and of the other vast religious bodies on their side of the water as earnestly engaged in advancing the kingdom of Christ as we are, he could not conceive for a moment that blood will ever flow between us, except in kindred veins.

The chief conversation of the week of a controversial character has been on the subject of the proposed reversion of the order of sessions of Conference. At present the pastors meet first, and in the second week ministers and laymen form the representative session, and during part of the third week again the pastoral session meets and concludes the business of the Conference. It is now proposed that the representative session meet first. Though apparently a slight change, it raises the far reaching questions of the relative place of the pastors and people in Church government, and the functions of a separated ministry. Several of the ex-presidents spoke against the proposals of the committee which has sat during the year, Dr. Rigg especially insisting upon the extreme gravity of the issues raised. The matter will be further considered when the laymen join the ministers in the second week.

Such matters as the retirement of aged ministers, the acceptance into the full work of probationary ministers who have already travelled four years, and the consideration of candidates for the ministry have occupied the attention of the Conference. Sixty-six candidates were accepted, and forty-five probationers at home and seventeen abroad received into full connexion. Amongst the brethren who retire was one ex-president, Rev. Dr. R. Newton Young, Governor of Handsworth College, an influential and cultured minister, whose health has seriously failed during the last year.

Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel.—The quarterly meeting of the committee, held on Friday last, was presided over by Mr. Henry Hill, the founder of the Institute. The report submitted by Rev. Thomas Jackson, the present superintendent and hon. sec., stated that the number of lads who had joined the Institute during the past quarter, and paid the requisite subscriptions, was ninety-two. The gymnasium had been opened five nights each week, and an average of fifty members had attended the drill. The reading-room had been open every week evening, and the swimming bath had been visited by upwards of 6000 bathers, chiefly boys. A free dinner had been given to 520 adults, and a free tea to 620 of the poorest children in connection with the Jubilee festivities. The evangelistic services and weekly Bible classes were well attended; a Sunday-school of sixteen teachers and 166 scholars now meet at the Institute, and a weekly meeting for women had now fifty-two members. The chairman and also Mr. George Nokes expressed the pleasure it afforded them, as well as other friends of the Institute, to see the successful work being now accomplished under Mr. Jackson's superintendency.

British Students' Conference.

THE fifth Students' Conference opened on Saturday, July 24, at Curbar, Derbyshire. The women students are accommodated in Cliff College and in the neigbouring villages, while the men have a camping-ground by the river-side. By 8 p.m. on Saturday most of the 300 delegates had arrived, and we gathered in the tent for our opening meeting. The hush of the presence of God fell upon us as the chairman, Mr. J. RUTTER WILLIAMSON (Edin. Univ.), read from Mark's Gospel the account of our Lord's Transfiguration. As we listened, we asked that we might see no man in this Conference save Jesus only.

After a few opening words of advice as to how to make the best of the Conference, Mr. Williamson took as his subject "Reality": (1) in obedience to Christ's commands; (2) in thought; (3) in our attitude towards temptation; (4) in communion with God; dwelling especially on the imperatives of Christ and on the temptations which peculiarly assail the students of science and philosophy. His searching words seemed to bring us face to face with God.

Dr. HANDLEY MOULE closed the meeting with a short address on Gal. ii. 20—the paradox, "I live, yet not I," showing how this reality in mind and thought could only be attained through Him who came not to make vanish, but to transfigure, our minds into a shrine for Himself, Who lives not in a vacuum, but "in Me"—a being made, disciplined, and proved by Him.

At the Sunday morning prayer-meeting Mr. SALT, the Vicar of Curbar, in a word of welcome, referred to the hallowed missionary associations of our meeting-place. He then spoke on two words—"Another Comforter"—and on the unity which we had not to make but to keep in Him; a unity which the devil, who would be busier here than anywhere else around during this week, would be trying to disturb.

Dr. MOULE preached in the morning, in Curbar church, on Ps. xxxi. 19, and Rev. G. C. GRUBB in the evening on Eph. iii. 19. At 2.15 p.m. a meeting for Student Volunteers only was held, when Mr. W. R. MILLER (Trav. Sec. S.V.M.U.) spoke on the individual responsibility resting on Student Volunteers with regard to personal work.

At the Bible-reading at 4 p.m. Dr. MOULE, by means of three outline studies of passages in the Epistle to the Philippians, gave valuable suggestions as to principles of Bible study. He showed how great dogmatic passages in the Epistles were introduced by, and had their issue in, practical precepts. For example, the sublime passage in Phil. ii. 6-12 is occasioned by a necessary exhortation to the Philippians to greater unity of spirit, and is followed by a warning against "murmurings and disputings." He applied the same principle to iii. 20, 31, and iv. 13.

At 7.30 simultaneous meetings were held for men and women students, addressed by Mr. J. R. MOTT and Miss GOLLOCK respectively.

On Monday the regular sessions of the Conference began; a prayer-meeting is held at 9.15 a.m.; Bible-reading at 10 a.m.; general meetings at 11.30 a.m. and 7.30 p.m.; while the afternoons are devoted to walks, excursions, and recreation.

At the Monday Bible-reading Dr. MOULE, speaking on Heb. xii. 13 in connection with Gal. v. 22, showed that a consistent Christian walk is deeply important, not only as between our Lord and us, but also for the sake of our influence on those around us. This consistency has its source in the filling of the Spirit, and should appear in the minutest details of our daily life in such matters as punctuality, courtesy, and kindly speech.

At the general meeting Mr. J. R. MOTT spoke on the Bible study department of the College Christian Union, on its importance, and on its threefold purpose—(a) to bring the Bible to the earnest attention of every student; (b) to enlist as many as possible in some form of systematic Bible study, either associated or private; (c) to help students to form the habit of personal Bible study, which will remain after they leave college. Practical advice followed as to the means and methods of Christian Union Bible study, on the equipment of the Bible study secretary, and on the importance of using the opportunities afforded by this Conference for interviews with the Bible study secretaries of other unions.

"My Queen."

ON Jubilee Day I sat with a few friends at a window and watched the never-to-be-forgotten scene about as enthusiastically as loyal subjects could. Our voices blended in the general cheering and song; our handkerchiefs formed a part of the white waving sheets which seemed to hide the houses for a moment; and in the lull which followed one of our number voiced the inmost feeling of us all in the quiet words of triumph, "Now I have seen my Queen." The secret was out. It was just that which we all meant, "My Queen."

How could one's thoughts help leaping onward in anticipation of another day—perhaps the only day which could be described as greater and grander than that Commemoration Day—when the King of Kings and Lord of Lords will return to this earth, in all his royal state; and "Every eye shall see Him"? The glory of that day will not depend upon the myriads of saints and angels who will compose his royal train. It is not the rent clouds and the archangel's trumpet which will form the attraction of that supreme scene; nay but "thine eyes shall see THE KING in his beauty."—(Isa. xxxiii. 17).

Reader, can you change the pronoun and express what would be the language of your heart at that moment in other Scriptural words: "This is our God; we have waited for Him" (Isa. xxv. 9). Could you claim a closer, nearer relationship still, and say, "This is MY Beloved, and this is MY Friend" (Canticles v. 16). So much depends upon the "my"—"The Lord is my Shepherd."

Even the outshining glory of the coming of the King will not awaken any real gladness in your heart as you think of it, unless you can say of Him, "He is MY King." Can you say it? There is a sense in which Christ is indeed King of us all; "for He must reign till He hath put all enemies under his feet" (1 Cor. xv. 25). God hath highly exalted the Son of his love, and exalted Him for the very reason that He stooped so low to drain the cup of wrath which was due to us for our sin. "He must reign." Yea, "He must reign," is God's unchangeable decree. "He must reign" is the glad echo of the angelic hosts. "He must reign," responds every heart which has been led by the Holy Spirit to see its own sin and to accept the all-sufficient Saviour.

But though "He must reign," there are, alas! traitor hearts which will not yet bow to the sweet compulsion. There are yet those base enough and blind enough to send a message after Him, "We will not have this man to reign over us" (Luke xix. 14). And those whose hearts cherish such a sentiment—expressed or unexpressed—have never yet really owned Jesus as Lord of all; have never yet, by word or deed, said to Him, "My King."

Amid the thousands upon thousands who lined the streets of London on Commemoration Day there may have been some whose dark inward mutterings may have quenched for them the gladness of the day. But our Queen did not know it. She could not read the secret thought of disloyalty, if such unhappily were there, undetected by us all. From the searching eyes of King Jesus no such secret can be hid. As the eyes of the king, in the parable, detected at once the one guest who lacked the wedding garment (a garment provided for all guests at Eastern weddings), so would the eyes of the Lord discern one amidst the throng whose heart had no welcome ready for Him, no love to lay at his pierced feet. I want you to anticipate that glorious day—we know not how near it may be—and to find out now, by his grace, the way in which you will wish, when He comes, to welcome the Lord Jesus.

We owe much, very much, to our Queen, but it is as nothing to what we owe to Him who died for us, who loved us and still loves us with a personal love impossible to earthly monarchs, and who is coming again to receive his people to Himself. Will you not now, by full and glad consent, crown Him King—your King? How you will wish you had when He comes again of whom the glad announcement is, as of old, couched in words so sweet and personal, "Thy King cometh unto thee."

The floods have lifted up their voice;
The King hath come to his own—his own.
The little hills and vales rejoice,
His right it is to take the crown.

Mercy and truth shall meet again,
Worthy the Lamb that once was slain.
We can suffer now—He will know us then—
What will it be when the King comes!

Distributing the Scriptures.

"IT is God's Word," said one, "not man's comment upon it, which saves souls; for the majority of conversions have been wrought by the agency of a single text of Scripture." There will be no disposition to quarrel with this witness on the part of true ministers of the Gospel; for all such will be quite ready to confess that their office consists in reading in the Book, in the law of God, distinctly, giving the sense, and causing the people to understand the reading (Neh. viii. 8).

This living power of God in his Word is strikingly exemplified by the records of that eminently useful organisation the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures. In many a far-off land streams of living water from the wells of salvation are flowing through this blessed agency. Let us, in imagination, journey to a certain city in the distant Punjab. Here is Amritsar, or the so-called "wellspring of immortality," from the sacred Tank around which the city has grown. A devoted worker tells of "hundreds of unsatisfied, unhappy men and women, with no knowledge whatever of any way of escape from sin, who come one by one with wonderful perseverance in any weather, under any circumstances, to worship, only to go away as weary, as sin-burdened, and unsatisfied as they came. But it has made the heart sing for joy to spend an afternoon on the marble pavement at the edge of that boasted wellspring and give away to those deceived sinners the words of Him who said, 'If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink,' with a few quiet words about the real 'Water of Life' spoken to everyone who took a portion. Many who come there have an earnest though wrongly-directed religiousness; and there, if anywhere, the Word of God should be given without money and without price."

An experienced worker from England was upon tour through France, Austria, and Germany. Receiving a grant from the Association, he mentions some results of his efforts in free distribution. "It was," said he, "a most interesting and pleasant work to circulate the Word among Roman Catholics and Jews. My linguistic deficiency necessitated the assistance of some native Christian brother. In France my son-in-law went with me from house to house. His earnest words of warning and invitation accompanied each gift of a Testament. With rare exceptions gifts and words were most gratefully received. My experience, though limited, satisfies me that the principle of giving rather than selling is the right one. My relative was so impressed with the readiness of the people to have the Testaments, that he talked of obtaining copies and distributing them throughout the whole of the French district where he lives."

From Buenos Ayres one writes: "We have some earnest converts, and it would do you good to hear them say how precious is the Word of God to them. Last Sunday three hospitals were visited by our workers, carrying portions and tracts to the inmates. Here is the written testimony of one of these dear converts, a Spaniard. 'Through having accepted what the Bible teaches me of my Saviour, thanks be to God, I am saved, and by the same grace I desire that others may come to a knowledge of the truth.' I have been working for the Lord here seven years, and experience convinces me more than ever that there is need to give the Word in its purity. It can take care of itself and do its own work, and is becoming more and more precious as it is known out here."

Even shut-up Tibet is reached; for Miss A. R. Taylor says, "I gave a number of Gospels away in the different languages at the yearly méla at Kalimpong. People come from out-of-the-way villages scattered over the mountains, and the méla is certainly the best means to reach them. Gospels are taken into Tibet by the merchants and coolies, and I hear they are read in the large monasteries of Lhassa. The chiefs often fear to take a copy when offered, but invariably send for one after leaving. The Lord is gradually opening the door into the very heart of Tibet."

Similar glad tidings come from Mexico, Central America, Algeria, North Africa, Morocco, Turkey, Greece, and other lands. Doubtless much of the success which attends this good work may be traced to the prayer meeting on behalf of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, held at Chesils, Christ Church-road, Hampstead, on the first Monday of every month, from 4 to 5 p.m., to which any friend interested in the work will be warmly welcomed by Mrs. A. E. Robertson, one of hon. secretaries.

Letter to the Editor.

PROTESTANT CHILDREN AND ROMISH SCHOOLS.

SIR,—You recently expressed wonder, and not for the first time, that Protestant parents should send their children to Romish schools on the Continent. The question was asked, Why is this done? I think I can supply the answer. There is a medical maxim that the knowledge of the cause of a disease is half the cure.

In the town from which I write there is a Roman Catholic doctor, whose attainments are not thought much of by other doctors in the locality; but the Roman Catholics, with their intensely sectarian spirit, talk of him as a paragon of skill, and Protestants, unsuspicious of the motive, swallow the puff. It is told of a Jesuit priest who was asked for advice by another as to how he should deal with an old English literary lady, a Protestant, whom he was trying to pervert, but who had scruples about going over to Rome. "Don't argue," said the Jesuit to the other, "but assert, assert, assert." It is a trick that has been tried in more spheres than one. When I read the paragraphs about the infatuation of professing Protestants sending their children to Romish schools, I said, "Doubtless the same trickery is being played in regard to education—the Jesuitical trick of quietly 'asserting' the superiority of such and such schools, of course not mentioning that they are R.C. When one comes to know human nature, one cannot but be struck with a foible of a good many people, that what they patronise is superior, and so some Protestant parents who send their children to a Romish school become a means of recommending others to do the same. Thus the evil spreads.

There is no hope of counteracting this and many other evils by pulpit teaching. There is no Protestant centre having eyes to see and a mind to organise, and a will to send its instructions to every part. The Church of Rome, however, has this organisation, and uses it with great effect. Perhaps in time the Free Church Councils may be able to supply the want among Protestants, at least to the extent of seeing and suggesting, if not to a certain extent of enjoining, what the people should be taught. I have not the least doubt that there are plenty of Protestant schools on the Continent equal, if not superior, to the corresponding Roman Catholic schools; the difficulty is for private persons to know about them.—I am, yours,

ENLIGHTENED.

Victory Through Christ.

MORE than conqueror! can it be Palms of victory wait for me?
'Ere the race of life is run,
Foes defeated, Heaven begun!

More than conqueror! Joyful word,
Victory thro' our risen Lord.
Grace triumphant, strife shall cease,
Rest my soul! 'tis perfect peace.

More than conqueror! Love divine
Makes unfading glory mine!
Sweet salvation, here to know
Streams of bliss perennial flow!

More than conqueror! Conflict o'er,
Opes the everlasting door!
On this raptured heart of mine
Lo! the eternal sunbeams shine!

More than conqueror! Joyful trust,
Fears no mournful "dust to dust"!
Glorious visions rise to view,
Home beyond, and all things new!

More than conqueror! Hark, I hear
Angel voices, sweet and clear;
Farewell, darksome shades of night,
Welcome to the realms of light!

More than conqueror! Let me sing
Praises to our Saviour King!
Glorious are his gifts to me,
Life and constant victory!

More than conqueror! Joyful thought!
Christ hath full salvation wrought!
Sword and shield and helmet bright,
Yours no more to guard the right!

More than conqueror! Grandly free,
Henceforth shall my spirit be!
Satan vanquished, Jordan past,
Safe with Jesus, home at last!

Wood, Clacton-on-Sea.

Barry Dock Convention.—The annual gathering was held in Gospel Tent, Barry Dock, July 11 to 14. A blessed time was experienced, the meetings being well attended, and a deep spirituality pervading them. Mr. Gerald R. Coultas, resident evangelist, presided, and the speakers included Sergt. Barker (Brecon), Rev. C. H. Shave (Barry), Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell (C.P.A.), Mr. and Mrs. Trask, missionaries, Mrs. Small (London), Rev. W. T. Griffiths (Forward Movement, Cardiff).—G. D.

THE BOOK WORLD.

Old and New London. This week's part begins the fifth volume of this entertaining and instructive work. (6d. weekly. Cassells.)

Lucretia, by Katherine A. Richards, is a sequel to "Her Father's Honour." It is designed to illustrate the transforming power of the grace of God. (1s. G. Stoneman.)

How the Blessing Came. By a Town Vicar. (6d. nett. Marshall Bros.) These are practical pages. Ministers in general will find encouragement in the experiences set forth.

Words on Work. By Rev. R. V. Faithfull Davies, M.A. (1s. Marshall Brothers.) A suggestive little book on motives and characteristics, with searching and stimulating words for workers.

Christ and the World. Six addresses by R. B. Girdlestone, M.A. (1s. Marshall Brothers.) This little book deserves many readers. It is eminently calculated to give direction to young Christians.

The Aspirations of the Christian, by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, M.A., is an addition to the "Upward Life" series. A large amount of helpful teaching is supplied in the twelve chapters that make up the book. (1s. Marshall Brothers.)

The Village Carpenter and the Way of Salvation. By Ap Gwilym. (6d. R. Banks & Son.) A dialogue, so constructed as to point a strong personal appeal. The author is an effective evangelist, and shows great aptness in quoting hymns.

The Scattered Nation.—The July issue of this quarterly paper, edited by Rev. David Baron, has among other good things a portrait and sketch of Professor Gustav Dalman, the well-known Oriental scholar of Leipzig. (3d. Morgan & Scott.)

The Temple Reader is a very successful attempt to produce a literary reading book for school and home use. Nearly a hundred authors, ancient and modern, are represented in the selections. Professor Dowden contributes an introduction. (1s. 6d. Horace Marshall & Son.)

Over the Northern Heights. Many will welcome the second part of this series of "Rambles round London," by field, path, and hedgerow, by Alf. Holliday. This part (No. xvi.) comprises routes to Windsor, Uxbridge, Eton, Burnham Beeches, and other interesting spots. (6d. R. E. Taylor & Son, 19, Old-street, E.C.)

The Essence of Christianity: Three Sermons preached at Margate, by the late Rev. William Bellars. (Swan Sonnenschein & Co.) These discourses are directed against undenominationalism, and the Essence of Christianity is found in the Incarnation, with so-called "Sacramental Extensions"—a very dangerous form of teaching.

Among the Dark-haired Race in the Flowery Land. By Samuel B. Drake, of the Baptist Missionary Society. (2s. Religious Tract Society.) A capital picture of life in North China. Mr. Drake not only knows the people, but is quite at home in describing their ways. He also throws interesting light on the progress of the Gospel in China.

Nature-chat, by Edward A. Martin, F.G.S., is well described as a book "for hedgeside, seaside, and fireside." Its contents relate to all the seasons, and at the end there is a readable sketch of the life of Gilbert White. The book is just to the mind of Selbornians, and is the first of the "Rambler's Library" series. (1s. Taylor & Son, 19, Old-street, E.C.)

A Hero of the Dark Continent: Memoir of Rev. William Affleck Scott, M.A., M.B., C.M., Church of Scotland missionary at Blantyre, British Central Africa. By W. Henry Rankine, B.D. We welcome a cheap edition of this well-constructed and amply illustrated missionary biography—the story of a devoted worker all too soon carried off by African fever. (2s. Blackwood & Sons.)

Shaw's New Home Library is a series of excellent books at a low price. Complete stories by Miss Holt, Mrs. Meade, Mrs. Marshall, Mrs. Everett Green, and others, are included in the first twelve issues. The books are well printed, and provided with bright covers. Some are in every way suited for the colporteur's kit; the entire series deserves hearty commendation. (3d. nett. Shaw & Co.)

Dies Dominica: being hymns and metrical meditations for each Sunday in the natural year. By Margaret Evans and Isabel Southall. (4s. 6d. Elliot Stock.) The title poem, on the Lord's Day, is beautiful, as also are many others in the collection. The authors recognise the universal scope of redemption, as affecting the world of nature as well as man. In many of the pieces profound thought finds singularly happy and chaste expression.

The Family Circle is a collection of original and selected anecdotes, edited by H. L. Hastings, of Boston, Mass. The pages are instructive home reading, and will be suggestive to Christian workers for illustrative matter. Two hundred in number, the readings should be very welcome to those who conduct mothers' meetings, or other gatherings that may be brightened by short narratives, dialogues, or statements of Scripture truth. (Paper 1s. 6d.; cloth 4s. Marshall Brothers.)

Shall we Continue in Sin? A Vital Question for Believers answered in the Word of God. The substance of addresses delivered in Great Britain and Ireland in 1896. By Arthur T. Pierson, D.D. (2s. Marshall Bros.) In these pages the union of the disciple with Christ is considered in a seven-fold aspect, indicated by the words—judicial, vital, practical, actual, marital, spiritual, and eternal. The book is full of sound teaching, admirably arranged and vigorously expressed.

Chi-Nyanja Simplified. By R. Caldwell, F.R.G.S., secretary of the Zambesi Industrial Mission. (2s. 6d. T. Williams, 231, Pentonville-road, N., and Office of the Z.I.M., 1, Gresham-street, E.C.). For those who contemplate a visit to British Central Africa, this grammatical manual is "the very thing." The first edition was highly spoken of by competent authorities; this edition, revised and accompanied by a key, will be still more generally acceptable. The linguist, and especially the student of African dialects, will find much that is of interest in these pages. Intending missionaries in the Nyanja country will find the book singularly useful.

The Books of Joel and Amos have been edited in the Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges by Professor Driver. (3s. 6d. Cambridge University Press.) The result is a compact little volume, clear in arrangement and rich in information. Dr. Driver's sympathy with the "modern" school of criticism and interpretation is well known; and the positions maintained in this work are what might be expected. The introduction and notes, at once comprehensive and precise, will, however, be of service to all students, whatever their point of view or attitude in regard to critical controversies.

English Synonyms and Antonyms: with Notes on the Correct Use of Prepositions. By James C. Fernald. (6s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.) Designed as a companion for the study and a text-book for college use, this is a work of great interest and utility. The author was an expert member of the staff of the great "Standard" dictionary, and on the important subjects here dealt with he is clearly an enthusiast as well as an adept. This substantial book treats of 7500 synonyms, setting forth definitions and distinctions with great clearness; it also contains 3700 antonyms, a study of which will be of great service to writers and speakers. A complete index makes this a capital work of reference, calculated to render important assistance in the formation of a correct style of literary expression.

The Story of a Billiard Ball. By A. J. Mounteney Jephson. (Saxon & Co.) The author of this "Tale of Barbarism and Civilisation" is a well-known authority on African matters, and writes with the conviction born of experience. There is nothing deep in the book; its truths are too painfully near the surface, and are a solemn indictment which comes home to even an ordinary reader, who, innocently enough, prizes any article of ivory in his possession.

> Will these fine folk of civilisation ever realise (asks the writer) what lives of misery such trifles of luxury cost? Surely, if they did, they would never tire and never rest until the accursed ivory-hunting and slave-raiding had ceased, and until, in Livingstone's words, they had healed "that open sore that cankers the heart of Africa."

In a simple narrative the billiard-ball tells its own sad tale of wrong with a weird pathos which haunts the mind long after this prettily-illustrated volume has been laid down.

Mr. George Kelsey's booklet, THE GOSPEL, is out in a new edition. It is a good evangelistic word, and should be widely circulated. (1s. per dozen. Drummond's Tract Depot Stirling.)

THINGS PRECIOUS. By H. C. G. Moule, D.D. (1d. Marshall Bros.) A Bible study on passages in the Epistles of St. Peter. It is a precious booklet, and we wish it a large circulation.

GOD'S SOVEREIGNTY AND MAN'S RESPONSIBILITY. New edition. This booklet has been useful, and may this issue be still more so! The author knows his Bible, and quotes it largely. (6d. a dozen. Partridge & Co.)

THE NAVAL AND MILITARY MAGAZINE (1s.) and THE RAILWAY MAGAZINE (6d.) are two new periodical claimants for public favour. The latter contains a portrait and interesting account of the career of Mr. Richard Johnson, late chief engineer of the G.N. Ry., and an earnest supporter of the Railway Mission and kindred good works. Both are issued monthly. (Office: 16, Serjeants' Inn, E.C.)

The Graphic has published, as a special supplement to its issue of July 24, a large Chart, giving in a diagrammatic form an immense amount of useful information about the British Empire. The Chart is as educational as journalistic; and it might with great advantage, both to teachers and to taught, be framed and hung on the walls of class-rooms, both in elementary and in public schools. The information given comprises not merely such obvious facts as the growth in population and area of the Empire as a whole, but also a very full comparison between the population of different colonial and English or Scotch or Irish towns, both at the present day and at the beginning of the reign.

Wells-next-Sea.—Should any of our readers be visiting Wells-next-Sea, Norfolk, Mr. C. D. Judd, of Stirling House, would be glad of their aid in Gospel work.

The Y.W.C.A.

In the City of Cork, for nearly nine years past, girls without friends or away from home have found a welcome in the Y.W.C.A. Home. It has been determined to remove to a healthier part of the city; and a suitable house has been found. Of the cost (£1000), £400 has already been subscribed. The hon. sec. of the work is Miss J. Babington, 29, Wellington-road, Cork; the treasurer, Canon Daunt, The Rectory, Queenstown.

A Preparation Home for Y.W.C.A. work exists at 14, Finsbury-square, E.C. The next term of five months commences Sept. 20, and the prospectus, of which we have been favoured with a copy, seems to embrace a happy blending of Bible and other study, with practical training and actual experience of work for Christ. The curriculum is comprehensive, and much physical, mental, and spiritual benefit should be derived by those who are privileged to go through the course of instruction in the methods and work of the Association. Young women who are disposed to devote themselves to such work, will receive full particulars on application to the Lady Superintendent at the address given.

The Y.M.C.A.

The loyal address of British and Colonial Young Men's Christian Associations to Her Majesty the Queen was presented to the Prince of Wales, at St. James's Palace, on the 21st inst. The deputation consisted of Sir George Williams, Lord Kinnaird, Mr. F. A. Bevan, Mr. W. H. Seagram, Mr. W. H. Mills, secretary of the Council, and Mr. J. H. Putterill, secretary of the London Central Association. Sir George Williams having presented the address, which was in scroll form and tastefully illuminated, His Royal Highness handed him a cordial reply. Lord Kinnaird and Mr. Bevan were formally introduced to His Royal Highness.

Irish Notes.

In the Shankhill-road Tent Mission, Belfast, sixteen meetings are held weekly, and much useful work is being done, particularly among those addicted to drink, while the midnight mission is also a success.

The Dublin Total Abstinence Society have begun an open-air temperance crusade at Kingstown, and the meetings, which have been well attended, are being addressed by Messrs. J. J. Tierney and R. Welch.

The anniversary services in commemoration of the Great Revival of 1859, have been held in Drumbanagher Presbyterian Church. Rev. A. F. Mayne presided, and addresses were delivered by Rev. Robert Jameson, of Newry, and Rev. T. Cromie, of Bessbrook.

At the last meeting of the committee of the Hibernian Bible Society, held in Dublin, grants of 1402 Bibles and Testaments were made, and a letter was read from Dr. Peacocke, the newly-elected Archbishop of Dublin, consenting to become a patron of the society and expressing sympathy with its work.

The congregation of Belmont Presbyterian Church, near Belfast, of which Rev. Jno. McDermott is the minister, have decided gratefully to accept the gift of an organ for their church from the family of the late Mrs. Henderson, of Norwood Tower, one of the proprietors of the Belfast News Letter.

A successful convention of the Belfast District Union of Christian Endeavour has just been held in the Methodist Church, Portrush, Rev. Wm. Witherow presiding. Carefully prepared and interesting papers were read by Mrs. Dr. Cathcart, of Belfast, and Rev. Jas. Maconachie, L. H. Cullen, Henry Montgomery, J. C. Ferris, and several others took part in the proceedings. It was stated that the Christian Endeavour movement is making considerable progress in this country, and in proof it was pointed out that at the late San Francisco Convention, Ireland was declared the winner of badge banner for the largest proportionate increase in the number of societies during the year.

Christian Endeavour.—The Rally, usually held during Keswick Convention week, was convened for Thursday evening, July 22. A large number assembled in the Congregational Church, Lake-road, and a hearty and interesting meeting was held. Rev. W. T. Herd presided. After singing, prayer, and the reading of the topic, Rev. Mr. Brockway recounted the great benefits which had arisen in the districts in India in which he had worked from the C.E. branches started among them. Requests for prayer were read and voiced by members in the congregation. Questions and difficulties were then replied to by the gentlemen on the platform. Rev. F. B. Meyer gave a thrilling address on "The Faithfulness of our God."

Oxford Notes.

[From Our Own Correspondent.]

Through the kindness of the Messrs. Salter the wharf at Folly Bridge has been secured for open-air preaching, and on Sunday evenings, after the regular services, the St. Aldate's Mission Band gather round them a large number of non-church-goers. Judging by the earnest attention given to the Word, and by the willingness on the part of many to be spoken to after the meeting, a very fruitful summer's sowing is promised.

Upwards of 300 ladies engaged in the furtherance of the objects of the Girls' Friendly Society met on Tuesday in St. John's College for their annual meeting. That the Society is filling a much-needed want is verified by the firm root it has taken in England and in other parts of the world, and by the number of girls and of women who are annually brought under its influence with the most beneficial results, not only to themselves but to the community in general. The Society registers 150,000 members in England and Wales, and when it is remembered that its aim is the promotion of unity, thrift, and mutual help among these young people, and that its object, above all, is the salvation and sanctification of its members, the building up of a type of character at once pure and true, womanly and unselfish, it will be felt that the existence of the Society more than justifies itself.

The annual meeting of the St. Peter Le Bailey Temperance Society took place on Thursday at Trinity College. Mr. V. P. Sells was the speaker, and very earnestly did he plead the cause of total abstinence. Oxford, it is sad to relate, is not behind other towns in the number of its victims to the drinking customs of the day. It is cheering to know that a steady aggressive work along the lines of total abstinence is being done by the churches.

Cheer from the Highlands.

In a small Highland village, beautifully situated, with mountains and hills all round, and cosily sheltered in a very fertile valley through which meanders a pure sparkling river, a labour of love for the Lord has been going on for some years. There is a mission-hall in which undenominational work has been carried on with many tokens of blessing. The story of the mission is a Christian romance, and truly has the Divine promise been verified which was given at the opening of the hall by the sainted Dr. Andrew Bonar, "Mine eyes and my heart shall be there perpetually"! Here is an item of interest. Dr. Barnardo's representative, Mr. Wookey, recently came to Scotland with his musical boys, on a Scotch tour. The last place visited was this village, where they were received with open arms, every preparation having been made to excite interest in the community. The whole place was alive and expectant, and, above all, every detail of the arrangements was "steeped in prayer," as a well-known Christian remarked. Four meetings were held, every class of the population was reached, and in the result a clear sum of £27 5s. 8d. was forwarded to headquarters. This was actually the largest success Mr. Wookey had, for though he had been to big towns, none had done for him as well as this small village, with a population of only 1200 to 1400.

The above is written, Mr. Editor, to encourage many of the Lord's children, living in villages and country districts, who think, that if only their lot were cast in a big city, then they would find the opportunities of service and witnessing which their hearts long for. But "the land" they are "to possess" lies around them at their own doors, among their own neighbours, where "patient continuance in well-doing," in the place where He appoints, must bring blessing and his constant "Well-done."

Many Christians who know of the work have returned to their own homes stimulated to be his witnesses in a sense they never were before. If any reader desires further particulars, I am sure the Editor will put them in communication with the writer. R.

Woolwich Tabernacle.—The first anniversary was held on Thursday week (July 15th). Sir George Williams presided, and Lord Kinnaird, Mr. John Colville, M.P., and the Revs. A. E. Able, (Congregationalist), and John Seeley (Baptist) were the speakers. The pastor, Rev. John Wilson, gave the report of the year's work. The congregations had filled the Tabernacle to overflowing, and an evening service had been held in the schoolroom for the children. There are four missions worked by the members, and nearly 2000 children in the Sunday-schools. During the year 190 members had been received, and £3500 had been collected. Nearly £200 was raised by the anniversary. The total cost of the Tabernacle is £14,000, and towards that £6700 has been obtained.

Personalia.

Rev. M. E. Barakat, B.A., of Damascus, expects shortly to go to America. He has a few vacant dates for lectures on Oriental life and customs. Address, Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Mr. Hermann G. Harris, director of the Central Soudan Mission at Gabes, Tunisia, has been prosecuted for distributing Scripture. As he refused to pay the fine, some of his goods were seized and sold by auction.

Mr. Henry Toye, son and successor of the late venerable founder of the Orphan House, Lewisham, has been lying seriously ill since the 15th inst., at No. 53, Cavendish-place, Eastbourne. He had been in indifferent health for some months. Earnest prayer is desired on Mr. Toye's behalf.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, at a congregational meeting in Christ Church on Monday evening, gave a very interesting and graphic account of the Keswick Convention. Mr. Meyer leaves London this week for his annual holiday, spending a fortnight in North Wales, and afterwards visiting the region of the Black Forest.

Obituary.

PASTOR GOTTLIEB MATTES.

Persons interested in evangelistic work in Germany will hear with sorrow of the death of Pastor Gottlieb Mattes, of the First Baptist Church in Berlin, aged fifty-one. Appointed to evangelistic work in 1869 by the late Pastor Oncken, Herr Mattes laboured for several years in Rhenish Prussia, his work during the Franco-German war winning the admiration of all who saw it. In 1876 he accepted the pastorate of the church at Mülhausen, and six years later settled in Berlin, where his ministry was blessed to many. In the July issue of the Quarterly Reporter of the German Baptist Mission, Mr. W. Sears Oncken says:—"Our brother was endowed with great natural talents, and possessed a clearness of perception which rendered his advice most valuable; yet was he distinguished above all by a gentleness and humility which added lustre to his other excellent qualities."

MR. W. BULLEN, GIPSY MISSIONARY.

The death is announced of Mr. W. Bullen, of the New Forest Gipsy Mission. It is now nearly ten years since the condition of the gipsies in the New Forest led some of the residents to endeavour to bring these outcasts and their children to a better kind of life. This ended by the establishment of the New Forest Gipsy Mission, in connection with the Country Towns Mission, with Mr. and Mrs. Bullen as the missionaries. They from the first threw themselves into the work with great energy, and after speedily gaining the confidence of the gipsies, were able, as has been reported from time to time, to teach cleanliness and honesty, the alphabet and reading, and never forgetting the great teaching of all, took the Bible for their lesson book. The work was very hard. To follow the gipsies in their nomad life meant exposure to wet and discomfort of every sort, to which the gipsy is naturalized, but which is very trying to those accustomed to sheltered homes. Mr. Bullen, robust as he was, could not withstand this, and was seized with a bad form of ague. Every means were tried to enable him to shake this off, but without success; his vitality was completely sapped, and a fortnight ago he succumbed to the terrible weakness. Many will sympathise with his widow and for the two gipsy children whom they have adopted.

South Wales.—Mission services conducted at Barry Dock by Mr. J. Albinson have been a means of much blessing. The attendance was good. Some have professed conversion, and backsliders have returned. The arduous work carried on in this neighbourhood by Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Coultas has received an impetus which it is hoped will lead to lasting blessing.

Mission to Mediterranean Garrisons.—In connection with this work, of which Mrs. Todd Osborne (Rysland, Newton Mearns, N.B.) is hon. treasurer and secretary, many encouraging testimonies have been received from soldiers who have enjoyed the spiritual benefits of the home at Gibraltar. The sisters engaged in the Mission have exercised much care for women and children belonging to the soldiers' families. Among those who have come under the good influence of Mr. Cambridge and other workers, are merchant sailors, and Spanish navvies, of whom 7000 are working at the Government docks. Great interest has been seen among the Spaniards, while efforts has been made to reach their hearts through the distribution of Scripture portions. Gospel itineration is another department, and this has revealed room for more workers in both Gibraltar and Spain. In one town of the province of Estremadura, 63 men signed a petition for the establishment of a Protestant Mission.

WORKING AND WAITING FOR CHRIST.—1 Thess. iv. 9-18, v. 1, 2.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto Myself; that where I am there ye may be also" (John xiv. 3).

THE Second Coming of Christ was regarded by the early Church as the means whereby all wrongs were to be put right and all suffering compensated. Christians looked forward to it as an event which would surely happen during their lifetime. Indeed, all the Apostles speak in this strain, and lived in daily expectation of the grand appearance of their Lord. Some of the Thessalonians had so dwelt upon the thought that they could not attend to the duties of their ordinary life. Besides, during the short time that had intervened since Paul left them some had died, and the fact that these had not witnessed Christ's coming shook the faith of the Church in this and other beliefs, and made them anxious that their loved ones would be absent when He appeared.

In our lesson Paul sets himself to deal with these two classes—to rebuke the negligence of the first, and to soothe and reassure the second.

I. Those who were becoming neglectful. The Spirit of God had taught them love one to another, and they had shown that they had learnt the lesson by their charity to all in Macedonia. They had already become a missionary church (9, 10). But Paul urges a holy discontent upon them, which is the very nerve of progress. Whatever ye may be or may have done, there are heights of Christian sacrifice still unattained. The life of Christ in us must go on growing till we reach his perfect stature. If we rest on our oars we drift back with the stream. If we win no new laurels the old ones fade. He also urges, Do not allow yourselves to be carried away by an unhealthy excitement. Working is not incompatible with waiting for Christ. "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven."

So said the angel (Acts i. 11). In the meantime there is much to be done. Instead of gazing while we wait, we must work. This is the best preparation for the coming of Christ. Said a lady to John Wesley, "What would you do if you knew your Lord was coming to-night?" "Precisely what I am going to do now, madam." Work hard at your daily duty. Give the enemy no occasion to blaspheme. Walk honestly. Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when He cometh shall find so doing. They who love well have no need to fear death.

II. Those who were desponding of the Second Coming.—The Gentiles had a very hazy hope of a future life, and even when they believed the teaching of Paul former doubts were easily revived. The Apostle starts with the foundation historic fact, "Jesus died and rose again" (14). All argument is useless unless you believe that. If that be false there is no certainty. As surely as Christ rose, so surely will God raise the dead in Christ (14). I assure you, on Divine authority, that we which are alive shall not in any way have precedence of those who are asleep. When the trumpet of God shall sound, the sleepers shall awake and rise first. Then we who are alive shall be caught up with them in the clouds to meet our Lord in the air. So shall we be for ever with the Lord (15-17). There is no explanation to this. We must believe it to enjoy it. Compare the promise of Christ (John xiv. 1-3). How many millions have been comforted with these words (18). Husband and wife, mother and child have been separated, but here is the hope and belief in a reunion. When death enters our home the promise of Christ is the only real consolation we have. This is God's answer to man's yearning after immortality. No man knows when this marvellous event will happen (2). It will come suddenly, unexpectedly, "as a thief in the night," or, as Christ says, "in such an hour as ye think not." The very time when we should say He would not be likely to appear, then the Son of Man cometh. One warning must be uttered, one duty enforced, "Be ready." Young and old alike, while trusting in Christ for forgiveness and striving to do his will, need have no tremor about his coming. They will "love his appearing," and will say, with Kingsley, "Come when Thou wilt and as Thou wilt, even so come, Lord Jesus."

Request for Prayer.—Prayer is earnestly requested that the Lord may provide the workers so urgently needed for Japan by the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

THE Dean of Durham has opened a new Anglican church at Balholm, Norway.

It is proposed to devote the week in the autumn following the Church Congress to a simultaneous missionary campaign throughout England.

The Bishop of Bangor, who is recovering but slowly, purposes to stay for three months at Llanerch, his native place, in Cardiganshire.

The appointment of Rev. E. Grose Hodge, vicar of St. James's, Holloway, to Holy Trinity, St. Marylebone, is giving general satisfaction.

An effort is being made to raise funds for the restoration of the ancient Parish Church of St. Mary Magdalene, Whitgift, a village in Marshland.

The election to the Bishopric of Kilmore will take place on September 2, and to that of Meath some time during the second week in September.

The arrangements for the Birmingham Missionary Mission are rapidly approaching completion. Some fifteen parishes will join in the movement.

The Cathedral of St. John the Divine, being built by the New York Episcopalians, will, it is thought, require twenty-five years to complete. The choir will probably be ready in three years.

The unexpected and anonymous gift of £3000 to the C.M.S. has wiped out the deficit of the Society. The annual report shows an increase in the number of missionaries and communicants.

The Bishop of London will consecrate the new Church of St. Peter, Lower Edmonton, on Thursday, August 5, at 4 p.m. This is to be the parish church of a new district as soon as an endowment is provided.

A new church is to be erected in St. Mark's parish, Newport. At present a Mission-church supplies a large and increasing district in this parish, and the need for a more commodious and substantial building has long been a pressing necessity.

A marble tablet to the memory of the late Archbishop Benson has been erected in the Garrison Church at Canterbury, the dedication of which building was one of the last public acts of the kind performed by the late Primate. Dean Farrar, in unveiling the memorial, stated that this was the first memorial ever erected by British soldiers to an Archbishop of Canterbury.

Congregational.

A new chapel has been opened at Alltwalis, Carmarthenshire.

The successor of Rev. Robert Berry, of Islington Chapel, will be Rev. J. G. Henderson, of Heckmondwike.

The foundation-stones of the new Westbourne Church, Bournemouth, have recently been laid.

Mrs. T. Harris, of Calne, Wilts, has been appointed a director of the London Missionary Society in place of the late Mr. Joseph Ruston, of Lincoln.

A new chapel has been opened in Sheffield-road, Barnsley, Yorks, providing accommodation for 450 persons. The old chapel is being used for school purposes.

Mr. George Parker, B.A., of Lancashire College, has been invited by his fellow-students to become Warden of the College Settlement in Hulme, Manchester.

During the two months' absence of Dr. Lawson Forster in the United States and Canada his pulpit at Queen's Park Congregational Church, W., will be occupied by Dr. Milburn, Chaplain of the Senate of the United States.

The Leicester Town Council have refused permission to the Congregational Lay Preachers' Association to hold services on Sundays in the parks during the time the band is playing. The bye-laws would allow no other course.

The committee of the Lancashire and Cheshire Chapel Building Society have voted a grant of £300 towards the erection of new schools at Shaw, near Oldham, to replace the old iron building that was destroyed by fire last May.

Rev. Dr. William Muirhead will complete his fifty years' residence in Shanghai in August as a missionary of the London Missionary Society. The board of directors have passed a resolution very heartily congratulating him on his long and honoured career on the foreign missionary field.

Calls.—Rev. Rhys Harries, of Narberth, to Ebenezer Church, Kingsbridge, South Devon; Rev. Augustus Julian, of Hexham, to Long Sutton; Mr. Ottwell Binns, to Portland.

Resignations.—Rev. Peter Price, of the Welsh Church at Great Mersey-street, Liverpool; Rev. Elias Davies, of Siloa Church, Llanelly.

Baptist.

The statements of progress made by the Devon Association are very encouraging.

The foundation-stones of a new church in Commercial-road, Guildford, have been laid.

Rev. James Blaikie, late of Auckland, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate of Hobart Tabernacle.

Rev. C. Hobbs has celebrated the second anniversary of his settlement at the Union Chapel, High Wycombe.

Next Sunday Mr. Evan Williams, of Cardiff College, will enter upon his duties as minister at Burton-on-Trent.

Newton Abbot Church has been celebrating its two hundredth anniversary. The church has recently been renovated.

An invitation to the pastorate at Bloomsbury Chapel, London, has been sent to Rev. B. J. Gibbon, of Southampton.

Pastor's Recognition Services have recently been held at Loose Chapel. Rev. E. Roberts, of Peckham, spoke at both services.

A new chapel has been opened at Nelson, New Zealand, for the ministry of Rev. R. S. Gray, whose pastorate is attended with great success.

Mr. Lipton has been appointed by the West Midland Baptist Association as colporteur and evangelist in charge of the church at Chadsmoor.

St. Mary's Gate Church, Derby, has been renovated, reseated, a new organ erected, the heating apparatus renewed, and the electric light introduced.

At the half-yearly meeting at Lancaster Church it was reported that £3000 had already been raised for the new church and schools in Nelson-street.

At Borough-road, Southwark, £200 was cleared by letting seats to view the Jubilee procession. The amount has been placed to the credit of the fund being raised to purchase the chapel freehold.

At the quarterly meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society farewell was taken of Rev. A. B. Wilkinson, who is returning to his work at Russell Kondah, Orissa, and of Revs. A. G. Adams and W. Millman, designated for the Congo.

On Sunday last Rev. W. Williams completed his twentieth year as pastor of Upton Chapel, Lambeth. Mr. Williams's work in South London is well known. He has been spared to survive most, if not all, of his brethren in South London contemporary with him at his assumption of the pastorate. He has not pandered to the craze of the hour, but his steady persistent Gospel ministry has built up a church whose influence is indirectly exercised in many parts of the world. A pleasing feature of the services is the presence of the boys and girls from the Southwark Boys' Home and Miss Sharman's Orphanage respectively, whose fresh young voices join heartily in the songs of the sanctuary.

Calls.—Rev. C. A. Ingram, of New Romney, to Brasted, near Sevenoaks; Rev. C. L. Gordon, of Sheepwash, to Wantage; Rev. M. E. Green, to Salem Chapel, Islington.

Resignations.—Mr. S. Willis, of Chelmsford.

Methodist.

A new church has been recently opened at Llandish, near Chorley.

The foundation-stone of a new church at Buluwayo has been laid by Mr. Cecil Rhodes.

The foundation-stones of a new chapel at West Bridgford, Nottingham, have been laid.

The Conference of Bible Christians will be composed of ninety ministers and eighty-one laymen; there are five probationers for ordination, and six candidates for the ministry.

Arrangements are being made for the Centenary Commemorative Methodist New Connexion meetings at Leeds on August 9 and 10. At the July quarterly meetings representatives were appointed to attend.

In view of the proposed union between the Primitive Methodists and Bible Christians, the Rev. W. Travis (P.M.), and the Rev. W. E. Gilbert (B.C.), of Barrow-in-Furness, have decided to make an exchange of pulpits once a quarter.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Geo. H. Morrison, of Thurso, has declined the call to Morningside Free Church, Edinburgh.

The Central Hall congregation, Nottingham, has addressed a call to the Rev. John Forbes, B.A., LL.D., of Newtownards.

Dr. Kennedy Moore has been appointed Presbyterian chaplain for the new cavalry camp which has been formed on Salisbury Plain.

Rev. Dr. Robertson has reported to the Assembly at Winnipeg that during his visit to England and Scotland he has collected £10,000 for the Mission in North-West Canada.

Dr. Salmond, one of the Professors in Dunedin University, Otago, New Zealand, and formerly minister of Northumberland-square Presbyterian Church, North Shields, is at present on a visit to this country.

Friends in Marylebone congregation have ordered between five and six hundred copies of the Diamond Jubilee edition of the Cambridge Bible, for presentation to children attending their Sunday-schools.

The Jewish committee has arranged for Rev. C. M. Christie's departure for Aleppo. Mr. H. M. Matheson reported that he has raised more than the £1000 which was aimed at in celebration of the Jubilee of the Foreign Mission.

A memorial tablet has been placed in the New-road Church, Woolwich:—"In affectionate remembrance of the Rev. William Martin Thompson, born at Ayton, Berwickshire, September 1, 1809, entered in rest July 11, 1895. He was for fifty years minister of this church, which, by the united efforts of himself and friends, was built in 1843, and for many years acting chaplain to the Presbyterian troops in this garrison. Also of Elizabeth, his wife, who entered into rest January 24, 1890, aged eighty-one. The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. Erected by their children and by members of this congregation, A.D. 1897."

Call.—Rev. A. H. Gray, M.A., Grosvenor-square Church Manchester.

Society of Friends.

The Scarborough Summer School numbers 630 members, and is expected to be a time of much interest and profit.

Frederick Sessions arrived home from the East on the 14th inst., but will probably soon start on an extensive tour of Gospel work, embracing wide portions of the field.

George Cadbury, of Birmingham, whose Christian work is so widely and well known, has just been "recorded" as a minister of the Gospel of Christ in the Society of Friends.

Wm. Hobson, of Willesden, London, was liberated on the 15th inst. to travel in Gospel work in Cumberland, Westmoreland, Durham, Yorkshire, Scotland, and in the quarterly meeting of Warwick, Leicester, and Stafford.

Ernest Robson has just returned on furlough from Madagascar. Friends' work in that island is prospering, but in some other districts Romish intolerance and injustice are unhappily still prevalent, General Gallieni's promises notwithstanding.

On the 15th inst. twenty Friends, in harmony with ancient right and custom, presented an address to the Queen on the occasion of her Diamond Jubilee. John E. Ellis, M.P., read it with much feeling, and the Queen seemed moved with its comprehensive review and recital. The deputation had a most courteous reception, and included quite a number of magistrates and other Friends holding important positions in society.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. ALEXANDER KING, Congregational minister, of Chiswick, who has held pastorates at Cork, Dublin, Queen-square, Brighton, and at Greenwich, and was for many years connected with the Turkish Missions Aid Society.—At Evesham, Mr. J. W. MORRIS, for many years trustee and school superintendent of the Congregational Church.—Mrs. A. M. JEYES, an old and respected member of College-street Baptist Church, Northampton.—At Cambridge, Mr. J. J. ATKINSON, for many years secretary of the Priory branch of the Young Men's Christian Association.—At Stretton, Mrs. ELIZABETH HOUGH, for over ninety years a worshipper at Hill Cliffe Baptist Chapel, Warrington, where the present prosperity is mainly due to her devoted interest.—At Highbury, Mr. ADAM YOUNG, C.B., for many years deacon and elder at Regent-square Presbyterian Church.—Rev. GEORGE GRIMM, M.A., formerly editor of The Sydney Presbyterian, and afterwards minister of St. Paul's Church, Balmain.—At Leven, Fife, Rev. DONALD FERGUSSON, senior minister of the Free Church, in the sixtieth year of his ministry.—At Carrigans, near Londonderry, Mr. GEO. MCFARLAND, an earnest worker in the Presbyterian Church.—At St. Leonard's, Scarborough Rev. ROBERT WILSON, formerly colonial chaplain to the convict settlement in Van Dieman's Land, and subsequently Vicar of Green Ponds and Clarence Plains, in Tasmania.—At Ilfracombe, Rev. Prebendary HUXTABLE, formerly sub-dean of Wells Cathedral, and vice-principal of the Theological College.—Rev. G. A. CLARKSON, one of the oldest clergymen in the diocese of Chichester.—At Grindelwald, Rev. SAMUEL GREGORY, of Islington, for twenty-seven years a Wesleyan minister in London districts.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, July 26, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

TRAINING HOMES FOR LADY MISSIONARIES.

THE LADY MISSIONARIES' TRAINING HOME, 15, Burnbank Gardens, Glasgow, is intended for Christian Ladies of any evangelical denomination, desirous of becoming Missionaries at home or abroad (preferentially the latter), and who, in view of this, wish one or two years' Biblical Instruction, with some experience in evangelistic work, &c.

Practical Christian Work is carried on in connection with Grove Street Institute, and embraces Visiting the Sick, District Visiting, Teaching the Young, Domestic Classes, Dispensary Work, &c.

Fees for Board and Instruction £30 per annum, or £10 per term.

THE MEDICAL TRAINING HOME FOR LADY MISSIONARIES, 32, Windsor Terrace, Glasgow, in co-operation with Grove Street Institute, is open to applicants from Mission Boards, and to those whose purpose it is to work in the foreign field, who are members of recognised evangelical churches.

Here there is given a sound theoretical and practical training (of 2½ years' duration) in the chief branches of Medical Science, viz.: Practice of Medicine, Surgery, and Midwifery. The Visitation of the Sick, &c., in connection with the Medical Mission affords opportunities for gaining experience in Practical Christian Work.

Fees for Board and Instruction, £42 per annum, payable in January, April, and September.

As the next Session begins in September, it is requested that all who desire admission make formal application at earliest convenience.

For full particulars of both Homes, applicants are desired to communicate with the Hon. Sec.,

Miss FORRESTER-PATON Mars Hill House, Alloa.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

Patron:—

Admiral of the Fleet H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, K.G.

No more fitting way could be found of celebrating the Diamond Jubilee of our beloved Queen's glorious reign over the greatest maritime Empire of the world than by generously helping to extend to our sailors, on whom the very existence of that Empire depends, a share of the religious and social privileges which we ourselves owe in a large measure to Her Majesty's noble life and influence.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN has one hundred and forty Chaplains, Readers, &c., working amongst seamen, afloat and ashore, in sixty-eight seaports in every part of the world, including the Port of London, San Francisco Harbour, China, Japan, and Australian waters.

Sixty-seven Mission Vessels and Boats and Eighty-five Seamen's Churches and Institutes, are in constant use winter and summer.

INCOME, £38,294 : 9 : 10.

Increased Contributions, Offertories, Drawing-room Meetings, Collections, &c., are urgently needed to maintain the existing work and to extend it to other Ports. They should be sent to Commander W. DAWSON, R.N., The Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

At the Keswick Convention a lady supplied 2000 copies of a booklet, "The Poverty of Christ," by Andrew Murray, to be freely distributed at the tent-door. It is a remarkable manifesto of principles, which ought to receive the best consideration that the Church of this generation can give it; whether in all particulars it endorses it, or otherwise. It forms one of a series of six, which may be obtained of the Secretary of the S.A.G.M., 14A, Lingfield-road, Wimbledon, S.W.

The Gospel should be so fully and so plainly declared that in all its healing and liberating power it may be received upon the spot. After-meetings give the opportunity of answering the anxious inquiry of stricken souls, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" But the answer of Peter in his Pentecostal sermon, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost," was not a further explanation of the Gospel, but a command to obey, and to confess that which they had already heard.

Often and often earnest and candid souls have been lifted into the light by personal explanation after they had listened to the Word preached. On the other hand, it has not seldom happened that questions asked are rather the fencing of a convicted but resisting spirit, and what is needed then is not further explanation, but such words as these—"The times of ignorance God winked at; but now He commandeth all men, everywhere, to repent." "Repent ye and believe the Gospel." "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

Medical treatment and surgical operations require intimate and accurate knowledge, delicacy of touch, nerve, experience, and skill. No less are these qualifications necessary in dealing with the diseases of the soul. To be in communion with God is the first necessity. When some Greeks desired to see Jesus they came to Philip, knowing him to be one of the disciples. Philip told Andrew, because Andrew was a little more intimate with Jesus than Philip was; and then Andrew and Philip told Jesus (John xii.). Intimacy of spirit with Jesus is of first importance to a winner of souls. Then knowledge of the Word, and skill in applying it to the actual need of the inquirer; and above all, absolute yielding to the guidance of the Holy Spirit. "He that winneth souls is wise." To him Christ must be made wisdom.

There has been some unusually interesting speaking at the "breaking-up" of schools this midsummer. Dr. Butler, of Trinity College, Cambridge, spoke in a warning, though not morose, tone on the athletic craze, saying that it was a question whether the enthusiasm of schoolboys should not be given to more serious subjects than athletics. Admitting that there is as much honesty and esprit de corps in the schools as ever, and more kindness than there used to be, he still thought that Dr. Arnold, were he here again, would find it harder work to instil intellectual enthusiasm into boys now than he did fifty or sixty years ago. This craze for bat and ball, for oar and cycle, is another illustration of the difficulty of keeping things in their places. It used to be all book and no play, and now the danger is that it will be very much play and very little book. "The happy mean"—where shall we find it if not in fine schools and ancient colleges?

The girls had some equally good advice from Mrs. Colver-Ferguson, daughter of Professor Max Müller, who put in a plea for things to which our grandmothers paid attention, but which are now lightly esteemed.

To be affected is odious, to be self conscious irritating; but the slap-dash, happy-go-lucky, no-manner-at-all deportment of some learned young women is worse.

She put in "a small plea for grace and repose as well as muscle and movement." The connection between repose of manner and quietness of heart is very close; and graciousness of deportment towards all sorts and conditions of men (and women) is the effect of a spirit touched with grace. The permanent influences of the Gospel are better for the moulding of character than the changing systems of education, though some systems may have more of Gospel method and influence in them than others.

Mr. Harry Raymond's sketch of Mr. "Barney" Barnato in The Contemporary Review affords one of the saddest illustrations of the effect produced by selfishness in placing a man in a state of "appalling solitude and loneliness." It is said that the millionaire never met a man without performing a mental analysis of his abilities as to how they might be utilised for the advancement of Barnato Brothers, and never forgot a face or anything he desired to remember.

The nemesis of such a mean way of regarding others was that to him it was inexplicable and incredible that anyone should desire his friendship or be interested in his personality as a man. He cast his own shadow on everyone. To have a loving heart that cares for others, and believes that others care for us, thus peopling life with friends, is infinitely to be preferred to a disposition which garnered millions of money and had no consciousness either of loving or of being loved.

Lady Henry Somerset is, we regret to see, still maintaining a position on the momentous question of State-regulation of vice which will neither increase her influence for good nor work for the furtherance of any of the causes she so conspicuously represents. In April she sent a letter to The Times containing proposals for the establishment of a system in Indian cantonments more objectionable than the new regulations of the Indian Government or the discarded C.D. Acts of 1864-1869. Three months later she wrote a "letter to a correspondent," to reconcile this scheme "with her known views of the C.D. Acts," a letter which shows that she never understood the said Acts, which displays the most careless reading of statistics as to the present health of the Army in India, and which reveals a strange ignorance of the problem to be solved and the principles by which Christian men and women should be guided in relation to it. Her action not having met with the approval of some of the Committee of the B.W.T.A., and, indeed, not being in harmony with the views of the vast majority of that Association, her ladyship resigned her position as president, but the Committee by a large majority have asked her to resume it.

With Lady Henry's position as president of the B.W.T.A. we do not here concern ourselves, but her public utterances are fairly open to criticism. We take only one statement as an example of inaccuracy; it is a fundamental one. Her ladyship asks:

What are the facts on which the case for State interference in this odious matter is based? They are that between fifty and sixty per cent. of our Indian Army are annually rendered unfit for duty, and thirteen per cent. annually invalided home hopelessly incurable for military purposes.

The facts are (1) that there are between fifty and sixty per cent. of admissions into the hospital for this disease, but the same cases are admitted several times over, a distinction which was pointed out months ago at meetings and in the Press; (2) there are not thirteen per cent. annually invalided home hopelessly incurable for military purposes on account of this disease, but on account of all diseases, and only ·02 per cent. from this disease. Her "case" is gone. Will her ladyship also give up her demand for State regulation?

Among the items in the newly published programme of the Congregational Union Autumnal Session, which is to be held in Birmingham, October 11-15, is a meeting devoted to addresses on "How to increase the spiritual power of our ministers and our churches," including "On Clearer Views as to Sin and its Remedy," by Rev. A. J. Palmer; "The Culture of the Devotional Life," by Rev. Chas. New; and "Directness and Evangelic Fervour in Preaching," by Rev. Stanley Rogers. Another sitting is to be devoted to "Christian Economies," in addition to the usual meetings on church aid, missionary work, and work amongst the young.

The Universities' Camps for Public Schools movement, recently referred to in these columns, encouraged by last year's success, proposes to hold seven holiday camps this summer during the present month. About twenty-five schools were represented at last year's gatherings, and the growing popularity of the movement will make it difficult to find room for the candidates this year. Each camp lasts for ten days, and is commanded by a military man; the numbers vary from forty to 100, and each tent of six boys is under the charge of a University man. The object is to win the schoolboys before the years of their greatest temptations to a manly Christian life at school, in the University, in the Army, and in business life.

All the friends of that greatly needed institution, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, will rejoice in the complete vindication of its work and administration, furnished by the award of Lord Herschell. He finds that the expenditure of the Society is based on a reasonable scale, and that its management is worthy of all confidence.

Whether a Freethinker is the right person to bring a lawsuit in defence of Sunday observance may be a doubtful question, but the decision in the recent case against The Times for advertising a Sunday concert in which a charge was made for reserved seats suggests a perilous possibility. According to the judgment given, it would seem safe to carry on almost any form of amusement as a commercial enterprise on Sundays so long as there are a few free seats somewhere in the building. The onus of disproving "free admission" lies on the informant, though the Act speaks of an entertainment as being prohibited "to which persons shall be admitted by payment of money, or by tickets sold for money." The construction put upon the statute of 1781 by Justice Collins practically makes the Act a dead letter. That is a small matter. But if it means opening the floodgates to Sunday amusements it will be a sad day for England.

An extraordinary article, from the pen of the Hon. Auberon Herbert, on the condition of things in Turkey, with an analysis of the character of the Sultan, was published in Saturday's Daily News. What passes now in Constantinople (he says) is helping to decide whether a New Christendom may emerge out of the chaos of present affairs, or whether the nations may be dragged down in a gulf of universal war. The Turks as a race, with all their faults of fatalism and passive obedience and sensuality, are, he says, a splendid race—brave, patient, enduring, cheerful under troubles, and with a strong religious nature, and capable of any amount of improvement. Mr. Herbert's graphic account would imply that, once converted to Christianity, they would make one of the noblest nations in the world; but at present they are blighted by their creed.

The nerve-centre of the present deplorable condition of things, according to this writer, is the personal character of the Sultan. The keynote of his nature is an abnormal instinct of self-preservation, a boundless hatred of all Christian influence, and an astute wiliness and cruelty, whose resources seem endless. As a result, as much wickedness finds its home at Yildiz Kiosk, as in the palace of an old Roman emperor, and to make it "an advanced post of hell."

"I am at war with Christendom" is one of the sayings of Abdul Hamid, and it gives the key to all his policy. All the massacres have been carefully planned by him, at first tentatively, and then more boldly, as he saw his way clear, owing to the jealousies of the "United Powers."

The lurid picture which is so vividly sketched in this article is one that finds its Scriptural parallel in Rom iii. 12-18. If all this genius of iniquity were but turned to the service of God, what a result might ensue!

The Standard cannot be deemed an alarmist paper; therefore especial note may be taken of its Indian correspondent's account of the disaffection towards British rule that exists among the native population. While to the peasant the Queen-Empress is but a name, which in no way hinders him from being trodden down by native subordinates and usurers, in the towns there is almost always a rabble requiring only opportunity and a leader to take a willing hand in slaughtering every European within reach. Among the aristocracy, while some are distinctly loyal to us, others of them are only seemingly so, so that it is doubtful if we could count on the help of more than a quarter of the upper classes in case of a crisis. All this means that, whilst we are not loved by any considerable portion of the people, we are actively hated by a great many.

So much for his facts. The question is how to remedy this state of things. The Standard correspondent would advocate a system of benevolent despotism, which is the only thing, according to him, that Eastern peoples can understand; and he greatly objects to the growing centralisation of Government and to the constant interference of Parliament with Indian affairs. This means in effect that we should hand over the control of our Indian policy into the hands of officials on the spot. Experience of such a method in the past does not favour this solution of the problem. It leaves too much to the character and temper of individual officials, who are not always the best judges of right as between themselves and the natives. The suggestion that such customs as child-marriages, etc., should be left alone simply means that a final bar be put in the way of all social and religious progress in India. We have a national trust to fulfil, and no disaffection should be allowed to stand in the way of a wise pressure in this direction.

But Britain certainly has need to look carefully to her steps. The great calamities of famine, plague, and earthquake have given her work enough to do, but the restlessness of the people, which continues to express itself in deeds of violence, is perhaps the most disquieting thing of all. How far are all these connected with our national sins? Agnostics and men of the world may smile at the thought of associating such things, but they are connected in a very obvious way. We are anxious as to the kind of remedy that shall be applied, for unless we mind we shall make bad worse. It is not reassuring to read what Sir Lepel Griffin said the other day:—

The local irritation owing to the distasteful but imperative sanitary measures against the plague will soon be allayed, and frontier troubles will be adjusted in the usual manner by the arbitration of the sword. It must be remembered that frontier wars and expeditions are a wholesome and necessary exercise for our Indian army, and if they did not arise naturally we should have to create them in order to maintain our troops in full efficiency.

What will Indians think of the shamelessness with which a leading man avows that we must make wars for the sake of exercising our soldiers? Is not this enough to make a people burn with indignation and proceed to violence?

Probably everyone is glad that the South African inquiry is at last out of the way, but there was one aspect of Mr. Chamberlain's apology for Mr. Rhodes which should be mentioned as throwing the distinction between political and personal morality into unpleasant prominence. The findings of the Committee included distinct charges of deceit against that gentleman, and yet Mr. Chamberlain said during the Parliamentary debate of Monday week:—

As to one thing I am perfectly convinced, that while Mr. Rhodes committed as gross a fault as a statesman or politician could commit, there has been nothing proved, and there exists nothing, against his personal character as a man of honour. It has been said that he has deceived men, but that is part of his original offence. If a man goes into revolution, it follows as a matter of course that he must deceive people.

It follows from this doctrine that a man may retain his reputation as a spotless man of honour, and yet be guilty in his political life of the most outrageous deceit. This false distinction between private and public morality is one of the deadliest perils of modern politics. It is mere Machiavellianism.

The great Catholic doctrine relating to the forgiveness of sins has been curiously illustrated in the action of Abbé Mattier, the vicar of Boistoudan, a village near Rennes. A Sunday or two ago he announced from the pulpit that during the week he would for the time abandon his ministry and do penance for his sins. He then spent three days breaking stones on the highway, refreshing himself only with bread and water. He rose at four o'clock every morning in order to celebrate mass before starting his work. At the end of this time he found his conscience appeased, held a thanksgiving service in his church, and was entertained to a substantial repast by his parishioners! What a travesty of the Scriptural teaching on the forgiveness of sins! Yet the Catholic Church, with whose tenets all this sort of thing is quite consistent, professes to be the Christian Church, and some of the leaders of our own English Church confess themselves to be more in sympathy with it than with their Protestant fellow-believers in the efficacy of the Atonement of Jesus Christ for all sin.

Our contemporary The Rock is justified in calling attention to the fact, abundantly confirmed by evidence, that Rome is England's enemy. In America this attitude has expressed itself in wrecking the Arbitration Treaty, and is constantly fomenting ill-feeling towards our country. The Church of Rome tries to control political parties "by offering a united priest-directed vote to any party that will make most concessions to her and show most unfriendliness to England." All the more reason, therefore, why we should give no occasion that Rome can use. The same sinister influence can be traced in Madagascar. All the more reason, therefore, that we put the printed Gospel into the hands of every nation, for Rome never prevails against it.

In answering the question,—"How far can the Church be held responsible for the prevalent mammonism?" the Homiletic Review is correct in saying, Exactly so far as it encourages this spirit of mammonism in its organisation, defers to it, gives to money a dominant influence, makes wealth the social test, and cultivates materialism.

It cannot in fairness be contended that the Church is responsible for any prevalent sin of the world unless she allows it a refuge within her own pale, and here is the danger. In the case of mammonism, the evil grows up imperceptibly in men's hearts day by day; covetousness and the love of money present few external signs until they are well rooted; and when they do appear in act, how seldom does the act come under the cognisance of another Christian! The market or the exchange, however, may be familiar with the grasping disposition which is causing the Gospel to be blasphemed. The great thing is for the Church to speak kindly and unflinchingly the whole counsel of God.

A Pastoral Experience.

By EDWARD N. PACKARD, D.D., of Syracuse, N.Y.

IN The Independent of August 27, 1896, and again in the issue of December 31 of the same year, Dr. James M. Gray gave an account of the "Keswick teachings," as they have been reproduced in the summer gatherings at Northfield, under the leadership of Prebendary Webb-Peploe, Rev. F. B. Meyer, and others. These articles arrested my attention, although the literature of the so-called Oxford Movement of 1874 had been familiar for years, and I was not without acquaintance with the admirable devotional books of Andrew Murray. It had not been possible for me to attend any of the various conventions for the deepening or heightening of the Christian life, and yet, through Dr. Gray's article and other material, I felt sufficiently at home with the subject to call the attention of our church to it, and to raise the question whether there might not be something worth knowing in it.

With the opening of the present year came Mr. Moody's request for the general observance of the whole month of January for self-examination, more pungent preaching, and united prayer on the part of the churches to learn what the will of the Lord is for us in these days. After two weeks' notice, to give everyone time to consider the matter, our church voted to hold special meetings through January, and I set about preparing to lead as best I might. It is perhaps fair to say, as I am recording simply an experience in pastoral work, that I had been preaching through the autumn of 1896 a series of sermons on Sunday mornings upon the structure and life of the Early Church, as set forth in the Book of Acts; and the contrast, established without effort on my part, between the simple, believing, self-sacrificing, praiseful churches of the morning time of the faith, and our present condition, was itself impressive. It had not been without a radical change in certain of my own views of doctrine and practice. I determined to make use of the Keswick teachings in our special meetings, and I honestly endeavoured to realise in myself what I was about to press upon the church. It was a case where the physician had to know the disease personally, and use the remedy on himself, before he could commend it to others with any show of success. I found nothing in the entire range of the teachings at Northfield which is not Scriptural, wholesome, rational, and delightful.

The meetings—five nights a week through January, and four a week through February—took this shape almost without our own planning: all were urged to bring their Bibles with them, and it was our practice to make large use of them by reading in unison extended or short passages in illustration of the doctrine before us. We read from the Old and New Testaments, as the case might be. The effect was remarkable. Many who felt unequal to taking any other part joined in these readings. New light fell upon the words as they were read with some one point in view. It came about that the same classic passages returned as we moved on, and became more familiar. The outline of doctrine was in substance as follows: The giving up definitely of every known sin and the abandonment of every recognised "weight" in the Christian life; the surrender of the self-centred life; the enthronement of Christ as Lord of the Will—Master as well as Saviour; the reception of the Holy Spirit as a recognised and abiding guide and sanctifier, and last and hardest to realise of all, the recognition of Christ dwelling within, the hope of glory. High themes, all of them; but we did not turn back from them! Perhaps three-quarters of an hour was given to the study of the doctrine and the readings, and then came a time for personal testimonies, questionings and replies, and prayers. Frequently the whole company of seventy-five or more knelt together while a few led; but one evening about twenty short prayers followed each other rapidly for definite objects. The form of the meetings encouraged great freedom, and women who had never before been heard in the chapel found their tongues loosed, and they were speaking without fear or thought of themselves. All formality vanished, and no two meetings were alike, save in their spirit.

Of course, the preaching of the Sabbath only focalised the teachings of the week, and preparation for it was made in a short time on Saturday. If one imagines that the preaching was upon the engaging and delightful themes of advanced Christian faith, he is much mistaken. Common and deadly sins among Christians were repeatedly held up with marked effect. The harbouring of old grudges between individuals and families, over-reaching in business, obtaining revenues from questionable investments and properties, desecrated Sabbaths, family contests over property, meanness in giving, and especially the unforgiving spirit which cuts off the effect of prayer: these were themes preached upon. Many found a wholly new and delightful release from bondage and were reconverted, if we can use the term without exactness. Reconciliations took place between prominent members of the church. Secret estrangements among families came to light. Some of those who came into the realisation of the Keswick teachings are not only active to-day in ordinary church work, but engaged nightly in mission work in the city. Many have found their Bibles to be new to them.

While few conversions took place, the church is better prepared to secure conversions at a later date. We retain the reading of the Bible in unison, and find it holds us down to definite teachings, and stimulates prayer and faith.

To call the churches back to the Word of God, to hold up high ideals of Christian privilege within Scriptural limits, to encourage one another to trust and obey: all this cannot fail to bring lasting gains to any church that sits down and counts the cost, and is willing to take the time and the trouble involved. I would not advise any brother minister to take up this line of things unless he is willing, if need be, to be torn to pieces spiritually and be made whole in the same way in which he wishes others to be transformed. The process is an expensive one, attended with large results which no one can foresee.—New York Independent.

North-Eastern Hospital for Children.—A very large number of ailing children of the poor have been treated at this institution during the past year. It is situated in the crowded and needy neighbourhood of Hackney-road, N.E. Special efforts were made to clear off a debt upon the hospital; and when this had been accomplished, it was found that the income of the present year must be drawn upon to pay the ordinary expenses of 1896. Moreover, the inadequate accommodation for the general staff, and the imperative necessity of demolishing rapidly-decaying adjacent houses once used for that purpose, compel long-delayed completion of the hospital according to the original scheme so as to cover the whole of the land at the corner of Hackney-road and Goldsmith-row. This will involve very heavy expenditure during the next year or two. The Children's Association in connection with this hospital seeks to promote kindly and practical interest among children of the upper classes in the welfare of the children of the poor.

The Evangelisation Society.

THE value attached to the labours of evangelists sent forth by this Society, now in its thirtieth year of usefulness, is evidenced by the demands for their services and by the expressions of gratitude which are being constantly received for the blessing that their simple and earnest preaching has brought to many hearts. Honoured workers among the heathen of our own land frequently seek the aid of the Society, and Mr. Geo. Holland, whose work in Whitechapel is well known and justly valued, wrote last summer: "I am so grateful for the evangelists so kindly sent during my long and serious illness. The Gospel was preached by them so faithfully and simply that the humblest and most ignorant could understand." Clergymen, ministers, and laymen who are working from year to year among the same people, often amid much discouragement, frequently write to say what a refreshment and blessing the visit of the evangelist has been, and how the same message delivered by another voice, and in a rather different manner, has reached hearts long inaccessible to their continuous and faithful preaching.

If the regular minister finds the evangelist a help, it is equally true that it is always an aid to evangelistic work if there be some pastor to gather into church fellowship those who are impressed or converted at a mission. Mr. J. Whiting held such missions in two neighbouring districts early last winter, one church receiving eighty-six and another church fifty new members as the result. The forcible preaching and application of the Gospel within the comprehension of the people, without any sensational methods, was the only means used of God to effect this change in so many hearts and homes.

There are many villages and agricultural districts which the evangelist has no opportunity of visiting, except in the summer with the tents of the Society. Whether in tent or in building, one of the happy results of mission services is that they frequently become a bond of union between Christian men of different denominations, who are able to labour happily together in the great work of leading the careless to Christ.

In regard to the financial support of the good work, it has sometimes seemed impossible, in the face of the death of many old supporters and increased claims upon the purses of new friends, that the income should be maintained. Some liberal and unexpected gifts have evoked thanksgiving to God, and made it comparatively easy to continue. One from whom nothing was expected sent £500, another sent £300, and a poor woman gave sixpence, which was all the money she had in the world. The extent of the work, and the consequent necessity for liberal support, may be judged from the fact that last year no less than 1124 places were supplied with preachers to the aggregate number of 249, while 20,468 meetings were held with an estimated total attendance of about two million souls.

Every summer some forty tents belonging to the Society are in use for Gospel services, and evangelists are also sent to preach in tents provided by friends who delight in the work of making the Saviour known among mankind. In some localities deep interest is excited by these tent missions, so that it is no uncommon thing for people to walk many miles, even on week days, to attend the services. Many precious proofs come to light of God's saving grace having been given to listeners within these canvas walls.

Communications concerning the work of the Society may be addressed to the hon. sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

Royal Society for the Assistance of Discharged Prisoners.—The task of the agents of this Society, in obtaining employment for men willing to work, has been somewhat less difficult than in recent years. This particularly applies to finding berths for those willing to go to sea. The secretary is Lieut.-Col. H. B. Buchanan, 32, Charing-cross, S.W. Among other useful work during 1896, the society assisted 332 cases from Wormwood Scrubs, at a cost considerably exceeding the Government grant of £40; and it is to be hoped that H. M. Commissioners may see their way to afford, by increase of the grant, some relief of such a burden as this statement implies, and thus give an impetus to the doing of more work than at present is possible by this and kindred societies. The Society also assisted 199 prisoners discharged from local prisons, half the expense of dealing with these cases being borne by the organisation.

The Keswick Convention.

VISITORS' IMPRESSIONS.

THE meetings in the great tent have ceased, and we pause to reflect on this wonderful movement. We heard a German visitor last year remark, "Why, sir, this is heaven"; and this year a speaker who appeared at Keswick for the first time, remarked "These are days of heaven upon earth," whilst another Christian living on the other side of the Atlantic cast about to see where heaven would be nearest, fixed upon Keswick, and in ten days from that first thought was in the great Keswick tent.

The question arises, What makes Keswick such an attractive power? It is simply because Christians gather together to meet the Lord God and to hear what He will say. What are the great cardinal principles of Keswick? (1) Salvation through the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ (1 John i. 7, ii. 2); (2) abandonment of every known sin or hindrance to holy living; (3) the immediate and complete surrender of the will to the will of God—the practical carrying out of "Thy will be done"; (4) the filling, cleansing, keeping power of the Holy Ghost; (5) holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord; (6) the life of simple faith (Gal. ii. 20; and (7) separation from the world (Gal. vi. 14, 15).

The result of this teaching is that Keswick has become one of the great recruiting grounds for the Lord's work at home and abroad. If you were to inquire of the 4000 or 5000 who gather at the Convention what their special need was, a large number could not accurately formulate an answer. To reduce this want perhaps to its simplest form, they want more of the Lord Jesus. They have read that "sin shall not have dominion over you," and they want to learn about the overcoming life.

The attendance this year may not have been quite so numerous as at the largest one, but still it sufficed to fill to overflowing the great tent and to provide a goodly audience in the pavilion at the same time. Without any invidious distinction we might say that no speaker towered over the others, but through each the Holy Ghost provided food for one and another as they needed. We cannot help thinking that with the increasing number of conventions both at home and abroad, the work will become seriously crippled unless more speakers can be brought out for this particular line of teaching.

We inquired of one and another of the audience what they considered the special feature of this twenty-third Convention, and the invariable answer has been—the marvellous spirit of prayer at the meetings and in private, audibly and in silence; we feel inclined to think that this Convention will be remembered as the Diamond Convention of prayer. The key-note was struck by Rev. Charles Inwood on "Taking hold of God." You have already reported it, but that note and its "grip" seems never to have been out of mind during the rest of the Convention. The Chairman had requested the speakers to make it a point of attending their special daily morning prayer-meeting, and to their attention to this request we feel sure that the wonderful accord of the "platform," the spirit of loving union among them, and the admitted great blessing which so many received, are the answers the Lord gave to these prayers.

With regard to the meetings themselves, we think the arrangements for the early morning prayer meetings have been improved. These meetings partook more of the proper character of prayer meetings. The Bible-readings in the tent and pavilion left nothing to be desired, and it was wise to abandon the mid-day meeting in the pavilion when there were three other meetings in progress at the same hour.

It was pretty well known that on Friday afternoon some remarkable testimonies would be given to the power of the Holy Spirit, so the tent was very full, and as Rev. F. Paynter, Rev. J. Roscoe, and Rev. Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, addressed the audience—the first and last, men who had passed the emotional stage of life—everyone in the tent entered into the solemnity and emotion which those two servants of the Lord displayed as they recited what the Lord had done for them. We feel assured that those who heard them will never forget that afternoon.

The absence of the students was observable in the less enthusiasm which characterised the meetings, and in the quieter tone of the company outside. On the other hand, there is deeper and maturer teaching; those who are most responsible as teachers conform more and more to old evangelical statements of the truth. If there is less stir, there is, perhaps, more thought and meditation; and the results may be not less deep and lasting. But the absence of the three hundred splendid young fellows, full of Christian zeal and energy, enterprise and hope, is a decided miss.

As to the teaching, it may be said that while the object was "the deepening of the spiritual life," the method was "to bring us to God." That, indeed, is the sum and substance of all preaching and teaching of the Gospel. For the Apostle Peter declares that Jesus died the Just for the unjust, "that He might bring us to God." And his beloved brother Paul testifies that the experience of the justified reaches high-water mark when we not only glory in hope of the glory of God, but in tribulations also (because tribulation, through endurance and proof, leads to a hope that maketh not ashamed, because during the process the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto us); and not only so, but we also glory in GOD through our Lord Jesus Christ.

From God man fell away under the temptation of the evil one, and to God he is brought in an infinitely higher degree by union in resurrection life with the crucified and risen Lord Jesus Christ. "The deepening of the spiritual life" is a means to this all-important end. And on the other hand, by the law of the everlasting circles, of action and reaction, the habit of glorying in God leads to the ever deepening of the spiritual life.

Medical Missionary Meeting.

THE Medical Missionary meeting, which it was proposed to hold in the Lecture Hall, was so well attended that before the commencement of the meeting those present adjourned to the tent. The chair was taken by Mr. ALBERT A. HEAD, who read Ps. ciii. 1-5.

Dr. HORDER, of South China, pleaded for the lepers of the whole world, that God might raise up some who would dedicate their lives to Him in this very blessed service of caring for the outcasts of society. He asked prayer for guidance as to the enlargement of present premises, so that other cases might be accepted and treated for the leprosy of the body, and also for the leprosy of sin.

Dr. EDITH BROWN, of Ludhiana, followed with an account of her work in connection with the medical school, the purpose of which is to train native girls as either doctors, dispensers, or nurses, so that in due time they may be sent forth to minister to the needs of their fellow countrymen. She concluded by pleading for a fully qualified lady as nurse for the hospital.

The superintendent of medical missions in London, Dr. HENRY SOLTAU, claimed that medical mission work was God's work done in God's way, in that it sought not only to win souls for Jesus, but the welfare of spirit, soul, and body; and how many in the East End of London would never be reached if it were not for the medical advice and help put at their disposal.

Prayer was offered for mission work in general, and Miss ANNIE R. TAYLOR, of the Tibetan Pioneer Mission, then addressed the meeting. She told of the way in which God had used medicine as a means of opening up Tibet and of inducing the Tibetans to visit the mission hut. Her servant Puntso, who accompanied her with his wife, was first led to the Mission for medical treatment. He was sent to Miss Taylor for advice, was kindly and successfully dealt with, and the love that was shown him ended in his following and serving Jesus, and ever since he has been her devoted servant. His wife, too, needed medical help, was sent to the hut, the treatment was given and proved successful; and she, too, gave her heart to Jesus, and is now happy in her new-found joy. Lhassa chiefs and others from all parts of Tibet visit the Mission hut for medicine, and so in all the work medicine has provided the channel for reaching the souls of the Tibetans.

Miss MAXWELL, of Onitsha, was struck by the appalling number of medical men in England and the few labouring in foreign fields. She asked for a fully qualified doctor to go out and relieve the sorrows and sufferings of the people on the Niger River.

A time of silent prayer followed, and a very successful and interesting meeting closed with the singing of the Doxology.

A meeting for the purpose of protesting against the reintroduction of the State regulation of vice in India was held on Monday, July 26, in the Pavilion. There was a good attendance, and a resolution of emphatic protest was passed.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly announce in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN that the deputation from the Keswick Convention to Canada, consisting of Rev. Charles Inwood, Belfast; Rev. John Sloan, of Glasgow; and Rev. Frank Webster, of Birmingham, propose sailing from Liverpool in s.s. Servia, on August 24 next, to hold, God willing, the following conventions:—

London, Ontario	Sep.	5	to 7
Brantford, Ontario	,,	8	,, 10
Hamilton, Ontario	,,	12	,, 15
Toronto, Ontario	,,	19	,, 22
Kingston, Ontario	,,	23	,, 24
Ottawa, Ontario	,,	26	,, 28
Montreal	Oct.	3	,, 6
St. John, New Brunswick	,,	8
Halifax	,,	10	to 12

Prayer is earnestly requested for these servants of the Lord, that they may be greatly blessed at these places.—Yours faithfully, W. HATT NOBLE.

"I want—I want the Christians to go all over the world spreading the glad news."—Reginald Radcliffe's last message.

I want—I want the Christians
O'er all the world to go,
To spread the wondrous tidings
To all that dwell below.
I want each Gentile people,
And those from Jewish stem,
To know there is a Gospel,
And that it is for them.

Dark Africa for ages
Has been without the light;
Its tribes have worshipped stocks and stones
With every heathen rite.
Its witchcrafts and its wickedness
Have sunk them low in sin;
I want the Christian witnesses
To let the light stream in.

The long "Neglected Continent,"
So populous and vast,
Has groaned beneath Rome's tyranny
For generations past.
Peru, Brazil, and Ecuador
Are dark as dark can be;
O men and women, saved by grace,
Go forth and set them free.

The Arabs in North Africa,
Who roam her desert sand;
The Moslems in Arabia
And far-off India's land,
Believe a lie, and trust in one
Who cannot hear or save;
I want the Christian's lips to tell
Of Him who loved and gave.

Go everywhere, go everywhere,
Go all the world around;
To Persia, Tibet, China,
Wherever man is found.
This generation soon will pass,
Time speeds with rapid wing;
O loiterers in the harvest field,
How will you face your King?

"Ye Philippians."

Phil. iv. 15.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

FOR a busy, footsore, heart-weary man, misunderstood and misrepresented, pursued by many anxieties and cares, there must be some place where the heated machinery can cool, and the soul unbend in the atmosphere of love and on the couch of tender sympathy. Even Jesus needed a Bethany. It is well when this is found within the precincts of Home; when the door which shuts out the rush and glare of life shuts us in to love and sympathy, and those tender ministries which are the peculiar province of a woman's life. How little does the great world realise the large share that woman's influence has had in nourishing the patience and courage of its noblest heroes! In the privacy of the domestic life there will be found those tender hands that wash the stripes, pour in the oil, and enable the soldier again to take the field.

To many, however, of the world's greatest benefactors, though they have stood in profound need of this tender sympathy, the home-life has been denied. Theirs has been a solitary and lonely lot; partly because of the exigencies of their position, and partly because it has been difficult to find, or reveal themselves to, a kindred soul. This was largely the case with Paul. A self-contained, strong, heroic soul, he resembles the lofty mountains of his native Tarsus, whose slopes are clad with rich verdure and vegetation, while their summits rear themselves in steep and solitary majesty. Few have been dowered with a tenderer, warmer disposition. The minute and particular greetings with which his Epistles close, the rain of hot tears in parting from his friends, his anguish of mind in having hurt those whom he was compelled to admonish and rebuke, his longing for companionship—are evidences of the genuineness and tenacity of his affection. But it was his appointed lot to have no settled dwelling-place—no spot he could call Home.

> Yes, without cheer of sister or of daughter;
> Yes, without stay of father or of son;
> Lone on the land and homeless on the water,
> Pass I in patience till the work be done.

Yet the Apostle had marvellous powers of attracting men and women to himself. We have seen how he threw the mantle of his magnetic influence over Silas and Timothy; the Galatians were ready to give him their eyes. But he was now to win a group of friends who would never cease to love him whilst life lasted; whoever else was alienated and weary, they would be true; whatever trouble threatened to engulf him, would only elicit their more profuse ministrations; and Philippi was to become to him the one bright sunny spot in all the earth, more than Tarsus which had disowned him, more than Jerusalem which would cast him out, and next to the "far better" of Paradise.

> Hearts I have won of sister or of brother,
> Quick on the earth or hidden in the sod.
> Lo, every heart awaiteth me, another
> Friend in the blameless family of God.

Lydia.—Probably a widow; a woman of considerable business capacity, with energy enough to leave her native city of Thyatira, and cross the sea to establish herself in Philippi as agent for the sale of the purple-dyed garments for which her native town was famous. The word indicates that she dealt in the finest class of wares, and she must have possessed a considerable amount of capital to be able to deal in such expensive articles. She was withal an eager seeker after God. The Jewish community at Philippi being too small and poor to have a synagogue of its own, was obliged to meet by the river-side in an enclosure or garden, screened from public observation. But thither she repaired as the Sabbath came round, with members of her household, listening to the Jewish Scriptures, and seeking after God, if haply they might find Him, not realising that He was not far from every one of them.

On one memorable Sabbath, when only women were present, four strangers, Jews, appeared in the little circle, "sat down, and spake unto the women that were come together." This was the first Gospel sermon in Europe. And it is somewhat remarkable that it was addressed to a handful of women in the open-air. Lydia was the first of a great succession of holy women, who have welcomed the Lord Jesus as their Sovereign and Spouse. And the open-air has been the scene of the greatest victories of the Cross.

The result of that morning service was Lydia's conversion; whether she received the Apostle's message of the crucified and living Lord at once or gradually, is not clear; most likely her heart opened as a flower to the sun; but the result was that she, with her entire household, came over to believe in Jesus, whom Paul preached, and she felt as sure about her own conversion as she was eager for Paul to come and abide in her house: "If ye have judged me to be faithful unto the Lord, come into my house and abide there." It was a blessed change, which led to far-reaching consequences in her own life, and in Paul's.

She must have been a woman of considerable determination and perseverance, to have overcome Paul's reluctance to be dependent on any of his converts. "What is my reward then?" he asks on one occasion. "That, when I preach the Gospel, I may make the Gospel without charge...It were good for me rather to die, than that any man should make my glorying void." He would bear anything rather than risk the imputation of the suspicion that he was making profit out of the Gospel. Rather than this he wrought day and night that he might be chargeable to none, and with his own hands ministered unto his own necessities and to those that were with him. But Lydia was able to override all his objections—"She constrained us," is Luke's reflection as he reviews the scene. So the four companions in travel found asylum and entertainment in her hospitable home.

How much this large-hearted and resolute woman did in after days, it is impossible now to decipher from the record of the past. We know of four separate occasions in which the Philippian church sent supplies to their beloved founder and teacher (2 Cor. xi. 9; Phil. iv. 10-18). And this was very probably due to Lydia's foresight and generosity. No other church performed this ministry, because no other church could perform it. As Paul intimates, they were for the most part in deep poverty. And it is probable that the Philippians would have been as paralysed as the rest had it not been for Lydia and her household, who throve on the proceeds of their trade. It has even been surmised that Paul owed much of the comfort of after days, when he spent two years in the Palace of Cesarea waiting for his trial, and two more years in his hired house at Rome, to the same source; and it may have been some inkling of the well-to-do friend who held Paul dear, that induced Felix to keep him in bonds.

A statement gained credence in the early church that Paul and Lydia were wed, but there is no foundation whatever for this in Scripture; and the probabilities against it are overwhelming. The whole argument of 1 Cor. vii. and ix. may be adduced to show that the stories of Lydia and Thekla are alike inadmissible. We are rather inclined, therefore, to think of Lydia as a noble, true-hearted, and devoted friend of the Apostle, who counted it her privilege as well as her joy, that he should reap temporal benefits in return for the spiritual blessings which he had so richly sown in her heart; and her reward will be one day to hear from the Master's lips that in making the burdens of his servant lighter she had been ministering to Himself, and that having received an Apostle in the name of an Apostle, she must have an Apostle's reward.

Minor Characters are cast on the canvas, drawn from life, and filling up the picture. The hysterical girl, demon-possessed, who marked and followed the evangelists, designating them slaves of the Most High God, who proclaimed the way of salvation. The syndicate of owners who fattened on the proceeds of her divination, as she showed miners where to find the gold, girls the day to wed, merchants the period to set forth their ventures; and who were correspondingly chagrined when Paul's challenge to the Spirit emancipated his wretched victim and ended their hopes of further gain. The Roman magistrates, who strangely forgot the high traditions of their office, were swept off their feet by the urgency of the rabble, and without going through even the formality of a trial, tore the clothes off the backs of the accused with their own hands, and laid "many stripes upon them," uncondemned, being Romans. Looking back on the way these petty officials treated him, Paul recalls how much he suffered and how shamefully he was entreated (1 Thess. ii. 2). There was also Silas, who well justified Paul's choice of him, for he showed himself well able to bear shame and suffering for Jesus. It was good that Mark was not there! How would he have stood it? But from these our thought turns to the third principal actor in this scene, the story of whose conversion has shed the light of unspeakable comfort into myriads of broken hearts.

The Gaoler.—A rough, coarse man, probably! What else could be expected from one who had spent his early days in the Roman army, and his later ones amid the hardening and brutalising experiences of a provincial Roman prison? When superiors did not scruple to act in defiance of law and decency, their subordinate could hardly be expected to be too particular. Barbarous usage would certainly be meted out by his hands to the two Jews, about whom he had received the significant hint that he was to keep them safely. The inner prison was a dark underground hole, beneath his house (ver. 34, R.V.); into this he thrust them; they would probably lie extended on the bare damp ground, their bleeding backs in contact with the soil, and their legs stretched to such an extent by the stocks as to almost dislocate their hips.

By midnight the two prisoners became so happy that they could no longer contain themselves, and began to sing, chanting the grand old Hebrew Psalms, and in the intervals praying. No doubt they were in the best of company, and found their souls overflowing with exuberant joy. "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name." It was an unwonted sound to the prisoners who stood or lay around in the pitch dark, their chains stapled to the walls—not one of them thought of sleep; the prisoners, we are told, were listening.

An earthquake broke in on the singing, the doors flew open, and the staples left their places. The gaoler being roused from sleep came into the prison yard, and found the doors open. As Paul and Silas caught sight of him standing against the glimmering star-light, to their horror they saw him draw his sword and prepare to kill himself rather than face an ignominious death for his infidelity to his charge. With a loud voice Paul arrested and reassured him; then the call for the light, the springing into the cell, the trembling limbs, the courtesy that led them out, the enquiry for salvation, the answer of peace, the motley midnight audience which gathered around the two servants of God, the loving tendance of their wounds, the baptism, the hastily-prepared food, the glad rejoicing of the transformed believer and of all his believing house. One event crowding on the heels of another, and making a swift glad series of golden links which bound the gaoler ever after to his Saviour and to Paul.

He doubtless became one of the members of the Philippian Church, a community of singular purity and loveliness, to whom the Apostle wrote his tenderest words without a syllable of rebuke. He could only thank God upon every remembrance of them, and in every supplication for them made request with joy. They were beloved and longed for, his joy and crown. He longed after them all in the tender mercies of Christ Jesus. They were his Bethany, his Zarephath, his Well of Bethlehem.

He's Coming Soon.

"Who is coming?" I can hear some of you asking. The Lord Jesus. The same Jesus who blessed the little children, who healed those who were sick, who raised the dead to life, who went about doing good. Yes, dear children, this same Jesus is coming again soon, and I want my little readers to feel that He is coming for them if they belong to Jesus. I expect most of you have heard father or mother speak about his coming, or perhaps you have heard some grown-up friends talking about it, but you did not understand it, did you? You thought it was for big people, and too difficult for you to think about. But wait awhile, dear young readers, and I will try if I can explain to you a little bit how certain his coming is, and how He is coming not only for grown-up people, but for all the children who love and serve Him.

Why shouldn't little children look for the coming of Jesus as much as grown-up people? "Oh, because they can't understand all about it," someone replies. Not at all. If I illustrate this, perhaps, dear children, you will see how it is possible for you to be watching for his coming without understanding all that that coming means. A mother calls her little girl of seven years old, and says to her, "Gladys, dear, father has written me a letter to say he is coming home to-day. I don't know if it will be morning or afternoon, but we must get all ready for him, mustn't we?" And the wee child runs hither and thither, helping mother to get all nice and ready, and then she suddenly thinks of how father likes warm slippers, and running off in childish glee she carries them in triumph to the front of the fire: and now all is ready. But the child has gone, and after some search we find her kneeling on a chair at the dining-room window, gazing intently at each passer-by, and if we ask her what she is doing she will say, "Watching for father." Yet the little one does not know which way, or what time father is coming, what he is coming home for, or what will happen when he comes, but the fact that he is coming is sufficient, and the little face is pressed against the window-pane watching anxiously moment by moment, until at last the watching is rewarded, and, in an ecstasy of joy, the child jumps down, calling, "Here's father coming," and the mother and child go forth to welcome him.

So, dear children, it is the same with the coming of Jesus. He is coming, for He has said, "Surely I come quickly," and we know that He is coming to gather all who love Him, whether grown-up people or children; age does not matter at all—the Bible says, "all who love his appearing." No one knows what time He is coming, and so you see, dear little reader, all we can do is to be ready for Him when He does come, and to be expecting Him every moment, because, although He has waited so long, we know that "He that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Will you, dear little reader, be glad to see Jesus when He does come? You will, if you are loving and serving Him now, because it will be as your Friend He will come, the One who loved you so much that He gave his life for you. But I fancy I hear one little child say, "How can we watch for Jesus?" Do as the little one did who was watching for father, help to get everything ready for Him. By working for Him, by telling your little friends at school about Him, and by trying to win them for Jesus.

Don't be always thinking of how you can please yourself, but try and help someone else, try and cheer someone who is lonely. And if it is someone whom you don't like, when you do the kind act, or speak the kind word, say to yourself first, "Perhaps Jesus will come while I am doing it, and if so it will make Him glad."

You will find, dear children, it will make all seem so easy to do it for Jesus' sake and to please Him. Always try and remember all through the day that Jesus is soon coming, and that He is coming for you if you belong to Him, because in that day when He comes He will gather all the jewels, small and great, not one shall be missing:—

Soon He's coming for the children
Who have loved Him and are his,
And around Him they shall gather,
For of such the kingdom is.

How to Learn the Books of the Bible.

A view of Chaldee's coming down Habakkuk's visions give;
Next Zephaniah warns the Jews to turn, repent, and live.
Haggai wrote to those who saw the temple built again;
And Zechariah prophesied of Christ's triumphant reign.
Malachi was the last to touch the high prophetic chord;
Its final notes sublimely show the coming of the Lord.

Among the Bechuanas.

Rev. Edwin Lloyd, L.M.S. missionary at Kanye, via Mafikeng, writing on June 24, says:—

"Rinderpest has killed off the cattle of our people; drought and locusts have prevented any harvest during the last three years, until, just now, their distress is great. May to June is the usual harvest time, but there has been nothing for our poor people to reap this year.

"Your younger readers may be interested to learn that our Christian chief, Bathoen, has recently offered a tame giraffe to the Queen, as his Diamond Jubilee gift. Her Majesty has graciously accepted the offer, and the giraffe will shortly be sent to England.

"Some of your readers may be interested in the story of one of our converts. Let me give you an account of Tau e Tsile (the Lion has Come), in his own words, as he recently told me his simple story:—

"'At first I was a Mr. Fear, for I feared the wrath. Repentance and conversion had not come to me then. But even when I was a Mr. Fear I prayed regularly. This word entered my heart: "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee"; and I found no peace until I gave my heart to Christ. I became an inquirer (in 1880), and Rev. James Good eventually received me into the church. When I was just a common black man, I learned to read. When I was a Mr. Fear, I heard a native preacher, and I thought I should like to learn to preach the Gospel. I am a lenchorwana of Christ (literally a little chicken; see Matt. xxiii. 37), and now I never leave the threshold of God's house to go anywhere, either to hunt or to visit distant friends.'"

A Short Sermon.

Children who read my lay,
This much I have to say:
Each day and every day
Do what is right!
Right things in great and small;
Then, though the sky should fall,
Sun, moon, and stars, and all,
You shall have light.

This further would I say:
Be you tempted as you may,
Each day and every day,
Speak what is true.
True things in great and small;
Then, though the stars should fall,
Sun, stars, and moon, and all,
Heaven would show through.

Figs, as you see and know,
Do not of thistles grow;
And, though the blossoms grow
White on the tree,
Grapes never, never yet
On the limbs of thorns were set,
So if you good would get,
Good you must be.

Life's journey through and through,
Speaking what is just and true,
Doing what is right to you
Unto one and all.
When you work and when you play,
Each day and every day,
Then peace shall gild your way,
Though the sky should fall.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, August 8.

"It shall come to pass...they shall say no more, the ark of the covenant of the Lord, neither shall it come to mind."—Jer. iii. 16.

There was a time in Israel, when the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord was the symbol of the national hopes and deliverances. If Israel was smitten before her enemies, it was thither that the people turned for help. On one memorable occasion, they brought from Shiloh the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord of hosts, which dwelleth between the cherubim, and when it came into the camp, all Israel shouted with a great shout, so that the earth rang again; and even the Philistines were afraid. But Jeremiah says that this would never be done in the coming time. Why? Partly because the people would rely more on the spiritual presence than the material emblem, and partly because a new covenant would have been inaugurated, superseding the old.

In all true lives there is something of this. We outgrow our old experiences, and get as far beyond them, as they were once beyond anything we had attained. It seems to you, that you cannot look for higher heights, more heavenly experiences, or deeper insight than you have had. Beware lest you limit God. Your highest water-mark shall be overleapt, when the tide comes in again.

MONDAY, August 9.

"Break up your fallow ground, and sow not among thorns."—Jer. iv. 3.

God's sowing times are often neutralised by the hardness of the soil of our hearts. Caked over by the heavy tread of the passing years, neglected opportunities, and worldly society, even by the beautiful feet of his messengers; they need to be broken up. We often speak of the breaking down of a great convention, but such an experience ought to lead to a breaking up of fallow ground. If this does not accrue from the gracious working of the Holy Spirit, it must be effected by the ploughshare of pain. Tribulation is derived from the Latin word for a harrow (tribulum).

In the soil of every heart thorns abound, which must be uprooted; or, as the Lord said, they will choke the seed and it will become unfruitful. These thorns, the Lord said, are cares, and riches, pleasures, and the lusts of other things.

In Finney's Revival Sermons there is a great discourse on this text at the beginning of the book. It was his wont to open a mission by enumerating the ways by which his hearers' hearts could be laid open to receive the seed of the kingdom. When hearing the Gospel, it is specially necessary to guard against all hardness of heart and contempt of God's word and commandment.

TUESDAY, August 10.

"Which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea, by an everlasting ordinance, which it cannot pass."—Jer. v. 22.

What an insignificant atom is a grain of sand! But God has chosen to arrest the advance of the mighty billows by a barrier of sand-grains. Let the ocean chafe as it will, it cannot pass its defined limits. It may destroy the solid masonry of human construction, but it is foiled by a bank of soft sand.

So it has always been in the history of the Church. The pride of the persecutor has been arrested by the sufferings of men, women, and children, who have had no more strength in themselves than a bank of sand-grains, but have succeeded in exhausting the might of their foes by passive endurance. The persecutions of the Roman Empire were finally renounced because they actually promoted the cause they were intended to destroy. By the weak things of this world God brings to nought the things that are reckoned mighty.

The weakest things that God has made are invincible. What, then, may not those who are strong in his strength do! Who would not tremble at his presence, since He can do so much with what man despises? What a great God is this, whose weakness is stronger than men!

What cannot his power accomplish for me,
Who made of soft sand a strong bar to the sea!

WEDNESDAY, August 11.

"They have healed the hurt of my people lightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace."—Jer. vi. 14. (R.V.)

We spare ourselves, and we are willing to be spared by others. The knife must not cut to the quick, the wound must not be probed to the bottom. We are glad to attend a ministry which is not too searching, dealing with the soul rather than with the spirit, with the intellect rather than with the heart. We are quite prepared that the root and core of our trouble should not be dealt with, if only we may be made presentable to our fellow-creatures as soon as possible. The corrupt matter may still be in the wound, certain to break out again, but never mind if we regain with all speed a presentable appearance.

In our dealings with God let us reverse all this, and ask that He will not spare us, or give us anything less than the best. The process may be painful and protracted, but it will be sure. The pressing of the putrid matter from the wound may distress and horrify, but it will make sure work in the end.

God has his best things for the few
That dare to stand the test;
God has the second-best for those
Who will not have his best.

THURSDAY, August 12.

"The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, are these."—Jer. vii. 4.

When Jeremiah threatened Israel with the coming of the king of Assyria, the false prophets minimised the terror of his utterances by pointing to the temple and assuring the people that there was no reason to anticipate the overthrow of their city, since it was the custodian of the holy shrine of Jehovah. "Ye have the temple in your midst, surely then you are a religious people. You cannot be as bad as this pessimistic prophet alleges, and God cannot very well dispense with you."

But men may perform the most sacred rites, and yet perpetrate the grossest crimes. The presence of a temple with all its priests and rites does not necessarily denote holiness, but often the contrary. In Roman Catholic countries, brigands will seek the blessing of heaven on their plans of murder and plunder. Our safety lies, not in outward rites, but in amending our ways and doings, in executing judgment, and refusing to walk after other gods. Not in having sprung from godly parents, nor in engagedness in holy things, nor in the practice of religious rites, will help come, but in being genuinely right with God. Real religion consists not in temple-rites, but in humility, unselfishness, and godliness.

FRIDAY, August 13.

"Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there? Why, then, is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered."—Jer. viii. 22.

O wounded, sorrowful soul, there is balm in Gilead, there is a Good Physician. No hurt He cannot heal, no bleeding He cannot staunch, no sickness He cannot cure! Why keep lamenting so bitterly, "My bad heart, my bad heart"? Why speak as though that temper, that predisposition to sin, that habit, were to be lost only in death? Why be uncomforted? Jesus can heal all sicknesses, all diseases, among the people. One touch of the King can heal the soul of whatsoever disease it has.

Why are you not in health? It is because you resort to quacks, and not to the Divine Physician; or because you do not bare your pain to its roots before Him; or because you refuse to abandon yourself wholly to his prescriptions and treatment? Search yourself to know the cause of ill-health; but be sure it is on your side, not Christ's. Bless the Lord, O my soul, "who healeth all thy diseases."

SATURDAY, August 14.

"Let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth Me, that I am the Lord, which exercise lovingkindness, judgment, and righteousness in the earth; for in these things I delight, saith the Lord."—Jer. ix. 24.

If you want to understand and know God, you must do what He does, exercising lovingkindness, and taking delight in judgment and righteousness. It is only as we walk in the ways of God that we meet Him and enjoy that fellowship with Him which reveals his deepest heart. Can you not begin this life now and here? You may think it impossible; and so to your unaided might it is. But ask Him to exercise his lovingkindness through your yielded nature, and to execute judgment and righteousness through your words and deeds. Common, ordinary things give us wonderful opportunities in these directions. Not on mountain-tops, nor in heart-moving addresses, nor in hallowed conventions, but in the self-denials and experiences of the home, we may come to understand and know God. And to do this is more blessed than to have wisdom, wealth, and might. It is wisdom: it is wealth: it is might.

Encouragement.*

Now let my heart and soul ascend
To Christ, my Treasure and my Friend,
Although the world a place deny,
There's room with Him above the sky.

Rise higher still to realms of light;
More rapidly urge on thy flight:
God is thy shield against the storms
Raised by thy powerless fellow-worms.

Cleave close to Jesu's faithfulness,
Thy God shall save thee from distress:
Though flesh oppose and foes assail,
His faithfulness shall never fail.

Above earth's sorrows soar on high
To Him, who for thy sins did die,
All that thou hast devote anew,
And still to Him continue true.

Seek, then, the things that are above,
And on them fix thy warmest love;
Bid earth, and sense, and sin depart,
And give thy Saviour all thy heart.

Spitalfields Lodging House Band.—A variety of beneficent operations is maintained in connection with this work, connected with the London City Mission, and with headquarters at the Hebrew Conference Hall, 87, Old Montague-street, E. Services in the lodging-houses themselves retain their place as one of the best aids to permanently influencing the residents for their own good. Apart from personal visitation of the missionary, these services are in many instances the only witness to the truth, and by their systematic regularity compel attention to the claims of a higher life. In one particular house it is no uncommon occurrence to have breathless interest sustained throughout the address by an audience varying from 100 to 250 men.

Women's Total Abstinence Union.—Influential work in many directions is being done by this Union, now housed at 4, Ludgate-hill, E.C. (secretary, Miss Holland). Much progress has been seen during the past year, the number of directly federated societies being increased to 204, many of these reporting a growing membership. The president (Lady Elizabeth Biddulph) has done excellent service for the Union by addressing numerous meetings. Much deputation work has been accomplished by members of the executive and of the general committee. Mrs. Eynon, Miss E. L. Connell, and Miss L. Wright have been busy as organisers. Wings, the official organ of the Union, published monthly at one penny, steadily increases in circulation, and many words of appreciation and thanks have come from its readers. The varied operations of the Union have proved singularly fruitful for good in official and social relations, and in connection with public events.

Prayer for India.

ON Wednesday, last week, prayer on behalf of India was offered in several centres of London and many provincial cities and towns. Famine, plague, and earthquake having visited the great Eastern dependency of our Empire, the time had undoubtedly come for the Lord's remembrancers to assemble for conference upon India's need and prayer on behalf of her great population. In London, meetings were held at Mildmay Park, Devonshire House, Exeter Hall, Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., and the Conference Hall, Ecclestonstreet. The provincial cities in which gatherings were held, included Manchester, Liverpool, and Bristol, also Aberdeen, Glasgow, Dundee, and Dublin.

Presiding over the Eccleston-street meeting, Rev. H. E. Fox, hon. sec. of the Church Missionary Society, read Dan. ix. 3-19. We have sinned, said he, our fathers and our rulers have sinned in regard to the suffering country, especially in neglecting adequately to carry the glorious Gospel to its people. Would that the condition of India were the burden that it ought to be upon Christian folk! The only remedy which will go to the root of the matter is the same Gospel of God's grace. Like Daniel, may we believe most confidently that God will answer our prayers in his own time and way!

Lord Radstock besought God to stir his people in our own favoured land to a full realisation of their responsibilities in regard to India. His lordship then read extracts from letters received by the last mail. Some of the painful facts mentioned have already been published; but the main features of the necessarily imperfect picture, built up from glimpses afforded by mere verbal descriptions, more than justify the appeal for earnest and continued supplication to Almighty God, side by side with a largely increased measure of practical sympathy for the great army of sufferers from famine, pestilence, and earthquake. Tidings were read out concerning mission property damaged by the recent upheaval, signs that Mohammedan fanaticism is only smouldering, rains bringing no immediate benefit, but rather fomenting disease, and a mortality of 628 per 1000 in one district. Then there are the unspeakable risks run by the many of whom die of starvation. Missionaries, beset by hungry crowds, are at their wits' end, while the price of grain is enormously increased; last, not least, extensive tracts of country are very inadequately, if at at all, served with the Gospel. Missionary letters reveal the fact that, owing to various causes, the people are deterred from going upon relief works. The number in actual need cannot be short of 10,000,000 at the present time. All missionary correspondents ask prayer, and one says "My brain almost reels in view of the people's needs." There is abundant opportunity for all Christians to show by their works that faith of which we have heard so much in the last few years.

Rev. A. R. Cavalier, secretary of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, offered prayer that, as a nation, we may learn from God's chastisements to be more true to Him in our relations to India. Supplication was also made for a speedy termination of these terrible calamities. Further earnest prayer was offered by Mr. J. E. Cook, who, at a later stage of the meeting, urged the great importance of bringing increased Christian influence to bear upon our army in India, as well as upon the native community generally. A missionary recently come from Travancore (Rev. I. H. Hacker) described how signs of trouble had long been apparent in his district. On the West coast of India the great trouble had been the plague. In Bombay alone the population had been diminished by 500,000 in six months; and, making allowance for removals to other places, this was a terrible indication of the ravages of the pestilence. Rulers in India need wisdom and grace to cope with the difficulties confronting them, and for this we may well pray earnestly and continually. God blesses far beyond our highest dream if we trust Him.

Lord Kinnaird disclaimed any idea of finding fault with ordinary relief agencies; but the Mansion House Fund being now closed, he was the more free to say that Christ's people should send their help through Christian channels. At the same time, he trusted that the ordinary income of religious societies would not be allowed to suffer on account of the special effort demanded by India's great need, particularly when workers connected with the various missionary societies are doing so nobly under the strain made upon their resources.

Rev. H. E. Fox closed the meeting with another petition that, in judgment, God would remember mercy, take away the threatening disaffection, and help those who, amid accumulated difficulties, are faithfully ministering to suffering bodies and souls in the stricken land.

The Famine in India.

URGENT NEED FOR HELP.

LORD RADSTOCK, writing on Christian succour to India, says:—

"A most important report has been made by Mr. James, vice-chairman of the Central Calcutta Committee of the Mansion House Fund, and who was deputed by the Governor of India to report on local committees for famine relief. Besides giving many details of suffering which he witnessed, he says: Forty lakhs (say £275,000) will be needed for seed in the north-west provinces alone! Of course bullocks are absolutely necessary if the ground is to be tilled; these would cost about as much more. Houses have to be repaired and utensils provided, so that probably the whole Mansion House Fund could be employed in the N.W.P. alone for that one purpose! But the central provinces and other distressed districts would together require twice as much for those objects alone, without touching the relief of tens of thousands of sick and many thousands of orphans who are still alive, though so many thousands have died already.

"'The fact is,' says Mr. James, 'the dearth has been so widespread that the contributions [to the Mansion House Fund] have been a mere drop in the ocean.' Again, he says that when prices are only 50 per cent. over usual there is no margin left for labourers; but prices are 300 per cent. and over, for thirty or more millions. Again, he says: 'The amount of relief that could be given, without including any but cases of real acute distress, is practically limitless.' Bishop Thoburn says that, after careful inquiries among his large organisation, "the famine is very severe' for about 150,000 square miles. In the Deccan, one writes to us, 'they are flocking to us by hundreds.' Another missionary, who had been to see for himself in a district 300 miles from the last writer, says: 'The condition of the people is far worse than I had any idea of. The missionaries are feeding hundreds every day, and are beset night and day by the hungry.'

"Pundita Ramabai says: 'I saw hundreds of living skeletons, hungry, cold, tired of the miserable life.' She speaks of the terrible abuses where heathens 'adopt' orphans and use them for slave or worse purposes. Another missionary writes: 'Our orphan children are increasing every day. Many people are dying of starvation.' Again: 'Cattle are dying in incredible numbers; corn is advancing in price day by day.'

"I regret to find that the Ladies' Association (of which Hon. G. Kinnaird, 2, Adelphi-terrace, is hon. sec.) has only received promises to adopt thirty-five orphans. If the Church of Christ in England had been awake, at least 3500 might have been adopted, and even then thousands would have been left without being adopted."

Rev. C. B. Ward, of Yellandu, writes:—"The rains have so far (July 6) failed, and the prospect is very dark. Many come in from the villages begging for work. The depth of suffering that has for some time past been common further north, seems to be settling down upon us.

"When distress began to be felt here some time last year, I went to a well-to-do native merchant and arranged with him to cut and supply for the military a large quantity of wild grass. In this way, by buying the grass from the villagers, I have been able to put in their hands about Rs. 4000. The people of some thirty villages, who had no food or work, by this means have passed the year above distress. This enterprise has cost me about Rs. 1000 out of my own funds. But I do thank God for the good done.

"On another side I began a tank on some land I held for the mission, and thus about Rs. 3000 of work at a very low rate was provided for nearly 1000 souls, old and young. This work is not yet finished. Nearly 200 adults worked on it. I borrowed from a friend to start this. The help of the Lord's people is pulling me through this. Then my appeal for help to rescue 500 boys and girls has awakened sympathy in some hearts, and I am moving on in that."

Rev. L. Lawson, of the American M.E. Mission, Meerut, N.W.P., writes: "By money sent from loving home friends, we have been enabled to take in fifty-three famine children. At least they have been kept from starving. We hope to keep them in our schools, where we have about 150 bright boys and girls whom we are trying to train for the Lord's work."

Great Assembly Hall.

THE last two months have been most oppressive, and not the time of year when choice would be made to hold a special evangelistic effort. Yet Mr. E. P. Telford has completed a most successful mission of eight weeks in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. From the very first Sunday the interest was marked by good audiences, and the Sunday-evening meetings were above the average for the season of the year.

One great feature in the preaching of Mr. Telford is his direct and earnest appeal at the close of every address for immediate decision for Christ, and his efforts in this direction have been manifestly blessed during the last two months. At the close of each service not a few have stood up boldly, or when invited to declare themselves willing to accept Christ as their Saviour have in the presence of the vast congregation of thousands of persons declared audibly "I will."

His addresses to Christians have been a great means of strengthening and building up of God's people. He did not confine his efforts entirely to within the Great Hall, but to get at the passers-by he held extra services of an informal character in the vestibule, and thus hundreds were gathered in who would not be reached by the ordinary services, and much good was done to these outsiders. During his stay Madame Marian Mackenzie sang on Sunday evenings during June, and the Park sisters, from New York, during part of July.

Some most interesting cases could be recorded. One showing the advantage of the Great Assembly Hall always having its doors open, was a man living at Poplar, who had been anxious for some time. While at work one day he was so miserable that he said to himself, "Where can I go? Oh! I know, the Assembly Hall is open every night." He came, and that night found peace. Another man, who had been to the Hall for sixteen years, and must have listened to Gospel addresses that had converted thousands, went into the inquiry-room one night and decided for Christ. A man was spoken to by one of the workers in the hall. He looked most anxious, and when asked if he would go into the inquiry-room, replied, "How long will it take?" When told as long or short as he liked, he went in, and the way of salvation was explained to him, when he said, "I never thought it was so simple; I am glad I came." He went home rejoicing. On the last Sunday night, after a most powerful address, Mr. Telford asked all those who had received blessing during his mission to stand, and hundreds rose to their feet. A large crowd gathered on his last night, and expressed a desire for Mr. Telford to prolong his visit, but that was impossible, as other preachers were booked to follow him. Mr. Telford has now gone to Northumberland for a well-earned rest, and the prayers of God's people follow him.

Methodist Seamen's Mission, Rangoon.—Since October, 1895, this work, which centres in the Seamen's Rest, Frazer-street, has been under the superintendence of Mr. Elijah Harris. During the past year 579 visits to vessels, fifty-five to the gaol, and seventy to the hospital have been made. In the shipping season, with the permission of masters of vessels, services were held on board a large number of ships; and letters have been received from wives and mothers in other parts of the world, testifying to changed lives in those who have attended. Besides the Gospel meetings at the Rest, there were some social gatherings last year for the benefit of sailors in port; and these were a source of true enjoyment and profit, especially when the dreary monotony of the ship's deck is considered. Good results have been seen in rebellious and stubborn wills subdued, in tender memories awakened, and in grateful confidence taking the place of mistrust and unbelief.

Mr. Emilio Olsson,

MISSIONARY TO SOUTH AMERICA.

THE subject of this brief memoir is the superintendent of the South American branch of the International Christian Alliance Mission, whose headquarters are in New York. The Society is now in its tenth year, and from the beginning has been under the direction of Rev. A. B. Simpson, aided by a large staff of devoted men and women.

Mr. Olsson is a Swede, and left his native land about twenty years ago. Five years later, in the good providence of God, he was taken to the Falkland Islands, and there converted under the preaching of Mr. Ewen, whose missionary labours in South America are well known to many readers of THE CHRISTIAN.

Soon after his conversion he received a distinct call to circulate the Scriptures, and, declining other offers, set out on a series of long and difficult journeys through Argentina, Bolivia, and Chile, distributing twenty thousand copies of the Word of God, and also preaching in Spanish to a very large number of the inhabitants.

In the period under review Mr. Olsson's travels extended to fifty thousand miles. The Lord has used him in starting several mission stations in various parts of the vast continent, and his experience has been full of wonderful incidents, showing God's keeping and preserving care. In the desert his life has been endangered for want of water, many have been his escapes from the plots of the Roman Catholic priests and from bands of robbers. Thousands of people were met with who had never previously heard the Gospel or seen a copy of the Bible.

Travelling one day with an Indian, he asked the stranger if he had heard of the Lord Jesus Christ. "No," he answered, "Who is He? Where does He live?" At another time, speaking to a man of eighty-two years of age about the love of Jesus, the latter exclaimed, "Blessed be God for such good news; it is the first time in my long life I have heard it."

An apparently hard-hearted, cruel man, armed to the teeth with knives and pistols, shed tears when reading the New Testament, and said, "I cannot read this Book without crying; I never knew before what a bad, hard heart I have."

One day a young man said he had been wishing for three years to obtain a Bible, but did not know where to get one until he met Mr. Olsson. Another young man to whom he gave a tract in Spanish, entitled "The Just for the Unjust," came up to him a few days later and said, "I want to buy the book that tells of this Just One who died for the unjust;" and he bought a Bible. Such cases and many more show the great and pressing needs of South America.

Last year Mr. Olsson reached Iquique, in the northern part of Chile, and described it as the most remarkable place he had ever been in. The people were so intensely interested that after his preaching one sermon every man present who could read bought a copy of the Bible. After another wonderful meeting, thirty precious souls were convicted of sin and sought the Saviour. Several of them left the meeting praising the Lord. One dear old woman, after listening to another sermon in an inland village high up among the mountains, said she "had been praising God all night for sending Mr. Olsson there."

He believes that never in the history of South America has there been such an opportunity for preaching Christ to the natives as now. Revolutions may alter this in a few years, and some of these Republics may again be closed to the Gospel. "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation."

The following incident proves the power of God's Word, and the importance of circulating the Holy Scriptures among these benighted peoples. Bibles having been sold to two men, one book was seized by a Roman Catholic priest and burned; the other was faithfully studied, and the owner of it converted. His wife was also converted after reading the same Bible. Two years later Mr. Olsson met this man at a religious service, and was reminded by him of the sale of the Bible. His face was beaming with the joy of heaven as he presented, one after another, six people who had become converted through reading the precious volume. Besides, twelve persons had been brought to the meetings held by the missionary, of whom nine are now converted, and one is an office-bearer in a church in Chile. The Bible in question, from constant use, appeared as if twenty years old, though only two years had elapsed since its sale.

Mr. Olsson is a firm believer in the speedy advent of our Lord, and says that one day during his solitary travels in the interior, he was struck, as by an illumination from heaven, with thoughts of the glorious possibility of preaching the Gospel all over the "Neglected Continent" in a few years. The idea presented to him was to start mission stations along all the great lines of communication, so as to reach both the Spanish and Portuguese-speaking people and the inland Indian tribes. The Indians of the great river Amazon and its tributaries can be reached from two different points. The Quichua Indians can be reached from Bolivia, Peru, and Chile. The Indians of Gran Chaco, Araucania, and Patagonia can be reached from various parts of the Argentine Republic. Each missionary will be assigned a definite district, and visit the people with the Word of God and testify of a personal Saviour.

We cannot do better than conclude this sketch with Mr. Olsson's own words:—

For years I have been connected with the American and Valparaiso Bible Societies and the American Presbyterian Mission. I am sorry the Presbyterian Board cannot extend its operations just now in South America, for want of funds, but the Lord has opened up another way quite unexpectedly.

The Christian and Missionary Alliance Board had been praying for a man to take the lead in the important work of evangelising South America. After prayer and consultation I was led to unite with this Society. Since I commenced visiting some of the principal seminaries, missionary institutes, and training colleges in the United States and Great Britain, the Lord has given me remarkable success. Already 100 volunteers, including lady missionaries, have given their names as anxious to work for the Lord in South America.

In Mr. Moody's Institute in Chicago forty-seven students volunteered for the work. At Northfield we had several volunteers, and in Princeton College, where there are over one thousand students, I hope we will get a number; also from Great Britain and Sweden.

The Christian and Missionary Alliance has undertaken in a very humble way to meet the awful need of South America, and it is quite remarkable how the Lord has been blessing this young Society in sending forth so many missionaries to the foreign field. It has about 300 foreign missionaries in the heathen world. They are labouring in eleven different countries, and have forty-seven stations and already many hundreds of precious converts in heathen lands.

"One thousand millions of our race are still without the Gospel and the knowledge of Jesus Christ. One hundred thousand human beings die every day without Christ or hope. What right have we to hear the precious Gospel, and leave a thousand million souls to die? These are great points for every Christian heart to ponder upon."

A small working committee has been formed in London to further the object aimed at by Mr. Olsson. It meets at the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C. One of the honorary secretaries, Mr. H. S. Ridings, lately returned from South America, is a close personal friend of Mr. Olsson, and well acquainted with his work. He will be glad to call upon or write to anyone interested in the evangelisation of South America. His address is 31, Carson-road, West Dulwich, London, S.E.

Mr. Olsson is back again in South America, and sends most encouraging accounts of the openings the Lord is giving him, but is much hindered for want of sufficient means.

Bible Reading on the Word "Go."

THE different occasions on which Jesus used the word "go" are very instructive. His command to "go" is just as authoritative as his "come." Here are some of them:—

To the rich one	Go and sell.—Mark x. 21.
To those who have seen and heard	Go and tell.—Luke vii. 22.
To the sinning one	Go and sin no more.—John viii. 11.
To the healed one	Go in peace.—Mark v. 34.
To the cleansed one	Go and show.—Luke xvii. 14.
To the prayer of faith	Go thy way.—John iv. 50.
To whom Christ appears	Go and say.—John xx. 17.
To those amongst wolves	Go, I send you.—Luke x. 3.
To wayside workers	Go into the village.—Mark xi. 2.
To the forgiven one	Go in peace.—Luke vii. 50.
To the disciple	Go and teach.—Matt. xxviii. 19.
Christ to his servant	Let us go.—John xiv. 31.

HENRY FAULDER.

The Student Movement.

SUMMER CONFERENCE.

[By Our Own Representative.]

SELDOM, perhaps, has Dr. Grattan Guinness' Missionary College, at Curbar, Derbyshire, been put to better use in vacation time, or presented a busier aspect, than last week, when some 350 young men and women students met for mutual fellowship and counsel in the things of God.

To begin with, it required no little management to accommodate them all. For the most part, the ladies occupied the college, while the robuster sex encamped in tents in a field not far away; while others of the visitors found lodgings in the neighbouring villages, and at the handsomely appointed "Hydro," at Baslow (one of the best situated establishments of its kind, by the way, in the Midlands, overlooking the Duke of Devonshire's historic park at Chatsworth).

The scenery viewed from the advantageous height of Hulme Cliff College, or "Cliff" as it is familiarly known, reminds one slightly of Mr. Moody's home at Northfield; and when that is said little need be added to emphasise the beauty of the situation, or suggest the graceful slopes and outlines of the adjacent hills. Derbyshire is Derbyshire, and "Cliff" is in the heart of it—that is enough to say.

This is the first year the summer Conference has been held away from Keswick, where it has hitherto either preceded or followed the great Convention. There are many reasons, mostly internal, for the change, not the least benefit being the increased privacy, and therefore greater freedom, thus secured.

This "Student Movement," as it is popularly called, bids fair to become one of the most remarkable developments of Christian life and work of our day. It aims at reaching the members of every kind of college, wherever found, and at the present congress some forty seats of learning—general, medical, theological, technical, etc.—were represented.

"How is it there are so few Christian men in our colleges?" "Are we doing what we ought in winning men for Jesus Christ?" These were questions asked by the students one of another, and to which they set themselves to reply. Day by day for nine days they met together to discuss matters of vital importance, some touching more particularly the technicalities of college life; others of wider scope, affecting, through the students, the world at large; and not only the world of Christendom, but the further, darker, needier kingdoms of heathenism, and habitations of cruelty as yet untouched.

For there is "a wheel within a wheel" in this movement—a dual organisation—first, the British College Christian Union, a mission of Christian students to their unconverted fellows; and the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, a movement of Christian students among themselves to consider and press the claims of the foreign field. Quietly, unostentatiously, though so large and far-reaching, the work goes on, unfelt at first by the world outside academic walls, until these young disciples exchange their college life for wider spheres beyond. Then its power will be felt.

Much might be written of the noteworthy ability with which the Executive plan, organise, and carry into effect this multifarious, not to say complex, mechanism for the evangelisation of the world. But they never lose sight of one truth, which is kept well to the fore—"Men are nothing; Executives are nothing; Unions and Federations are nothing, unless God is the beginning and the end of all." Another characteristic is the fearlessness with which facts are faced, whether they make for encouragement or disappointment, temptation or cheer. That there are perils may be taken for granted in an aggressive movement against the powers of evil, which they are not likely to treat with indifference or contempt. There is no spurious humility, breeding cant, nor undue elation, engendering pride of heart; but a bold and well-balanced recognition of privilege and responsibility.

The fact that students are the best judges of what students require will account for most of the speakers being students (men and women) themselves; but at the evening meetings addresses were given by Revs. Dr. Handley Moule, Dr. John Smith, G. Wright Hay, C. Inwood, G. C. Grubb, H. B. Fox, H. C. Macartney, and Dr. Grattan Guinness, sen., the last named having travelled 12,000 miles, by express stages, in order to be present. His impassioned speech in depicting the heathen customs of India, and that country's terrible needs, created an intense impression, which it is only reasonable to believe will have a large share, under the Spirit of God, in directing many a young hearer to his or her life-work.

An interesting sketch was given by Miss Rouse of her recent visit to the Continent with a view of starting the work among the women students of Scandinavia and Finland. She had been led to expect some active opposition in Scandinavia, where women students are to be found in Copenhagen, Helsingfors, Stockholm, and other places. Her expectations had, however, been pleasantly falsified, for she found a respectful hearing everywhere, and in many cases there was evident preparedness for vital Christianity. Though there exists a great dread of organisation in those countries, centres of Christian reunion were formed, and much interest was awakened in missionary work. The idea of women missionaries was quite a new one among Scandinavians, but the way opened up wonderfully, and Miss Rouse was greatly cheered at the ready attention given to her addresses in spite of the disadvantages of interpretation. Once or twice the hand of God was very evident in her visit. At the outset a delay of eight days was caused, through the vessel in which she was travelling being caught in the ice in the Gulf of Riga. This disorganised all the arrangements, but she was told afterwards that the women students to whom she had come would never have been so prepared for her message if the original plan had been adhered to. Later on in the year Miss Rouse hopes to visit South Africa to initiate similar work among the colleges and senior schools of the colony, and she asked prayer that this effort might be greatly blessed.

Mr. Rutter Williamson, in the absence of Mr. Mott, who was indisposed, gave an impressive address on throughout the world. This is to the whole world what the College Union is to the British colleges. Its aim is to consolidate all college movements everywhere into a great inclusive federation. This was the fruit of two years' work. A tour embracing 60,000 miles was made last year by Mr. Mott and his helpers; and the results had been marvellous. Mr. Mott had been in twenty-four countries, and in 144 universities and colleges; seventy-four new Student Christian Associations have been formed, and encouraging reports have been received with reference to all but seven of them. There are now ten national and international student movements in the federation. Corresponding members of the General Committee have been appointed for France, Italy, Switzerland, Austria, Bulgaria, Turkey in Europe, Greece, Syria, Egypt, and the Hawaian Islands. Considerable time was spent in gathering information concerning the religious life of students, and concerning organised Christian work among them. Answers to questions on the points have been received from thirty-two different countries: Germany, Great Britain, Russia, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, France, Holland, Switzerland, Austria Hungary, Italy, Spain, Bulgaria, Turkey in Europe, Egypt, South Africa, Asia Minor, Syria, India, Ceylon, Burmah, Japan, Tasmania, New Zealand, Australia, United States of America, Canada, Mexico, Guatemala, United States of Colombia, Brazil, Chili, Uruguay, Paraguay. Two years will be necessary to tabulate the results. During this tour twenty-one student gatherings have been held, attended by over 5500 delegates, of whom 3300 were students and teachers representing 308 institutions. Interviews have been held with the majority of the 1300 missionaries met with throughout the world. During the conferences, and in the course of more direct personal work, over 500 young men have professed to receive Christ as their personal Saviour, 300 have given themselves to Christian work, and over 2200 have covenanted to keep "the morning watch." The "Ten Years' Retrospect," read by Mr. Williamson from the general report of the work, afforded a striking proof of its magnitude and importance, and his frank statement of its perils showed that the committee is very anxious to avoid the mistakes and pitfalls that throng the pathway of an organisation so worldwide and so varied.

One of the most hopeful aspects of the movement has been the unexpected way it has taken root in China, where twenty-seven college unions have been federated. In that country the student class is specially important, as all the official positions under Government are held by those who have been students, of whom it is estimated that half a million are annually examined in Pekin. To capture these students for Christ would mean the speedy ending of the corruption and bribes that are the bane of that country, and prepare as nothing else could for the complete evangelisation of the whole land.

Almost the whole movement towards federation has been the work of one year. The most sanguine had no conception that it would reach these dimensions in this wonderful way, and in so short a time. Mr. Williamson also gave a telling account of a gathering of various national representatives in America round the monument erected at "Haystack Hill" to the men who initiated the movement, when they joined hands and repeated the three great

Missionary Watchwords,

"God wills it" (Peter the Hermit), "We can, and we will" (the five men who there pledged themselves to the cause of missions), and "Make Jesus King!" (the words of a memorable telegram sent to the Union by students of Japan). An important session was given to the consideration of the

which is "The Evangelisation of the World in this Generation." A memorial has been drawn up for presentation to the Church of God at large, pleading for a universal adoption of this watchword, and for determined endeavour to bring about the fulfilment of its purpose. The five times repeated commission of our Lord and the love of God to the world were deemed to be sufficient warrant for an ever-increasing activity to redeem the dark places of the earth. Doubtless the watchword is reactionary, and will revolutionise the ideas, tastes—ay, the lives—of those who adopt it. But the souls of men must be regarded from God's point of view by his people, who must follow the resolve of the Apostle Paul—"As much as in me is...I am ready!"

Mr. D. M. Thornton (Cambridge), late educational secretary of the S.V.M.U., spoke more particularly with reference to Africa, which is the object of the missionary bands' study in the coming winter. He explained the plan of the text-book which he has prepared on that country, "Africa Waiting" (2s. 6d. S.V.M.U. Office, 93, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.). First, he said, let us see how much we have to do, and then pray that we may do it. With regard to motives, we assume, shall we say, that the watchword is going to be carried out. If, as we believe, Christ wills that all should come to a knowledge of the truth, we must settle what time we can give to missionary study in relation to this, and aim at being authorities on every part of the missionary field.

Bible Circles.

What are they? What is their purpose? How may they be arranged? A session was devoted to a consideration of these, in which we were reminded of what many of us have long known from unprofitable experience—the tendency of an ordinary "Bible-reading" to become a "one-man" meeting, owing to an unwise choice of subject, a too large audience, uncertainty of purpose, or what not. The College Bible Circle aims at the encouragement of systematic Bible study by small groups of students, perhaps five to eight in number, of subjects appointed beforehand which the members may study beforehand and come to the "circle" prepared for exchange of thought. This encourages private devotional study by a systematic method, and gives a Scriptural grounding in the Christian faith. No more hopeful portent of the future of these young men and women could be desired than this, in days when the study of the Word of God itself so frequently is given a second place to the views of man, or no place at all. A four years' suggestive course has been drawn up by the Union, which we earnestly hope may find a large circulation beyond its primary limits.*

* Copies may be had at the B.C.C.U. Offices, 93, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C., ½d. each, 5d. per doz., 3s. per 100.

Systematic Giving was a subject introduced for consideration by Mr. W. H. T. Gairdner (Trin. Coll., Oxon), one of the travelling secretaries of the B.C.C.U. He dealt faithfully and explicitly with its difficulties as well as its claims, giving Scriptural reasons for it, and ably answering such objections as "Being in statu pupillari, our money is not our own"; the necessity of thrift and provision for the future; the claims of environment; of mental, intellectual, musical, artistic talent, etc. All these can be adjusted when the heart of the giver is consecrated to God. This view of the matter took effect a day or two later when the question of income for the ensuing year's work had to be considered. About £1200 would be required, and the raising of it was made a matter of solemn prayer and worship. One of the losses incident upon the removal of the conference from Keswick was the absence of many friends and sympathisers who had helped in former years. But this did not trouble the Executive, who determinedly look to God and themselves to do what is needful. In the result over £500 was guaranteed on the spot, after those present had been urged to weigh well their ability and to give their promises as only in the sight of God. That this was done was suggested by the uneven amounts of many of the gifts, such as 2s., 3s. 6d., 14s., 35s., as well as those of rounder numbers, which ranged from one to thirty-five guineas.

Some of the afternoons were devoted to conference among the presidents and secretaries of the College Unions as to Effective Methods of Reaching their Fellow-students, Intercollegiate Relations, the Daily Prayer-meeting, etc. Papers followed by discussion proved practical and helpful to men and women alike. It may be noted here, once for all, that the counsels of the lady students throughout the week were of a very high order in respect of conciseness, grip, and spiritual tone.

At the general meeting on Saturday morning a paper was read by Mr. Gairdner (Oxford) on "The Relation of Studies to Christian Work at College." This question presents difficulties often solved by ignoring one side. It is a student's duty to read steadily at College, not only because those who have sent him there expect him to do so, but also because by so doing he educates his mind, and becomes the better equipped for his life-work. A man who does not read faithfully also loses much of his influence.

But there is spiritual work to be done in college, which only students can do. Can it be done without the neglect of study? If it is necessary it is possible. God gives time for all that He intends to be done. Moreover, it is being done. In a Christian Union composed of ten per cent. of the men in the college, seventy-five per cent. of the honours of the year fell to its members. But in order to make time for both, guidance must be sought how to make the most of every moment, and not to waste odd minutes.

Mr. Williamson (Edinburgh) followed with some short notes from a paper on the "Relation of Work out of College to work in College," giving it as his opinion that students should give all their spare time to work in College, because their opportunities there are greatest, shortest, and nearest; and, since their fellow-students must be influenced by them, they should see that they are powerfully influenced for God.

At the evening meeting at 7.30, a telegram of greeting (Psa. cvi. 5) from the Scandinavian students assembled in conference at Herrlufsholm was read, also an appeal from Dr. T. Harford Battersby for more men for the Niger Mission. Miss Agnes Hill, Gen. Sec. Y.W.C.A. of India, followed with an appeal for India, and Miss Van Sommer pleaded for Egypt with its many villages and large Moslem university of Al Azhar. Rev. E. H. M. Waller and D. Sampson, student volunteers, shortly sailing for the mission-field, added a few words, and the Rev. Wright Hay spoke again of the needs of Africa and India.

Sunday was kept as a "quiet day." At the prayer meeting at 9.15, after an address by Rev. H. E. Fox (C.M.S.), the student volunteers who expect to sail within a year each spoke briefly; and the closing meeting of the Conference at 7.30 was addressed by Rev. Wright Hay and by Mr. T. H. Oldham. The latter, in summing up the lessons of the Conference, gave as a closing message 2 Cor. v. 9, and earnest prayer was made that henceforth the ambition of the great missionary Apostle might be realised.

On Monday morning at 7 a.m., the company gathered in the little church of Curbar for a united communion service, and went forth in the strength of Him whose presence with his people is the great reality to occupy "till He come."

No written report of these gatherings can represent the attention of upturned faces, the earnestness of purpose, or the inner yearnings of the soul which only the heart of God could know. Not only in the meetings, but at the close of the day many of them sought spiritual help and counsel from the speakers, as to the claims of the higher life, and how they might recognise the call of God to their life-work at home or abroad. It was, perhaps, a loss that there were not a few well-taught and experienced lady workers present to undertake personal work among the young women, such as that done by Messrs. Inwood and Grubb among the men, to meet their difficulties and give them the benefit of a matured insight into the spiritual life.

We hope to give next week an impressive address on "Personal Soul-winning," delivered by Mr. W. E. S. Holland (Magdalen Coll., Oxon), late travelling secretary of the B.C.C.U., and only regret that the demands upon our space forbid a fuller reproduction of the many good and helpful thoughts which came from the various speakers during the week.

The Wesleyan Conference.

BY A MINISTER.

GREAT public interest has attached to the Sessions of Conference, and the great gatherings held in connection therewith during the second or representative week of the Conference. The official sermon preached by the president of the Conference on the Sunday morning in the Brunswick Chapel made a deep impression. More than two thousand people listened with intense interest for an hour and seven minutes to a discourse dealing with the exalted standard and extended range of holiness. The text was, "This is the law of the house; upon the top of the mountain the whole limit thereof round about shall be most holy. Behold this is the law of the house" (Ezekiel xliii. 12).

Mr. Watkinson admirably illustrated the transfiguring touch of holiness. In an art gallery the other day he noticed that some of the greatest pictures had not a splendid touch in them. One was a railway cutting, another a ploughed field. But you could see the blossom in the dust, and the picture without a brilliant thing in it was bathed in imagination, poetry, and beauty. So they wanted to give everything in life the transfiguring touch of righteousness. The tools of the toiler might become as golden vessels of the altar. In conclusion, the President emphasized the truth that every revival of religion began with emphasis on holiness. So it was with the Evangelical revival under the Wesleys and Whitefield. Methodists might not be illustrious for learning or prestige or wealth, but they must take care to be illustrious in character.

In equally appropriate words, Mr. Watkinson addressed the assembled ministers and laymen at the opening of the Representative Session. Quoting Professor Jowett, who said in one of his letters, "I do wish that people would attend more than they do to the great and simple things of life," he made it a text for a homily on the importance of caring for the little things in their work. They must not neglect the little week-day congregations, nor the little class-meetings, nor the little cottage that called for pastoral care, nor the little people of Methodism. The first Methodists did not despise the day of little things. If they did, they were likely to be the last Methodists. He spoke of Rudyard Kipling's magnificent hymn on the Jubilee and closed with its words of warning:

> The Lord of Hosts be with us yet,
> Lest we forget! lest we forget!

The multifarious matters of this highly organised church have demanded close attention during the week. The chief controversial question—the order of the Sessions of Conference—gave rise to a long and animated debate, in which leading ministers and laymen took part. On the one side were such veterans as Dr. Rigg, Dr. Waller, and Dr. Randles, the ex-President, with Sir George Smith, one of the recently-created Jubilee knights; while the progressive views were forcibly presented by Rev. H. Price-Hughes, Rev. A. Clayton, one of the assistant-secretaries of the conference. Dr. Nicholas, an Irish representative, and Messrs. Percy W. Bunting, the editor of the Contemporary Review, John Cooper, a leading Manchester layman, and others. Opinion proved to be almost equally divided, and the subject is referred to a large committee for further consideration during the year.

Educational affairs, Sunday School work, the operations of the Children's Home, were among the subjects reviewed by Conference. There are more than a million teachers and scholars in the Sunday Schools of Methodism. Dr. Stephenson introduced his important proposals for the withdrawal of all children of Methodist parents from the workhouses of the country. He showed how, under the administration of the Local Government Board, Boards of Guardians were permitted to hand over their poor children to such institutions as the Children's Home, and to contribute largely to their maintenance and education. The Conference gave general approval to the scheme, which will require a large initial outlay for the further erection of buildings, and an increase of £7,000 per year to their income for its fulfilment. Doubtless, as funds are forthcoming, Dr. Stephenson's excellent idea will be translated into fact.

When educational affairs were under discussion, it was urged that wherever possible Wesleyan or British Schools should be established in rural districts where Nonconformist children were driven to attend High Church Anglican Schools. Mr. Hewitt, a day-school teacher from the Macclesfield district, testified that often a threat to build such a school brought the "village tyrants" to their knees.

Several important offices have been filled during the Conference. The vacancy in the Secretaryship of Home Missions caused by the lamented death of Rev. J. Ernest Clapham, one of the most gifted sons of Methodism, was filled by the election of Dr. Pope, who for many years has presided over the Chapel Building Committee in Manchester. Rev. John Hornabrook succeeds Dr. Pope, and Rev. Thomas Allen becomes Governor of Handsworth College, in place of Dr. Young, whose retirement has been necessary by reason of failure of health.

Foreign Missions received long and patient consideration. There are calls for fifteen additional men on the mission field, which cannot be responded to at present owing to the state of the funds. Again a Day of Intercession was appointed for the work abroad. Some criticism was directed against the missions conducted on the Continent. Rev. H. Price Hughes stoutly defended Methodist Missions in Italy, and declared the Papal attacks on the banks of the Thames should be met by Protestant attacks on the banks of the Tiber. Rev. H. J. Pigott, for many years engaged in the Italian work, gave illustrations of the success of their efforts in the villages among the mountains of Northern Italy.

A deeply interesting conversation took place on the state of the work of God. The President led the way and demanded a deepened spiritual life. They ought to have as much zeal in bringing men to the Cross as Nansen displayed in his search for the North Pole. Many laymen, quite in love-feast fashion, afterwards spoke of the spiritual aspects of Christian work.

Hop Pickers in Hampshire.—We are again making arrangements to meet these wanderers when they come into our midst. We hope by the first week in September to have five tents erected in which to preach the Gospel and to give magic lantern exhibitions and services of song. Tea is given each evening. We have heard of some who were led to decide for Christ last year, and are now attending mission halls; this gives us encouragement to go forward. We ask for help in this work of raising the fallen. Books and tracts will be gratefully received. Aurelia Chinn.

Lenten House, Alton, Hants.

Indian Troops.—A memorial, signed by 61,437 women of the United Kingdom, was presented at the India Office on Saturday last. It declares the unaltered and unalterable hostility of the signatories to every form of State regulation of immorality, whether embodied in the system which was known as the Contagious Diseases Acts or in any other form, including the slightly modified and more subtle garb of certain Indian cantonment rules. The memorialists, while deploring the existence of disease and favourable to moral methods of diminishing it, urge that no permanent diminution of disease will ever be attained by measures which do not strike primarily at the vice itself, and express the hope that the Government of our country will be withheld from the crime of ever again entering into any compact with evil by its attempted regulation.

Keswick Addresses.

Personal Nearness to God.

BIBLE READING

By Dr. HANDLEY MOULE.

IN Psalm lxxiii. 21 and following verses, it is thus written :—

21 Thus my heart was grieved, and I was pricked in my reins.

22 So foolish was I, and ignorant: I was as a beast before thee.

23 Nevertheless I am continually with thee: thou hast holden me by my right hand.

24 Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory.

25 Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire beside thee.

26 My flesh and my heart faileth: but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever.

27 For, lo, they that are far from thee shall perish: thou hast destroyed all them that go a whoring from thee.

28 But it is good for me to draw near to God: I have put my trust in the Lord God, that I may declare all thy works.

It is of the last verse of the psalm that I ask specially to speak by way of a Bible Reading. I have read the verses leading up to it; they are all so closely connected. I ask you also to remember what the whole psalm is, that we may better understand the message of the Lord for us.

You will recollect the conflict of doubt which the psalm discloses. The saint of God—whether Asaph, according to the old tradition of the heading, or whoever it was, it matters not now; it was a saint and servant of the Lord attacked with a terrible conflict of doubt. It was God's providence that he could not understand; it was the prosperity of the wicked he could not make out. And the special difficulty shook his whole faith to its foundations; and as the old heading of the psalm says, it was a fierce conflict of "diffidence." Let us thank God that it was recorded; for it tells us that this wonderful Bible—if I may personify it as it personifies itself—understands and has sympathy with the heart, tossed and tempested with doubt. It has no sympathy with artificial and vainglorious doubt. It has the deepest understanding of the doubts and the shocks that come of real mysteries that rock the heart and mind.

For this purpose Psalm lxxiii. was inspired by the Holy Ghost, and it might be God's own photograph of a man whom He is watching and is going to bless in and through such a storm. For this cause was the Book of Job inspired to be written for our learning; and many another Scripture carries on its face this very last thing which we should expect to find in the Book—the expression of doubt and misgiving about the ways of God, the works of God, the providence of God Himself.

Let us pray then that we may as little as possible, and for as short a time as possible, abide in agonies of doubt and misgiving. And let us remember—for this is the open door to the pathway of release—that the Lord knoweth all about it, and has put down in his Word the assurance that He is not impatient with the man thus troubled; only He would have us make haste and take

THE WAY OF ESCAPE OUT OF IT.

You recollect how the Psalmist got his escape; found his open door out into the air. He reasoned with himself, and got only deeper into the maze. It was too painful for him; it was getting all too dangerous for his soul. He was nearly speaking against the generation of God's children, and very nearly speaking against the God of Providence Himself. But then he went into the sanctuary of God, and there he saw the eternalness and solidity of the fact that God is eternally true, and is to be trusted even in the dark. He went where he could worship unhindered, and with all the guarantees of God around him that he was approaching the reality of things. There the solutions began to dawn upon his intellect; better still, a deep calm began to come back into his soul. and it resulted in this, that he was quite willing again to be led by God, though it were in the dark, as to what he could not understand, contented with his Guide, and so trusting about the way. "I cannot explain it all, but I know Thee, and I am at peace again."

It was a sort of solution that has come again and again to the people of God, both in and since Bible days. It was such a solution of an awful and racking mystery that came to Peter at Capernaum when people went back and walked no more with Jesus; and when Jesus asked if, because of this deep mystery and the hardness of his sayings, Peter and the apostles were going too. Peter had nothing to say about the solution of the riddles that Christ had propounded, but he said, "To whom else shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life, and we believe and are sure that Thou art the Christ." Again and again, to the end of the chapter, we shall have to say, "I do not understand it"; but we can be rightly and reasonably, as well as holily, at peace about it, if we are again

QUITE SURE OF HIM.

And now, at the close of this remarkable psalm, where Asaph found solutions enough, at least, to give his mind patience and joy and rest, and to give his soul strength, he thus speaks, summing up his experience of solitary humiliation and bitterness, "It is good for me to draw near to God. I have put my trust in the Lord God, that I may declare all thy works." Rendering the verse almost word for word, bringing out the emphasis at least that is in it, may I read it once more thus: "But nearness to God for me is good; I have lodged my reliance in the Lord God, that I may tell all thy works." The emphasis that I speak of is on the word "me"—literally, "it is good for me to be near to God." The Hebrew words bring that out. It is a man who is deliberately, by God's grace, taking a personal resolve as to a personal line of action; making a personal choice, and binding himself to a certainty, disregarding what others may do or think, or how others may be circumstanced. As for him, this is a fact—for me it is good to draw near to God.

What I desire to speak about this morning is upon personal and individual intercourse with God, and some lights thrown on it by his Word. Here we are in a vast meeting, but, as we know, we are by no means all the Christians who have gathered here; there is another gathering, and the Word of God is being unfolded there in the assembly [the Pavilion]. We are very many altogether. But may I press this upon every person, on my own heart and on yours, and just because the company is so large, the supreme and vital importance of the personal, individual, solitary, and single nearness of the Christian to his God. The temptation of vast assemblies of Christians is of our gregarious life in Christ. We rejoice with deep joy over our fellowship in Him, and we shall all go away immensely benefited by our just having been together as one in our Lord Jesus Christ. But if we would have our oneness all it should be, if we would have our meetings all they should be, if we would have all occasions of Christian gathering and fellowship what they should be—whether it be the contact of friends together, or the prayer and praise of the great company together—we must for our very lives remember Asaph's principle, "As for me, it is good for me to draw near to God." The great Christian assembly has no less of blessing, assuredly, to those who have each dealt with God alone, and who know what it is, not merely with nothing and no one between, but in company, to speak and to listen before Him.

This is a side of truth and of life that we know needs pressing more and more. In the ever-growing rush and hurry of the world we need to stand upon our guard more than ever about individual intercourse with God. We need to do it for our Master's glory and for the good of one another. For even in this no man liveth to himself. Our solitude is not ultimately, though primarily, for ourselves. And in order that we may give to others the best that we can give we must say with Asaph, "As for me, it is good to be near to God." May I claim your attention intensely to that fact as we go on; and may I humbly hope that, among other things, our Keswick week will send us away to feel more, and to act upon the feeling, that we must be individually and apart in contact with our Master? For we must cultivate as a very innermost circle and spiritual place of blessing the recollection of his presence; and in order to that we must with businesslike care and resolve protect what sacred times with Him we can get. He never expects what we really cannot get; but the question is what we can get, so that up to the limit of what He has made possible, in his providence for us, we may know what is meant by

FACE TO FACE NEARNESS WITH GOD.

A thought or two further upon the wording of the verse. We have drawn a line under "It is good for me," and we will remember what does not come out fully in the English version, that the verse begins with, "But as for me." And now we read, "It is good for me to draw near to God." That rendering is true, but perhaps not the whole truth—surely not the whole truth of the phrase as written by the Hebrew saint. It is not only drawing near, it is being near. It is "neighbourhood" that lies in the phrase as written. So I would ask you to take the thought of drawing near to God as it is surrounded with the yet greater thought for the Christian of being near to God.

Here may I plead with you, and lay it upon myself, to remember the blessed secret of finding the recollected life in the world where we have to live. As I have said before, I use on such occasions the words recollect and recollected, rather than the great words realise and realisation; because recollection is a thing which, so to speak, lies quite close to our need, while realisation is not quite so close, and is a thing we cannot always command. So let us recollect the Presence in which, whether we realise it or not, we are. This lies in one of the earlier verses of the psalm in a very striking form. In verse 23 we read in the English Bible, "Nevertheless I am continually with thee." Observe that the word "am" is printed in italics, and is therefore supplied by the translators. My suggestion is that the Psalmist is thinking not only that he is now in the presence of God when he has got back to realise it, but that always he was, as well as is, there; even while he was tortured with doubt and on the very point of bursting out in the fatal mistake of expressing it, to the hurt of other souls. "I was continually with Thee; I was indeed not realising Thee, but Thou wast realising me; I was not recollecting Thee, but Thou wast recollecting me. My hand was palsied for its grasp on Thee, but Thou hadst hold of my right hand even when all the nerve and pith was out of it towards Thee." I am continually with Thee in that sense, not only as to nearness, but as to the mercifulness and glory of the presence of God there for us, still patient, unwearying, persevering. There is no perseverance in the saints, but there is

BOUNDLESS PERSEVERANCE IN THEIR LORD.

But we will recollect, apart from that special aspect of the matter, the fact, to begin with, that God is here with me, and is my God in Christ. Then we will carry it on a step further, and remember that as to our blessed privileges and covenant standing we are profoundly near Him continually. You remember the passages in the New Testament about our access—Ephesians ii. 18, and then in Hebrews x. You remember the passages where we read of our boldness of access and our confidence through faith in Him. Let us recollect again the "haves" of these passages. "Through Him, by one Spirit, we have access to the Father." "Having, therefore, brethren, access into the holiest through the blood of Jesus, let us draw near." Remember that we have it before we use it; remember the nearness to God, which means our acceptance in his very heart, because we are in his Son, our Sacrifice and our Life, who is eternally in the bosom of the Father. That is the underlying fact which is to be used continually. The passages that begin with "we have" and "having" are a glorious Bible study in themselves. And they include this among their treasures of God—the certainty of the presentness, the fact of our being absolutely free, sinners that we are, to enter into the holiest place. In the name of the blood shed for us we are meant, we are welcomed, we are commanded to go in, clinging to our glorious Aaron and fearing nothing because of Him, through the rent vail behind the golden altar, before the very ark and the shekinah. Because He is there, we have a right there; we are welcomed there every hour and every minute of the day.

But then you know it is a watchword of our blessed times here that we should "possess our possessions"—should remember what we have, and then put it into use. This is what the Psalmist was brought to by God's light upon his soul in his time of terrible conflict. He now realised the blessedness of bringing every doubt and fear to God; of spreading out the whole reality of his difficulty before God, and communing with Him about it just as it was. He finds out, and owns, and resolves upon it, that it is good to draw near to the Lord.

This is to be our resolve, our choice, our consent to our Master's command: that we will live a life, for the sake of Christ and of others, of individual communion with God, utilising his presence in definite approach to Him, definite listenings to his voice to us. I bring you the simplest and most practical message therefore this morning. I plead with you, and lay it on myself, to see that we are not merely Convention goers, of the spiritual life, not merely those who have gained something of the meaning of certain neglected sides of Divine truth that can transfigure life when used; but that we set ourselves in the spirit of holy business, as far as God enables us in his providence, to draw near individually to Him, and therefore to esteem immensely highly, the duty, the privilege, the bliss and the glory of secret prayer; and ever to esteem immensely highly, and show that we do so by our own action before God, the blessed privilege and power and vital benefit of individual converse with God in his Word.

NOT MERELY SINGERS OF HYMNS

I come to say this word to you about such things as our solitary morning watch with God, before we meet others even in the assembly of prayer or praise. I beseech you to remember not the morning watch only, but the evening watch also, which is often neglected, I fear, where the other is somewhat remembered. The busy, overflowing day, or it may be the half occupied day—we let it drift, we know not how, to its dregs, and give hardly a thought to God before we are in our night's rest. I come to plead with you, so far as it is possible in the realities of life, and to lay it on myself as a neglected duty, to remember a definite time of communing with God, not long, but unhurried, which is another thing. Depend upon it these things are possible when we realise, with Asaph, that it is good. It is when we have got out of feeling that it is good, when we have lost taste of the sweetness of approach, of our word to Him, and his word to us—it is then that we think we have no time. But time will create itself either in sufficient quantity or in such a way that the little shall become much, because of the peace of God that hems round the little space for communing with God, in the roar and the rush even of the largest life.

I speak of glorious possibilities, but I am sure you feel with me too terribly often neglected possibilities, in the most earnest Christian lives. We seem to be in a time when, as in everything else so in religion, there is great danger of losing depth in growing downward, of the depth of penetration into what the Lord really is and has for us, through the very blessedness of the frequency and fulness of opportunities of Christian public communion together. We need for the sake of our assemblies to forsake them sometimes; to go out and gather alone with Him—the Master and the servant—just the two.

The busiest lives prove the possibility of this. The late Lord Hatherley, Lord Chancellor of England, and long before that Vice-Chancellor, and long before that one of the busiest, because one of the most trusted, lawyers at the English bar, for more than thirty years and to the end of his days found time every year to read all the Bible through; marking, learning, digesting, comparing scripture with scripture with a judge's care and with the glorious summing up of evidence—for Lord Hatherley, as a legal friend of mine told me, was thought the greatest master of evidence of his time—with the glorious summing up, that there was irrefragable evidence of the Bible being, in both its parts, divine workmanship, and the collocation of the two parts divine arrangement. But he did not get that result without practically experiencing that it was intensely good to draw near to God for his Word. One of the busiest men in important public work in London at this moment, whom I have the privilege to know, has this knowledge through indefatigable application and method, that it is so good to be with God for his Word. One of the deepest Bible students I have known—and I go to the other extreme of society and education—I remember as a ploughman in my father's parish forty-five years ago. He knew his Bible well. How and where did he read it? He fixed the Book, somehow or other, upon the plough tail, and as he drove his furrow straight, he managed also to plough into the Word, and he knew it better than many an educated Christian does. And he had the power, which I think is a little bit going out perhaps, of quoting the Bible

ACCURATELY AND AS IT REALLY STANDS.

There is a great deal for us to search our hearts about—at least one of us—in this matter of remembering and feeling, that it is good to draw near to God. I was reading the other day some sharp criticisms by a German thinker of the last generation, upon the pietistic school in Germany; a school which, though it has produced some of the greatest of God's saints, yet had its weaknesses and aberrations. The criticism was that they seemed to be trying to hold communion with a Christ of their own inner consciousness, rather than with the Christ of the Gospels, who walked about the hills of Galilee and in the streets of Capernaum. The criticism was partial, because the Christ that we know is Christ as He was and is, not only on the hills of Galilee and down by the lake, but upon the Cross and in the Resurrection, and in the Ascension, and now upon the throne, there as the same Jesus who shall come again. But there is just this much for us in the critique of the thinker on the pietist, that we have no business to indulge in communion with a Christ merely of our own inner consciousnsss. It must be always limited at every step — and they will be gloriously large limits—by what the Holy Ghost in the Word has told us what the Lord is, what the Lord has done, what He is doing, and what He there tells us as to where Jesus is to be found—on the throne and in the heart. And it must be such that our word to God may be indeed directed straight to where it is meant to rise and to bring a blessing back. So, I beseech you, remember your intercourse on its side from you to Him. Let it be a deepening, tenderer, more reverent, more accurate, more painstaking acquaintance with his Word in his blessed Book to you.

And now I have done. May we at the close have the experience of the Psalmist—For it is good for me; it is my quiet resolve, though the whole world should go the other way, to draw near to God. "I have rested my trust in the Lord God." Where do we learn to do that? Not in the life of religious hurry, but in the secret place behind the busy life. "That I may declare all thy works." We do want to declare all his works, but we want to declare them by being what He would have us to be; by Christ formed in us; and we able to show his sacred shape in our lives because the soul is plastic to his Life. Christ formed in us—a life that shines with the holiness, the peace, the joy, the fidelity, the meekness of the Lord. We shall be able to do so, by the power of the Holy Spirit, in proportion as we seek Him thus, putting our trust in the Lord God—a trust learned and deepened and exercised always first in our own solitary nearness to Him. To holiness and power there is no royal road; the strength for holy service is intercourse with God.

Learning of Christ.

By Dr. ELDER CUMMING.

The message to which God has directed me is in very familiar words. Many of you know them all by heart. "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light" (Matt. xi. 28—30). Verse 28 I take to be spoken to those who are out of Christ; verses 29 and 30 I take to be spoken to those in Christ already. I dare not spend time in speaking of verse 28, except to say that we must not put it as a call to sinners to come to Christ; it is Christ's own call to the sinner. He wants everybody to stand aside and get face to face with the sinful soul: "Come to Me, and I will give you rest." Then I would also say that we made the discovery a few years ago that there were more unsaved people in the tent than we had any conception of. The explanation seems to be that where people are not sitting under a ministry where the need of being born again is presented to them, there are many who suppose they are Christians when they really are not. One of the first discoveries that many people make when they come to such a convention is the conviction that they never knew Jesus Christ at all.

And now, what is the Lord's word to Christians? "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of Me, and ye shall find rest unto your souls." There are three words in this verse that I want to emphasize—take, learn, find.

Take what? "My yoke." Please remember that in its original meaning a yoke is not anything for man; it is for a beast of burden. But from that it has been transferred, in a figure, to the yoke of a slave; it is constantly so found in ancient literature, and in the New Testament also. "Be not entangled again in the yoke of bondage." Hence, when our Lord says, "Take my yoke upon you, oh, ye child of God," what He means, I believe, is—become not merely my servant, but become as it were my slave. It is absolute mastership that Jesus is claiming, and on the part of his people it is absolute obedience he asks in these words—to be absolutely at his disposal, to have no voice or question as to anything we are told, but to wait until the Master tells us, and when we are told to yield unhesitating, entire obedience—that is taking up the yoke of Christ.

It is to be done by his people in a definite act, if they have not done it before; if they cannot date back to a conversion so entire as to have yielded everything in that sacred moment, then there is no time to be lost. Every Christian man or woman is called on to yield and place himself or herself in the position that the Master calls for, to be from this moment the absolute servant of Jesus Christ. Take the step of faith at this moment and say, "My Lord, my Saviour, by whose blood my sins have been taken away, now, solemnly in thy sight, heard by Thee, seen by Thee, I will take up thy yoke and put it on my shoulder, to be thine absolute servant from this moment on."

A hard service, do you call it? Ah! you must be prepared for a service in one sense still harder. You must be what the apostles tell us, in epistle after epistle, they were. What do you read? "Paul, a slave"—for that is the meaning of the word—"of Jesus Christ"; "Jude, a slave of Christ"; "James, an apostle and a slave of Jesus Christ." Have you noticed that Peter, in his first epistle, speaks of himself as "Peter, an apostle," but in the second epistle it is "Simon Peter" (he remembers the old name, and that name brings with it the remembrance of his old life), "an apostle and a slave." And even John, at the opening of the Apocalypse, standing amidst the glories unveiled and revealed to him in Patmos, says, "John, a slave of Jesus Christ." Are you a slave of Christ? Are you willing to be his slave? Will you by faith take up that position to-day? Will you say to the Master, "I do take thy yoke upon me." That is the "take" of this verse.

"Learn of Me"—that is, "from Me"—"for I am meek and lowly in heart." What does it mean? It means that "I, your Lord and Master, am myself a servant." (He spoke it in the days of his flesh.) "I am the servant of servants. I am among you as one that serveth. I came not to do my own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." Jesus Christ accepted the position of being the absolute servant of God his Father during the whole time of his life on earth. And you remember in the agony of Gethsemane the words that escaped Him; they were the motto of his life and the solemn declaration that even in that hour he held fast to the position He had accepted, and the position He had chosen for Himself—"Not my will but thine be done." That was the spirit of the Incarnation. That had gone along with Christ during all his thirty years; and now when He was so sorely put to the test, amid the awful agonies of that hour, when He could say, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful even unto death"—even then He said, "Yet, Lord, I will be as I have been—thy servant still to the end. 'Not my will but thine be done' has been the motto of my life; it shall be my motto still."

"Learn of Me." There never was obedience like his. Learn, O Christian, that that is a type of the obedience which the Lord requires of thee, and that with nothing else can He be satisfied.

Then there is the third word, "find." Ye shall find what? That it is such a hard life; such an impossible life; a life with a cross every moment? "Ye shall find rest unto your souls." It is the only restful life. The Lord says about the life of the sinner that it is a life of labour—of being heavy laden. Is the life of the Christian, before he is fully surrendered, a life of rest? I take many a Christian here to witness that there is almost no rest in it. For the rest of the few moments when we get near to Christ is made all the worse when we think of what we come to afterwards when we turn our back upon the Lord. There is no rest, no satisfaction, no peace in the half life—half to the Lord and the better half to ourselves. It is when you give up everything and take Christ's yoke on the shoulder, and say, "Lord, I am thy slave, at thy feet," that you find rest to that weary soul of thine.

What reason does the Lord give for this? "For my yoke is easy; my burden is light." There are two possible meanings of this verse; you may take either. For my part, I take the harder one. You may take it as Jesus Christ's description of his own life as it was then—a life of absolute service, of the emptiness in which He had given up everything, and had taken on Himself the form—the nature or being—of a servant, dead to self. As if He said, "The burden that I am bearing from day to day is a light burden, for it is my Father's burden. It is borne in the light of his face, and in the light of his love."

But if that be too much, take the easier interpretation. "The yoke that I lay upon you as your absolute Master, the burden I call on you to carry in daily life, you will find light and easy, because there will be a hand sustaining you and bearing the weight in a way that you have not suspected." You will say: "It seemed a heavy burden, but Christ is bearing it for me; it seemed a grievous yoke, but I never knew or experienced any blessing so great, or any joy so deep as the joy of bearing the yoke of Christ." "It will be easy for you," the Master says, "because it will be the same as my yoke. Ye shall live a life like mine."

The Christian's Motive.

By Rev. J. B. FIGGIS.

"The love of Christ constraineth us."—2 Corinthians v. 14.

This may be called a secret of Paul's. When we trace the wonderful career of that wonderful man to its source, its source is the love of Christ. When we follow it in the midst of perils, of privations, and persecutions; when we follow it in the midst of hostility from open, and malice from concealed, enemies; when we follow it all through years of trial and endurance, the source and spring of all that career is this—the love of Christ. If we were to ask Paul: How did you break away from your old associates, and your old associations? he would answer: By the love of Christ. How did you tear yourself away from place, and from honour, from hope of preferment and distinction, and mingle with those who were as the scum of the world, the off-scouring of all things? He would answer: The love of Christ constrained me. If you were to ask how he was in labours more abundant, a night and a day in the deep, in perils of waters, of robbers, of strangers, of his own countrymen, he would answer: The love of Christ constrained me. If you were to ask how he became that man of men, so enduring, so patient, so meek, so pitiful, so gentle, so generous, he would answer: The whole source and spring of my action is the love of Christ; that love constraineth me.

Nor is it wonderful that it should, for love is a very wonderful thing, and the love of Christ is in all the universe of God. What marvels hath love wrought! Who shall write the history of love, who shall sing the poetry of love, who shall tell the triumphs of love, who shall utter the martyrdoms of love? And the love of Christ exceeds all martyrdoms, and all mysteries, and all marvels of the love of mothers and brothers and lovers. There never was a love like it. It is love from heaven; it is love unto death; it is love actually Divine. From everlasting to everlasting He is God, and from everlasting to everlasting He is love. Many waters could not quench it, floods of iniquity could not drown it. The love of Jesus spoke in his words, it shone in his actions, it mirrored itself in his tears; and at last drop by drop it fell in blood from the Cross.

And it was the love of Jesus that met Paul, nay Saul of Tarsus, in all his guilt, in all his criminality. When that wondrous love streamed forth upon him, and touched him, it broke his heart, it broke his habits, it changed his career, it altered his character, it made a mighty marvellous abiding difference in his whole life.

And what the love of Christ did for Saul of Tarsus, if you will let it, it can do for you. It was the secret of a new life in him, it may be the secret of a new life in you. I find that I need constraining. What if in this same love I should find the constraining power that I need? Aye, and I need restraining too. And that is but the other side of the very same thing. I need restraining from many a fault to which I am prone, from many an evil to which I am inclined, from many a sin which, as Theodore Monod said once, I like. What am I but a bundle of bad habits? And Satan is wont to take out of that bundle now a staff, now a rod, with which to beat his slave. Oh! if there be a slave here beaten, driven about by Satan at his will, let him own his sin and acknowledge his wretchedness, that he may come unto the fount of cleansing, to the source of liberty, and that he may no longer be Satan's captive and caitiff, but

JESUS CHRIST'S FREE MAN.

I said that restraining and constraining are only the two sides of the same thing; for every fault has it corresponding excellence, and vice has its corresponding virtue. What you and I need to draw us from our faults is, that we should be drawn to virtue. Oh! that hope might draw us, and love might draw us, and faith might draw us. Oh! that we might be constrained to a life of prayerfulness and thanksgiving, that we might be constrained to a life of pitifulness, being very pitiful and full of compassion, suffering long and being kind, by love serving one another. Oh! that we might be constrained to a life of purity and of power in act, word, thought, and imagination! Oh! that we might be constrained to a life of truth, as true as Nathaniel, as true as the Lord Jesus Christ who was Himself the Truth; that we might put on Christ and reveal Christ and imitate Christ, and live Christ; that we might be nothing, that Christ might be all in all.

We need constraining also to duties of another kind. Here we are set in the midst of a world full of sin and suffering. I took up this morning a biography of one of the saints of God, and the saint's prayer was that she might have some of Christ's compassion for suffering souls. We need to be constrained to this; we need that rivers of water should run down our eyes because men keep not God's law; that we should be smitten to the heart because God is forgotten and Christ is crucified again, and the Holy Spirit is slighted. This needs to go so deeply into our heart that we can get no peace till we have done everything in our power, that men may be reconciled to God.

WE NEED TO SEE ANOTHER SIGHT.

We need to see the sight of the Church in its weakness, of Christians in their feebleness, of souls in their infirmity; and we need to bring these weak ones and sickly ones to the feet of Jesus that they may be healed. When the Good Samaritan had taken the man who was laid low, and brought him to an inn, he said to the good man of the house, "Take care of him." He was not content merely with saving him from the highwaymen, he entrusted him to the good man of the house; he was not content with mere deliverance, he wanted to give him health. And there ought to pass over the Church of God an earnest tremor of tender sympathy for members of that Church who need care, comforting, and helping, that they may be brought to soul-health, and may know the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ.

We need constraining in order that we may minister to men's sorrow; so that we cannot hear of famines in India and keep the bread of plenty upon our tables without giving to him that needeth; that we cannot hear of massacres in Armenia without remembering that "precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints," and that their death ought to be precious to us; and that we should seek by all means in our power to bind up the wounds of poor bleeding humanity. We ought not to be able to come into contact with the sufferings of men, either in soul or body, either of saint or of sinner, unmoved and undismayed.

And to these things we need constraining. We need constraining from our natural selfishness and apathy. Many of us, when we have seen the vision of God, are like Zacharias—we are struck dumb for a season. It may be well we should be. But surely the time has come when for many the dumbness should cease, and there should be an opening of the lips; when we should learn to speak for Jesus, to work for Jesus, to minister for Jesus, and to witness for Jesus; when to all, both great and small, in some way, spiritually or physically, we should be messengers of God, as angels of comfort, as the bearers of the holy evangel, and should go forth empowered by the Spirit to do God's work.

We need constraining power. Where shall we find it? There are many answers to the question. Where shall we find power to restrain sin, and to constrain to holy endeavour? There is the answer from the life of Christ. There is an answer from his death, in which we are to count that we too have died. There is an answer from his Spirit, that Spirit now given unto men. But here, too, is an answer that the little child learning the spiritual alphabet can understand it. This answer is love—the love of Christ. Here is something that may constrain, that may help forward in the work of the Lord Jesus.

Love is a very engrossing thing. It will give you something to do, something to think of, and something to care for. It will take up the heart and occupy and engage it. I remember once in a tram a little child was crying as if its heart would break, and its cries were disturbing all in the tram. I put my watch to the child's ear, and the child looked up in wonder and forgot to cry. I held it to its ear for some minutes, and all was still and calm. After a time I thought that the remedy was sufficient, and I put my watch back into my pocket, and the cries began again. I had to take out the remedy once more and apply it again; so long as the watch was held the cries ceased, the little heart was occupied and the child forgot to cry. If we were occupied with Christ, engrossed in his love, if we were enthralled with the loveliness of the Lord Jesus, we might well-nigh forget to sin. It is not merely the thought that will be engaged; the heart will be occupied. Love is a very exacting thing; it brings those that love one another to the same place, to the same pleasures and pursuits; and if it be the love of Christ that occupies your heart it will give you the pleasures of Christ and the pursuits of Christ; it will put you down in the very place where Christ is. Your heart will be so taken up with Him that you will delight in the things in which He delights, and loathe the things which He loathes. Love will so fill and thrill and charm you that the charm of evil will go. Love shall gain the victory, and drive the sin away.

The love of Christ, in order that it may be this mighty power and may win this mighty triumph, must be shed abroad in your heart by the Holy Ghost given unto you. I went yesterday to Lodore. We had the sunshine with us. It was beautiful. There was the verdure clothing all those crags; there was the outline of the hills, and everything stupendously grand. But

WHERE WAS THE WATER?

Where was the dashing, foaming stream? God forbid that it should be said of you that you have the doctrine, the knowledge, the outlines of Christianity, like the outlines of the hills; but where is the water of life, the water of love, the love of Christ that ought to be shed abroad in your heart by the Holy Ghost?

The Holy Ghost is come: now is Pentecost. He is here. Receive Him; and in receiving Him you receive love; the love of Jesus will fill you and constrain you, and drive the refuse out of your hearts, and the habits that have been your bane and your shame, your misery, and the mockery of your Christianity unto this day; the habits that mark converts, and mark even convention Christians with a dark black mark which shows that they have not done with Satan—that mark will be cleansed away in the stream from Calvary, and the heart that has delighted in these things will be ready to delight in the things of God, and to serve and please Him.

As it is with those sinful things, so with those glorious things that should occupy our hands; with the Christian endeavour for the salvation of souls, the sanctification of believers, the comfort of suffering men and women and children. All these will be right if the heart be right and filled with the love of Christ. This needs no proof; or if proof were needed it is with us on every side. Ask William Wilberforce what led him to contend for years, in season and out of season, for the breaking of the shackles of the negro, and he will answer, The love of Christ. Ask Patteson what took him away far into the southern hemisphere, there among the heathen to live and die, and he will answer, The love of Christ. Ask Elizabeth Fry what took her to Newgate to preach, or Sarah Martin what took her to Yarmouth Gaol to teach, and they will answer, The love of Christ. And so with many a work and worker. What took Bishop Hannington into the wilds of Africa to die but the love of Christ? What took Mr. Crossley into the slums of Manchester to live but the love of Christ? And if the love of Christ be in you, in anything like the same strength, it will constrain you; not to copy man, but to love Christ; not to imitate them in exactly the things they did for the Master, but to inspire you with an earnest zeal for that Master's cause, and a delight in carrying out that Master's will. The charm of the Master's life will lead you to follow the Master's steps. You, too, will speak and work and live for Jesus.

ONLY LET THE HEART BE RIGHT, and the lips will be right, the hands will be clean, the life will be right.

I met the other day in Edinburgh some Americans who had just crossed the Atlantic. "As we were crossing," they said, "we came very near to some tremendous icebergs; they were piled up in giant mountains of ice. Some of them were like the cathedral at Florence, some of them were like the tower of that cathedral; but, beautiful as they were, they were dangerous." What did those floating islands of ice need? Sun, and sun, and still more sun. The sun had done something for them already: it had separated them from the great continent of ice in the Arctic seas, and sent them floating southward. Now its beams were needed to beat upon those towers till they fell. And that is what we are needing in our lives, to take away our coldness and to cleanse away our sinfulness. We are needing the Sun of Righteousness. He has done something for us; he has separated us from the ruin of a lost world; He has sent us floating sunward and heavenward. But we need his beams to shine more brightly, and kindly, and warmly, till in those beams we shall melt into love one toward another and towards all men; into love towards God our Father and his Christ and the Blessed Comforter; into love for all that is holy, all that is righteous, all that is lovely,

Till in the ocean of his love
We lose ourselves in heaven above.

A Tour in Palestine and Egypt.—In the spring of this year, Rev. J. W. Miller, of Leicester, organised a tour in the Holy Land and Egypt, for clergymen, ministers, and their friends, which was eminently successful. The magnificent steamer of the Prince Line, Creole Prince, was engaged, and the arrangements were as good as those of any private yacht. A similar party is being formed for the coming autumn. Applications for particulars should be made to Rev. J. W. Miller, De Montfort-square, Leicester.

Rescue and Reclamation.

THE committee of the Homes of Hope, Regent-square, have published their Annual Report, which, though brief and concise in its details, is full of interest to those who labour for the cause of God and the rescue of poor fallen womanhood.

It appears that the operations of these Homes are more especially carried on among what are commonly called the more respectable class of young women—namely, those who have to lament their first fall, or the birth of their first infant; or any who through circumstances of great peril and temptation are about to become mothers. We are glad to see, however, that the most sinful of those unhappy girls and young women who have fallen to the lowest depths are also helped, none being beyond the grace of God or past his saving power. While it may be said the former as a class are, to human understanding, more hopeful, by the mercy of God many marked instances of reclamation are given from out of those who have fallen to the lowest depths.

Perhaps the saddest part of the report tells of some girls, indeed mere children, who have been outraged and cast off in the most cruel and heartless manner; and others being hardly conscious of the heinous nature of the offence committed—one instance will suffice.

B— A— was the daughter of a small farmer in Gloucestershire of decidedly weak intellect. Her ruin was accomplished by a man engaged on her father's farm, who, taking advantage of his position, succeeded in enticing her to a secluded spot, and there, partly by persuasion and partly by force, succeeded in overcoming her sufficiently to bring her into her sad condition. It was entirely unknown to her father; and so unconscious did this weak-minded young woman remain of the consequences of what was done that up to the last she protested vehemently that her condition was not other than usual. The man who committed this outrage was a married man with a family, and earning about 8s. or 9s. per week, consequently no pecuniary support could have been obtained from him had the infant lived. And this, alas! is but one instance among many.

It is a great relief after reading such cases to turn to particulars given under the heading of the "Present and the Past," and there learn of the many rescued ones who are now doing well in the world, and who are able by the Divine support to maintain a good character in their respective spheres. Doubtless the most painful reading in the report is the record of "rejected cases"—rejected through want of funds—a long list of urgent suppliants asking for aid, but for whom there is no help to be found for the reason stated.

We are not greatly surprised to find there is a dearth of funds, a great demand having been made recently on the charity purse, while the public so readily responded to the numerous Jubilee appeals, happily so, no doubt; but the old faithful efforts of Christian rescue work among the fallen still calls for loyal support, and we trust our friends at the Homes of Hope, Regent-square, will soon find their treasury refilled by those who love the work for the Masters' sake.

Greece.—Miss Lierhammer, who has for nearly ten years been working at Piræus among sailors and in the hospitals and poorhouses, writes that the need of the Greeks is Christian education. In view of the special opportunity of the present time, she appeals for an evangelist or American lady teacher possessed of means of support, to establish a Christian boarding school for girls in Greece. Miss Lierhammer will be glad to answer questions regarding family and school life in Greece. Communications for her should be addressed Poste Restante, Pirœus.

Jews in Jerusalem.—The next two months will be a period of anxiety to all Christian missions. We plead for the poor Jews at Jerusalem, who must perish unless work be given them. We employ fifty-four at Abraham's Vineyard. Our manager finds it heartrending to see the misery of the many more who come day by day pinched and hungry to entreat that work may be given them also. There are, besides the aged, the sick, bedridden, insane, and blind, and little children for whom our lady visitor pleads: "It is so sad to see their misery, their patience and thankfulness for every little help." We have many widows with children on our list, and many blind. We ask that they be not forgotten, or left to perish in their unwholesome dwellings for lack of bread. E. A. Finn, Secretary.

Among North Sea Trawlers.

AFTER five years' absence on mission work among the fishermen of Labrador, I have been privileged once again to enjoy a missionary cruise on a Hull steam trawler, among the fishermen of the North Sea. In this year of jubilation for all the marvellous advance made during our beloved Queen's reign, the great changes that have come over the fisheries are apt to be forgotten. In organisation, in importance, in marvellous growth, in ingenuity of methods adopted, in the vastly increased areas over which they are conducted, in the enormous increase of fish caught and of men employed, our great fisheries can well compare with any other industrial growth in the country. Thank God, commensurate with their growth have been the efforts of Christian people to reach those engaged in them, and to-day the "glorious Gospel of the blessed God" is being preached from these North latitudes, all over the North Sea, and round England, Scotland, and Ireland. Yes, and on the coasts of Holland and Belgium, and wherever in our waters brave hearts and strong hands put out to tempt the perils of the mighty deep in quest of that fickle harvest of the sea, for which we Englishmen create such an insatiable demand.

Journeying from fleet to fleet, and finding waving to the breeze in each large fleet, as quietly and unostentatiously they pursued their calling, the large blue flag inscribed "Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen," a thrill of pride went through one's heart. And more especially that the Christian heart of England, beating in loyal sympathy with that of England's Queen, should have kept for years at sea that led by the Queen Victoria and her consort, the Albert, which are testimonies in this sceptical nineteenth century to the practical loving influence of a living Lord. A costly fleet it is—the wild waves are no respecters of persons—but those white sails tell to hundreds of foreigners, who come across to pass the fleets, the true secret of England's greatness.

They preached me an eloquent sermon, thank God; but the men themselves, as you get to know them, preach one still more eloquent. Living at sea eleven months out of twelve, scarcely a moment to call their own, cut off from nine-tenths of those privileges we on shore count necessary for the sustenance and growth of our spiritual lives, we might well expect but a small percentage of whole-hearted men with one seething mass of indifferentism. Anyone who lives much at sea and knows sailors' ways does not expect to find much formalism or half-heartedness. There is little room for that at sea. Thank God for that, for it hasn't much use anywhere. But when one comes to see and know these men, it is but a forerunner of loving and respecting them. The living Word has taken deep root in many lives, and many have truly committed everything to the Saviour, which is true conversion. Ashore, as well as afloat, the simple Gospel preached at sea has shown the fruit it bears, in a manner unmistakable, more plainly than is possible among the usual mixed communities ashore. The fisherfolk in the various towns keep very much to themselves and their own quarters of the town, and in these quarters is now legibly written the results of the Gospel on the sea.

But one could not help noticing a marked change even during these past five years coming over our great fisheries. Just as small inshore boats gave place to large cutters running in their own fish to market; just as these gave way to large sailing yawls, fishing in fleets, with admiral's and vice-admiral's, and a regular daily service of steamers, with fish for market, so these sailing yawls are rapidly giving place to

FISHING STEAMERS.

A steam fleet fishes out of Grimsby, another out of Hull; also out of Boston, Yarmouth, Sunderland, numbers of steam trawls go. Over one hundred and fifty are fishing out of Aberdeen, while from the other side, Holland and Belgium, already many steam trawlers are at work. They fish day and night, they carry larger crews, they cover more ground, they travel much quicker, and are much more scattered than the old sailing vessels.

All these circumstances make them almost out of reach of the sailing vessels of the mission, and the council are anxious to obtain a first steam mission hospital vessel. It has seemed to me a pity that this jubilee year should not be marked by this renewed effort to keep pace with the rapid transitions of this glorious reign. Living myself the whole voyage on a steam trawler, I had many opportunities denied the mission vessel. With the net down we could as well steam one way as another, and often one could reach some desired vessel, while the poor sailing vessel would be drifting out of sight. This imperious need of the Mission adapting the methods of carrying the Gospel to the needs of the community that they are seeking to reach so impressed itself on my mind and heart that I am anxious to let Christians know by every possible means, that unless the Mission can in some way obtain a steam Mission vessel, they must largely fail in the objects they seek to obtain, and which, under God's good hand, they have up to the present been so marvellously successful in achieving.

The Evangelisation of France.

THE churches of France are in deep mourning. Two of her most gifted and bravest sons have fallen in the battle, murdered treacherously in far-away Madagascar by the hand of the rebels. They had abandoned all—their beloved country, their church, and home—to fight the good fight against the intrigues and pernicious designs of the Jesuits, and to save the Protestant churches, founded by the London and Norwegian Missionary Societies, from an utter ruin.

This sad news arrived in Paris while all the friends of the spread of the Gospel in France were assembled in the large Church of the Oratoire to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the Société Centrale Protestante d'Evangelisation. Needless to say, these tidings caused much consternation and sent sadness to many hearts. And yet there was joy withal: joy because the churches of France have been deemed worthy of giving two more martyrs in this century to the cause of Christ after all those who have gone before; joy at the thought of the great revival of missionary zeal which has been caused by the recent events in Madagascar; and joy also on account of the great progress made during the last half-century by the largest and most influential of our Societies of Evangelisation.

In 1847, when the Société Centrale began its operations, the Reformed Church of France was in a low state. Many of the pulpits were empty through want of ministers to fill them. The spiritual life was in many congregations at a low ebb, and no provision was made for the great number of Protestants who lived in far-away districts, isolated from all spiritual help and Christian fellowship. An urgent need was felt of a society which should take in hand the interests of that vast population scattered all over France, and provide the ordinances of religion to all who were deprived of them. It was then that the Société Centrale was founded. How far she has succeeded the following figures will show.

During these fifty years, 147 churches and mission stations have been founded. The Society carries on work at present in 147 centres, and its agents celebrate divine service in 300 places, visit more than 1400 towns and villages, extending their influence on a population of over 35,000 persons. One of the greatest needs felt in the churches of France was for properly-qualified ministers of the Gospel to fill up the vacant charges. Accordingly, the Society founded, and has since sustained, a school for divinity students, which has rendered invaluable service by preparing for the ministry a large number of young men—240 since the foundation. Besides that preparatory school, which is located in Paris, the Society supports almost entirely two other most useful institutions: a preparatory school for the South of France, and a training home for lay evangelists, called Ecole Felix Neff, after the apostle of the Hautes Alpes.

The work of the Society has been threefold: First, to search out and look after the thousands of scattered Protestants, who in their complete isolation, living far away from all Christian fellowship, fall an easy prey to indifference or to the Roman clergy. How much that work is needed will be seen by the fact that when an agent began to work in Corbeil (a small town a few miles out of Paris) it was thought that there were not more than 150 Protestants in the place; he had not been many weeks there when he found that there were more than 600, some of whom had not seen a pastor for forty years, and others had been baptized again quite lately by the priest.

Secondly, but these scattered Protestants do not always remain in the rural districts; many of them settle in or near the large towns, where the temptations are great, and drink makes its usual havoc and immorality so rampant. There these simple country folk will suffer moral ruin, if no one comes to their rescue. That is the work of our agents, and there is no doubt that they succeed in grouping together those floating elements, and in forming them into congregations. The following figures will show the progress made in the last half century in the region known as the "North," which covers nine of the northernmost departments of the country:—Before the foundation of the Société Centrale there were only eight pastors in that region; now there are fifty-three. Then divine service was held in thirty-five places, halls, or rooms; now there are 125 chapels or churches. Then there were 10,000 Protestants in the district; now there are known to be 30,000. Thus it is seen that if Protestantism seems to be melting away in some parts, especially in the South, it is rapidly increasing in others.

Thirdly, another task has been imposed upon the Société Centrale, and has taken more and more importance in the last years, namely, that of ministering to the wants of those who, disgusted with the teaching and practice of the Church of Rome, seek a refuge and spiritual food in the folds of the Protestant community. The great dissemination of Protestants through France has also its advantages; it creates in many places centres of light and warmth from which the flame can burst out and make a great conflagration. Often has it been the case that Evangelical literature circulated, or a Bible lent to neighbours, or else the faithful testimony of a consistent Christian life, has given rise to a movement in favour of Protestantism which has led to the establishing of a congregation. Not only do the miners of the Pas de Calais open their hearts to the preaching of the Gospel, and leave the Roman Catholic church in numbers, but, far away in the South of France, among the wine tillers of the Gironde, and the peasants of the Dordogne, similar movements have taken place quite recently, which have brought whole or parts of villages out of the Church of Rome, and under the influence of the Gospel.

The times are ripe in France for a decided advance; never has the occasion been more propitious or the minds of the people better prepared. The recent fanatical campaign against Protestantism, which causes much anxiety for the future, has also opened the eyes of many, and has awakened a desire to know more of the faith of those Protestants of whom so much ill is said. The Société Centrale, while thanking God for the blessings vouchsafed to her during the past fifty years, is firmly decided to set to her work with new vigour and increased energy. She possesses the full confidence of the Reformed Church of France, which groups the great majority of French Protestants, and is assured of the help of all those who in this country pray for the coming of Christ's kingdom.

Chicago Bible Institute.

WE beg you to ask the earnest prayers of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for Mr. Moody's Bible Institute in Chicago and the work connected with it. God has been richly blessing the Institute in the past months, and now an extension of work is being planned. Three great Bible classes are to be organised on the three sides of the city, to include Christians from all denominations, for the study of the Word of God. In this great city of nearly two millions of people there are thousands of Christians who are longing after a deeper and more thorough knowledge of the blessed Word.

We beseech Christian friends to remember in their supplications this work we are planning, that the Holy Ghost may be mightily poured out upon teacher and students, and that God may be glorified in a real Josiah revival of interest in the reading and study of the Bible. The classes are to be organised the last of September. We shall expect to write you further of the progress of the work after it opens.

Spanish Evangelisation Society.

MRS. MOORE, late of Puerto Sta. Maria, sends the following details of mission work in the South of Spain :—

Our preaching halls are not much to look at—plain, whitewashed buildings, with large texts printed on the walls to catch the eye. The children in our schools, however poor, pay from one "peseta" a month to half that sum. Often it has happened that whole families have been brought to the truth through the agency of the children. "He is always talking of Jesus," the grandmother of a sick child said; "the child's faith is wonderful!" Not very long ago a young man died, trusting in Christ. His first knowledge of the truth was derived from his little brothers who attended the Evangelical schools, and who used to read their verses over in his presence. This led to his seeking the truth as it is in Jesus. His last words were, "My whole trust is in God and his Son Christ."

In the recent Cuban war, two young men lying wounded on the battle-field were spoken to by a native Scripture-reader, who found that both had been instructed in Gospel truth in our Evangelical schools. Like water to the thirsty were the well-remembered words to the weary souls. They wrote to me later that it was in the hour of danger and need that the teaching of their childhood came back to them, and that their greatest wish now was to live a Christian life.

In a village where one of our evangelists goes to preach, tracts were distributed freely amongst the people. An abbess was lent one of these tracts by her brother. It was called, "The Bridge of Love," and made such an impression on her mind that she felt she must hear more of the Gospel. Pleading ill-health and need of change, she got away from her convent for a time. Whilst in her native village, she went to hear the preacher several times in disguise, and became convinced that she could never again return to her nunnery. As soon as her new views became known she was subjected to a fire of persecution; but when last we heard of her she was holding on bravely to the truth. This is a mere outline of some of the work done for the Master—a work, alas! sadly crippled through want of funds.

Communications regarding the work may be addressed to the secretary, Miss R. G. Peddie, 44, Viewforth-terrace, Edinburgh. Miss Peddie informs us that a friend has kindly offered to add £10 to each additional £100 raised for the Society this year.

Female Orphan Home.—In obedience to Christ's command "Feed my lambs," the Orphan Home now located at Tangley Park, Hampton, Middlesex, was commenced. There is a good committee of management, and the secretary is Mr. J. D. Cooper, 79, Finsbury-pavement, E.C. The object ever kept in view by both management and staff during forty-one years of work on behalf of necessitous orphans, has been the feeding of the children, physically, mentally, and spiritually. The average number of inmates during the past year was sixty, to whom the truths of the Divine Word have been taught daily by those who have experienced them in their own souls. Many a young life has here been saved from more or less of want, or moral danger, or of exposure and helplessness—summed up in that touching word "fatherless!" There has, however, been a falling off of general subscriptions and donations; and urgent necessity exists for maintaining and increasing the support of this most useful institution.

Gibraltar-walk Chapel.—This is one of the Missions branching out from Pastor W. Cuff's work in Shoreditch Tabernacle, and is the centre of a vigorous and many-sided Christian enterprise. It has been steadily carried on for fourteen years, and has done a vast amount of good among the poor of Bethnal Green. The chapel holds 500 people, and is regularly filled by all classes, but mostly the very poor. There is a strong and devoted staff of voluntary workers, which means that all financial help sent goes without deduction for the benefit of the poor. The spiritual and material demands of work in such a neighbourhood are considerable. The Mission is managed by Mr. E. Smith, one of the Tabernacle deacons, who almost always preaches and conducts the services; and many proofs have been afforded him that the word of God, the love of Christ, and the power of the Spirit are the only means to break down utter indifference and effectually fight the drink demon.

Letters to the Editor.

"DOLLS FOR INDIA."

DEAR SIR,—I am glad of the opportunity afforded me of making a statement on the subject of dolls for Hindu children, by your publishing in THE CHRISTIAN for July 15 part of a letter from an Indian correspondent.

As from this house, in connection with the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, an average number of 11,000 dolls are annually sent to India, it seems to me imperative to make inquiries as to the validity of the objection raised, especially as several of our kind donors have been made unhappy.

One lady in answering queries told me she has visited all parts of India, and in some places dolls cannot be given for the reason now spoken of (none of these belong to C.E.Z.M.S.).

Several of our missionaries have told me that they have never heard of such a use being made of the dolls. There may be, they said, a few isolated instances here and there, and in fact I myself have heard of one such instance, but does this quite exceptional abuse of a thing militate against its use altogether? Instances can be given of the portrait of our Queen Empress being worshipped; should such portraits, therefore, never be given to our loyal Indian fellow-subjects? And it is a well-known fact that statues in public streets are from time to time worshipped—should there, therefore, be no statues erected?

We have about 200 English lady missionaries in connection with the C.E.Z.M.S., and not one has ever asked us not to send dolls; on the contrary, they mostly beg for more. Would they do this if the custom were to use them as your correspondent suggests?

The hope of gaining a doll at Christmas-time is a great incentive in bringing and keeping children under the Christian influence of mission schools, and thus a doll, a little thing in itself, becomes great in its power.

We do most earnestly beg our kind friends to continue to send us dolls, for we think them a very useful adjunct to missionary work.

Each missionary can judge for herself, and should the dolls be abused in her particular part of India, she can easily cease to ask for them, without depriving other places where no such abuse exists.—I am, yours sincerely, ELIZA G. BARDSLEY.

Requests for Prayer.—For blessing on the Gospel services at the Hall-by-the-Sea during August, and for services on the Sands, Margate.—For a mighty work of the Holy Spirit among the troops stationed in London. Praise for souls who have professed faith in Jesus Christ at the Hall-by-the-Sea, Margate, this season.

Palestine and Lebanon Nurses' Mission.—In connection with this work, of which Miss Lloyd (143, Clapham Road, S.W.) is Hon. Sec., some 5000 patients attended the dispensary at Baakleen during 1896, and these have heard the glad tidings of great joy, for it is there the invariable rule that the health of the soul should be proclaimed before the healing of the body is attempted. A wide area of house to house visitation is also done by the indefatigable ladies who thus commend the love of Christ, for whose sake they go to relieve the sick of Baakleen. During the past year the Druse doctor declared himself a Christian, and was openly baptized in the Mission Room. For this he was so persecuted by the Druses that, with his family, he had to fly to England for protection, but afterwards went back to preach Jesus to his own people and in his father's house.

National Society for the Employment of Epileptics.—In ordinary circumstances, epileptics of the poorer classes live under conditions so unsuitable that in many instances they sink into a state of insanity, and at last find refuge in asylums. The object of the colony which has been established at Chalfont St. Peter, Bucks, is to save them from this fate by taking them in hand at an early stage, and enabling them to live lives of usefulness and activity. Among the numerous candidates waiting for admission to the Colony, about one in ten drops out of the list every year through insanity or death; while at the Colony itself in three years only one death has occurred, and only one patient has had to be transferred to an asylum. Epileptics are received impartially from all parts of the kingdom; but even the extension which is being compassed will be small in comparison with the need. The Secretary is Mr. G. Penn Gaskell, 12, Buckingham-street, W.C.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE anniversary services in connection with the mission work of the Portrush Association were conducted on Sunday, July 25, by Mr. D. A. Black. There were very large attendances. A number of clergymen visiting the popular watering resort were present.

The varied work of the Y.M.C.A. at North End, Croydon, has been well sustained in its seventeenth year. A programme covering engagements to the end of September is now in operation, and is most attractive in its provision of spiritual, mental, moral, and physical needs. Monthly complimentary tickets have been frequently issued to young men newly arrived in Croydon, most of the recipients joining the association afterwards.

The Bayswater Association have made arrangements to spend the month of August at Pakefield, near Lowestoft, again this year. Pakefield is a most desirable and healthy part of the East Coast. The house is five minutes' walk from the beach. Young men needing a change of air and rest and a bracing climate will find this spot especially suitable. The special object in thus providing a holiday resort is that members and friends may have the advantage of being together in one house, to enjoy Christian fellowship, and unitedly to hold services on the sands or elsewhere. Young men desirous of joining this "ideal holiday" party any time during August should apply to the general secretary, Mr. Walter Wild, 172, Queen's-road, Bayswater, W.

The Y.W.C.A.

DUNDEE Y.W.C.A.

THE writer spent last week at Callender, where on his arrival he found the railway station astir with 143 members of the Dundee Y.W.C.A. and their friends. They had come for their annual "Weekly Holiday Home." They were met on the platform by Mrs. Robertson and Miss Trench, and everything was done to make their visit pleasant. They were accompanied by two excellent ladies, Miss Jessaman and Miss Doddrell, under whose influence, and that of Mr. Bisset (superintendent of the mission inaugurated by Mrs. Robertson), several of the young people, during the week, were brought to decision for Christ. It was, indeed, a sort of convention week on a small scale, most of the time being spent in rides and rambles in the lovely scenery of this charming key to the Highlands of Scotland.

At a farewell meeting in the mission hall on Friday night, Miss Jessaman and Miss Doddrell jointly presided. Words of counsel were spoken, and then for an hour and a-half testimonies of experience were given interspersed by verses spontaneously sung. It was an encouraging and refreshing time.

The young people were invited by some of the residents of the neighbourhood to their pleasure grounds. Kindness and courtesy of this kind do much to unite together the workers and those for whom they work.

The workers at Cloudesley Institute, Islington, meet with much encouragement. Miss S. T. Paton, hon. sec., writes:—"Many, during the past few months, have come out on the Lord's side, and we can never fully estimate the value of their influence amongst their fellow-workers. The latter are being constantly brought to our Bible-classes, and an interest is soon awakened in divine things. Our temperance, missionary, and other meetings are much enjoyed."

Irish Notes.

AN increase of over £800 has taken place during the year in the income of the Methodist Home Mission Fund.

At the recent Sizarship examinations in Trinity College, Dublin, Mr. W. G. M'Harland and Mr. W. S. Jennings, of the Methodist College, Belfast, obtained first and third places respectively in classics.

A site has been generously given by Lord Annesley for a new rectory at the important watering place of Newcastle, co. Down. The site, which overlooks the sea, is only a short distance from the church which was built at the cost of Lord Annesley's father.

An important conference on the introduction of hymns and instrumental music into the public worship of the Presbyterian Church was held in the City Hall, Londonderry, last week. Mr. Joseph Irwin, J.P., presided, and there was a large attendance of elders and several ministers. After lengthened consideration, a series of resolutions, moved by Mr. John Woods and seconded by Mr. Jas. Fallows, protesting against the action of the General Assembly in sanctioning a book of uninspired hymns and also the use of instrumental music in the public worship of the Irish Presbyterian Church, was carried.

Personalia.

Pastor W. R. Francis, from India, is preaching in Scotland, and lecturing on the Tabernacle worship of Israel of old.

The Late Mrs. Hilton.—Very appreciative letters have been received by Mr. J. Deane Hilton from Her Majesty the Queen and Princess Christian expressing thanks for a copy of his interesting memoir of his mother, the late Mrs. Marie Hilton, of Stepney.

Mr. Heli Chatelain, of New York, the well-known African traveller and philologist, is again on his way to the Dark Continent. Ever since he went, some years ago, in connection with Bishop Taylor's self-support, ing missions, Mr. Chatelain has been busy upon, plans for the opening of the country and the elevation of its people. He is accompanied by five companions in his present mission.

Mr. W. H. Stanes, of Springfield, Coonor, was accompanied by Mr. David, the well-known Tamil evangelist, on his recent journey to San Francisco to attend the Christian Endeavour Convention. At Penang and Singapore churches and other buildings were placed at the disposal of these brethren; and their addresses were at once arresting to sinners and helpful to many believers. Meetings were also held at Shanghai and Yokohama, and workers and others retain very pleasant memories of the visits, which, though brief, were of great spiritual interest and profit.

Obituary.

PASTOR JACOB OROOMIAH.

We have learned with sincere sorrow of the death of this Armenian pastor, who, with his late wife Moressa, was well-known and esteemed by many Christians in Great Britain. For some time past he has been in poor health, and he succumbed to the complaint from which he was suffering on July 3.

A Foreign Missionary Convention.

A Foreign Missionary Convention will be held in Exeter Hall, on October 13, 14, and 15, which it is expected will be one of the largest gatherings of this character held during recent years. All the principal missionary societies have given the proposal their hearty endorsement, and arranged for their representatives to take part in the proceedings. The work of organisation is being undertaken by the committee of the Central Young Men's Christian Association.

The draft programme shows that the proceedings each day will be as follows: 10 a.m., prayer and praise meeting; 11 a.m., public convention; 1 p.m., prayer meeting; 3 p.m., public convention; 7 p.m., public meeting. Selected portions of the mission-field will be dealt with at the morning and afternoon sessions. Papers and addresses will be given by missionaries representing the various societies. At the evening meetings addresses will be given by prominent clergymen and ministers, the closing meeting being exclusively for young men. All communications on the subject should be addressed to Mr. John H. Putterill, general secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand.

South-Eastern France.—Pastor Elie Vernier, of the Geneva Evangelisation Society, recently made an interesting tour among descendants of the old persecuted Huguenots in the mountains of Drôme, Isère, and the high Alps. He writes: "In one place called St. Laurent du Cross, visited seventy years ago by Felix Neff, we had meetings on four successive days, at which we felt powerfully the influence of the Holy Spirit. I had a mission in the same place seven years ago, when many were converted. It was a joy to meet these friends again. Our meetings were crowded, many Roman Catholics attending." Pastor Vernier's address is Barcelonne par Chabeuil, Drôme, France.

South London Association for Assisting the Blind.—Varied help is afforded to the indigent blind by the Association, of which Mr. J. T. Edmonds, 155, Brixton-road, S.W., is hon. sec. Classes are held, where the blind members are taught to read the Scriptures in embossed type; and portions of God's Word and of other books in the same raised character are lent for home reading. Devotional meetings afford other means of grace, while social needs are met in the recreative gatherings. Relief is afforded where necessary, and pensions are given in urgent cases. The granting of loans free of interest has been continued, the object being to enable borrowers to purchase material for work, to pay rent, or to provide clothing during winter months; and it is gratifying to find that, as a rule, repayments are regularly made. Classes for music, knitting, and needlework are held; and employment suited to the blind is also sought and provided, where possible.

THE BOOK WORLD.

A NEW BIBLE HELP.

The Emphasised Bible is an important undertaking by Joseph Bryant Rotherham. Many years ago Mr. Rotherham brought out a version of the New Testament critically emphasised, and some of us employed the book with interest and profit. The present work includes the entire Bible, and in many particulars it strikes us as following a better method than its predecessor. The New Testament is being issued first, in four monthly parts (2s. each. H. R. Allenson); and the first part is before us. The title-page fairly describes the plan of the work, as follows: "A New Translation, designed to set forth the exact meaning, the proper terminology, and the graphic style of the sacred originals; arranged to show at a glance narrative, speech, parallelism, and logical analysis, also to enable the student readily to distinguish the several Divine names; and emphasised throughout after the idioms of the Hebrew and Greek tongues." The work will be supplied with expository introduction, select references, and appendices of notes. In the Old Testament it will be adjusted to the newly revised "Massoretico-Critical" text (or assured emendations) of Dr. Ginsburg; in the New it follows the text ("formed exclusively on documentary evidence") of Drs. Westcott and Hort. A careful examination of the first part (Matt. i. to Luke vii.) impresses us very favourably. The typographical arrangement is very successful, emphasis being indicated by signs that are expressive without being cumbersome. The version is a great improvement upon Mr. Rotherham's former work in this line, and will be of great service to many. While thus commending the work generally, we would not be held to follow the translation in matters of detail. In fact, we have noted with regret that "correction" is given as the English of kolasis in Matt. xxv. 46.

Familiar Garden Flowers, one of Messrs. Cassell's choice publications, is now being reissued in a popular edition. The entire work, comprising 200 coloured plates and descriptive letterpress, will be completed in twenty-one sixpenny weekly parts.

Walks in Belgium is a useful handbook by Percy Lindley. It is issued in connection with the Great Eastern Railway Company's new accelerated service viâ Antwerp. The book is well written and fully illustrated. (6d. Office: 30, Fleet-street, E.C.)

The Anti-Infidel, edited by W. R. Bradlaugh, has completed its twelfth annual volume (1s. 6d. Snow & Co.). Workers and others who reason with unbelievers will find the pages of service. Important questions are discussed in popular style in this magazine, and the year's parts make up a budget of information on Christian truth, and against various forms of error and phases of unbelief.

The Bell Buoy; or, the Story of the Mysterious Key (1s. 6d.), by F. M. Holmes, tells of a girl who was falsely accused at school, and of the outcome of an adventurous voyage. The Maid of the Storm (1s. 6d.), by Nellie Cornwall, relates a shipwreck with a surprising sequel in after years. Petrel Darcy; or, In Honour Bound (2s.), by Theodora Corrie, drives home a timely lesson against the vice of gambling and the folly of setting the heart upon riches. (Partridge & Co.)

Five Hundred Bible Readings; or, Light from the Lamp of Truth. By Pastor F. E. Marsh. (6s. Marshall Brothers.) Here is quantity and quality—good things in great variety. For years Mr. Marsh has been giving Bible-readings, and printing his outlines for the assistance of Christian workers in general. In American as well as home organs of Evangelical thought and activity his name stands for diligence in Scripture study and facility in classifying and arranging its results. The 500 Readings here given, are in reality, many more than the round number implies. Some of the studies are worked out; others are series of outlines, any one of the series capable of suggesting a subject to the man of God "throughly furnished" unto the good work of teaching. The late Dr. James H. Brookes, of St. Louis, writes a hearty introduction to the volume.

Daily Salvation; or, My Ladder to Heaven. By George Clarke. (2s. Marshall Bros.) The rungs of the Ladder consist of seven words from Psa. cvii.—Redeemed, Gathered, Delivered, Led, Satisfied, Filled, Brought to Perfection. These are used to represent progressive stages in the divine life. The feature of the treatment which strikes us most is the directness of application to the reader or hearer. There is a great deal of statement of truth which has been likened to fishing with a straight pin. In these chapters or addresses the pin is indubitably turned so as to form a hook by which the fish may be not only wounded but caught. We found one unguarded statement, viz., that "Christ Jesus in one sense laid aside his Godhead upon the altar of love in heaven, as the first gift of his sacrifice for us." A more accurate interpretation of Phil. ii. 5-8 would seem to be that He emptied Himself of his royal prerogative, but Jesus was never less than God. He was God manifested in flesh. Taken, however, as a whole, these chapters are calculated to be very useful to souls, to bring sinners to God, and to build up saints in their most holy faith. We wish the book a large circulation.

The Mohammedan Controversy, and other Articles, by Sir William Muir, K.C.S.I., is a reprint of essays which originally appeared in periodical literature, but are in every way worthy of publication in more permanent book form. Missionaries and others who are brought into contact with Mohammedans will find the earlier part of the volume of great value. Though written as reviews forty years ago, more or less, these essays deal with topics of abiding interest, including the biographies of Mohammed and the sources and growth of Moslem tradition. "The Indian Liturgy" is the title of an essay which raises questions involving great principles in missionary practice. It is maintained that the Book of Common Prayer is inadequate for the needs of the Indian Church; among other things for which no provision is made, Sir William Muir specifies prayers for the early and latter rain, on which life and death hang in India; and supplications for the converts, who are continually in presence of evil influences and examples, and for the ingathering of the surrounding masses of heathen and Mohammedans. This essay, with its liturgical information, will appeal to a wider circle of readers than other sections of the book. The concluding essay advocates a fuller and more varied use of the Psalms in public worship. (7s. 6d. T. & T. Clark.)

The South American Missionary Society has issued five tracts, by Mr. W. C. Morris, in a "Forward Evangelistic" series. Some are reprints from newspapers and reviews; they all deal with South America from a missionary standpoint. (Elliot Stock.)

How to Learn to Swim, by Donald Morrison, is a captital booklet, plain in its instructions, and with helpful illustrations. It comes out at a time of year when many are prepared to give some attention to the subject. (2d. Sunday School Union.)

The Strangers' Rest.

On Monday last, Ratcliff Highway was all astir with excitement and flaring public-houses. As I reached the "Strangers' Rest," I heard singing, and to my delight found a large open-air service going on. The congregation consisted of sailors of all colours and nationalities, with a few women and children. A warm invitation "to come to tea" was accepted by all the seamen. After all were satisfied they again adjourned to the open air, when another short meeting was held. Then all the men returned to the Rest, and each went to the room where the Gospel was told out in the language they best understood.

As I listened in turn to the Swedish, German, French, Spanish, and English addresses, my thoughts went back to the beloved Reginald Radcliffe, who had originated this work for our foreign and home seamen, and I thanked God that He has raised up others who are so ably carrying on this much-needed Mission. "One who Loves the Sailors."

Dunkerque.—Madame Vesson, writing of the work in connection with the Reformed Church of Dunkerque, says: "Since my coming to France, three years ago, we have opened three mission halls. We have in all thirteen meetings of different kinds in the week, and propose adding to their number when the busy season is over. We have fitted up our coach-house as a hall; the building at present is very poor and badly situated. At Rosendal, a commune also in our parish, there is a great population of fisher-folk, many of whom come to us. A small hall there would be a great blessing. In these undertakings we look for the help of distant friends." Communications to Pasteur Vesson should be addressed Villa Coligny, Rue Tancrède, Malo-les-Bains, Dunkerque.

The Guards' Mission.—Four battalions of Guards are stationed in the West End for service in succession at Royal palaces and elsewhere. This duty takes the men away from barrack-rooms for twenty-four hours, and when "off sentry" they have nothing to do for four clear hours. At such times Sergeant George Pullinger (late Grenadier Guards), who for thirty-four years has had the spiritual interests of his late comrades at heart, finds them thankful for something to read, so that, during the past year, through the kind support of Christian friends, he has distributed among the guards over ten thousand tracts and Scriptures. At 58, Hugh-street, Ebury Bridge, S.W., four meetings are held every week. In bright and comfortable surroundings each meeting lasts one hour only; and light refreshment is given to soldiers attending. These homely and sociable hours are certainly appreciated. Barrack and guard-room visitation is also regularly maintained.

Abstaining for the Sake of Others.—1 Corinth. viii. 1—13.

Golden Text.—"For none of us liveth unto himself."—Romans xiv. 7.

BEFORE they became Christians the members of the Corinthian church worshipped idols and offered sacrifices to them of animals that were good for food. When the animal had been sacrificed it was divided into three parts. The first went to the priest, the second to the offerer, and the third was burnt on the altar. The priest, overladen with his many shares, would sell his to the butcher, and the Christians when buying their meat often received that which had been offered to the idol. Some there were who knew that there is only one God, and that the idol was nothing more than wood or stone, and they ate the meat as though it had never been used in an idolatrous ceremony (4). But others who had been worshipping idols all their life could not get rid of the idea that the god was something more than the material of which it was composed, and as they had renounced all idolatry they felt there was some compromise with wrong in eating this meat. Paul admits that the former class was right, but he points out their duty in face of present circumstances.

I. They must abstain. This is not put as a command (13), but the Apostle says what he would do. Where any thing or practice proves to be the ruin of many, it is the duty of all good people to totally abstain from it. There may be no harm in the thing itself, but abstinence is the only means whereby those who are injured can be brought to give it up altogether. This applies to the drink curse of England. Abstinence is the only possible cure for the drunkard, but Christians cannot recommend it, or if they can the drunkard will not accept it unless Christians themselves abstain.

II. Paul gives reasons why they should abstain—(a) Force of example (9, 10). The weak generally follow the example of the strong, the young of the old. If a strong man sets the example of walking on the edge of a cliff (he has a perfect right to walk there if he be steady-headed enough) and giddy people following him topple over and are killed, he is abusing his liberty (9) and making it a stumbling block. To this extent, at any rate, we are our brother's keeper. Children are emboldened (10) by the example of their parents and teachers to take intoxicants, and so thousands of weak ones have perished.

(b) They were followers of Christ. Christ died for these weak ones; surely, then, the strong could sacrifice a little on behalf of them (12). If a moth flies through the flame, we catch it and put it out into the fresh air. If men singe the wings with which they should fly heavenward, we should take some pity and make some sacrifice to save them.

We profess to live not for ourselves, but for others (as Jesus did). Why should the man with knowledge sacrifice for the ignorant? The strong for the weak? The good for the bad? Go to Calvary and see the just dying for the unjust. He suffers not for his own sins, but for ours. Count over the great heroes and martyrs of the Church. Why do they bear with such patience the hurling of the contumelious stone and the fire of the stake?—for the weakness of others. It is the condition of all salvation. "He saved others, Himself He cannot save." If we wish to help Christ in saving the world, we cannot save ourselves from the cross of sacrifice in such matters as these.

(c) What we do for the weak we do for Christ. Those who help a brother help Christ: "Inasmuch as ye did it," etc. Those who place a stumbling-block before a brother "sin against Christ" (12). "Inasmuch as ye did it not," etc. This leads Paul to say that "if meat make my brother to offend I will eat no flesh while the world standeth" (13). We can see what duty lies before every Christian with regard to intoxicants. If Paul had been in England to-day he would have been a temperance reformer.

III. The motive for abstinence. To take meat did some people no harm. To drink in moderation may do people no harm. Our abstinence in itself, prompted by desire for self-glorification, will not commend itself to God. But abstinence for the sake of others does commend us to God, and refusing to abstain for the sake of others brings us under his disapproval (8). So the motive must be love to God, and therefore love to our fellow-men. He who loves God will not vaunt his knowledge, but he will be humble and pitiful of the weaknesses and ignorance of others. The argument may lie on the side of those who ate meat, but love is better than knowledge. We know that much poverty is caused by sin, and the stingy man excuses himself from giving to the beggar on that account; but the man who loves God, while he knows also, is mastered by love and so helps the poor for Christ's sake.

We do pray for mercy,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Stepney (Dr. Browne) has been appointed to the new Bishopric of Bristol.

November 14 has been appointed by the Bishop of Rochester as Temperance Sunday in his diocese.

During August and September open-air services will be held on Douglas Head every Sunday afternoon.

Lord Dysart promises £1000 towards restoration of the parish church at Silk Willoughby, near Sleaford.

Scorton Church, Manchester, which dates back to 1143, is to be thoroughly restored on its old foundations.

Archdeacon Lindsay, of Boston, Mass., purposes to establish there an organisation similar to the Church Army.

A mission and colportage van, costing £100, has just been presented to the Church Army for work in the diocese of York.

Dean Lefroy officiates on August 11 at the opening of the new English church which he has built at the Rhone glacier.

The Bishop of Rochester will attend the International Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, at Buffalo, in October.

Christ Church, North Brixton (Rev. W. R. Mowll), is to be rebuilt, and meanwhile a temporary building will be erected for the services.

A cheque for £1200 has been received at the central office of the Queen Victoria Clergy Sustentation Fund, the donor desiring to remain anonymous.

Mr. Mandeville B. Phillips, private secretary to the late Archbishop Benson from 1884 until his death, has been appointed secretary to the Poor Clergy Relief Corporation.

The Dean of St. David's will preach in Llandaff Cathedral at a special service to be held in connection with the visit to Cardiff of the Institute of Journalists this month.

The Archbishop of Canterbury will address the workingmen's meeting at the Nottingham Congress on Tuesday evening, September 28. His Grace will preach the opening sermon at St. Mary's.

Two clergymen, one ex-magistrate, several "learned in the law," and one doctor, are amongst those who have been received into the Church Army Labour Homes for the Outcast during the last week or two.

The living of Christ Church, Folkestone, vacant by the death of Rev. Claude Bosanquet, has been filled by the appointment of Rev. H. L. R. Deck, vicar of St. Mark's, Wolverhampton, formerly of Hull and Sheffield.

The rectory of St. George's-in-the-East will become vacant in September, in consequence of the resignation of Rev. C. H. Turner, prebendary of St. Paul's and chaplain in ordinary to the Queen. Prebendary Turner has held the living since 1882.

Mrs. Westcott, wife of the Bishop of Durham, has laid the foundation-stone of the new building to be erected as an extension of St. Anne's Church Day-schools at Bishop Auckland. The new building will cost £2,400 and accommodate 400 children.

As a memorial of the sixtieth year of the reign of the Queen, it is proposed to build an English church in Lucerne, in connection with the Colonial and Continental Church Society, and an appeal for funds is being made. The cost of the site and the church will be £7000.

Congregational.

This month, except on the 8th, the preacher at Cravenhill Church, Bayswater, W., will be Dr. Noble, of Chicago.

A grant of £300 towards erection of new schools at Shaw, near Oldham, has been made by the Lancashire and Cheshire Chapel Building Society.

A new church is to be erected in the north-west ward at Scarborough, to accommodate 500 people, and until the mission becomes self-supporting it will be aided by the Bar Church trustees.

The Committee of the Birmingham Y.M.C.A. has agreed to throw open the doors of the Institute to the ministers attending the autumnal meetings of the Congregational Union during its session in October.

Eccleston-square Congregational Church Year Book, edited by Rev. E. Theodore Hitchens, reports the work of twenty-four societies and institutions, and shows that the church collected during the past year £1560.

Mr. and Mrs. Wintringham, of the Abbey, Great Grimsby, have given £400 to be applied, in equal shares, to the reduction of the debt on Spring Church, Grimsby, and the mission church in the Welhome suburb of the town.

The historical Charlesworth Independent Chapel last week celebrated its centenary. At the same time due recognition was made of the fact that this is the 235th anniversary of the establishment of independency at Charlesworth by the "Apostle of the Peak" (Rev. W. Bagshawe).

Calls.—Rev. L. T. Hughes, late of Cannington, Somersetshire, to the English Church at Algears, Vermont, New York; Rev. Cynon Davies, of Thaxted, to Bedford Chapel, Oakley-square; Mr. C. W. Sykes, of Southport, to Hornsea Church, Yorkshire.

Resignation.—Rev. S. C. Gordon of Newport Pagnell Church.

Baptist.

The Baptist Missionary Society has now completed its arrangements for the Autumnal Meetings, to be held in October at Plymouth.

Rev. Kirk Bryce, of Chatteris, Cambs, has accepted the pastorate of the Nottingham Tabernacle as successor to Rev. J. Clark, who recently left for New Zealand.

Revs. A. G. Adams and W. Millman sail from Antwerp this week for the Congo. Mr. Adams goes to San Salvador, and Mr. Millman will probably be stationed for a time at Stanley Pool.

Rev. B. J. Gibbon, of East-street Chapel, Southampton, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate of Bloomsbury Chapel, London, and will commence his ministry there on the first Sunday in October.

Rev. G. T. Edgley, of Plaistow, has accepted the pastorate of Emmanuel Baptist Church, Harringay, N. Mr. Edgley's career as an earnest and faithful minister encourages the hope of good times in store for Harringay.

During Pastor Thos. Spurgeon's holiday absence from his pulpit for four Sundays, from the 22nd inst., the preachers at the Metropolitan Tabernacle will be Revs. C. B. Sawday, Hugh D. Brown, Archibald G. Brown, and Chas. Spurgeon.

At last week's annual gathering of the Baptist Union of Wales some 400 delegates assembled at Neath, representing thirteen associations, 306 churches, 494 ministers, 136 assistant ministers, 399 lay preachers, 105,423 members, and 114,296 Sunday-school scholars.

At a conference representing the Bradford and Craven Baptist Churches, held the other day at Bingley, a discussion took place on the position of Yorkshire Baptists during the past ten years. It was stated that at present there were in the county 120 Baptist churches and 20,503 members, with seating accommodation for 68,000 persons

The services in the Oban church on Sabbath, July 25, were taken by Pastor H. R. Francis, lately returned from India. Mr. Francis was well known in Oban during the revival of twenty-five years ago, when meetings were held right into the morning hours. Many who then found the Saviour now warmly welcomed Mr. Francis, and prayed for similar blessing.

The eighth anniversary of the settlement of Pastor R. Boyd Morrison has been celebrated in the Tabernacle, Upper Parkstone. The many agencies of the church have not only been maintained, but steady progress has been made all the way round. During the past year fifteen persons were baptized, and eighteen added to the church. The Sunday-school numbers 240 and the Band of Hope 150.

Midsummer meetings have been held in connection with Hornsey-road Chapel, N. The preachers were Revs. James Neil (formerly of Jerusalem) and G. D. Hooper (of Luton), and the pastor (Rev. E. Smart). At a public gathering addresses were delivered by Revs. G. D. Hooper, G. Campbell Morgan (Tollington Park), and W. L. Tweedie (late of Cork). The reports read by the pastor were of an encouraging character.

Calls.—Mr. E. Williams, of Cardiff College, to Burton-on-Trent; Rev. A. Stock, B.D., of Honiton, to Waterham Church, Stacksteads, Lancs; Rev. T. W. Way, late of Edinburgh, to Fleet, Hants (all accepted).

Resignation.—Rev. W. E. Davis, Hail Weston, Hunts.

Methodist.

Hoylake, Cheshire, is to have a new chapel, to cost £2000.

The foundation-stones of a new church have been laid at Pokesdown, Bournemouth.

At Lymm a new church building is being erected and the old one adapted to school purposes.

Mrs. Scarth, of Langhow, has laid the foundation-stone of a new church at Lingdale, Yorkshire.

Rev. R. Woolfenden, of China, is on his way to England in consequence of a breakdown in health.

Sister Gertrude Nettleship, the first Wesley deaconess appointed to work amongst the heathen, is about to sail for Ceylon to work under the direction of Rev. G. J. Trimmer. It is hoped that a second deaconess may join Sister Gertrude in the course of the year.

Twenty-five village evangelists are employed in needy Primitive Methodist stations. They cost the Mission Fund from October to June, £372. The stations provide homes. It has been decided to continue the system, but in future the District Missionary Committees will select the men and choose their spheres of labour.

Rev. J. Harrison presented to the U.M. Free Church Assembly at Nottingham, the report of the Young People's Committee, which aims at the training and culture of young people mentally and spiritually. It takes oversight of the various young people's associations, conducts an annual examination, in which last year 1871 took part, and has instituted a Children's Sunday.

Presbyterian.

The Presbyterian Church of Canada have by their augmentation fund secured a minimum stipend of £155, with a manse, to all their ministers.

In connection with the Synod's total abstinence society, an effort is just now being made to secure increased support from the office-bearers of congregations.

Five Presbyterian churches have been built in Belfast during the past year, twenty-six students have passed the theological examination, and nineteen have volunteered for colportage work during the summer months.

Rev. James Melus, M.A., of Southport, has been appointed by the Intercourse Committee to represent the Church at the Waldensian Synod, in place of the Moderator (Rev. H. L. Mackenzie), who is returning to China.

Salvation Army.

Colonel Barker, Mrs. Bramwell Booth's representative, has had a very satisfactory interview with the Prison Commissioners, with a view to the extension of Salvation Army work among the criminal classes.

Mrs. Booth-Tucker, who is in this country for a short while, reports that the number of commissioned officers, local officers, and soldiers alike show a gratifying increase upon all previous records. Work has recently been commenced from 130 new centres.

In Australia, Mrs. Herbert Booth has secured the Old State School Building, Exhibition-street, Melbourne, from the Government of Victoria for seven years, at a mere nominal rental. This will be opened as a Women's Shelter—the first in the territory.

A party of thirty Salvationists, representing the work in France and Switzerland, were on Saturday conducted over St. Paul's by Archdeacon Sinclair, who fully explained the various points of interest in the cathedral. The party previously attended the usual choral service at the invitation of the archdeacon.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. W. H. Bunt, C.C., for more than twenty years superintendent of Camborne Wesleyan Church Sunday-schools.—Mr. George Elder, of Knock Castle, Largs, a generous supporter of the Free Church.—Rev. S. Evans Rowe, president of the South African Wesleyan Conference seven years since.—Rev. Alexander Murray, "father" of the Presbytery of Peebles, who had reached his sixty-sixth year, and was ordained in 1856.—Rev. R. W. Pordige, a retired Indian missionary, having entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1854, and become a supernumerary in 1886.—Rev. Fred Evans (Ednyfed), D.D., at his old home in Llandebie, Carmarthenshire.—Rev. Evan Evans, of Shaw-street Circuit, Liverpool, since 1895.—Rev. Geo. Logan, who ministered to a large congregation in Arbroath.—Rev. Dr. Frank M. Ellis, pastor of the Washington Avenue Baptist Church, Brooklyn.—Mr. John Bagnall, of Langley, a prominent member of the Oldbury and Tipton Methodist Circuit for nearly half a century.—Mr. Thomas Smith, for many years deacon of Mill-street Baptist Church, Bedford, and for a quarter of a century colporteur for the Bedfordshire Colportage Society.—Mr. T. Lund, a generous supporter of the Methodist Church at Pudsey.—Mrs. Ann Bone, the oldest member of Roxton Congregational Church, Beds., at the age of eighty-three. She was a scholar and teacher in the Sunday-school, and for over fifty years a member of the church.—At Rathfriland, Mr. Jas. Morrow.—Mrs. C. Metcalfe, aged ninety-two, a member of Brunswick United Methodist Church, Halifax, since its formation in 1849.—Mr. Richard Benyon, of Englefield House, near Reading, a most liberal supporter of religious societies and charities.—Rev. M. Fitzgerald, of Achill, a fine Irish scholar, who devoted much time and energy to promoting the Scriptural education of the Irish-speaking population in the West of Ireland.—Dr. Watkin Roberts, of Carnarvon, the centre and strength of Church Evangelical movements in that town for many years, and a staunch friend of the Bible Society and the C.M.S.—Mrs. Neligan, wife of Canon Neligan, the popular incumbent of Christ Church, Leeson Park.—At Kettering, Rev. Abner Edmund Brown, M.A., a well-known clergyman in Northamptonshire, aged sixty-two

TRAINING HOMES FOR LADY MISSIONARIES.

THE LADY MISSIONARIES' TRAINING HOME, 15, Burnbank Gardens, Glasgow, is intended for Christian Ladies of any evangelical denomination, desirous of becoming Missionaries at home or abroad (preferentially the latter), and who, in view of this, wish one or two years' Biblical Instruction, with some experience in evangelistic work, &c.

Practical Christian Work is carried on in connection with Grove Street Institute, and embraces Visiting the Sick, District Visiting, Teaching the Young, Domestic Classes, Dispensary Work, &c.

Fees for Board and Instruction £30 per annum, or £10 per term.

THE MEDICAL TRAINING HOME FOR LADY MISSIONARIES, 32, Windsor Terrace, Glasgow, in co-operation with Grove Street Institute, is open to applicants from Mission Boards, and to those whose purpose it is to work in the foreign field, who are members of recognised evangelical churches.

Here there is given a sound theoretical and practical training (of 2½ years' duration) in the chief branches of Medical Science, viz.: Practice of Medicine, Surgery, and Midwifery. The Visitation of the Sick, &c., in connection with the Medical Mission affords opportunities for gaining experience in Practical Christian Work.

Fees for Board and Instruction, £42 per annum, payable in January, April, and September.

As the next Session begins in September, it is requested that all who desire admission make formal application at earliest convenience.

For full particulars of both Homes, applicants are desired to communicate with the Hon. Sec.,
Miss FORRESTER-PATON, Mars Hill House, Alloa.

THE LONDON ASSOCIATION
Earnestly Appeals for Increased Funds to meet Increasing Needs.

In addition to the increase in General Fund of £8000, the following are among specially pressing requirements:—

The Labrador Emergency Fund, to provide for the two new Stations and imperative Increased Ship Accommodation.

The Two New Missions in East Central Africa and North Queensland.

The fresh openings in Central America, Surinam, with its New Leper Asylum—Alaska and South Africa; and last, but not least—

The all-important Medical Missionary Training Fund; all of which needs prompt, constant, and generous help.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Rev. W. Wetton Cox, Clerical Secretary, Office—2, Furnival's Inn, London, E.C.

N.B.—One in sixty members of this devoted little Church is a Missionary; and so richly is their work blessed, that the converts number over 93,000, or more than Three Times as many as the Parent Church. There are no fewer than 400 Missionaries in the field, and the whole expenditure, of which more than half is contributed by the Native Churches, is only £80,000.

Mr. Hermann Warszawiak.

MR. HERMANN WARSZAWIAK has issued a circular asserting his innocence of the charges of which he had been declared guilty, and containing a letter (which appeared in the New York Times of June 22, signed, "Charles F. Taylor, Presbyterian Minister"), who stigmatises the trial before the Church Court as "a travesty upon justice."

We have also received a long letter, signed "A New York Pastor," in which the case of Mr. Warszawiak is warmly advocated, and the procedure preliminary to and at the trial before the Kirk Session is severely reflected on. The letter thus concludes:—

These are but some of the circumstances connected with this trial which have induced Mr. Warszawiak to appeal his case for further hearing to the Presbytery of New York, and these are some of the reasons why those readers of THE CHRISTIAN who have known anything of the work of this devoted servant of the Master in the City of New York and elsewhere, may well encourage themselves in the hope that in due time the Lord will bring forth his righteousness as the light, and his judgment as the noonday.

On the other hand a statement, dated July 21, has reached us from the Advisory Committee, in Edinburgh, of Miss Douglas (who has taken a warm interest in Mr. Warszawiak) accepting "the decision of the Kirk Session as carrying the authority of a church court, unless and until that decision is recalled by a superior court." Its second and closing paragraph is as follows:—

In view of the appeal made by Mr. Warszawiak in the circular referred to, the committee have to state that on March 2 last Mr. Warszawiak was informed that no more money could be sent him until a banker's certificate was produced showing that the large sum sent from Scotland for the building of the proposed Christian Synagogue in New York was safe in the hands of four trustees. Mr. Warszawiak acknowledged receipt of this letter, and promised that it would be attended to without delay; but he has not yet done so. In these circumstances, the committee cannot at present recommend friends to respond to the appeal contained in the circular.

It will be seen that this question of money unaccounted for is independent of the charges brought before the Kirk Session. The attitude of friends of the Lord's work and workers must be one of waiting—on the one hand, waiting the issue of the appeal to the higher church court; and on the other, withholding contributions until the funds in hand have been accounted for.

Faversham.—Mr. Perry has been lifting up Christ in a tent for the last sixteen days at Faversham, whilst in the district around the Bible carriage has worked with the tent. The services have been well attended, and we have had tokens of the Lord's presence. Several very pleasing incidents could be recorded of conversions and of backsliders restored. The noon-day prayer meeting each day in the tent during the mission was a time of strengthening. The tent, which has been in use for ten years in the Gospel work, is often now in need of repair. F. B.

Young Emigrants for Canada.—On Thursday morning a party of 139 emigrants (forty-five boys and ninety-four girls) from Dr. Barnardo's homes left Euston Station for Liverpool en route to Canada. These young people constitute the third party of emigrants for the current year from the Homes, and they bring up the total number emigrated to Canada and the colonies by the Institutions to 9,187. The failures among this large total amount to less than two per cent., and very many of the lads have attained to positions of considerable responsibility in the land of their adoption. The party sailed in the Dominion liner Vancouver.

A Holiday Mission.—Messrs. Robert Ley-Wood and Colin Taylor concluded, on Sunday, Aug. 1, their fourth annual tent mission in the parishes of Sheepy and Ratcliffe Culey, near Atherstone. This is an almost purely agricultural district, and in great need of Gospel work. Open-air meetings at various points, and house-to-house visitation, in addition to the tent services, have enabled the preachers to reach a considerable number of people. They have to thank God for blessing, and especially for the joy of seeing the fruit of work in former years. The expenses of a mission such as that just concluded are not heavy, and many might pleasantly and profitably thus spend a holiday in the country districts.

The Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

DAY by day for seventy-five years the work of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland has gone steadily forward sustained by the almighty power of God. Famine, plague, war, political agitations, bank failures, etc., have not stopped the labours of the Society's faithful Scripture readers for a single day, nor has the aid of the police been called for at any time to protect them in their labours, as Lord Shaftesbury stated at Exeter Hall more than once; and its work to-day, though plain and simple, is vigorously and earnestly carried on. Scattered over Ireland, the men are visiting in every direction and without controversy, reading God's Word and showing his message of love to the people. The peculiar value of the work is its power of drawing attention by a living voice and in a friendly, kindly way to the Word of God; and who can tell the extent or variety of the blessings that have resulted?

Many testimonies are being received from those in a position to judge. The Primate of all Ireland writes:—The Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland has indeed done, and is doing, good work, of which I have the privilege of hearing from time to time.

The Most Rev. Dr. Peacocke, Archbishop of Dublin, writes:—The Society does an excellent work. I had in succession two Readers working under me; they were both godly, faithful men, who did their work diligently and with singleness of heart, so far as I could judge.

The Bishop of D—— writes:—For nearly twenty years I had the help of a discreet and devout Scripture Reader, and I can testify that such a man is of the utmost value.

The Bishop of C—— writes:—Your agents in this Diocese are very good and useful men.

The Bishop of D— writes:—The aid given by the Readers is of great value. They are able to carry out a more thorough system of house-to-house visitation than the clergy could possibly find time to accomplish; a special and personal application of Divine truth can thus be made to the individual conscience with the best effects. The clergy highly appreciate their help, and I only wish we could have a larger number.

The Bishop of Cashel, one of the oldest friends of the Society, and who has examined more Scripture Readers for this blessed work than any other clergyman in Ireland, writes:—The Society has been carrying on its work with the hearty commendation of all classes who know it.

A rector writes:—You have helped me now many years, and given me the aid of many of your readers, and I never found one of them who was not a thoroughly Christian man, a Bible student, and an earnest worker.

Another rector writes:—Your two Scripture Readers have won the respect and esteem of all. It is much in their favour to say that in this district, where there are ten Roman Catholics to one Protestant, there is not a house where they would not be sure of a welcome, and yet neither of them disguised his mission.

Another rector writes:—Your Scripture Reader has been very useful, and we have had a great deal of encouragement from God.

Another writes:—Your Reader has risen steadily in my estimation since we have been brought into connection.

Looking back over the history of the past seventy-five years, the pioneers and leaders of this blessed work stand out, such as the late Earl of Roden, whose predecessor, with Chief Justice Lefroy, was one of the chief founders of the Society. The Earl of Shaftesbury, Lord Cavan, Sir Arthur Blackwood, Sir Edward Synge Hutchinson, The Duchess of Manchester, Lord James Butler, Mr. T. B. Smithies, of the British Workman, the Dowager Countess of Enniskillen, Miss Jane Lefroy, Miss Gore, the Dowager Duchess of Abercorn, and many others.

The present position of the Society is very clearly set forth in one of the last letters of the beloved and revered late Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin, written immediately before he was taken ill, as follows:—

Dear Captain Kearney White,—Many thanks for your kind letter and its enclosures. I am always glad to hear of the success vouchsafed by God to your noble Society, and only regret that death has snatched away from us so many of its liberal contributors during the past year. I earnestly hope and pray that you, its best earthly friend, may be spared for many years to your many attached friends, and to the cause which you have loved and served so long and so well.

Knowing that your Society is just now in great straits, I enclose a cheque for £5 extra, and only wish that the many claims demanding my attention from day to day permitted me to send you an hundredfold as much. I have read enclosed draft report with much interest, and have nothing to suggest by way of improvement. I have every confidence that the reduction of income, which has arisen from the loss of old friends, will be speedily repaired by the accession of new supporters. In any case, I feel sure that a cause which has been so evidently owned by God will not be allowed by Him to suffer any permanent injury. Hoping that your own health is on the mend, and trusting that God may restore you speedily to health and strength, I remain, yours very sincerely, PLUNKET, Dublin.

The following is one of the latest appeals for the Society's help from the South of Ireland, and which speaks for itself:—

The Rectory, June 25, 1897.

DEAR SIR,—I shall be most thankful if your Society can give me a Scripture reader for this parish.

The district is simply enormous, and quite beyond the working powers of a single clergyman. Need is pressing of cottage meetings, and above all of teaching children the Holy Scriptures. I have under my care four coast guards and light stations, with twenty Protestant seamen, their wives and families, in some cases remote from all spiritual influences. There is no Church school, and the children are attending R.C. schools, from which I am excluded, and the scattered nature of the parish prevents my undertaking more work.

At the visitation his Grace the Archbishop of Dublin recommended me to write to you and mention him as advising the procuring of a Scripture Reader for this parish, and he hoped the society would assist me. I trust your committee will give the matter their favourable consideration. I may mention that I do not receive one penny from the Government for looking after the coast guards.—Faithfully yours, ——— Rector.

Surely our Protestant people and their families ought to be supplied with spiritual food in the vast districts where, since the disestablishment of the Irish Church, four or five parishes have been thrown into one. The following letters show this:—

Rev. Mr. A—— writes:—"When I came to this parish, now nearly fifteen years ago, there were over nine hundred Church members in it; there are now a little over six hundred. Several parishes in this diocese have lately been amalgamated, and several will have to be on becoming vacant. This means fewer ministers of the Gospel to work amongst our poor scattered and discouraged brethren, and should call for an increased number of your quiet earnest "one book" men to go amongst them spreading the words of life. If our bishops, clergy, and people would see the efficient "Pastoral Aid Society" that they have ready to their hands in the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, the last two words in its title would become a reality; and there should be sermons and collections in every parish in our land to strengthen your hands and make the work a mighty wave of blessing to poor old Ireland in these last days."

The Rev. Mr. H. writes:—"Your Scripture Reader has more than realised my expectations in his earnest discharge of often laborious and always difficult duty, and in the acceptance he has met with from all classes and creeds. The value of such an agent's work must be manifest when I say that for fifteen years I have had under my sole charge three parishes, formerly ministered to by four clergymen, and that this is no uncommon case. Were your agent removed from our midst, much valued work must of necessity be left undone.

"I very sincerely trust that you may be able to leave your Scripture Reader with us. I have sacrificed a great deal to retain him. Wishing your work every blessing and yourself every reward, etc."

All who have not read the exciting nautical incidents embodied in the tract, "Compel Them to Come In," No. 1, by J. Townsend Trench, and "Compel" No. 3, by Rev. P. B. Power, M.A., author of "The Oiled Feather," which have been published for the benefit of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland and the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society, should write to the office of the Society, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin, for copies, and also for the Annual Report, which is full of interesting particulars.—[ADVT.]

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—The Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.—The Committee and Secretary gratefully acknowledge receipt of £25 Jubilee Thankoffering to be acknowledged from "A Friend from W—— ——."

West London Mission.—Allow me to ask your readers for help towards the country holiday fund of this Mission. Thousands of our poorer neighbours have no prospect of even a brief escape from the baking pavements and the one-roomed dwelling, insufferable in its stuffy closeness. We do all we can to send as many as possible of these weary toilers for a short stay in the country. May I beg those who are themselves looking forward to a delightful and refreshing holiday to send us something for these less fortunate ones. M. Katherine Price-Hughes.

The Revealing of God.—Love is the only atmosphere in which God can reveal Himself. Love alone has eyes to see God and ears to hear Him. "He that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is love." If the presence of God is not known to us, if God's power is not proved in our lives, if God's favour is not resting upon our work, let us be sure that somewhere there is a hindrance. And if we seek God simply and earnestly, He shall meet us and reveal Himself to us.—Mark Guy Pearse.

Italian Church Reform Association.—This Association supports Count Campello and the whole of his band of reformers in Italy, who receive allowances sufficient to enable them to live. In this way the funds maintain many workers, who get from £2 a month each upwards. Want of funds made it necessary last month to abandon a promising mission in one of the larger towns of north Italy. This is very regrettable. Those desiring to help the Association can communicate with Mrs. F. Petrie, 12, Gloucester-walk, W., the Kensington Branch hon. sec.

THE NEW LEMONADE.

Many people suffer from extreme thirst during the hot weather. Messrs. Foster Clark & Co. have supplied the want that has so long been felt by making a concentrated lemonade. It is made from the finest lemons, and the great advantage is that it is partly manufactured in Italy, in the midst of the lemon orchards. The lemons are taken direct from the trees to the factory to commence their transformation into the Eiffel Tower Concentrated Lemonade. You can get thirty-two tumblers (or two gallons) for fourpence halfpenny. If you cannot get it from your Grocer send sixpence (in halfpenny stamps) to G. Foster Clark & Co., 295, Eiffel Tower Factory, Maidstone.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE beautiful weather of the recent Bank Holiday made London look like a forsaken city, and the country around populous with pleasure-seekers. On the whole, the working-class population that thronged to Hampstead, Harrow, and a host of other resorts behaved with exemplary propriety. There is a great contrast between now and twenty years ago in this matter. We have become humanised through the influence of the Gospel, of education, of church and mission-hall work, and the wise use of liberty. This is a great and salutary change for all concerned.

Anyone travelling through the country districts at this bountiful season of the year must be struck at the prodigal provision made for man in the providence of God. We make much of storm and flood, drought and pestilence. But these are exceptional occurrences which make us realise our utter dependence on the faithful and steady growth which is the abiding law of nature. Were it not for this splendid pageant of fragrant hay, and mellowing corn, of green vegetable, and abundant fruit, that annually crowns the year with its plenty, we should soon find the earth uninhabitable. As it is, it all comes and goes so normally and regularly that few of us realise it with a thankful heart. We take it for granted. "God sends his rain on the just and the unjust." At this period of beauty and plenty, the first of our bounden duties is thankfulness; the next is kindness to such as are less blessed than ourselves.

What Christians do when they go away from home, and are among strange people who cannot compare their conduct with their professions, is as important as what they do at home where everyone knows and judges them; for their own sincerity and uprightness before God it is more important. If they honour the Lord's Day at home, let them do the same in London. If they keep away from every place of evil or doubtful reputation in their own town, let them not be drawn into such places in Paris. If they would not go to a prize-fight in England, let them not witness a bull-fight in Spain. If they regard the Pope as the head of a huge system of religious error and oppression of the souls of men, let them not go to pay their respects to him at Rome. We should not change with a change of latitude and longitude, and be like Kipling's soldier, who enjoys the country "where there are no ten commandments, and the sky is always blue."

"No Pope at Canterbury" is the sub-heading of a review of the Lambeth Conference published in the Daily News, and written by "one of the most distinguished members" of that Conference. That is to say, there was no welcome whatever shown to the suggestion to raise the Archbishopric of Canterbury into a Patriarchate. It was that process which long ago paved the way to the Popedom of Rome. The American and Colonial Episcopal Churches are to be entirely self-governing as heretofore, "even though this autonomy should sometimes lead to developments distasteful to other branches of the Church." There is, however, to be a "Board of Reference," to be nominated by the Archbishop, which is to be an entirely voluntary body, for counsel in disputes in or between the provinces, but its decisions are to be purely advisory, and not binding mandates. There is in future to be an Archbishop for Canada, and probably others in the South African provinces, the West Indies, and New South Wales. This will still further hinder over centralisation.

A specially attentive hearing was given to the three coloured bishops, who also took active part in the discussions. One, who distinguished himself to admiration during the deliberations of the Conference, was a negro, Dr. Oluwole, assistant bishop of Western Equatorial Africa. It is delightful to hear that this young divine, educated amid heathen surroundings, electrified the staid and cultured members of the Conference by his shrewdness and his fresh outlook on life. Though ready of speech, he lacks the fatal fluency which is the besetting peril of most coloured preachers, and he won his fellow bishops "more by the beauty and directness of what he said than by his skill in saying it." He is to preach next Sunday morning at Cromer, where he is certain of an overflowing congregation.

This charming watering-place, which grows year by year in popularity, is very fortunate in its new vicar, Rev. J. F. Sheldon, late of Exeter, who is a sturdy Evangelical, with powerful voice, robust physique, and fearless of hard work—"a rare business manager he be," so a local light informed us. Last Lord's Day, morning and evening, the beautiful church was crammed with over 2,000 persons to hear Canon Atherton (also of Exeter), who as a missioner possesses singular force. His sermons were direct and incisive, and his "instruction" at the evening after-meeting was blessed to many.

The former rector, Rev. F. Fitch, retired last year, after nearly fifty years of patient, faithful service. He laid the foundation of Evangelical truth deep and strong, which makes the work of his successor the more encouraging, a fact which the latter is not slow to recognise. Thus, one soweth, and another reapeth.

A good housewife who has frequently thrown open her house for the entertainment of ministers, evangelists, delegates and others engaged in Christian work, thinks that if the disciples of our Lord are enjoined to shake off the dust from their feet when they were denied admittance to a town, the least they can do when they are hospitably entertained is to use the doormat. She has had rather sorry experience in this and other directions, and appeals for more kindly consideration and forethought on the part of visitors to fall in as far as possible with the habits of the household and minimise additional domestic labour.

Fears have been freely expressed in many churches that the Free Church Council would soon degenerate into a mere political organisation; but the tendency of growth seems, happily, to lie in the direction of deepening the spiritual life and increasing the unity of the various denominations. A circular just issued by the National Council urges each branch to commence the winter's work with a "Quiet Day." If this suggestion can be carried out right through the country, we may expect a great outpouring of God's Spirit. It is ever true that "Without Me ye can do nothing," and to realise this is to take the first step towards obtaining power; but it is also true that "I can do all things through Christ." When prayer and labour go hand-in-hand, mighty works are certain to lie in the near future.

The Band of Hope Union is making arrangements for its jubilee celebration in the autumn, and the ministers of various churches are being asked to devote a Sunday service to the work and claims of the Union. There are now upwards of 21,000 Bands of Hope and other Juvenile Temperance Societies, with a membership of 3,000,000 young people. A specially prepared pamphlet, with contributions by the Rev. Canon Fleming and other well-known exponents, will shortly be issued, with a view of affording information and suggestions useful for sermons and addresses. We hope that ministers will fall in with the request of the Union. Many of the most prominent preachers have already done so.

The evidence of Mr. Riley, of Melbourne House, Leicester, who has for many years been connected with homes for female inebriates, is one of the heaviest indictments against grocers' licences for the sale of intoxicating drinks. According to his experience, ninety per cent. of female drunkenness springs from the practice of buying at the grocer's. The patients in his house all say that a lady who would not enter a public-house would obtain drink from a grocer. Yet grocers still avow, some of them at least, that their liquor trade is not demoralising. It is very obviously demoralising to those who hold the wine and spirit licence, or they would be able to see the truth.

The cultivation of thrift among workingmen ought to be a matter of keen interest to the Legislature; but there is one amendment put into the recent Workmen's Compensation Bill by the Lords which will be a direct blow to this social virtue. As passed, relatives who are only partially dependent upon the victim of a fatal accident will be denied all compensation for his death. As The Speaker says:—

> A very slight acquaintance with the lives of the industrial community is needed to discover that the wives and children of working-men usually contribute, from one source and another, to the earnings of the family.

The advantage of compensation in case of a fatal accident is, therefore, confined to such wives as have been doing nothing to help the family exchequer by occasional or regular work. Of course, the actual neediness of a bereaved family may be greatly reduced by the labours of its members, and this must be duly considered; but the present Act will press hardly on many thrifty households.

It is satisfactory to know that the receipts of the Metropolitan Hospital Sunday Fund this year have shown only a small falling off from those of last year, in spite of the many Jubilee demands and of the Prince of Wales's Hospital Fund. Last year £41,829 was distributed, and this year about £40,000. Since its inception twenty-five years ago the vast sum of £913,482 has been given to various hospitals from this fund, and nearly a million surgical appliances have been bought. It has been the custom of the committee to distribute the current income each year as it was received, as having been intended for the relief of sickness and disease of that twelvemonth. This makes it needful year by year to keep up the income to the required amount.

An article on the future of the Red Man in the current Forum has a pathetic interest. It is from the pen of Simon Pokagon, the last chief of a band of North American Indians. His charge against the white man's treatment of his forefathers at the time of their first impact is one that is true of almost all the relations between white and coloured men. He says :—

> Having briefly reviewed some of our past history, the fact must be admitted that when the white man first visited our shores we were kind and confiding, standing before them like a block of marble before the sculptor, ready to be shaped into noble manhood. Instead of this, we were often hacked to pieces and destroyed.

What if the white man had risen to his opportunity and done his part in civilising his red brother? This chief believes that Nature had placed no impassable gulf between his countrymen and civilisation.

He thankfully confesses, however, that of late there has been a great and beneficent change of policy on the part of the U.S. Government towards the remnants of native tribes that still remain.

> Where hundreds of thousands of dollars were paid out annually to fight him, like sums are now being paid yearly to educate him in citizenship and self-support; that his children may not grow up a race of savages, to be again fought and again cared for at the expense of the nation. I rejoice in the policy now being pursued. If not perfect, it is certainly on the right trail to success.

As to the future of the race, Simon Pokagon thinks it certain that it will lose its identity by amalgamation with the dominant race. In this way possibly the final result will be enriched, as the English nation has been enriched in vitality and energy by the absorption of subject races; and the red man of the forest, while losing his separate identity, will contribute his share to the making of the man of the future on the American continent. This civilising policy, in so far as it applies, is an object-lesson for us in our South African dependencies.

An earthquake is an awful thing, even in its mildest form. We get our ideas of stability from the earth—it is, indeed, terra firma to us—and when that trembles everything is shaken; but, judging from the account given in this month's issue of the Baptist Missionary Herald the effects of the recent earthquake in India were much more serious than the public Press led us to suppose. Much of the Mission property has been completely ruined, and the total damage is estimated by the secretary to be somewhere between £8000 and £10,000. We trust that some liberal donors may be forthcoming to make good the damage, so that the beneficent work of the Society may not be retarded by the committee being compelled to repair it from the ordinary income.

History does not bear out the Bishop of St. Andrews in his belief that every worker, whether she be a Sister or a Deaconess (he was addressing a conference on Women's Ministries in the Church), should be brought into living touch with a Bishop of the Church of God; and that the life of the Great Head of the Church flows down to the members of the body through "the united episcopacy." As a Scotch bishop he ought to know that a great deal of the best work is done in Scotland by men and women who never came into contact with a Bishop either mediately or immediately. If life only comes down into the body through the channel of the bishops, we have to explain how parts of the body having no connection with bishops are often full of life, and how some parts of the body in connection with them are sometimes dead.

A correspondent writes that one urgent need of the time is a little book for widespread distribution, on Altar, Sacrifice, Priest. These words, so significant, require explanation in a simple manner, with brevity and correctness; and, doubtless, others would be as pleased as our correspondent to hear of a cheap publication on the subject. Of course a treatment of these words would simply imply a statement of Gospel truth on sin and its forgiveness and access to God through the atoning death and glorious ascension of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Mr. Hall Caine has told an interviewer that the purpose of his latest novel is to show "that it is impossible to live the life of Christ in Christian society as it is organised to-day." There is a confusion of thought involved in this contention. The Christian is not responsible for the whole organisation of society, but he has to face things as they are, and, in the spirit of the simplest loyalty to Christ, so to live under existing conditions, and so to try to make them more Christ-like, as to help on others to do the same. The only alternative to this is to eschew human society, and live as the ancient ascetics did, apart from the world. That plan has never succeeded. It neither produces robust Christians, nor makes it easier for those who have to carry on the world's work to live true lives.

More heroism is required to follow Christ in the whirl and temptation of social and business life than to wear hair shirts. What we want in place of the old martyrs is the spirit that can dare to apply the principles of our Lord's teachings to the actual conditions of the world, and take the risk of poverty and failure for his dear sake.

The stir recently made by the discovery of a leaf from a lost book containing "Sayings of Jesus Christ," gives interest to Professor Walsh's work on "Lost Treasures in Literature." The extant classics are but a beggarly remnant of a vast library. Out of 2000 dramas extant at the time of Aristophanes, only forty are now in existence. Some of the greatest writers of the ancient world are represented by only a few odes or even lines. This is also in a measure true of Christian literature. Extant writers of the early centuries contain abundant references to lost works of importance. The chief instrument of their destruction has been war Over 400,000 MSS. perished during the siege of Alexandria by Julius Cæsar. The Saracens in 640 A.D. burnt a second library of 700,000 volumes. But there are, doubtless, many treasures still lying among the ruins of ancient cities and among the Mohammedan monasteries of the East. We know not what light may yet be thrown on the past by patient research, especially in Christian literature.

Rev. J. M. Gibbon makes a good point by way of practical application in his published sermon on the new "Sayings" (1d., Allenson) when he says :—

> There is something especially solemn about the resurrection of these buried words of Jesus. The breaking of the long, long silence, what a parable it is! Alas! how many of the words of Christ are buried and silent. How many are buried in us all! How much that you committed to memory, or were once familiar with in the New Testament, has been buried long since! The sands have drifted like waves, and now the desert, like a frozen, silent sea, hides away the words of Jesus Christ in you. In you, men and women, even you young men and young maidens, are there not buried words of Jesus Christ? Egyptian exploration! Yes, but we need an English exploration. We want some power that shall come exploring through our hearts, ploughing up our consciences, searching for the buried words of Jesus Christ.

It is not only in New Testament antiquities that discoveries are now being made in Eastern lands. Archæologists are busy hunting up and examining the remains of Hebrew books and MSS. stored up in the "treasure-houses" associated with Jewish synagogues in the East. Dr. Schechter was able to secure about 40,000 fragments from a "genizah" at Cairo last winter, and these have been conveyed to Cambridge to be thoroughly examined. To these institutions faded or worn copies of the Scriptures were consigned, as they were too sacred to be burnt; and other books, once held in high esteem but afterwards degraded, were "hidden away" in them. It is interesting to know that our word Apocrypha (the "hidden books") is associated with this process of hiding dead or invalid books.

Dr. Schechter's results are as yet not formulated, for the work of examining these literary remains is very tedious and slow owing to the extraordinary confusion, and the way the separate sheets cling together. But already some interesting things have been discovered in this pile of rubbish. There are MSS. of the Bible of considerable interest, dating from the tenth century, a fragment of sixteen verses of the original text of Ecclesiasticus, portions of the two Talmuds, and some Midrashim (old Jewish homilies). These will be useful in throwing light on Jewish history, as well as furnishing a mine of information on social and religious customs. The discovery on July 26 of a "palimpsest" copy of Aquila's Greek translation of the Old Testament (a rival to the Septuagint) may be but the herald of still more important lost works.

Discovery is always the avenue to mystery rather than the way to knowledge. You discover something, and forthwith realms of inquiry are seen to exist of which no one had previously had a suspicion. The "X" rays were a wonderful discovery, which were to do wonderful things for us, and so they have, but our ignorance of them is still the remarkable thing.

> We have little reason (we are told) to believe that they are one and indivisible; and, in fact, the difficulty of inducing the same tube to give always the same results points strongly to the fact that they are many and various, and that there is a whole alphabet of other so-called rays about which we know absolutely nothing.

It is a good thing, in these self-confident times, to be reminded of our ignorance, and that "perhaps some time we shall understand why plums ripen through to the middle, and why the sunshine does us good." And when we do we shall only be started on the track of other mysteries. For the ways of God are past finding out.

We agree with the following sentence from the Church Times :—

People are so accustomed to rely upon societies that the bare mention of the duty of the Church as the one body to enterprise this or that work provokes an incredulous smile; and yet nothing is more true than that the creation and the multiplication of special societies and funds is positive proof of failure on the part of the Church to do her proper work.

By "the Church" we mean all the churches of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. They have failed, or these societies would never have been required; and the worst of it is, that the hardest people often to convert to a belief in the objects for which the societies exist are some of the members of the churches. What latent unbelief in missionary work dwells in many Christian hearts! What antagonism to temperance and to peace! No proper progress can be made until the churches adopt all their Master's message.

Was not the old Huguenot counsel to church members sound and worthy of observation, viz., Let each one offer a short prayer on awaking; pray morning and evening; have family prayer; pray at meals; pray at the beginning and end of work? There was prayer at mid-day, and in the evening both family and personal worship. This may have been a somewhat severe form of the religious life, but it is undoubtedly more in harmony with the example of our Lord and Master, and more to be preferred than the present lax manner of living, in which prayer is conspicuous for its absence rather than for its presence. And we can well understand how the Huguenots, who walked so closely with God, and attached such supreme importance to spiritual things, should have been willing to brave persecution even unto death. Jonathan Edwards computed that nearly a million were martyred within thirty years of the massacre of St. Bartholomew. The truth is that the secret personal habits make their mark on all the outward conduct; prayerful Christians will suffer for Christ's sake, prayerless ones never.

"The Christian Ecclesia" of Dr. Hort gives a translation of 1 Timothy iii. 15 which sheds a beautiful light on that great passage :—

That thou mayest know how men ought to behave themselves in a household of God, which is an Ecclesia of a living God, a pillar and stay of the truth.

The idea thus set forth by the Apostle is "that each living society of Christian men is a pillar and stay of the truth, as an object of belief and a guide of life for mankind." This is intelligible enough, but the idea suggested by the old translation, which is preserved in the R.V., of "truth as a building standing in the air supported on a single column," was not satisfactory. There is always room for knowledge, intelligence, and faith to make the wonderful Book clearer.

The drowning man is not saved by his act of grasping, but by grasping the rope thrown out for his rescue. We are not saved by our act of faith, but by faith taking hold of Him whom God hath given to be our Saviour. It is useless to exhort people to believe unless the true object of faith is presented to them. The Fall consisted in transferring faith from God to the devil. Salvation consists in repentance (change of mind) toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

The faith which justifies is faith "in Him who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead, who was delivered for our offences and raised again for our justification," "who by Him do believe in God, who raised Him up from the dead that our faith, and gave Him glory that our hope, might be in God" (Rom. iv. 24, 25; 1 Pet. i. 21). The way to produce faith is not to exhort people to believe, but to set forth evidently before their eyes Jesus Christ, and Him as crucified; for He Himself said, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all unto Me" (Gal. iii. i.; 1 Cor. ii. 2; Jno. xii. 32).

It is God's Word that is a hammer to break hearts of rock, and a fire to burn up the stubble and the dross. Man lives not by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Therefore "preach the Word." "Hold fast the form of sound words." Feed the flock of God with wilderness manna or with old corn of the land, as they are able to bear it. Two preachers were being spoken of recently. Of one it was said that he was sound and Evangelical, yet, though the present influence of the preaching was good, nothing definite remained in the memory. But the preaching of the other was Biblical. It was never forgotten. The memory of the exposition brought back the Scripture, and the memory of the Scripture brought back the exposition. That kind of preaching produces lasting results; and those results should be aimed at in every address, or sermon, or discourse.

Nothing interests and profits a congregation so much as an intelligent exposition and application of the Scriptures. There never has been nor ever will be a human experience which will not find comfort or encouragement, instruction or exhortation, correction or rebuke, adapted to its need, in the Old Testament and in the New. For in Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms, in the Gospels, the Acts, the Epistles, and the Revelation are written the things concerning Jesus, the Son of God. He is the Great Physician, and the Scriptures are the Balm of Gilead. Let evangelists, pastors, and teachers be themselves well nourished by the Bread of God, and kept in health by the healing Name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, and multitudes of lame souls lying at the Beautiful Gate will receive strength to enter into the Temple, leaping and walking and praising God.

But the Peters and Johns must be men of the one book. They dare not say to impotent folk, "Look on us," if when they look they are to see reflected in their eyes the spirits of of sceptical reviews, or sensational magazines, or sensuous poems, or sensual pictures, or sexual novels. Even wholesome literature, political, scientific, social, religious, must be kept in subjection to the Word of God. For we can only reveal to others that which is revealed to us; and the inspired revelation of God in his Word is usually the medium by which his Spirit reveals his Son to us, and in us, and through us. "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed Me unto thee, but my Father who is in heaven."

Webster's unabridged dictionary says that a "critic" is a "judge of literary merit." Do those who pose as critics in a church or congregation always realise this? How often does a minister receive a letter beginning, "May I offer a criticism on last Sunday's sermon?" accompanied by a list of its demerits, its merits being frequently passed by. The Church critic generally has a keen scent for faults (plus sometimes a vivid imagination). He serves his dish "piping hot" as a rule; but we imagine it would be much more palatable if seasoned with an occasional judgment on the merits of the work criticised.

There is a bit of sound advice in The Hospital on "A Good Cry," which is capable of wider application. Crying, it seems, is a good thing for women as well as for children—whether also for men we are not told. Byron says, "To them 'tis a relief, to us a torture." The whole process is set forth in medical language, and we are advised not too hastily to intervene to stop a woman from having out her cry.

If we can remove her trouble by all means let us do so; but if the trouble is to remain, let her cry herself to sleep. This is far better than soothing draughts.

Nature's way, rather than artificial devices, is ever the safest and shortest out of our troubles. Grace and nature work wonders for body and soul.

French sociologists are being growingly exercised by the condition of the young men of that country. Two little books, "In what Consists the Superiority of the Anglo-Saxon Race?" by Edmond Demolins, and "Our Sons: What shall they Become?" by Hugues de Roux, credit the rising generation with an entire lack of healthy ambition and enterprise. Their chief thought and purpose is to qualify for an office under Government. "The one date which a French youth utterly ignores is the day of his death." This last feature, and the utter lack of religious seriousness it implies, is probably at the root of the whole mischief.

Rev. G. Wainwright at Sea.

In a letter dated s.s. Tongariro, nearing the Cape, July 15, en route for Australia, Rev. G. Wainwright, of Bournemouth, writes :—

"Every unfavourable symptom has gone except the cough, and that is a continually diminishing quantity. I cannot sufficiently thank God for the difference He has wrought in me.

"We are having a most delightful voyage. To-day, for the first time, the log calls the sea 'rough,' and even yet, neither my daughter nor I have had any sickness. Nor was the heat any trouble to us even in the hottest part of the journey. We felt nothing so trying as the sultry heat in London during Jubilee week. We are expecting to reach the Cape by Monday.

"Then our company is very good. There are a few worldly folk, who do not seem in their element with the rest of the second saloon passengers. For the most part we are a happy Christian fellowship. We have on board some of the brightest and most intelligent and spiritual people I have met. We have a most profitable service on Sunday night, while a Sunday-school for the young folk is held in the afternoon."

Temperance workers who visit the Continent must be particularly struck with the fact that although there is so much drinking there is so little drunkenness. One might take a journey through the Rhine valley—the very place where large quantities of wine are produced—and yet never see a single inebriate. This is probably due to the lightness of the climate and the drinks. The former we cannot get in England, but the obtaining of the latter is a field of temperance activity which has been almost untouched. The horrible fiery poisons which are distributed in England would not sell on the Continent. Surely there might be a crusade by social workers against the impure drinks that are doled out by brewers and publicans at high prices. The marvel is that the consumers themselves do not protest.

The Joyful Sound.

Ps. lxxxix. 15, 16.

NOTES OF ADDRESS

By Sir ARTHUR BLACKWOOD,

At Crayford Village Hall, November 6, 1877.

THE passage divides itself into two parts: The Joyful Sound; the blessed Privilege of those who know the sound. We cannot mistake what the sound is. It is not the voice from Sinai, but the Gospel from Calvary. The words "mercy" and "faithfulness" are mentioned seven times in this psalm, and they represent the Gospel. The same thought is conveyed in Ps. lxxxv. 10, "Mercy and truth are met together. Righteousness and peace have kissed each other." Also in Isaiah xlv. 21, "A just God and a Saviour," and in Rom. iii. 26, "Just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." Here the Law and the Gospel meet, and thus "mercy and faithfulness" make up the "Joyful Sound." God says, "Blessed are they who know the sound." It is the "old, old story," and we can never draw upon it too much either from the Old or the New Testament.

Let us notice four notes of the chord sounded by the Jubilee trumpet in Leviticus xxv. And, oh! that we may understand these four notes.

We find in Lev. xxv. 9, 10, that the trumpet was to be sounded throughout all the land on the Day of Atonement. It was to be the "acceptable year" to all who were in trouble. The debtors were to go free, the exile was to return to his home. If we notice the exact words of these verses we shall see the four distinct blessings.

Atonement.
Liberty.
Restoration to inheritance.
Home.

What a joyful sound! The trumpet was only to be sounded on the Day of Atonement.

Let us see what happened on that day. Turn to Lev. xvi.; and without dwelling on all the details there given, we will look at two main features connected with it.

Aaron was to take two goats. One was to be slain; and with its blood, not without, he was, as high priest, to go within the veil, his hands filled with sweet incense. With the blood Aaron, though a sinner, could enter the presence of God, for himself and for the people.

So, when the trumpet began to sound it told of the atonement made, of the sacrifice offered. But not only of this, for the next act was that the other goat was brought forth, and the high priest, laying both his hands upon the head of the live goat, confessed over him, "all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat," which was then sent away into the wilderness. So that the goat bore upon him all their iniquities into "a land not inhabited," a "land of separation" (margin).

We can imagine how that trumpet note, which told of atonement made, and sin carried away as the result of that atonement, resounded from hill to hill. We can imagine a guilty sinner watching the innocent blood being shed, seeing the emblematic action of Aaron conveying his sins, as it were, to the goats, and then the living goat, bearing those sins, being led away into a land of separation, and we can realise what the sinner must have felt.

But all this was a type of "good things to come"—a blessed type of the atonement made by Christ Himself, our Great High Priest. His blood has been shed, and the fact that Jesus is now in glory is the proof of the believer's acceptance in Him. Atonement has been made to God for us, for me; and my sins have been removed "as far as the east is from the west"—"cast into the depths of the sea"—all my sins. This little word all is four times mentioned in Lev. xxv. 9-10.

What do we say to all this?

My faith would lay her hand
On that dear head of thine,
While like a penitent I stand,
And there confess my sin.

We can easily understand what the meaning of the joyful sound was in Israel. Everyone knew on that day what had taken place. That was the shadow; now we have the substance. My sins are put away, gone for ever. No more has to be done. My sins were left in the grave of Christ. This, and nothing short of this, may be the blessed assurance of everyone who believes in Him.

The next note of the chord is Liberty. In Lev. xxv. we find that liberty was to be proclaimed "throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof." Those who were slaves, who had squandered their patrimony and become bondmen, at this sound were set free. As the morning light broke over the hills they knew that that day their chains were to be broken, and that they would be free men. So that there was not only atonement, but liberty—emancipation from every fetter.

What a glorious note! And we may rejoice in "the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free" (Gal. v. i.). Satan may try to assert his old claim, but we are his servants no longer. We are Christ's free men. If saved, we are free. The trumpet of the Gospel proclaims nothing less than this.

Jesus proclaimed "the joyful sound." He preached "the acceptable year of the Lord" (Luke iv. 18, 19). And we must do the same, and tell aloud the fact that atonement has been made, and liberty is proclaimed to all, whatever their previous character may have been.

Now we pass to the third note, Restoration to inheritance. On that day "every man was to return to his inheritance," and no one could keep him out. He could go back to his own possession. Not on account of his deserts; "without money and without price," he got back what he had lost.

And in the antitype it is the same. But what do we get back, if we may so speak? Not the Eden which Adam lost, but heaven which Jesus has purchased and gone to prepare for us. Peter describes it as "an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away" (1 Pet. i. 4); and in Col. i. 12 it is spoken of as "the inheritance of the saints in light." As the notes of the chord rise higher and higher, must we not rejoice in the knowledge that this inheritance is ours, that to every believer it is a glorious certainty?

And when we know that we are treading the way to glory, and begin to realise our high calling, our lives surely must be changed. We may stumble, but henceforth our lives must be lives of "faith in the Son of God." For "it is not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy He saved us." Oh! who would sell his inheritance for a mess of pottage?

But there is one note more—Home. Every man was to "return to his family." This seems to come last because, in one sense, it is best, for it speaks of home, and the happiest home that can be conceived. Many have known what it was, when thousands of miles away, to picture the return home and the welcome back—seeing faces again from which they have been long separated, and grasping of hands not clasped for years. But perhaps the return has been to find empty places and to miss loved faces. But there will be no such disappointments in this home. There will be "fulness of joy," everything happy, glorious, attractive; and He who has gone to prepare that home for us is coming to fetch us, and that very soon.

Let us now look at the privileges of those who know the joyful sound. They are threefold: The walk; the joy; the exaltation. When the captive is set free, the first thing he does is to walk. He does not stand still. And the Christian must not stand still. He is to be "always abounding in the work of the Lord." Oh! it is a glorious thing to serve our Master; let us not be standing still. If we are, it is because we have forgotten our "high calling." When we realise the coming of our Lord, and how near it may be, we can't stand still.

And how are we to "walk"? "In the light of his countenance," not in sparks of our own kindling. We may have the darkness of sorrow, of tribulation, of the shadow of death, but with all this there will be light all round the Christian's path. And this is a promise, not a command; although the promise implies the command, "they shall walk."

Then we shall not only "walk in the light," but we shall be happy as we go. "In thy name shall they rejoice all the day" (v. 16). Satan characterises religion as a gloomy thing. Some people go about dressed in black because they are religious. Surely Satan has a hand in this! Why should Christians be swathed in black, like grave-clothes, when they ought to be the happiest people in the world? We are to "rejoice all the day." Christ Jesus died to give us peace and joy in our hearts, and it is nothing short of a lie to say that pure religion is a gloomy thing. Men who are forgiven, who have got their title deeds to heaven and know that glory is their inheritance, must be happy; and the Bible which tells of our possession in Christ Jesus is full of deep joy.

But we are to "rejoice in the Lord," not in ourselves. Christ dwells in our hearts by faith, and why should we be mourning children of the King? Why should our souls be lean when we have such riches in Christ? What a marvel it must be to angels, who know what we have got, when they see Christians miserable and moping on the road!

Then "In thy righteousness shall they be exalted." Yes, in none of our own! It is "not by works of righteousness which we have done." What Jesus has done for me, is my claim to glory. It is "in thy righteousness" we shall be exalted. Some may say, "I don't like this—it's presumption," but remember, it is not a question of what we have done, but of what He has done for us.

What does the righteousness of Christ deserve? The throne of glory, and nothing short of that. And if I am his and I am united to Him, I share in his glory—his is mine! And this makes up the Christian's life from the beginning to the end, quiet, peaceful, joyous "till He come."

The Jubilee Year! the Jubilee Year!
The bondsman rejoices to hail thee near.
Sevenfold Sabbath and Year of Grace,
The burdened and weary and poor to bless.

* * * * *

The Atonement is made, and the trumpet's voice
Bids every sinner "Rejoice! Rejoice!"
The Gospel proclaims an eternal release,
And bids the debtor go home in peace.

But there is another trumpet coming, which all the earth shall hear; and we must answer that, if we refuse to answer this. "Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound." "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

How to Meet Temptation.*

By Dr. A. T. PIERSON.

IT has been laid upon my heart to say something very simply upon the great crises of temptation that the child of God must meet, and the fear of which frequently prevents fulness of surrender to God and the incoming of Divine peace. The passage of Scripture which I desired to read has already been read by the chairman, without any suggestion or intimation from me — the closing verses of Eph. 1. The passage read concluded with the first verse of chapter ii., but you would have noticed that the last sentence was incomplete It reads: "You hath He quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins; wherein in times past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience; among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others." The original of the phrase, "the course of this world," is a unique expression—"according to the age of this world," or "the æon of this cosmos." This passage is one of the three in the New Testament which contain in a short space distinct reference to these three great foes, the world, the flesh, and the devil. The other two are James iv. and opening verses, and 1 John ii. 14—16. These three foes are the chief sources from which come our great temptations. Therefore, if we can discover what is the source of their power, and how that power is to be nullified and counteracted by us as disciples, we will have answered from the Word of God some of the gravest questions that can be asked by us.

Note, again, the two great passages which treat of temptation. The first is James i. 12—15; the second is 1 Cor. x. 13—in my judgment the most important passage in the Bible on the subject of temptation: "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way of escape, that ye may be able to bear it." There are two great thoughts in common in these passages. First, the community of temptation. No temptation can assail us but such as is common to man. It has been met and resisted and overcome; therefore, it may be met and resisted and overcome in us. The second thought is immunity from falling. There is no need that we should fall; because the same God who permits the temptation provides a way of escape. He will never let a temptation overtake us that is irresistible; otherwise would He not become responsible for our yielding to it? When I was a boy, I used to hear that temptation comes like a great wave that sweeps us off our feet, or like a giant taking up a babe and carrying it away; I thank God that these are the devil's lies. Therefore, I feel bold in God's name in pointing out for a few minutes the Bible teaching as to these three snares, and as to GOD'S WAY OF ESCAPE.

Take the first of these great foes—the world age What is it that constitutes the peril of the world to us? It is intimated in the very expression, "the age of this world." The word "age" suggests that it is temporal; the word "world" suggests that it is material and visible. Hence its power over us. What is visible always seems more real than what is invisible, because it comes to the eye, the ear, the touch. It appeals to the senses, and no man ever disputes the reality of what his senses perceive. Again, what is temporal engrosses and absorbs. It is a present thing, and represents a present attraction; hence its power over us.

* Notes of an address at Keswick Convention.

There is a remarkable expression, "The fashion of this world passeth away." It has been translated: "The stage scenery of this world passes away." We probably do not know much here about stage scenery, but we know enough about it to appreciate the figure. It is a structure of paint and pasteboard, something very hollow and very shallow, and only painted on one side. Its peculiarity is that it is perpetually shifting—not only for every new play, but for every new act, and every new scene in every new act. So the fashion of this world is so much stage scenery — gaudy, imposing, bewildering, dazzling, fearfully hollow and shallow, and only painted on one side. Yet how we are enamoured and fooled by it; how it attracts us!

What a wonderful word of the Apostle's is that in 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4?—"If our Gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost; in whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, lest the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." I do not pretend to be a Greek scholar, but I believe the passage might be translated thus—"If our Gospel be hid, it is hid by those things which perish." And it is awfully true, that it is by those things that pass away and perish that the God of this world blinds the minds of them that believe not, lest they should believe. It is one of the devil's master ways of

DELUDING AND DECEIVING MEN.

What is our hope of escape from the power of the world? Paul says, in the passage read by the chairman, that we need to have our hearts enlightened to know the riches of the glory of God's inheritance in the saints, and what is the hope of our calling. Then in Eph. iii. we have another—the power of the love of God entering into us. The key-note of the Apostle's prayer in chap. i. is Knowledge; the key-note of the prayer in chap. iii. is Love. We can only meet the attractions of the world successfully by "the expulsive power of a new affection." You have heard the story told of Dr. Chalmers, who saw the stage-driver smartly whipping one of the leading horses at a certain part of the road. "What did you do that for?" he asked of the driver. "Round that corner the horse always shies, and I want to give him something to think about till he gets past." That incident suggested to Dr. Chalmers his famous sermon on the expulsive power of a new affection. That is the way to get past the crisis of temptation. It is by understanding, as Paul tells us in Phil. iii., that we are not of this world, that our citizenship is in heaven, that we find an antidote to the power of the world.

I pass on to say a word about the other two sources of temptation—the flesh and the devil. Note that there is a curious twofoldness about them. We are told of two perils and two ways of meeting them. In Rom. viii. we read that as to the flesh there are two perils—the mind of the flesh is death, and again the mind of the flesh is enmity against God. A man is body, soul, and spirit. The body lies between the spirit and the soul in this wonderful trinity of ours, and the soul is like a mirror, which always reflects that to which it is turned. Turn it down, and it reflects the earthly; turn it up, and it reflects the heavenly. If the soul turns toward the body, it reflects material interests; if towards the spirit, it becomes engrossed in spiritual things. You cannot turn the mirror both ways at once; if it is turned toward the flesh it cannot be turned toward God. Therefore, the carnal mind is enmity against God; it is not subject to his law—neither, indeed, can be.

The mind of the flesh, says Paul, is death. Death is departure from God; the loss of fellowship and communion with Him. It is the decay of spiritual sensibility. The child of God may, therefore, sin in the direction of death, just as the ungodly man may His sin will bring broken communion, loss of fellowship, decay of sympathy that paralyses spiritual sensibility. We must not entertain the idea that because we are children of God we can sin with impunity;

THAT IS AN AWFUL SNARE.

The carnal mind is toward death, and in the direction of enmity against God.

What is the corrective? It is very simple. In the first place, you must have the Spirit in you; secondly, you must dwell in the Spirit. How wonderful. We have it in the same Rom. viii., "Ye are in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you." I used to ask myself: How can the Spirit be in me, and I in the Spirit? Then I remembered such natural illustrations as, the bird is in the air and the air is in the bird; the ship is in the water and the water is in the ship; the fire is in the poker and the poker is in the fire. If the Spirit is not in you, you do not have the breath of eternal life in you; you cannot draw continually from the higher atmosphere that which is necessary to the sustenance of the spirit life; so that the corrective to the lust of the flesh the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life is to have the Spirit in you. But you must also dwell in the Spirit—living and moving and having your being in the Spirit, as the element in which you live. You are able to overcome because you have passed into the sphere of Christ Jesus, into the atmosphere of the Holy Ghost, charged with Divine energy and power.

Then a word or two about the third foe, the devil. I would to God we could all appreciate this awful fact that the devil is a person. There is no more subtle snare of the devil himself than to persuade people, as he may have done some of us, that the only devil is the evil inclinations of our own hearts. The devil is just as much treated as a person in Scripture as the Holy Spirit of God is, or the person of the Son of God is. And not only so. I pray you notice that in this very Epistle to the Ephesians we read of the hierarchy of evil spirits over which Satan is the head. "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places" (Eph. vi. 12). Surely no such language could be used of evil tendencies. There seems to have been originally an organisation of holy angels which passed into a condition of revolt; so that there appear to be ranks and grades in the hierarchy of fallen spirits, as in the hierarchy of holy angels. The point is this—innumerable spirits of evil are all around us. They are in this very tent, while we are speaking; and remember this, that an evil spirit works in every child of disobedience.

What are the snares of the devil? There are two special snares—first, his lies; second, his wiles. The lies are wiles, and the wiles are lies. He is the wiliest liar in the universe. He does not tell an out-and-out lie; he makes a lie to have the appearance of truth. He covers over the bitter pill of error with the sugar of truth; but you still get the pill, though you taste the sugar. We have to try the spirits, for many false teachers have gone out into the world, and

JUST NOW THEIR NAME IS LEGION.

How shall we meet the devil? We have it in this same Epistle to the Ephesians, "Be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might; put on the whole armour of God." First, you want a fortress to stand in; second you want the armour or panoply. What is the fortress? I did so thank God that Mr. Hopkins, at St. James' Hall, said: "We do not need to dislodge the enemy, for he is dislodged; but only to avail ourselves of the stronghold from which he is dislodged." Take your stand on the Rock of Ages, stained with the atoning blood of Jesus Christ, and the devil will never climb up there; he does not like the blood. In the first place, he could not stand there; in the second place, he could not get there if he could stand there. It is only when we get out of that position that he has power over us.

There is the panoply, which time will not permit me to dwell on. Notice, however, the breastplate, or the military jacket. Some people say the Christian soldier is not covered behind because he is not to retreat. I believe that is another lie. I believe there are some circumstances when the only safe course is to take to our legs and get away. This blessed armour of God encompasses both breast and back. Note also that the only offensive weapon is the sword of the Spirit, the Word of God. If you want to see what effective use can be made of it, follow your Lord into the desert of temptation. He simply said, "It is written." That is all you have got to do. Take your stand on the Rock of Ages, on the blood of the Cross, on the death and resurrection of Christ, and take for your weapon the sword of the Spirit. He cannot get at you from above; if he seeks to approach you from below, point the Word at him, and he will flee.

So I would say in conclusion: Do not be afraid to take your stand fully and wholly on the side of God. Do not be afraid of the world; its power is paralysed if you understand the hope of your calling. Do not be afraid of the flesh; its power is paralysed when the Spirit is in you and you are in the Spirit. Do not be afraid of the devil; his power is paralysed when you stand in your true position in Christ, and make use intelligently and faithfully of the Word of God.

"He Helped Us."

THIS is the renewed testimony of the venerable founder of the Ashley Down Orphan Houses, Mr. Geo. Müller, in his fifty-eighth report, just issued. Writing under date May 27, 1896, he says: "On this day, when the financial year of the institution was commenced, we had a balance of £276 5s. 10¼d. in hand—a balance so small that very frequently we have paid out two or three times as much in one day. We trusted, however, in God for help, and He helped us." The year closed in May last appears to have been a very trying one in regard to pecuniary supplies. "Yet," says Mr. Müller, "we have been continually sustained, so that without the least wavering we have been carried through the year."

The specimens of donations given in the report show the interesting variety of circumstance and method. From all parts of the world the gifts come.

The reality of the faith in God exercised by the directors of the institution is seen in the fact that the reception of orphans continued in spite of pecuniary trial, 212 having been received during the year. Out of the 1889 children in the houses during the year, it is interesting to note that only four died. Mr. Müller appeals, not for money, but for orphans to fill vacancies in the institution, particularly orphan girls, specially desires any who know of destitute orphan children to communicate with him.

In the balance-sheet there is an apparent deficit in the orphan account, but, as Mr. Müller explains on page 70, this is only apparent, as "there are several large legacies, amounting together to £6780, the payment of which is much overdue. The receipt of these legacies will far more than counterbalance the apparent deficiency." As readers of these reports are well aware, the record of facts is interspersed with various remarks of a practical and experimental character, making the pamphlet a valuable instructor on the life of faith. We trust it will have a wide circulation and careful perusal.

Sydney Rescue Work Society.—This mission has done a good work for many years. The wife of the director, Mrs. G. E. Ardill, is now on her way to this country, to plead the claims of the work. Her addresses will be illustrated by lantern slides. She will be glad to hear of openings in chapels or halls where she might tell what the Lord has done by them. She is accompanied by Miss Murcutt, organiser of the W.C.T.U. in Australia. Letters may be sent to Mrs. Ardill, care of her brother, Mr. Thomas Wales, South-road, Kendal.

From Philippi to Corinth.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Acts xvii., xviii.

LEAVING Luke at Philippi, Paul and his companions travelled through Amphipolis and Apollonia to Thessalonica, a name which lives for ever in the inscriptions of his two earliest epistles. The modern town is known as Saloniki. It may be that Paul was specially attracted to this city because of the synagogue and a weekly Jewish service there, in which he could prosecute his favourite work of opening and alleging from the Hebrew Scriptures that the Messiah must suffer, and that He had appeared in the person of Jesus of Nazareth. He did this for three Sabbath days, maintaining himself and his friends by the work of his own hands, and lodging with one Jason, who afterwards became a devoted disciple and follower (Rom. xvi. 21).

At the end of that period the strong feeling raised among the Jews made it unwise to continue in the synagogue; he therefore removed his conferences to some neutral ground. How long he remained there we cannot tell; but it must have been long enough to give time for the formation of a healthy and vigorous church, towards which the Apostle bore himself with the gentleness of a nurse and the encouragement of a father. There was something about these Macedonian converts which was immensely attractive to him. In after days he speaks of them as his joy and crown, and says that he was so affectionately desirous for their growth in grace that he would gladly have sacrificed his own life to promote it. They were very poor, and he wrought day and night with his own hands, even to travail, that he might not be burdensome to them; but they were rich in faith, and love, and hope (1 Thess. ii. 6, 7, 11, 19).

More than in other cases, his teaching led them to anticipate the Advent of the Lord. The pressure of the anguish that lay sore upon them all may have made them peculiarly susceptible to those radiant visions of the Lord's return that filled the Apostle's thought. They even outran his teaching and fell into the error of supposing that that day had already come—an error which the Apostle by a second epistle hastened to correct. It was a great joy, however, to that harassed heart to realise that, amid the furious opposition of man, God was working with him, and accompanying his words with the demonstration of his Spirit. He recalls, with lively satisfaction, that the Gospel came to them in power and the Holy Ghost; so that they became ensamples to all that believed in Macedonia and Achaia, and the Word of God sounded forth from them in clarion notes (1 Thess. iv.; 2 Thess. ii.).

Some months must have been occupied in this blessed ministry; and the strain on the Apostle must have been greatly lessened by the gifts which came from Philippi, relieving him from the necessity of manual toil (Phil. iv. 16).

At last, however, Thessalonica was closed against them. Paul and Silas were compelled to flee by night before the anger of the populace, incited by the Jews. The accusation laid against them was a strange one, considering the quarter from which it emanated. It was suspicious that Jews should be so eager to maintain the integrity of the Roman Empire, in opposition to the claims of the other King, one Jesus. But "any stick will do to beat a dog with"; and the Jews were not scrupulous about the means they employed, if only they could rid themselves of their powerful rival, who was probably thinning the crowd of Gentile devotees that gathered in their synagogue.

Fifty miles of night-journey brought them to Berœa; and there for a brief space they had respite; as the Jews were less bigoted, and more willing to search the Scriptures, to discover for themselves the reasonableness or otherwise of Paul's views. But his heart yearned for the beloved brethren whom he had left to stem the strong tide of hatred which he had evoked; and more than once he would have returned had it not been for the fear of implicating Jason and others, who appear to have been bound over to prevent him from setting his foot again in Thessalonica. This was in his mind when he said Satan hindered him (1 Thess. ii. 18).

The project of Paul's return to Thessalonica was, however, rendered quite impossible by the rising of another storm, caused by Jewish emissaries from that city, who pursued his steps with relentless hate. There was at last no help for it but to leave Silas and Timothy in Berœa, to see what further could be done to keep the pathway to the rear open, and to hurry down to the harbour to take the first boat that was sailing. This happened to be for Athens. Those that conducted him hurried him on board, and we can imagine him standing on deck, and watching wistfully the receding heights of Mount Olympus slowly fading from view; behind, the dearest, truest friends he had ever known; before, what?

Athens. The messengers hastened back to Berœa, bearing the charge of the lonely lion-heart, that Silas and Timothy should come to him with all speed. Whilst he waited for them and hoped they would assure him that he might return to the infant communities he had founded, he passed through the streets of Athens, surveying the monuments of their religion. On every side were the achievements of human genius. Temples which a Phidias had designed; statues which a Praxiteles had wrought. But Greece was living Greece no more. Her political glory had passed away a century and a half before, when she had fallen before Rome's all-subduing might. She prided herself still on her heroic traditions, and her custodianship of the greatest monuments of that or any epoch of human history. But it was the afterglow of sunset.

It is not clear that the heart of the Apostle was stirred with classic memories or artistic appreciation. To him the city was simply full of idols; and the innumerable multitudes suggested the confused notions that prevailed of the unity and majesty of the Deity. He was greatly moved; and, not content with reasoning in the synagogue with the Jews and proselytes, he went forth every day into the market-place to reason with whomsoever he met, urging all and sundry to turn from these vanities to worship the only God. It was his constant aim to be all things to all men, and at Athens he gave a conspicuous exhibition of his marvellous versatility. No ordinary Jew could have entered so thoroughly into the spirit of the place as the great Apostle did, or have excited sufficient interest among its philosophers to justify them calling a special assembly of the council of the Areopagus to hear a full statement of the new teaching he brought to their ears. The Evangelist indicates that the opinions formed about Paul were diverse and not entirely complimentary. Some compared him to a bird picking up seeds, others to a seeker after novelty; and perhaps there was more of hostility than friendliness in their taking hold of him and bringing him before their greatest religious tribunal.

It was the greatest audience Paul had ever addressed. Before him philosophers, pedants, lecturers, and students, accustomed to discuss the loftiest themes within the horizon of human thought, and to make distinctions to which the delicate refinement of the Greek language lent itself with marvellous subtlety. Epicureans were there to taste the flow of words, and criticise the style, the choice of images, the harmony of balanced sentences. Stoics, to study the theory of life which this new theoriser, as he appeared, professed. For the whole crowd of Athenians and resident strangers were interested only in saying or hearing something new.

The address Paul gave on that occasion is quite unique. For its grace, intellectual sequence, grandeur of conception and range, stately march of eloquent words, it stands alone among the addresses recorded for us by the evangelist. It was probably the result of deep thought and prayer, or Paul had not so carefully passed it on to Luke, who was not then with him. It reveals the opulence of the Apostle's intellect and power of ready sympathy, which enabled him to adapt himself so easily to all sorts and conditions of men. We can only notice the contrasts between himself and his audience, that reveal themselves in almost every sentence. To them it was a new sensation, a shift in the kaleidoscope of religious thought; to him it was a matter of tremendous urgency, his spirit was pressed and provoked within him. They confessed their ignorance of the Unknown God, who lay behind the world and all things therein; Paul withdrew the veil and declared Him unto them. They supposed that the temples around were not unworthy of the Divine abode; he told them, as he remembered Stephen to have said years before, that nothing less than heaven's infinite dome could befit his supernal majesty, and that even this could not contain Him. They thought to propitiate the Deity with gifts; he insisted that He needed nothing at men's hands, and that their blessedness consisted in giving, not goats and calves, but broken hearts, contrite spirits, and empty, outstretched hands. They taught a dreary kind of Pantheism, as though God were no longer distinct from the matter of the world; he said that He was a Person, a Father to be sought after, as well as the atmosphere in which they lived, and moved, and had their being. It did not seem unbecoming for them to fashion the similitude of the Godhead, in gold, and silver, and stone, graven by art and man's device; but he insisted that He was a Spirit, to be worshipped in spirit and in truth. Some held the immortality of the soul, as Socrates had proclaimed it on that very spot, but they had no idea of the resurrection of the body; he, however, unhesitatingly affirmed that spirit would mate again with body, not only that there would be a literal resurrection, but that there had been one, and that a day was coming in which God would judge the world by the Man who died in mortal weakness, but whom He had raised from the dead.

The Harvest's Store.

The blade, the ear, the ear's full corn,
In sweet profusion grew,
All nurtured by the breath of heaven,
With sun, and shower, and dew;
And—as the gracious words declare—
Of Him who spake of old,
Our fields the "thirty," "sixty," bore,
And some the "hundred-fold."

We gazed upon the fruitful scene—
This miracle of power,
With which the rainbow-circled throne
Still earth delights to dower.
We gazed, and from our heart's uprose,
The joyous glad acclaim—
"Thy love, O Lord, is wonderful!
We bless, we praise Thy Name!"

Jewish Evangelical Mission.—In Newcastle-on-Tyne (8, Swinburne-place) and in Glasgow (12, Abbotsford-place) Gospel-meetings, Bible-readings, and other efforts for commending Christ to Hebrew people continue to be earnestly made by Rev. Aaron Matthews. While dividing his own time between the two cities, he superintends the labours of other workers and voluntary helpers in this Mission, upon which the Divine blessing is evidently resting, though the financial year closed with a deficit of over £200. Mrs. and Miss Matthews are testifying for the Messiah among the Jewish women; and much merciful ministry of a social kind is exercised towards needy foreigners and refugees of Israel's race. Not the least important phase of the work is quiet conversation with individuals, when the opportunity is afforded of meeting objections, removing prejudices, and pointing inquirers to the law and to the testimony.

Work in India.

Dear Sir,—I am stirred up to write to you because I am so distressed at hearing that, at Raichür, parents are driven by the pressure of famine to take their children to Hyderabad and sell them to the Mohammedans. I want to send one, who has lately been to Raichür, to fetch his starving mother from there to his home near Bangalore, and who arrived just in time at Raichür to save some children related to him from being sold; he knows the neighbourhood well, as it is his native place. I wish to send him to Raichür to gather these children, and bring them under my care, but this must depend upon the provision the Lord makes for them.

Friends in England know more about the famine than I do. I feel its effects in the very high prices of grain, for I have between eighty and ninety destitute Eurasian children in my home at Bangalore. We have been obliged to give up giving our children bread at the early morning meal, as bread is too expensive. Re-arranging the hours of the meals, we commence school an hour earlier in order to give them their midday meal an hour earlier, and they all have curry and rice twice a day. Some of them feel the want of bread or solid food in the early morning.

We have lately removed the Home to a house in a much healthier locality. It was used as a mess-house, and the mess-room provides us with a splendid prayer-house. We greatly enjoy the change to our new residence. No one was more thankful for the change than myself, for during the last twelve hot seasons (and the last was very hot indeed) I have been away from the neighbourhood of Bangalore for one month, eight days only. My income is required to meet the expenses of the Home, so that I cannot be spared from the spot.

We hope shortly to tell a wonderful story of the Lord's bounty and graciousness. Faith has been severely tried in past days, and we again and again offered to disperse the children, but the Lord does not open the way to do so. Many of them have no homes, and others have homes we are most unwilling to send them to. Poor Eurasians suffer as much, if not more than natives, for even when there is no famine they have hard times. I send very sincere thanks to you and to the readers of The Christian for their kind remembrance of this Home from time to time.—Yours very truly,

L. H. Anstey.

Miss Annie Taylor, of Tibet.

This lady is now in Scotland, conducting meetings and making arrangements for more extensive work. On Saturday last she took part in a crowded meeting held in Carrubbers Close Mission, in which missionaries and others from China, India, Australia and America also spoke. Mr. G. A. Barclay presided.

Miss Taylor gave a brief sketch of her former wanderings, and then dealt with more recent events. She showed the great obstacles that had been placed in her way, and then the remarkable favour which the Lord seemed to give her in the eyes of the people, chiefs and people alike looking upon the "frail little woman," as she styled herself, as the true friend of Tibet and the Tibetans. The recent earthquake had demolished the walls erected by the Chinese to prevent access to Tibet, and the Tibetans were determined to prevent their rebuilding. This remarkable circumstance, with numerous indications, made it clear that ere long the last closed land would be opened to the Gospel.

Puntso, Miss Taylor's faithful guide, made a touching appeal to send the Gospel into Tibet. He spoke in his own language, and was interpreted by Miss Taylor.

Mrs. Graham, of the Church of Scotland Mission at Kalimpong, which is the nearest mission to that portion of Tibet in which Miss Taylor labours, spoke in warm terms of Miss Taylor's work. She told how strong an impulse she and her husband had received from the resolute and determined work, amid loneliness and privation, which Miss Taylor carried on. People in civilised life had little idea of the privations which a cultured lady like Miss Taylor had to endure in living in such a wild country as Tibet. Rev. Mr. Wells, of Canton, Rev. Dr. Gordon, of Philadelphia, and others took part in a meeting which seemed to make a profound impression.

Miss Taylor will visit Dunoon, Rothesay, Rutherglen, and other places in Scotland.

Oxford Letter.

Oxford is enjoying ideal summer weather, and through the kindness of the presidents and fellows parochial gatherings are being held in the gardens and halls of some of the colleges. On Thursday, the annual festival in connection with the Holy Trinity branch of the Church of England Temperance Society was held at St. John's College. At the meeting which followed the gathering in the gardens, the vice-principal of Wycliffe Hall presided, and in his opening words remarked that "even if alcohol were one of God's good gifts, they as their brothers' keepers should abstain sometimes from that which was good, so as to bring greater good to somebody else. This was Christian self-denial, and was the true basis of the total abstinence side of the C.E.T.S., providing a reason why they should not stop half-way." In the course of an interesting address, Mr. V. P. Sells traced the progress of the Temperance Movement during the Queen's long reign. There was, however, much land to be possessed, for the Drink Bill was still going up, drunkenness among the poorer classes showed no signs of diminution, and among women was certainly on the increase. These facts called for increased effort for self-education regarding the work and for more persevering prayer.

Those who knew Rev. John Stone-Wigg at University College, will hear with pleasure of his appointment as the first bishop in New Guinea. For nine years he has worked in the diocese of Brisbane, Queensland, and has among other advantages that of being thoroughly acclimatised. May much blessing be with him in this new sphere.

The eighth summer meeting of university and other students commenced this week in Oxford. All parts of the United Kingdom are represented, and students, and professors have come in large numbers from the Colonies, the United States, Germany, Austria, and Norway. The inaugural meeting took place on Saturday. On Sunday morning, a crowded congregation assembled at St. Mary's to hear the Bishop of Ripon preach. The sermon, which was marked by much power, was based on Jeremiah xviii. It was a call to consider life in its meaning and its issues. We were called to be fellow-workers with God sharing in some measure his ideas, and helping to carry out his plans. On Monday, work commenced in earnest with the theological lectures by the Rev. T. B. Strong on "Alexandrianism," and "The Doctrine of the Logos," and a gathering of more than ordinary attractiveness and importance is anticipated.

Sir William Herschel, at a gathering of Foresters on Bank Holiday, spoke some weighty words on "Gambling." Referring to the charge that the principle on which benefit clubs were worked was of the nature of gambling, he said that when a man entered a benefit club he did so in the distant hope of losing. He had no desire to draw money out of the society, he did not wish to become ill or die prematurely. Moreover, the very principles of the Society bound them to support those who were less fortunate. The man, however, who gambled did so in the mean unworthy expectation of getting his brother's money and giving him nothing in return.

Protestant Institute, Edinburgh.—This Institute was founded in 1860 for the promotion of Protestant truth and the exposure of Romanism by means chiefly of courses of lectures to university students and others in Edinburgh and Glasgow during the winter months. The well-known Rev. Dr. Wylie was Professor in the Institute for about thirty years, and on his death the directors resolved to make it a lectureship, tenable for two or four years. Accordingly the chair has been occupied since that date by Rev. James Paton, Established Church, Glasgow, and Professor James Orr, United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh. For the next two sessions the lectureship will be held by Rev. C. A. Salmond, Free Church, Morningside, Edinburgh. The classes are open free to all, and at the close of the session which lasts from November till March, valuable prizes in money and books are awarded to successful competitors in written examinations on the lectures delivered. Prizes are also occasionally offered for essays on subjects described. For information as to the classes, etc., application may be made to Rev. J. Sturrock, secretary and treasurer, 17, George IV. Bridge, Edinburgh.

The Lambeth Encyclical.

THE fourth Lambeth Conference, attended by nearly two hundred bishops in communion with the Church of England, closed with the consideration of an Encyclical Letter, which has since been published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. The Letter begins with questions affecting moral conduct—Temperance, Purity, and the Sanctity of Marriage. Passing on, it deals with Industrial Problems and commends International Arbitration. On all these subjects the pronouncement, though necessarily brief, is clear and to the point.

Ecclesiastical questions come next, and include a statement on the Critical Study of the Bible and the Encouragement of Theological Study, with special reference to the colonies and dependencies of Great Britain. As to the first, some judicious words are given. Premising that "the critical study of the Bible by competent scholars is essential to the maintenance in the Church of a healthy faith," it proceeds: "A faith which is always or often attended by a secret fear that we dare not inquire, lest inquiry should lead us to results inconsistent with what we believe, is already infected with a disease which may soon destroy it."

Then comes a note of timely warning: "But all inquiry is attended with a danger on the other side, unless it be protected by the guard of reverence, confidence, and patience. The central object of Christian faith must always be the Lord Jesus Christ Himself. The test which St. Paul gives of the possession of the Holy Spirit is the being able to say that Jesus is the Lord. If a man can say with his whole heart and soul that Jesus is the Lord, he stands on a rock which nothing can shake. Read in the light of this conviction, the Bible, beginning with man made in the image of God, and rising with ever-increasing clearness of revelation to God taking on Him the form of man, and throughout it all showing in every page the sense of the Divine presence inspiring what is said, will not fail to exert its power over the souls of men till the Lord comes again. This power will never really be affected by any critical study whatever."

On the subject of Theological Study, the Encyclical says:—"The great means provided by God for instructing the conscience of the human race is the Bible; and for interpreting the Bible, next after the Bible itself, the study of the writings and practices of the primitive Church is of paramount importance. We cannot use these instruments with effect unless we have a thorough knowledge of both. We, therefore, earnestly commend to all Christian people, and especially to those who are connected by commercial or other relations with the colonies, the duty of aiding and establishing colleges and scholarships for the instruction of colonial students in theology."

Coming to external relations, we read:—"The Archbishop of Canterbury has been requested to appoint committees to look into the position of the Unitas Fratrum and the Scandinavian Church, with both of which we desire to cultivate the most friendly possible relations. We recommend also that every opportunity be taken to emphasise the Divine purpose of visible unity amongst Christians as a fact of revelation."

The longest and most important section of the Letter comes last, and it refers to foreign missions. We make brief extracts:—"The Book of Common Prayer contains very few prayers for missionary work. It hardly seems to have been present to the minds of our great authorities and leaders in compiling that book, that the matter should be in the thoughts of everyone who calls himself a Christian, and that no ordinary service should be considered complete which did not plead, amongst other things, for the spread of the Gospel. We are beginning, though only beginning, to see what the Lord would have us do. He is opening the whole world to our easy access, and as He opens the way He is opening our eyes to see it, and to see his beckoning hand.

"In preaching the Gospel to the world we have to deal with one great religious body, which holds the truth in part but not in its fulness, the Jews; with another which holds fragments of the truth embedded in a mass of falsehood, the Mohammedans; and with various races which hold inherited beliefs ranging down to the merest fetishism. In dealing with all these it is certainly right to recognise whatsoever good they may contain. But it is necessary to be cautious lest that good, such as it is, be so exaggerated as to lead us to allow that any purified form of any one of them can ever be in any sense a substitute for the Gospel. The Gospel is not merely the revelation of the highest morality; it reveals also the wonderful love of God in Christ, and contains the promise of that grace given by Him by which alone the highest moral life is possible to man. And without the promise of that grace it would not be the Gospel at all."

Speaking of native churches, the Letter says:—"It is of real importance to impress the converts from the first with a sense that the Church is their own and not a foreign Church, and for that purpose to give them some share in the local management and the financial support of the body which they have joined. But before it is justifiable to give them independent action it is necessary to wait until they have acquired that sense of duty which is needed to keep them in the right way. They must have learned to realise the high moral standard of the Gospel in their ordinary lives, and they must have learned to fulfil the universal duty of maintaining their own ministry. Nothing ought to be laid on them but what is of the essence of the faith or belongs to the due order of the catholic church, but they should be perpetually impressed with the necessity of holding the catholic faith in its integrity and maintaining their unity with the catholic body."

The resolutions adopted by the Conference, as given in last week's Record, cover a wide field, in many cases embodying sentiments expressed in the Letter.

Summer in the City.

Summer is here in the crowded slums and dwellings of the poor. The fierce glare beats pitilessly down into narrow courts and family rooms. Men and women pursue their daily toil for a living, and stifle the craving for a breath of God's pure air. The children swarm at the street corners, on the doorsteps, in every court and alley, making the hot air resonant with shrieks and cries as they indulge in their rough games and rougher quarrelling.

In her attic the invalid turns restlessly on her pallet, scarcely able to endure the torture of the long glaring day, till the summer night slowly folds its wings over the great city. Yet unrefreshing and intermittent is the sleep that visits the denizens of such dwellings.

Yes, summer is here. Gladly we welcome it. Fain would we stay its rapid progress, but alas for the thousands to whom it brings no relaxation from grinding care, no brief holiday from toil of the most unremunerative and exhausting kind! Our hearts are with them day by day, and if we had it in our power each should learn by experience the delight and refreshment to be found in some beautiful, unspoiled corner of God's world, so near at hand, and yet out of reach to the majority of our poor. Will our friends help us to send some of our sick poor for a few days into the country before the summer is past?

Grace Before Meat.

O Lord, I feel how much I need
Thy precious grace my soul to feed.
Then help me, while I eat and drink,
Upon thy wondrous love to think.
And as I hunger for the bread
Which now upon the board is spread,
So may my spirit hungry be
To get the living bread from Thee.

Clifton Conference.—The thirty-fifth annual conference will be held at Victoria-rooms, Clifton, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, Oct. 5 to 7. The subject will be "The Eternal Inheritance," and there will be two sessions each day. The first day's addresses will be on the inheritance promised (Heb. ix. 15); the second, on the heirs and their title to the inheritance certified (James ii. 5; Col. i. 12); and the third, on the inheritance possessed (Matt. xxv. 34). All communications regarding the conference should be addressed to the convener, Rev. James Ormiston, 3, Berkeley-square, Clifton, Bristol.

Young Women at Northfield.

A CORRESPONDENT of The Central Presbyterian, writing from Northfield on July 21, says:—

After ten days of privilege at Northfield, the Annual Y.W.C.A. Conference closed its sessions at the evening meeting held in the Auditorium night before last. Yesterday they were busy getting off, and to-day we have the first day of a week of comparative quiet. We reached here in time to get the benefit of the last four days of this Conference, and note a few of the speakers who impressed us.

Of course, the leading spirit was Mr. Moody himself. He will never grow too old to cease to be energetic. As long as he breathes he will "make things go," and he may be seen at almost any hour driving about in his buggy looking after this, that, and the other thing, and keeping things generally stirred up. Last Sabbath he gave his sermon on "Assurance" at the morning service in the Congregational church, and he gave a good talk to the young women on the "Baptism of the Spirit" in the Auditorium. One remarkable thing about him is that he uses the same sermons scores and hundreds of times, and always has big audiences to hear them; he never feels the necessity for reaching to the ends of the earth for something "taking," or that will entertain his audience merely. The secret of it is that it is simply the Word of God preached in simplicity and prayerfulness, and that will always draw men.

Another speaker is Mr. Charles T. Studd, of England. He gave his life-testimony one afternoon at a missionary meeting, and magnified the grace and power of God. The thing that made his words so powerful was the fact that he was not advocating a theory or dogmatising, but he was telling the simple story of what God has done in his life and through him by the indwelling of his Spirit, and exemplified what He is able and yearning to do for every soul completely yielded up to Him. He gave an excellent Bible talk one afternoon upon "Consecration," and used many Bible instances in it. The simplicity and directness and utter self-unconsciousness of the man made a deep impression upon his hearers, and the beauty of that wholly-yielded life will be a ceaseless inspiration to others far and wide.

While we have been reared to discountenance a woman's speaking in public, we have no hesitancy in saying that two or three of the finest efforts we have ever heard at Northfield were given by two women at this Conference. Two talks were given by Mrs. John R. Mott, who, in company with her husband, has recently completed a world tour in the interests of the World's Student Federation, visiting many lands. She spoke on "Glimpses into Woman's Work in Heathen Lands." From her opening sentence she captivated and held the attention, while with chaste and fluent words she vividly depicted what she had witnessed with her own eyes in Ceylon, India, China, and elsewhere. At one of the sunset meetings on Round Top she gave a very sweet Bible talk on Psalm xxiii. in connection with John x., illustrating from an interview she and her husband had had in Palestine, between Jerusalem and Jericho, with one of those Eastern shepherds. She suggested some beautiful thoughts.

The other woman was Miss Effie K. Price, who holds a very prominent position in work among young women. She is a woman of extraordinary qualifications, and has a gentle, persuasive, yet firm dignity, and impresses her personality upon those with whom she comes into touch. She is a young woman of mature character and clear discrimination, and gave us a very fine address on Round Top, using as her theme, "The Liberty of Law"—the liberty of the life perfectly conformed to the law of Jesus Christ. And she gave a very direct talk to the young women on the last afternoon of the Conference on "Home," telling that the most of them were doubtless called to the more quiet and unostentatious spheres of service, and that we all need to pray as a timid little boy did after hearing his mother tell the story of a great general: "O God, make me a great general, help me to conquer in little things, and give me the Holy Spirit."

The next Conference for Christian workers in general will begin just a week from to-day, and we are anticipating a time of great refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, August 15.

"The shepherds are become brutish, and have not sought the Lord, therefore they have not prospered, and all their flocks are scattered."—Jer. x. 21.

THIS is a very solemn indictment, but the pity of it is that it is true of too many shepherds of flocks in our own land. We must avoid generalising too widely, but, on the whole, it is incontestable that a dwindling flock and waning cause point to prayerlessness perhaps on the part of all the members, but almost certainly on the part of the shepherd himself. And it becomes us to search our hearts to see how far our prayerlessness may not be hindering the work of God in our own church.

One of the most solemn sermons ever addressed to ministers is that of Dr. Binney's on this text, and he shows that the correlative must also be true, and that where we seek the Lord we shall prosper, our work shall become successful, and our flock increased. The old Latin motto said that to pray is to labour, and some of the best work in the world has been done by simple prayer. You may be labouring quite as effectively when you are shut within your closet doors as when going to and fro in the world in active Christian endeavour. Let us ponder and practise the five simple rules given by our venerable brother, George Müller:—(1) Not for our own worthiness. (2) Solely through Christ's merits, on the ground of his cross and resurrection. (3) For the glory of God. (4) No sin must be allowed, since this absolutely bars blessing. (5) Be patient: glorify God by waiting on Him.

MONDAY, August 16.

"Then answered I, and said, Amen, O Lord."—Jer. xi. 5.

When God recapitulated his promises in the heart of Jeremiah, even though they involved a curse on those who neutralised his words, there arose from it a deep response. He answered and said, Amen, O Lord. What a noble example for us all. By life and lip, by deed and word, when we can understand and when we can't, when the words are illuminated with blue and gold, when they are as black as the old black-lettered missals, always and everywhere, let us answer, and say, Amen, O Lord.

It is an awful thing to read this context, and to remark the sentence to which Jeremiah said Amen. "Cursed be the man that heareth not the words of this covenant." May we, should we, infer that the saints will one day acquiesce in God's verdict on the disobedient and ungodly? It may be that we shall be so fully convinced of the mercy of God, which sought the salvation of the lost, and shall see so clearly all the many efforts He made for their arrest, that we shall solemnly and sadly answer and say, Amen, O Lord, to their doom.

But if these words should be read by one who is resisting and disbelieving the love of God that would fain lead him into the land that floweth with milk and honey, let him beware. His sinful refusal to be saved, his strife against the mercy of God, will one day be so patent that his dearest friend will answer and say, Amen, O Lord.

TUESDAY, August 17.

"Righteous art Thou, O Lord, when I plead with Thee: yet would I reason with Thee; wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper?"—Jer. xii. 1.

God gave us our reason, and means us to use it. He appeals to it when He says, Come and let us reason together. There are many things in the Bible which are above our reason, but nothing contrary to it. The things which are hard to be understood only point us to laws in the spiritual world of which we know but little. We are like the children in the infant class who are gathering facts about which to reason some day, but whose reasoning faculties are very immature. God likes us to reason out things with Him. Job, Moses, Asaph, and Jeremiah, did this. They were all puzzled over the same question of the prosperity of wicked men. The only thing that we must not doubt is the righteousness and faithfulness of God. These are foundation facts that lie at the foundation of his throne. They are the jewels of his character. His children cannot question them. They always say, as they begin their argument, Surely the Judge of all the earth must do right, righteous art Thou. But there is always reasonableness in asking God how certain things are consistent with his character.

WEDNESDAY, August 18.

"That they might be unto Me for a people, and for a name, and for a glory: but they would not hear."—Jer. xiii. 11.

Israel had the opportunity of becoming a people, a name, and a glory, but they would not. Then in their declension and refusal God has turned to the Church, largely chosen from among the Gentiles, and in which we of his grace have a part. To us their privileges are offered. Let us gladly avail ourselves of them, and become unto God the people of his inheritance, in whom He may find a welcome and a home. Oh to be a name to Him, so that men may understand and revere Him the better because of what we are! Oh to be a glory to Him, so that He may account us as his choice ornament and jewel! Oh to be as intimately united to Him as the girdle worn on the prophet's loins!

Our hearts misgive us as we write or read. How can such things be? Behold, like that same girdle we have become marred and profitless. Yet, there is one phrase here which is radiant with hope: "As the girdle cleaveth . . . so have I caused to cleave." "Caused to cleave," we are not able to cleave, but we are more than anxious, we are willing that God should cause us to cleave. Cause us to cleave, O God, cause us to walk in thy ways, cause us to do thy will, cause us to be a people, a name, and a glory unto thyself.

THURSDAY, August 19.

"Why shouldest Thou be as a man astonied, as a mighty man that cannot save? Yet Thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us, and we are called by thy name: leave us not."—Jer. xiv. 9.

A strong man may be rendered powerless by a reel of cotton being wound around him. Each thread so brittle, but all together is irresistible. So a large number of inconsistencies and insincerities may make God powerless to help you, or others to you. He may be in the midst of you, and you may be called by his name, and great issues for his kingdom and glory may seem at stake, and yet He may be as a mighty man that cannot save.

There is might enough in God to save the weakest and sinfullest of his children, and He may have become at regeneration an inmate of the soul, and yet you may be unsaved because of the limitations you have placed upon Him. First, you are not absolutely willing to be delivered from your sins. But this He will give if you will have it. Secondly, you do not entirely believe in his power and will, you have not said, If thou wilt thou canst, and since thou canst thou wilt. Thirdly, you have not definitely handed the whole matter over to Him. Then like Samson breaking from the green withes, He would mightily succour and deliver you.

FRIDAY, August 20.

"Thus saith the Lord: If thou return, then will I bring thee again, that thou mayest stand before Me: and if thou take forth the precious from the vile, thou shalt be as my mouth."—Jer. xv. 19.

What a promise for backsliders is this! Here is a soul that had gone away from God's presence, and had ceased to be as his mouth. How long it had been in this castaway condition we need not inquire. It is enough to know that it had dipped beneath the horizon, and been permitted to know the bitter anguish of seeing others do its chosen work. Have you known this? Then these words were written for you, eat them, and let them be unto you the joy and rejoicing of your heart.

Will you return to God? Do you want it to be as in the old time? Tell Him so, and He will bring you again. It will not take Him a second's space to restore you to where you were wont to stand. Dare to believe that you are there again, forgiven, cleansed, sanctified. Live there. Go no more out for ever.

Will you leave what is vile, unworthy, and unholy, casting it away as so much dross, and take forth only the gold, silver, and precious stones of a holy character; then God will make you his mouth, through which He will speak to saint and sinner? Is not this worth any cost to you?

SATURDAY, August 21.

"O Lord, my strength, O my stronghold, O my refuge in the day of affliction."—Jer. xvi. 19.

One of the Puritans was accustomed to describe prayer as the flight of the lonely man to the only God. There is such prayer here. This man is very lonely. He is like a speckled bird, set on by all the birds of the flock. He looks right and left, but there is no man to care for his soul, then he addresses himself to God in these touching words.

My strength. The Psalmist spoke of God as the strength of his life. The Apostle of Love said that little children could overcome the world, because He that was in them was greater than he that was in the world. God is our strength, not only because He helps us from without, but because He is within.

My stronghold. A stronghold is what holds strongly. A keep is that which keeps. We keep God's deposit, which is his Gospel: God keeps our deposit, which is ourselves. And Satan can never steal us away.

My refuge in the day of affliction. The night darkening the sky drives the chicks to the hen's wings, so affliction drives us to God. Under his wings do we take refuge until calamities be overpast.

Weary soul, dare to say, my, and take God to be all this for thyself.

Rev. Daniel Bliss, D.D., of Beirut, Syria.

As Absalom did, but in widely different ways, Dr. Bliss has "in his lifetime taken and reared up for himself" a memorial pile in the remarkable theological institution with which his name must be inseparably connected. From the first he has been its president, and as such we have the pleasure of presenting his photograph to our readers.

Dr. Bliss was born in Vermont, U.S.A., in 1823. Whilst he was yet young, his parents removed to Ohio, and here it was that he received his early education. Entering Amherst College, Mass., in 1848, in 1864 the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him by the same college. Having completed his course as a student, Dr. Bliss was ordained in 1855, and in November of the same year he and Mrs. Bliss sailed from Boston for Syria, as they had been appointed missionaries of the A.B.C.F.M. The voyage, accomplished in a small sailing vessel, proved a perilous one, but they landed safely in Beirût in February, 1856.

It was about this time that the need of facilities for higher education in connection with missionary work was beginning to be very strongly felt in Syria, and into this movement Dr. Bliss threw himself so earnestly that he was asked by his colleagues in 1862 to go to America with the object of raising funds for the establishment and support of an Evangelical college in connection with the Syrian Mission. This journey was undertaken, and although the tour was made at the darkest period of the American Civil War, it was a tour entirely successful. A charter was secured for the new institution under the laws of the State of New York, and an efficient board of trustees was organised. On his way back to Syria, Dr. Bliss visited Great Britain, and there, supported by the influence and recommendations of the Earl of Shaftesbury, Dr. Bonar, Dr. Dale, and others, an additional sum of about £4000 was raised for his scheme.

From the time of his return to Syria in 1866 the story of his life is essentially the history of the Syrian Protestant College. As its first and only president, his time and energies have been freely spent in its advancement and development. Every step has been taken under his guidance and leadership; nor must it be forgotten how many and varied are the problems which have had to be dealt with in connection with the carrying on of such an institution in mission lands. The College was opened in 1866, in hired premises, with an attendance of only sixteen; the medical department was added the following year, and opened with fourteen students. About thirty acres of land were secured and purchased, to the west of the city of Beirût, on a bluff overlooking the sea, and with a fine view of the summits and slopes of Mount Lebanon. The College buildings which now occupy this conspicuous and interesting site are no less than seven, and even these are insufficient; at the present time further extension is necessary, owing to the overcrowding of the dormitories.

From this it will be seen how steadily, if slowly, the work has grown; and a glance at the illustrated handbook is sufficient to indicate the magnitude and comprehensiveness of the enterprise. Here are photographs, not only of the main building, but of the Medical Hall, the Assembly Hall, the Ada Dodge Memorial Hall, the Observatory, Chemical Laboratory, Surgical Museum, Library, Herbarium, Archæological Museum, etc., in addition to the President's House and the Johanniter Hospital (which is under the medical and surgical care of the medical faculty of the college).

The number of students has now reached 308, as compared with sixty-six in 1872. Almost all the religions and sects of the Levant are represented amongst these students, who are indeed drawn from all parts of Asiatic Turkey, especially from Syria, and from Egypt, Cyprus, and the Greek Islands.

The course of study in the Preparatory Department alone covers four years, and there are three departments—the Preparatory, the Collegiate, and the Medical; the system is, therefore, very thorough.

Though entirely unsectarian, the College is distinctly Christian in tone and principle. Its attitude was well defined by Dr. Bliss himself in his address at the laying of the corner-stone of the main College building in 1891, when he said:—

This College is designed for all classes. A heathen, a Mohammedan, a Jew, a Christian of any sect may enter, enjoy all its privileges, go out after a term of years, and continue to be a heathen, a Mohammedan, a Jew, or a Christian, as he entered; but he will not leave without knowing fully what we believe to be the divinely-revealed religion of Jesus Christ.

In accordance with these principles, every student is required to attend the religious exercises and instructions of the College; none are received on any other basis. About 1500 students have been received into the College altogether. Many of these, who have graduated in medicine, pharmacy, or the arts, are engaged, or have been engaged, in direct missionary work, under the supervision of the Church Missionary Society in Palestine, the Syria Mission of the American Presbyterian Church, the Free Church of Scotland Mission to the Jews, and other societies; whilst the other graduates, almost without exception, and ordinary students as well, occupy positions of honour and influence in the communities in which they live. The large number of graduates in the Medical Department strikes us as being particularly significant and encouraging. It may be noticed that the library of the College contains over 8000 volumes, and it is to be greatly increased.

Dr. and Mrs. Bliss are still actively engaged in this their life-work of spreading, through this institution, sound learning in science and philosophy, and, above all and by means of all, they are seeking to make known the surpassingly glorious truths of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Their son, Mr. Frederick Jones Bliss, Ph.D., is well known in connection with his work in Jerusalem for the "Palestine Exploration Fund."

It will be of special interest, in connection with our current portrait and sketch, to quote from Mr. J. R. Mott's new book, "Strategic Points in the World's Conquest" (Nisbet & Co. 3s. 6d.), what he says respecting the work over which Dr. Bliss presides:—

"The Syrian Protestant College is one of the three most important institutions in Turkey. In fact, there is no college which has, within one generation, accomplished a greater work, and which to-day has a larger opportunity. It has practically created the medical profession in the Levant. It has been the most influential factor in promoting popular education in Syria and other parts of the East. It has been, and is, the centre for genuine Christian and scientific literature and learning in all that region. Fully one-fourth of the graduates of the collegiate department have entered Christian work, either as preachers or as teachers in Christian schools. Surely the men who by their foresight and generosity laid the foundations of this college and brought it to its present position have been divinely guided....

"The mission schools of the Levant, and more especially the Syrian Protestant College (and one other college in Egypt) are laying a great mine underneath the system of Mohammedanism. When that most formidable structure is completely shattered, it will be as a direct result of Christ's truth and power working through these educational institutions. Already the educated young men are beginning to break away from the traditions and superstitions of Islam, and of the corrupt Eastern churches. The commercial spirit is strong among the young men of the Levant, especially among the Syrians. Dr. Daniel Bliss says that within the last generation 60,000 young Syrians have emigrated to America, Africa, and Australia. If this spirit of commercial enterprise and daring can, by the power of vital Christianity, be transformed into the true missionary spirit, the Syrians will yet become most effective ambassadors of Christ to the tens of millions of Arabic-speaking peoples who throng the lands from China to Central Africa. Is it not a striking fact that the land to which America and Western Europe are indebted for the Bible and all its enlightening and civilising influences, is to-day looking to them for the Bible and those same influences? What more inspiring or important work can there be than that of rekindling along the shores of the Great Sea, and in the regions that lie beyond, the fires first lighted by Christ and his apostles?"

The Congress of Jews who wish to go to Palestine and form a Jewish state, in connection with what is called the Zionisten movement, is to meet on Aug 29-31 at Basel, not at Munich as first announced. Mr. Rudolf Reich, bookseller, Freiestrasse, Basel, will be able to furnish particulars to English travellers.

Miss Marsh's Convalescent Hospital, Blackrock, Brighton, is an institution for persons recovering from illness who require change of air and rest. The usual term of residence is three weeks. The medical certificate must be signed before any patient can be admitted, and no patient can be received without a good recommendation. Patients are not given special diet. Annual subscribers of two guineas are entitled to recommend two in-patients for three weeks at a charge of 3s. each per week. Non-subscribers can obtain a patient's admittance on payment of 10s. per week. No children can be admitted under fourteen years of age.

Personal Soul-Winning.*

TO-DAY has been set apart for the solemn consideration of a question which has been uppermost in the thoughts of many of us, and must have presented itself to the minds of all. Are we, as Christians and as individuals, at all doing what we should in the way of leading others to Christ? Why are there so few conversions? It is a question that has been borne in on me with increasing force as I have gone from college to college, finding everywhere Christian men, a Christian Union, meetings, organisation, Christian activity of all kinds. Over and over again I have asked myself, "What is the net result of all this life, activity, and organisation? the casting down in each college of the kingdom of Satan, and of this world, and the setting up of Christ as King; the leading of men out of darkness into light, from death to life?" And I have felt with conviction of unspeakable intensity that things are very far from what they ought to be in this matter—that we are verily guilty before God.

What are the facts? That whilst there are now Christian Unions in almost every university and college of importance in the three kingdoms, they are in almost every case but a mere handful of the whole, in many places one would say an inconsiderable and insignificant handful. They might be God's Gideons; but are they? The hastiest glance shows that nine-tenths of the student population of this country are quite outside our Christian Unions; in every college whole masses of men and women are utterly untouched by their influence. And yet our Union aims at being an aggressive spiritual force throughout the colleges, at

TOUCHING EVERY TYPE OF MAN.

Here is room, indeed, for humiliation before God. Let God Himself speak to us this morning and teach us the causes of our failure.

But we shall come lower still. I should be the last to depreciate the good our C.U.'s are doing—splendid work, for which to thank God, in deepening and strengthening the lives of Christian men. But what about our chief work, the leading of sinners to God? For is it not part—nay, the chief part—of our mission, to be winning men for Christ? Would we know what our true mission is? Let us come to our Master, our great example, and hear Him as He tells us of his mission. "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" (his first recorded words after He had come to earth). And wherefore did He come? "To seek and to save that which was lost"; "to call sinners to repentance"; "that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly"; "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also must I bring"; "Let us go into the next towns that I may preach there also; for therefore am I sent." No more passive stopping where we are, and idly waiting for something to turn up; but an active going-forth to preach, to bring, to save, to compel them to come in. "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me and to finish his work." Thus by his action He showed that He intended that work to be the leading of a poor sinful woman to the knowledge of Himself, and that at a time when He might well have pleaded that He needed rest, for we read that He was wearied with his journey.

Would we have something more explicit still? Then how does He Himself describe his mission at the Galilean crisis, applying to Himself the great key passage of Messianic prophecy? "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because He hath anointed Me to preach the Gospel to the poor; He hath sent Me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." Such was his mission. Over and over again He reiterated it—

"TO SEEK AND TO SAVE."

And what is ours? Listen. He is praying to his Father at the close of his life's ministry, "As Thou didst send me into the world, even so sent I them into the world." And again, when in the upper room, on the Resurrection evening, ere He leaves this world, He gives the Twelve their great commission, "As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." And yet again, on the mountain top, his parting words, "Ye shall receive power when the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be my witnesses. Preach the Gospel to every creature." That includes the men in our own college. Have we done it? "As my Father has sent Me, even so I send you." Then if we would fulfil our mission we must, like Him, be ceaselessly, untiringly, seeking the salvation of those about us; always whenever we come in contact with another soul trying to lead that soul nearer Christ. We are saved to save. We shall

NEVER BE OFF DUTY.

As to results? We are to sow; God gives the increase. Are we sowing? It is not the problem of unproductive labour with which we are concerned, so much as the problem of no labour at all. How many men have you and I seriously and definitely endeavoured to lead to Christ during the past year? God works through human instruments. How shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard, and how shall they hear without a preacher? Yet I know no Scripture that warrants us in supposing we are always to be fishing and never catching; always using the Word of God and never finding it the power of God unto salvation.

Does not one cause of our failure in soul-winning lie here, that we have never really tried what is the efficacy of God's Word with the unconverted men around us? Does someone quote the case of George Bowen and of many another pioneer missionary working for years and never seeing outward fruit? But if we read the record of their lives, what do we find? One long story of untiring devotion, of intense earnestness, ceaselessly praying and working for the conversion of the heathen around them. We read of David Brainerd sweating great drops as, in mid-winter, kneeling by his bedside, he agonised in prayer for the salvation of those about him. Have we known such intensity as that? I remember well how in Oxford, when talking to a friend of the apparent futility of all my efforts for the conversion of men in my own college, he remarked, thinking to comfort me, "Well, your prayers for them are heard, and shall surely have an answer." He could not have made a remark more crushing. I do not think at that time I had ever spent one half-hour in prayer with God for them; and yet I had been honestly persuading myself that I was in earnest in seeking their salvation. Do we know aught of the spirit of Paul when he wrote, "My little children, of whom I travail in birth till Christ be formed in you"; "I am debtor both to Greek and to barbarian"; "For necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is me if I preach not the Gospel"? Or of Jeremiah, who could write, "If I say, I will not make mention of Him, nor speak any more in his name, then is mine heart as it were a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I am weary with forbearing and I cannot contain"?

How is it that we can pass a week, or even a whole month, and never speak a word for Christ to a fellow-man, or make one real effort to lead a fellow-student to Christ? How is it that we can have in the circle of our intimate friends some who we know are on the wrong road, under the wrath of God, of whom we feel that were they taken now they would be without hope, because without Christ in the world—men with whom we can talk freely on every other subject, and yet never speak a word to save them; never open our lips to them of the interests we profess to have next our heart; of Him whom we profess to love above all else?

Perhaps the mouths of some of us are locked by fear or by false shame. "He that feareth is not made perfect in love. Perfect love casteth out fear." "Whosoever shall be ashamed of Me and of my words, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed." I need not dwell more on this. Or it may be our tongues are tied by inconsistency of life. Our lives give the lie to our lips. We feel we are not a good advertisement of the religion we profess. We feel we shall not commend the Gospel that we preach. How often, when we would have spoken to another, have our lips been sealed by some flaw, some little inconsistency of which we have just been guilty. Of this, too, the cure is not far to seek: "Let him that nameth the name of the Lord depart from iniquity"; "Be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord."

The Keswick Convention.

Ladies' Meetings.

[By a special correspondent.]

Disappointments are veiled love's appointments;
Angels of rescue travelling in disguise.

It was with a thought like the above with which we received word that Mrs. Bannister would not be able to be present again this year. It was truly by God's appointment that she was unable to come; and had we not learned enough yet of the love which is perhaps working its deepest when it is "veiled," to rest fully assured that when He makes any gap, it is for a fresh unfolding of his resources? And He had provided very richly; for his beloved servant, Mrs. M. Baxter, was able to hear his call in the invitation which reached her to take part. Then there was also Mrs. Constantine, freshly returned from India, where for the previous eighteen months she had been enabled to cheer and quicken many by pointing to the untouched fulness in Christ.

The meetings were not only very full, but closely packed, and a hush of expectation was over them; for it has come to be generally understood that these meetings are not meant to be times for long addresses, but for a gathering together before God, and to take part together in being ready for his will. In the following sketch, the space given to what was said may seem to be larger than that given to prayer, but that is only because we can reproduce to some extent what was spoken, but we cannot what was prayed.

At the opening meeting of

TUESDAY,

Mrs. Tottenham and Mrs. Hatt Noble began with prayer, and Miss Nugent mentioned the absence of Mrs. Bannister. Instead of giving any words of her own, she gave an outline from another deeply missed messenger, the Rev. C. A. Fox, also kept away this year by God's appointment. It was from Psa. xli., and followed the brief particles of the Psalm thus:—

I. The urgency of soul thirst. "As the heart panteth" (v. 1). Did that describe ours? So urgent that it compelled the timid deer from its safety to dare any danger in order to find water.

II. The intensity of the need of keeping our appointment with God. "When shall I come?" (v. 2). He is sovereign: it is He who makes the appointments, but our attitude should be, "When shall I come?"

III. The challenge of the world. "Where is thy God?" (v. 3). Do our lives compel the world to ask this?

IV. The expostulation between faith and doubt. "Why art thou cast down?" (v. 5). It is a good thing to question your own soul, but there is a better thing better—to question God, as we dare to say unto God, 'Why?'" and to leave it all into his hands.

V. Praise. The yet of Praise (v. 9), and of Health (v. 11).

VI. Victory. "Therefore we will remember" (v. 6). Why are these particular words? Because they were the extremity of Jordan, the land; for, wherever you are, however far away you are, however much on the outskirts, you will find Him. "In his hand are all the corners of the earth." And where God is, you become ennobled by his presence, and enriched by the desert.

Mention had been made of our Keswick missionaries, now numbering fifteen, and prayer specially offered for them, our own representatives, in desert and darkness, while we enjoyed here the feast of fat things.

Mrs. M. Baxter then followed, speaking of the purpose of the meetings, quoting from a letter written to her, that they were meant for "facing God." She took up that expression, and showed the solemnity of it and what it meant, by what it meant to Isaiah, "I am undone"; to Job, "I abhor myself"; to Ezekiel, "I fell upon my face"; to Moses, "he hid his face"; to Daniel, "my comeliness was turned to corruption." Are we ready for such a result; for real "facing of God" does lead to this. This line was further followed by allusion to Dr. Moule's opening address in the tent the evening before, which had so deeply penetrated, "Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus." God had revealed it to us as a possibility—as a thing which can be done. Satan says, "No, it cannot be done"; and we think it cannot be done when we fail ourselves, or see others fail, in carrying it out.

But if we believe in the life of Jesus being received in us, it can be done. For there was never a moment in his earthly life in which He failed in letting his Father live out his life and his will in Him. "As my Father has taught Me, so I speak," etc., etc. He never thought of what was due to Him, either from men, from circumstances, or from angels. And it is possible for us, if we receive his life. But it is terrible if we say we are crucified with Him, and then resent being treated as He was. May He deliver us from the flimsy sentimentality of such, and teach us its reality. The reason of our failure in living this life is because we do not love the things which test us, and which He sends as a grindstone to sharpen us. When God has taken us in hand to conform us to the image of his Son, He will carry it through. He will not break down, although we do.

Very much prayer followed, not only for personal help, but for the conversion of beloved ones, as though it were felt that He were too near to be only pleaded with about oneself.

WEDNESDAY.

Mrs. Baxter opened with prayer, followed by Mrs. W. K. Campbell, and then Mrs. Constantine spoke. Her subject was, "The rooting of the life." She read John xv., remarking how intense our desire was for fruit that should "remain." Why was blessing, received surely and truly from the Lord, ever "lost"? It was because more attention was paid to the upper growth than to the lower. And yet no upper growth could last if the root were not nourished. God dwells on it again and again, linking the root with the fruit. "He shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root; Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit." "My root was spread out by the waters, and the dew lay all night upon my branch." Isa. xxvii. 5, Job. xxix. 19, and Psa. xcii. 12-14, Jer. xvii. 8. The words used here, "spreadeth out," imply rest and time. Are we giving that care to our life?

The deep life is the only one that cannot be shaken. If we root deep in Him, we shall be like ships in an earthquake: the anchor chain may quiver, but the anchor holds firm.

Mrs. Constantine then led in prayer, and num- lowed in the brief swift petitions which reveal a point of need has been touched. It int of need which was much dwelt on Convention, both in tent and hall, and thering was like an outlet for the sense h had been quickened.

enham gave a parting word on the three s of God given in 1 Sam. xv. 29. He th of Israel, so how can He fail? He ty of Israel, so how can he pause? He ry of Israel, so how can He be defeated n to be all such to us, our part has to be and full agreement to any cross He lays when it comes through others.

THURSDAY

that we were more than half through l seemed to add to the hush that fell fter time, that we might miss nothing to say. Both in hymn and prayer the thought of Him as the "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty," was pressed. Mrs. A. Head and Miss Bradshaw led, and then Miss Nugent pointed out briefly the four times in Revelation where the words occur, "I was in the Spirit."

First, in ch. i. 10, "In the Spirit" John heard Jesus; he saw Him (as Stephen did, who "being full . . . looked up . . . and saw Jesus"); he fell at his feet—the true way to die! He felt—felt the touch of his hand, and then he was given a commission, "Write the things which thou hast heard."

Second, in Rev. iv. 2, "In the Spirit" John saw Him as King: he saw Him enthroned. And when we see Jesus enthroned we shall know that nothing is impossible to Him.

Third, Rev. xxvii. 3, the climax of sin. We see what sin can become, and therefore dread its seeds and beginnings, and cannot say, "It is of no consequence," of the smallest deviation from his holy law and will.

Fourth, Rev. xii. 10, "The great city, the Holy Jerusalem." "In the Spirit" we are shown what things God hath prepared for them that love Him.

After prayer by Lady Carbery, Mrs. Baxter followed with heart-stirring words on Isa. lxvi. 2 and lviii. 6, along with James i. 22. She spoke of the trembling at his Word, and the looking deeply into it. And then very searching and convicting words, such as "If the world is not seeing that his Word has power to transform us, to have it on our lips is only spreading an atmosphere of unreality and unbelief around us."

Again a wave of prayer flowed over our little gathering, with the holding sense that it was "a time when Thou mayest be found!"

FRIDAY

can hardly be described. As the closing day, the last day of the feast, it had been very specially committed to Him. After prayer, we sang the hymn which leaves nothing for ourselves, No. 444:—

My life is thine, Lord Jesus,
Bought with thy blood divine,
And given to Thee with gladness,
No longer mine, but Thine.

Many there could freshly say it, finding out now also that when we say, "My life is Thine," it includes "My body, my house—yea, everything is Thine!"

Two testimonies were then given as to the testing of God and the proving his faithful keeping, the first by Miss Orlebar, and the other by Mrs. Constantine. Much prayer followed, for when a true bit of life testimony is given under the direction of God the Holy Spirit, and in humility, it has an immense power to unlock other hearts. From this time on to the close of the meeting there was no more speaking, but Mrs. Baxter or Mrs. Tottenham linked the waiting time together with words of guidance, and a very deep hush and stillness held the whole gathering, whether in silence or in joining with the number who joined in audible prayer.

Praise texts were given then, and the meeting had to close before any were ready to leave. It was like the rising of the Nile from the showers in the far inland heights of Ruwenzori. God fed the upper streams, and the lower ones ran over. May they run over still into many thirsty places and many needy homes! For a vine life, rooted in the deep soil of grace, and a river life fed from springs which rise in heights out of sight, may be ours.

CONVENTION CONTRIBUTIONS.

Dear Sir,—The amount already contributed for the Keswick Convention Mission account, from July 1 to August 5, 1897, is £1306 9s. 4d., exclusive of gifts for "other missions," expenses of Convention, and many kind contributions to aid missionaries attending the Convention.—Yours very truly,

Robert Wilson.

Christian Lifeboat Crew.—The muster on Tuesday week at Miss Child's new Welcome Home in Canning Town was well attended, and was a most interesting gathering. After Miss Child had opened the meeting and given out the text for the month, "God is able to make all grace abound unto you" (2 Cor. ix. 8), short and practical addresses were given by Mr. W. Luff, Mr. Jones, the port missionary of Rotterdam, Rev. Mr. Becker, a converted Roman Catholic priest, and Hon. Van-Ort. The need for an iron room is much felt, and it is hoped that friends may be led to help in this matter.

The Babes in the Wood

IS the title of an interesting little pamphlet by Mrs. E. H. Kerwin, which describes the "Forest Cottage Home" at Leytonstone connected with the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End. I will let the authoress have her own say:—

"It is the poorest children of East London that we seek to help—those who not only need good food and fresh air, but clothes and boots to enable them to enjoy such things; children to whom a clean, cosy bed is a novelty, a tidily set table a thing unknown, and a big warm bath something beyond their knowledge. One would think, in our days of School Boards and compulsory education, that every child in the land would learn how to behave; but I am sorry to say that many do not know how to eat decently, and not a few do not even know how to play. Give them toys, and when the first curiosity is satisfied they are thrown aside or destroyed. Teach them games; and unless you play with them they lose all interest, and infinitely prefer to lounge over the fire or run up and down the street.

"It is to give such children an idea of a happy, healthy life, and especially to seek to restore the sickly and starving, that our Home keeps open doors all the year round. Children who have recently left the hospital, or who have just recovered from some prostrating illness, are gladly welcomed to Leytonstone to enjoy the fresh air and lovely vicinity of our forest and park; and when sick ones fail, we take those who are pinched with want and abject poverty, and feed and care for them in every way. Their bodies have every attention that we can give, and we seek to raise their minds to better and purer things than the sad surroundings of their so-called homes in the back streets of London can ever give.

"And that the children fully enjoy and benefit by the change is fully proved by their happiness while with us, the change in their appearance, and their sorrow when the time comes for them to return to their miserable homes. Think what it means for a poor child shut up in one room with father, mother, and several children, eating, sleeping, and doing everything within the four walls; or running about the dirty or hot streets, hearing and seeing much that is degrading, to change all this for our little Home near the forest trees with plenty, cleanliness, and beauty all around.

"During the past year 211 children have passed through the Home, and all have benefited by the care and attention which all have alike received from our good matron, Miss Walter. Many of the children were in very delicate health, and many came from homes where they were almost starving. Some are children of hard-working widows, who daily struggle to keep their one-roomed home together; some whose fathers are too ill to work, or who cannot get employment, thus casting all the burdens of the family on the already weakened mother. Some have drunken parents, and oh! the sadness and misery that surround these unfortunate children's lives. Think what a rest our little Home must be to those. 'Not to have and to be kicked about,' as one poor girl said to us. And oh! the delightful rest it is to those little toilers, whose every spare hour is spent in making matchboxes, or carrying about a fretful baby, while mother toils at the barely paid slop work."

It costs five shillings to keep each little child for a week. You have all been so generous to other objects of late that I feel I can hardly ask you to do much for this one. But any gift sent to me I shall, of course, be pleased to forward to Mrs. Kerwin; and will send in return a copy of the pamphlet, which is prettily illustrated with pictures of the home and its surroundings in Epping Forest.

A True Story of a Stork.

A writer in Our Animal Friends relates a curious incident about a stork which made its nest upon the roof of a house in Northern Germany, and, having been petted by the children, became very tame and companionable:—

"At the first signs of approaching cold weather the stork prepared to flit to warmer climes. The children were sad at the thought of losing their pet, but their parents consoled them with the assurance that the bird would surely return the next spring. The children, still uneasy at the idea of the stork not being cared for during the long winter, consulted together and evolved a brilliant idea, which they immediately proceeded to put into execution. They wrote a little note in their best German script, stating that the stork was very dear to them, and begging the good people in whose country it might spend the winter to be kind to their pet and send it back to them in the spring.

"They sealed the note, fastened it to a ribbon, tied it round the bird's neck, and tucked it under its wing. The next day they sadly watched the stork wing its way toward milder skies. The snow and ice came; Christmas time brought the children gifts and fresh amusements, but their summer pet was not forgotten. When the spring came round again their little feet used to climb to the roof day by day, looking and longing for the stork's return; and behold, one day there it was, tame and gentle as ever.

"Great was the children's delight, but what was their surprise to discover round its neck and under its wing another bright band with a note attached, addressed to 'the children who wrote the letter the stork brought'! The ribbon was quickly untied, and the missive opened. It was from a missionary in Africa, stating that he had read the children's note, and had cared for the stork, and thought that young people, whose good hearts had prompted them to provide for the comfort of a bird through the winter, would be willing to help clothe and feed the destitute boys and girls of his mission. A full name and address followed. The German children were full of sympathy, and the missionary's note won a golden answer from the family. Other letters came and went by post between them until by-and-bye the children learned to know the missionary and his little black waifs almost as well as they knew the beloved stork that had proved so trusty a messenger."

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S SEARCHER (83).

(a) The only one of the ten lepers who returned to give thanks to Jesus for being healed. St. Luke xvii. 16.

(b) Our Lord reminded his disciples of the fate of Lot's wife. St. Luke xvii. 32. When Lot was fleeing from Sodom with his wife and two daughters, the angels commanded them not to look behind them, but Lot's wife disobeyed and was turned into a pillar of salt. Gen. xix. 26.

(c) The Pharisee mentioned in our Lord's parable, who went to the Temple to pray, and thanked God he was not as other men. St. Luke xviii.

(d) A certain ruler who came to Jesus, asking "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" Christ told him to keep the commandments, which the ruler said he had done from his youth. Christ then told him that he lacked but one thing, and that he should sell his goods and give to the poor and then follow Him. "And when he heard this he was very sorrowful, for he was very rich."—St. Luke xviii. 18-23.

(e) A certain blind man who sat by the wayside begging nigh to Jericho, hearing the multitude pass by, he asked what it meant, and when he knew that Jesus was passing, he cried, saying, "Jesus, thou son of David, have mercy on me." And Jesus commanded him to be brought to Him and said, "What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee?" And he said, "Lord, that I may receive my sight." And immediately he received his sight.—St. Luke xviii. 35-43.

CALCUTTA AND BENGAL.

A TWO-MILES drive up Garden Reach from the P. and O. landing stage brings us to the heart of Calcutta—the great thronged, busy city, with its one million people, the metropolis of India and of the Southern Asiatic world. Two hundred years ago a little Indian village stood on the spot where now the city stands—the village of Kalcutta, called after Kali, the fierce devouring goddess whose bloodstained shrine is here. To Kali Ghat, her temple by the Ganges, tens of thousands of worshippers still repair. The wide steps by the water are crowded with bathers at festival times, and sacrifice goes on continually, though not the sacrifice of other days.† Memories of ages of horrid Kali worship linger around this spot. And memories of bloodshed in the Mutiny are here.

They seem almost forgotten. Where the English were stifled in the Black Hole of Calcutta the magnificent buildings of the Post Office now stand. Nothing is left but history to tell the awful tale.

Calcutta to-day is modern. Government House and Town-hall, Courts and Treasury, the splendid open Maidan, the beautiful riverside drive, said to be the most beautiful city drive in the whole world, these and the crowded business streets with their handsome public buildings, impress one as belonging to a city that might be anywhere, built yesterday. But the crowded Dharmtolla, the Lal Bazaar and the teeming native quarters speak of a different world.

Amid the noise and hurrying of these narrow streets our ghari rattled past an open gateway. We caught a glimpse of a quiet garden, and a white-pillared building standing among the trees, old-fashioned, stately, and yet simple, a refreshing contrast to the noisy neighbourhood. The name above the door attracted our notice. "Lal Bazaar Baptist Chapel" has a missionary sound. We stopped the ghari driver and passed in among the trees, little thinking that William Carey had built that church, and that we should find his chair and pulpit in the vestry—a little spindly chair and narrow pulpit, only fit for a small light man. The present Baptist minister very kindly took us round, showing us the handsome silver communion service presented by the Government of those days to Carey in recognition of his public services; and, still more interesting to missionary hearts, the very baptistry in which Carey baptized Adoniram Judson, the apostle of Burma. It is a large oblong tank cut in the floor of the old meeting-house behind the present chapel, the very hall where Carey preached, with his and Judson's simple memorial tablets let into the wall behind the platform.

No sight in all Calcutta moved me more, except the sight of the people, which must always strike most deeply to a missionary heart. Carey baptizing Judson—what a scene! what a seed! From this simple baptistry and from that day's doing, sprang the great American Baptist Missionary Union with its million members, the evangelisation of the Karen nation, the 54,000 converts of the Telugu Lone Star Mission. The first baptizing in the latter, when 2222 former heathen were immersed in one day, nineteen years ago, and the winning of the Karens were hidden in this seed.

Thinking many thoughts we pass out into the sunshine and down the quiet path. Beyond us lies the crowded street. Pause here a moment with us.

* * * *

More than 100 years have passed since William Carey landed on Indian soil—the father of our century of missions, the first of modern Indian missionaries; more than a century of prayer and toiling, of missionary appeal, and of the Church's answer to the cry of the heathen world. Sixteen hundred workers treading in Carey's wake are scattered through this Empire of the sun, preaching Christ to India. Eight hundred thousand Christians gather to the table of the Lord in Protestant Churches in this land. And yet—

Walk down the little garden. It is not far away, the living stream that flows beside the lofty gates of the old church ground. Look at this sight a little—the men and women here, hundreds and thousands of them passing and passing by; peasants, farmers, tradesfolk, students, men of business, lawyers, merchants, doctors, all in their Indian dress. Thousands of dark eyes scan you. Dark faces, handsome faces, wicked faces, they look at you and pass. They are worshippers of Kali, the bloodthirsty destroyer; of Siva, the god of death, "master of human victims, ruler of evil spirits, ghouls, and vampires, armed with a terrible trident, wearing a necklace of skulls, waited on by skeletons." They are worshippers of Siva and of the rest of the 33,000,000 Hindu gods. Perhaps they may have heard the name of Christ. They may. But many others have not who are not far away.

Standing here by the iron gates, with Carey's Church behind you, watching this human river sweep ceaselessly by, extend your inner vision to the great plains of Bengal lying around you, from the Sunderbunds at the Ganges' mouth to the foot of the Himalayas, and from the Burman frontier to the N.W. Provinces, Bengal and Assam, with their 80,000,000, the most populous part of the world. In Bakhargang, at the Ganges' mouth, two great districts, with 800,000 people, are, as we stand here, without a missionary. Dacca district is unoccupied, though the town of Dacca has six workers among two and a-half millions. Close to Calcutta, S.W., lies the crowded section, Midnapur, practically untouched in the north and west, the best-worked centres scarcely occupied. Nadiyah, north of Calcutta, is the most thoroughly evangelised district in Bengal. "Preachers manage to visit its villages once in two years." That is all. But Nidiyah is well off. Fadipore, lying by it, has on an average only one man to 500,000 people; Berhampore, to the north again, six workers among one and a-quarter millions; Rampore Bolia, north of this, only two to reach the same vast multitude; Mymensing, north-east of this, among three and a-half millions, has two men and five women to make known Jesus Christ.

While you think of these things the human flood sweeps on—sad faces, weary faces, faces seamed and scarred by sin, faces on which the light of the world has never fallen. No—these here in Calcutta may have heard that God has loved us, that He is not a devourer, a god of ghouls and vampires, but Calcutta with its million men and women is so small. Behar, the vast opium-growing country south of the Ganges here in Bengal, has twenty-four million people, and—how can I write the words?—six Christian missionaries.

Six Christian preachers. Six; to twenty-four million people. As if in the whole of England there were six or seven Christians—no more.

* * * *

Once William Carey stood here—the first English missionary to India. Those he had left behind at home felt that he had disappeared for ever. He never returned to England. For forty years he laboured here and died.

"I never yet repented," he wrote, "of any sacrifice which I have made for the Gospel, but find that consolation which comes from God alone." "I have God...God's cause will triumph."

To that cause he gave his all.

"To be devoted like a sacrifice to holy uses," he wrote, "is the great business of a Christian." "A Christian minister in a peculiar sense is not his own; he is the servant of GOD, and ought to be wholly devoted to Him."..."I am not my own no would I choose for myself. Let GOD employ m where He thinks fit."

It was this spirit that brought William Carey here. It is this spirit that will bring you who read these words into the mission field, or that will stir you if you cannot come, to help these people somehow.

Behar is waiting for you—half of its twenty-four millions never yet have heard the name of Christ. Chota Nagpore is waiting in Southern Bengal—Palaman one of its districts with 750,000 people, and no witness for Jesus Christ. None of its tributary States are occupied. "More than a million heathen here are without the slightest touch of the Gospel."

Maldah is waiting with 815,000 and no missionary. Bogra, the next great district, between the Ganges and the Brahmapootra river, is waiting with 817,000 souls. If His people were as wax in the hands of the Master, can we suppose these vast spheres would be left uncared for still?

Pause for a moment and look them out on the map. Bogra has 30,000 more people than all Northumberland and Monmouth. Maldah could people Bedfordshire, Cornwall, Herefordshire, and Hertfordshire, and have 4000 over.

Beyond the teeming Ganges delta, malarious and low, lies the beautiful hill country of Assam, the Kashia hills, the Naga hills, Hill Tipperah, and the rest. In the plains among them there are only three mission centres among three million souls. The Cachar hills have as yet no workers. The valley of Manipur, in Lower Assam, with its 200,000 people, is still unoccupied.

* * * *

We are standing at the gateway. The human flood flows by; young faces, tired faces, anxious faces. Hard, worldly eyes look into ours curiously and pass. What plans are seething in these busy brains! What destinies are shaping for evil and for good here in a myriad lives and beyond, in the lives we have just thought of! Listen. Watch. The stream flows on. Not one soul among them that thinks of God aright.

No Bible, no Sabbaths, no house of God; no God but a log of wood, or a monkey; no Saviour but the Ganges; no worship but that paid to abominable idols, and that connected with dances, songs, and unutterable impurities.... a corrupt torrent, poisoning the soul and carrying it down to perdition; no morality, for how should a people be moral whose gods are monsters of vice, whose priests are their ringleaders in crime, whose scriptures encourage pride, impurity, falsehood, revenge, and murder, whose worship is connected with indescribable abominations, and whose heaven is a —— *

We cannot print the words. You may read them for yourselves in any book on India's religions.

How shall these darkened millions be brought into the light? The power of God that took up William Carey, and through his simple life, to mention one result alone, put the Bible for the first time within reach of one-fourth of mankind, by translations accomplished in forty years into twenty-four languages; the power of God that from the church behind us sent Judson out to Burmah, and has since raised up, through that single Baptist effort, 500 churches and some 30,000 converts in that land, and across the water in Madras twenty-three mission stations and 54,000 converts in the Telugu country only, not to speak of other fields, that power is ours to-day. Why should not blessing like this come through your life to India? Why not? It did not come from Judson or from Carey. It came from Jesus Christ.

It is He who looks with pity upon this heathen world. It is He who stands beside you, facing these multitudes. As of old, He says, "I have compassion." As of old He bids you help them. You have put your hand in the hand of Christ, and you cannot take it back.† L. G.

† "The only antiquity in Calcutta is the famous Kali Ghat, where the fearful wife of Siva has held her shrine and welcomed her horrid worshippers from time immemorial. The present temple is 300 years old, and has no architectural pretensions. It stands on the bank of Tolly's Nullah, with flights of steps going down to the water. Kali, 'the black one,' is a furious goddess, hideous in features, dripping with blood, gorgon-headed, with a necklace of human skulls. She sends pestilence and famine, and is only appeased with blood. In earlier days, human sacrifice was often her only propitiation, and as late as 1866, during the terrible famine, human heads, decked with flowers, were found before the altar of Kali. She is the goddess of the Thugs, who, sworn to her bloody rites, travelled through India disguised as merchants or pilgrims, strangling victims to her honour. The secret cult of Kali is too repulsive for description in these pages."—Picturesque India. pp. 336-7.

The Wesleyan Conference.

THE Ordination Service is always one of the most popular features of the Conference; this year was no exception to the rule. The President of the Conference conducted the service. Fifty-one young men were set aside for the work of the ministry. The charge was delivered by the ex-President, Dr. Randles, who dealt with

THE DOCTRINE OF THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY.

The earlier part of the deliverance was an able and exhaustive treatment of the ends and functions of the ministry as set forth in the New Testament. The chief end is to promote the cause of Christ by bringing men under its saving influence. Its two chief functions are to teach, i.e., to proclaim, instruct, or persuade, and to rule, i.e., to exercise faithful, loving oversight. Dr. Randles altogether repudiated the sacerdotal theory of the ministry and the dogma of apostolic succession on which it mainly rests. The latter is in point of origin a myth, and in point of tendency a poisonous error. It substitutes doubtful tradition for history, and the outcome of priestly assumption for a Divine ordinance. The ex-President closed by emphasising the qualities of "a good minister of Jesus Christ." Good doctrine is essential. Unless we are resolved to be diligent students of the Word, acquiring a robust intelligence therein, and so habitually thinking the thoughts of God, we may as well abandon the hope of being "good ministers." Persuasive skill and zeal must be joined to knowledge, and we must have personal subjective experience of the doctrine we teach. An earnest plea for self-denial followed. The young ministers were counselled to associate with Christians in their honest toil, their simple garb and manners, their humble dwellings and rude speech, their God-fearing habits and delight in the House of the Lord, rather than with the best society under the most luxurious conditions, but out of sympathy with Christ and holiness. A minister of Christ who never finds occasion of self-sacrifice for the salvation of his fellow men or the honour of his Lord would be an incongruity and a self-contradiction, not to say a monstrosity.

THE STATIONING OF MINISTERS

provides considerable interest and excitement to the brethren, especially to the six or seven hundred who on the average are annually "on the wing." The Stationing Committee, composed of representatives from each of the districts, transacts the preliminary business in three separate sessions, and then the stations are thrown upon the stormy sea of open Conference. Several cases of special difficulty were caused by the appointment of circuit ministers to departmental offices, notably Rev. Thos. Allen, who was taken from London (Highgate) to become Governor of Handsworth College, and Rev. John Hornabrook, whose transference from Leeds (Brunswick) to the Chapel Secretaryship left the Conference Chapel without a head. Both the circuits thus deprived of their superintendents fixed upon the same minister, Rev. Joseph Dixon, as the man of their choice, but this remarkable coincidence neutralised their claim, and Brighton, to which Mr. Dixon had been invited, benefited thereby. Highgate secured Mr. John Aldred, and Leeds Rev. Albert Bishop, late chairman of the Birmingham District. What a magnificent scorn for distance some of the "stationers" have! One brother was transferred in a moment from Shetland to the Scilly Isles; at a later stage he was as quickly restored, and at last was found at neither, but at Airdrie, in Scotland. Doubtless there will be disappointment in some few cases on the part of circuits and ministers, but the conditions must be strange indeed if ministers and people in any circuit in the Connexion cannot work heartily together for the next twelve months in the cause of God. Any circuit appointment may be reconsidered and revoked at the next Conference.

THE ROLL OF THE HONOURED DEAD.

One of the most solemn sessions of the Conference is that in which the roll of ministers who have died during the year is read. Amid deep feeling the president announced the hymn—

> Come, let us join our friends above
> That have obtained the prize.

The Secretary then read slowly the long list, pausing after each name, so that opportunity was given for one and another to bear testimony to the services and character of those who had passed away. Forty ministers had died since the last Conference in Great Britain, three in Ireland, and five on the mission field. A brief obituary notice of each of these was printed in the Conference agenda. In addition, several deaths had taken place during the sessions or immediately before the opening of Conference, including Rev. Samuel Gregory, whose life was cut short when on holiday in Switzerland; Rev. J. W. Henderson, of Bridlington Quay; Rev. S. Evans Rowe, while on a voyage to South Africa; and Rev. Evan Evans, a minister in the Welsh work. Thus death has been busy while ministers have been taking counsel as to future work.

No form was more missed than that of the cheery and apparently stalwart James Ernest Clapham, the late Home Missionary secretary. He was stricken in the midst of strength and capacity for service. Rev. F. W. Macdonald said this was one of their greatest losses in recent years. Mr. Clapham was a great official, but he was a standing refutation of the theory that official life must necessarily dry up the springs of intellectual and spiritual vitality. Rev. Walford Green spoke of the beauty of Mr. Clapham's home life, and Rev. H. Price Hughes mentioned that the deceased had acted as secretary of the London Mission at its most critical and formative period. He was not only but a great evangelist. His earliest record was that of a fiery evangelist, and nothing rejoiced him more amid all his administrative duties than to hear of the salvation of souls. Dr. Rigg drew the veil aside when he referred to a conversation with Mr. Clapham, in which the latter said, "I have such a revelation of the most loving Fatherhood of God as relieves my mind from doubts and fears, and helps me to work in sunshine continually."

Another face sorely missed was that of John Samuel Jones, who had seen active service for the last fifty-six years. He was one of the fathers of the Conference, and a great authority on Methodist law and order. Rev. Charles Garrett bore an unstinted tribute to the worth of William T. Radcliffe, another veteran preacher whose service had covered more than half a century. Thomas Derry, who died in his seventy-fifth year, was converted through the labours of James Caughey, the American evangelist. Charles Crawshaw was a preacher whose wise and quaint sayings will be long remembered. On the evening before his death he was preparing a Christmas sermon on "The wise men from the East," and the last words he wrote were, "To seek a Saviour and a city out of sight."

One of the great losses of the year was that of David C. Ingram, the chairman of the Scotland district, who so quickly followed his loved son Romilly, who fell on the mission field. Mr. Ingram's preaching, especially in the early days, was a torrent of earnest, tender, and impassioned eloquence. Rev. Forster Crozier's work at Southwark, before the foundation of the London Mission, was lovingly mentioned. Rev. William Jackson traced his own conversion to the appeals of Joseph Sykes, who closed a long and blameless ministry at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. William Francis Somerville, in the fourth year of his ministry, fell a victim to fever on the deadly West Coast of Africa. Dr. Beet paid his tribute to the quiet heroism of a man who at a moment's notice went on his errand to the West African field, and Rev. Dennis Kemp told how when Somerville returning with the troops from the recent Ashanti Expedition, was stricken with fever he gave up his hammock to a soldier whose case was worse than his own. Rev. R. W. Allen, a chaplain in the Army, added that this incident had been talked about in many a barrack-room. Samuel Gifford had been looking forward for years with passionate longing to service in Western Africa. He died at Abeokuta within a few months of his landing. Rev. Sampson Weaver bore testimony that the young missionary's widowed mother did not regret placing such a great sacrifice on the altar of missions.

When Book-room affairs were under consideration, Rev. C. H. Kelly gave some interesting information in regard to the discovery of certain Wesley MSS. He now had fourteen volumes of Charles Wesley's hymns in the author's handwriting; and a little volume had come to light containing John Wesley's notes of "Preparations for the Readings of the Holy Club." Rev. F. W. Macdonald urged the issue of an annotated edition of Wesley's Journals; and Mr. Kelly referred to the lecture recently given by Mr. Birrell, M.P., in which high praise was given to the work in question as throwing light upon 18th century life and manners in England.

The pastoral address prepared by Rev. Joshua Haigh was read to the Conference; it contained excellent advice on a wide variety of topics, and will be speedily printed and issued as the address of the Conference to the Methodist Society. The stationing of ministers for the ensuing year was amongst the closing duties of the Conference, which concluded it sittings on Wednesday evening.

A High Churchman's Views.

WE recently gave some extracts from a letter written by a High Churchman, which have attracted some attention. We therefore append a few more, which are instructive reading.

"The visible Church, the Catholic and Apostolic Church, is the only divinely-instituted organisation. Every Protestant sect is an institution founded by men, has no priesthood, and consequently no sacraments. To be a Protestant is to be cut off from the covenanted channels of grace.

"The Protestant conception is that of 'human' God. Protestants pray to God, but never worship Him. It is for this reason that I refuse the title, 'Place of worship' to a dissenting meeting-house; the proper title being 'Place of preaching and prayer.'

"The principle of the private interpretation of the Bible is the source of schism, heresy, agnosticism, infidelity, and other kindred evils. There would have been no Protestants had not people read their Bibles.

"You, being a Protestant, cannot conceive of the realisation of God's infinite goodness which a penitent experiences on leaving the Confessional—I mean the knowledge that God, through the instrumentality of the priest, had forgiven every repented sin.

"We believe that at the moment the priest pronounces the words of consecration, the bread and wine become, by a miracle, changed into the flesh and blood of our Lord.

"The teaching of the Church cannot in any way be opposed to the teaching of the Bible, for how can the unwritten Word of God clash with the written Word of God? If there is anything in the teaching of the Church that is directly opposed to the teaching of the Bible, the Church is wrong and all her claims are worthless." [This sufficiently confutes all that the writer has said before. It is evident that he is unfamiliar with the one and only Book which can qualify a minister of Christ to teach his will.—Ed.]

"No good Catholic would 'scorn to enter a Nonconformist place of worship,' because it is always pleasing to see people trying to serve God, however misguided their efforts may be. But it is distinctly an act of 'schism' (not 'heresy') 'to worship with Dissenters.' How can — enter a Dissenting meeting-house when in the English Litany she prays, 'From all false doctrine, heresy, and schism, God deliver us'? Personally I am obliged, owing to private reasons, to sometimes attend such places, but the end justifies the means, or, as St. Ignatius Loyola himself expresses it, 'The means ought always to be subordinate to the end.'"

[Here we have Jesuitism pure and simple and candidly avowed, revealing the true character of men who are being admitted to the ministry of the Church of England.—Ed.]

South African General Mission.

Writing from Durban, Natal, on July 17, Mr. W. Spencer Walton says:—

My wife and I are hoping to leave for Swazieland next week. We expect to be in the thick of the fight when you get this letter, so pray much for us. The Lord is encouraging us in this branch very much. We feel full of joy at the prospect of extended work as well as the constant report of souls being saved.

You will be glad to hear we had a wonderful revival at Greytown, and that the visit of our beloved Rev. Andrew Murray at our Convention last week was blessed exceeding abundantly. All the ministers attended the meetings more or less. My wife and I and all the little ones are well.

Evangelical Alliance.—Among the speakers secured for the Conference at Cambridge next month are:—Revs. Dr. Handley C. G. Moule, Dr. W. F. Moulton, Dr. J. Oswald Dykes, Dr. J. H. Rigg, Archdeacon Richardson, Archdeacon Taylor; Mrs. Isabella Bird Bishop, Mrs. Lewis; Revs. Dr. Murray Mitchell, W. Roberts, Dr. David MacEwan, D. J. Stather Hunt, G. D. Hooper, and Dr. F. W. Baedeker.

Count Campello in London.

A GARDEN reception on Monday afternoon afforded opportunity for a company of Christian folk to meet Count Campello on the occasion of his fourth visit to this country. The gathering took place in the beautiful grounds of Aubrey House, Kensington, by kind permission of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander. Sir Geo. Stokes presided over a meeting in the hall attached to the grounds, and after Rev. Geo. Everard had offered prayer, Count Campello, who spoke in a forcible and animated manner, delivered an address in Italian, which was interpreted by Signor E. Martinucci. Expressing great pleasure at meeting again friends interested in his Italian Reform work, the Count declared that the life-purpose of himself and his helpers is to labour for the full shining of the Sun of Righteousness in a land which, with many natural advantages, is yet oppressed with much spiritual darkness. The struggle against Romish error is maintained only in dependence upon the sword of the Spirit. Church Reform in Italy is imperatively needed in view of the fact that the Papacy is entirely antagonistic to the national conscience, anathematising all who will not swallow its accumulated errors. Since the temporal power of the Pope was overthrown, every Italian has had to choose between his faith and the Government of the country, because the latter maintains that a "good Catholic" cannot be a true patriot; and, unfortunately, the Italians do not discriminate between the claims of Christ and those of a priesthood which they hate. Hence the necessity of a reform which should quicken and vivify the faith of the people in Christ. Blind superstition or indifference are the alternative evils with which this work, at present in its infancy, has to contend. Indifference is the natural offspring of an unreasonable faith. The Italian Reformers have not only the hope but the certainty of success in the difficult work which they are undertaking, if they be faithful to the conditions of the Divine promises.

In briefly stating the present condition of his work, Count Campello said that there are now eleven centres of operations, six congregations regularly constituted, six ministers, three candidates for the ministry, 1,000 communicants, and several thousands of adherents. By communicants, he especially referred to those who attend the services every Sunday; and by adherents were meant the large number who, for reasons of their own, do not make an open profession of faith, but are in sympathy with the cause and attend the services as often as possible.

This Reform movement, said the Count, is no innovation, but is an attempt to realise the traditions which have come down from such men as Marcellas of Padua, Dante and Savonarola. It is an effort to arrive at an Episcopal form of religious life, and has therefore commended itself to the practical sympathies of British brethren of that communion, who have been generous in material as well as moral support. But the cause has lost influential helpers, and the Count had lost personal friends in the decease of Canon Thornton and of the Archbishop of Dublin, the recent removal of the latter creating quite a financial crisis in the work, particularly as regards supporters in this country. It is very necessary to repair such heavy losses by enlisting new friends; and it is cause of rejoicing that five Bishops have signified willingness to join the committee, and thus, with the president, carry forward British interest in the work. Count Campello closed with a strong appeal for a generous measure of support, because there could be no greater mission than that of extending the kingdom of God through the Gospel; and the reward would be sure, conferred by the blessed hands of Christ Himself.

Rev. Ugo Janni, of San Remo, followed with a speech emphasised by evident earnestness and strong conviction; and in his case also the services of the interpreter were requisitioned. He declared that the religious fight going on in Italy is of world-wide interest and significance. Civilisation, freedom of conscience, and knowledge constitute not merely an Italian but a universal patrimony; and the children of light, in every land, should unite to fight the foe of that beneficent triad. The Papacy is not more a religious than a political institution, for it is at war with England on the Irish question, and is wrestling with Germany, where there is no contention as to the temporal power. The Romish clerical party are assailing the French Republic, and the same evil fight is witnessed even in Apostolic Austria. 'Tis but a year ago since we admired the Hungarian Government holding its own against Romanism.

The bad influence of this Papal universal enemy had reduced Italian Christianity to a fetichism. Doubtless there are in the Romish communion truly Christian souls; but this is no argument in favour of the system, because these exceptions only prove the rule. The fact remains, that multitudes in Italy who are hungering and thirsting after righteousness, look in vain for those who shall break unto them the bread of life. Therefore this Reform work is an absolute and urgent necessity.

The individual who, about a year ago, was going to the Vatican to make terms with the Pope on the question of the Reunion of the Churches, was described by the speaker as worthy of respect for his ingenuity, but the envoy had not the remotest idea of the true nature of the Papacy, which would not be satisfied with anything short of total submission and entire surrender. Repudiating such claims, the Italian Reformers seek to enter into their rightful patrimony, and to form part of the great Universal Church of God. They could come to British Christians, and speak to them words of truth and of brotherhood, in the name not only of a great past, but of a great future, which they were warranted in expecting to realise through the means of Christian union in effort and in prayer.

After a suitable acknowledgment from Count Campello, reciprocated by the meeting, of the kindness shown by the host and hostess, the meeting terminated with another earnest petition for Divine blessing on the cause of the Gospel in Italy.

Open-Air Mission.

A HAPPY season of service has been spent by eight members of the Open-Air Mission in evangelising villages in Breconshire, Radnorshire, and Herefordshire, twenty-one such outlying places having thus received visitation from July 17 to 26. Arriving at Hay, their headquarters, on the first-named evening, they were warmly received by Mr. T. Cyrus Morgan, who had made all the local arrangements, and a good meeting was held under the Clock Tower. Various services on the following day, Sunday, culminated in a grand finale again under the Clock Tower, when all the churches of the town were represented by the Christian workers present, and several hundreds of people listened with deep interest to the Gospel message. Indeed, the drawing of Christians together has been a marked feature of the whole campaign.

Throughout the week the evangelists went forth to surrounding villages, including some most secluded places lying over the Black Mountains, the journeys sometimes involving hard walking or climbing for hours together. But everywhere they were touched and cheered by the remarkable attention of the people, who seem ripe for such work, and welcome the presence of the strangers in their midst. Their thanks were most hearty and sincere, and sometimes their tearful eyes testified to the depth of the impressions made.

It was marvellous where the people came from, considering the scattered nature of the district. Often the people walked long distances to the services, notwithstanding that hay harvest was in full swing. Usually every house in the village was visited before the evening service, personal conversation was held with large numbers, and prayer was offered in many homes.

Wales, the land of Howell Harris and Christmas Evans, and many other heroes of the past, cries aloud for the Gospel, which must be preached in the open air if its people are to be reached. In many parts of the Principality this form of Christian service is much neglected. O that everywhere the spirit of the past may be renewed, and many devoted sons of God and of the Principality be raised up to carry the Gospel throughout its length and breadth A different part of South Wales will have been under visitation by the Open-Air Mission when this appears, six members having been set apart to conduct an evangelistic campaign in and around Barry Dock, from July 31 to Aug. 9. Much prayer is asked for these and many similar efforts now in full operation. Funds are also greatly needed for their support.

"The Lighthouse," at Bow Common.

Dear Sir,—We venture to lay before your readers the following facts in relation to the work carried on by Pastor T. J. Hazzard and his people in that densely-populated and poor district of East London, known as Bow Common.

A large building, named "The Lighthouse," has been erected on a prominent site in the main thoroughfare, for the preaching of the Gospel, the the accommodation in which is entirely free and unappropriated. The old chapel has been converted into school and class rooms for the religious instruction of over a thousand children. a large infants' room has been provided; and a soup kitchen, which will be of immense service in connection with the mission work during the winter months.

At the opening services on July 1, there remained £950 to raise on the entire scheme. Of this, £500 has been promised as a loan, free of interest for five years, by the Baptist Building Fund. In order to remove the burden of the remaining £450, the chairman, Mr. T. A. Denny, who had already contributed £100, promised another £50 provided the £400 was raised in two months; other friends, who had given largely before, have promised additional help on the same condition, and Mr. Edward Rawlings, who gave £250 to the first part of the scheme, has given another £100 towards its completion.

After making strenuous efforts to raise the £400, the building committee have only succeeded in raising just over £200, and the remaining half, or thereabouts, is quite beyond their power. The matter is urgent, as the time limit only extends to September 1, and the summer holidays make it extremely difficult to secure the needed help.

Knowing, as we do, that Pastor Hazzard's work is a bonâ fide evangelical work, in an exceptionally difficult sphere, we have every confidence in appealing to all lovers of the Lord Jesus Christ to help him and his friends to raise the amount needed at once.

Mr. Hazzard's address is 52, Addington-road, Bow, E.

Weaver Brothers in Liverpool.

Byron Hall, which was the field of many successful missions conducted by the late Richard Weaver, has recently been the scene of an equally fruitful campaign by his two sons. July is not a favourable month for mission services, but for fourteen nights the people gathered in large numbers to hear the old, old story. Mr. Frank Weaver sweetly and effectively set forth the Gospel in song, and Mr. Bewley Weaver preached it with great earnestness and directness, accompanied by the demonstration of the Holy Spirit.

Each meeting witnessed sinners seeking the Saviour, drunkards, those who made light of religion, and regular churchgoers yielding to the Lord. Among them were three men who were separated from their wives, through drink, etc. Two of these are already reunited. It was in one case touching to see man and wife in the meeting sitting together, and to hear the wife declare, before all the people, "I also will follow the Saviour.

A pleasing feature during the mission was to have the presence and help of Mr. Herbert Radcliffe (son of the late Mr. Reginald Radcliffe), and to see these servants of God uniting to tell out the same old story which their fathers so faithfully delivered. The closing meeting was a time of great thankfulness and rejoicing for God's presence and blessing, and we look forward with great expectations to another visit from our brethren next year.

Limehouse Ragged School, which is held in Mitre Buildings, Church Row, is the centre of a variety of Christian operations. Some of the children are rough and intractable, the result of bad example in their homes and the education of the streets; but the efforts of patient self-denying teachers to lead them in the right way have not been in vain. The lads' club and gymnasium was carried on throughout the winter, and, besides providing healthful recreation, was a valuable means of bringing under Christian influence low, rough lads, whose daily surroundings tend to make them more vicious and degraded. The secretary of the school is Mr. W. E. Kirkness, 26, Gough-street, Poplar.

Letters to the Editor.

SHALL WE CLOSE OUR PULPITS?

Dear Sir,—On turning over the pages of an old book, written by one of the godliest preachers of his time, I came across a proclamation of Edward VI. to this effect:—

2 Edw. VI. Sept. 13.

"By these presents, Wee inhibite generally all manner of Preachers whatsoever they be, to preach in this mean space, to the intent that the whole Clergy might apply themselves to prayer to Almighty God, for the better atchieving of the same most godlie intent, and purpose of Reformation."

This proclamation remained in operation for some time, but it is not recorded what effect it had upon the Church of Christ. Doubtless it deepened and strengthened the reality of the Reformation which it sought, and we are possibly the heritors of the blessings which God gave them then, for it is not to be thought that the eloquence of united and earnest prayer would do less than preaching. The martyr fires which followed those days have died out and the ashes have been swept away, but there is a question rising in the hearts of many whether it would not be better for the Church and kingdom of God if there were less preaching and more praying—that is to say, more praying by the Church of Christ assembled together, to ask for the blessing of God on some special effort for the redemption of the world.

One of the leaders of Christ's work in the north said to me the other day, "I think it would be well to close our pulpits for some time, and let us all meet together and face the responsibility of our position as servants of our Lord." There is no doubt that "facing our responsibility" is the duty of the hour, and how could we do it better than by holding closer and united communion with God? Like M'Cheyne we need to "look over the verge" and see the great realities of eternity, and the larger purposes of Jesus Christ. If by prayer we can see Him who is invisible, and understand more fully what is in the heart of God for us and the race, we shall move onward to more radiant victories of truth and righteousness. The work of preaching the everlasting Gospel need not cease, for we could go out into the highways and hedges, into the slums, down amongst the shipping, and into the mission field, and bring the evangel which has saved us into the hearts and homes of those who never hear its glad tidings of joy. "Preach the Word" would still remain in force, and the preaching be more forcible. Of course such a closure need not continue long, but it should be long enough to let us know and love each other better, and long enough, too, to show us that it is by the might of the Spirit that all true advance of the work of Christ is secured. The best preachers would benefit by the rest and the opportunity of finding out the secret of the Most High in their own life and work, and the worst preachers would in the silence given them have time to see the greatness of the preacher's task and their own lack of fitness for its sublime possibilities; and if they are true men they will seek the power from on high which they need.

Many a man who is in the forefront of the battle to-day is overwhelmed with the roar and the smoke of the fight, and cannot see what is the best service he can give to God, nor the best way of giving it. This time of quietness and retrospect and forecast would show him how to seize the opportunity God opens to him, and he would be ready to glorify his Saviour in ways he thinks beyond him now. The people in the pews would be gainers also, for they would feel they have a part in the establishing the Kingdom of God as well as the public preachers of the Word. They would feel the Divine demand for consecration, and hear the bitter cry which comes up from what is called the "submerged tenth" for help which only they can give. They would not sit at their windows and watch the wild and angry sea breaking over the wreck, but would be down on the shore, with the cold spray beating in their faces, helping the manning of the lifeboat and cheering those who go out to save the sinking voyager.

I know that many will think all this the dream of a Christian Quixote, but many things have come to pass in the Church of Christ which were never thought of by those who lived before they happened. God will fulfil Himself in his own way, and who shall say He will not do so in this? Already it has been tried, and although our divisions and diversities are greater than in the time of Edward VI., yet at the heart of all who truly love the Lord Jesus Christ there is the supreme desire that the Kingdom of God should come, and his will be done on earth as it is in heaven. In the event of the closing of all the pulpits for the united and continuous praying of the Church, being beyond the range of present possibility, then let it be tried by separate congregations for a month, or any such time as may seem best, always remembering that the pulpit is only closed that the fire of the Holy Spirit may be renewed in the heart of the preacher and in the life of the congregation. Let us think on these things.—Yours faithfully,

Musselburgh, N.B. Walter J. Mathams.

"HIGH CONGREGATIONALISM."

Dear Sir,—This phrase, which you quote from The Catholic Times, is, perhaps, not an unhappy one to describe the position occupied by a large, and I hope an increasing, number of ministers in relation to the ordinance of the Lord's Supper. The late Dr. R. W. Dale, among others, did, we believe, good service in recalling the fact that the Lord's Supper is "not merely a commemorative rite, but a veritable channel of Divine grace." As we read and understand the Scripture teaching, it is a commemoration, but it is also very much more. We do not celebrate the Lord's Supper in commemoration of a dead and absent Lord, but in communication with a living and present Saviour. We believe that according to the teaching of John vi., interpreted by the Lord's words, "This is my body, this is My blood," Jesus Christ in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper actually gives Himself in the symbols of his body and his blood to be the food, the means of life, to the soul.

What, however, I would earnestly point out is that this higher sacramentarian view has nothing whatever to do with sacerdotalism. Our brethren who depreciate the sacraments are largely influenced by the belief that priestly authority is necessarily connected with the recognition of anything approaching the Real Presence. Permit me to assert that this is not so. We believe in the priesthood of all believers, and utterly repudiate any exclusive sacerdotal claim.

It is the presence of the Saviour which constitutes and communicates the sacramental grace, and this presence is not dependent upon any priestly intervention. As Congregationalists we believe that the assembly of the disciples with the Lord amongst them is the Church; that the Church so constituted celebrates the Lord's Supper; and that this is a means of communicating sacramental grace. Let those who differ from us combat our views as earnestly as they please, but let them not impute to us beliefs which we repudiate as strenuously as they.—Yours truly, E. R. P.

July 31.

Sir,—I entirely agree with your correspondent, "E. R. P." [above]. There could be no better setting forth of the views on the Lord's Supper some of us hold.

These views we find in the Scriptures, and they are involved in the true doctrine of the Church; they answer to and are confirmed by the experience of the saintliest in all the ages; they were taught by the ablest, soundest, least sacerdotal theologian since the days of the Apostles, John Calvin; and when Protestant Nonconformity is SPIRITUALISED—its greatest necessity—they will become general. The Lord's Supper will then cease to be what it too often is, a formal barren thing, and be a real means of grace—sacramental—"a communion of the blood of Christ," and "a communion of the body of Christ." (1 Cor. x. 16.) The Zwinglian view of the Lord's Supper, and it has prevailed in Congregationalism, is rationalistic, and, therefore, a poor thing; we have got to return to the supernatural.—I am, Sir, yours faithfully, William Crosbie.

"Ecclefechan," Lenton Sands, Nottingham.

Dear Sir,—In any discussion it is of first importance to define our terms. I remember that when I was a child Nonconformists rarely used the word "sacrament." One of my early recollections is that to my young mind the distinction between church people and chapel people was that the former called the Lord's Supper "the sacrament" and the latter called it "the ordinance." I shall be very glad to be informed what is the exact meaning now attached by my Nonconformist brethren to the words "sacrament" and "sacramentarian," and to the phrase "sacramental grace."—Yours, etc., An Old Disciple.

PROTESTANT CHILDREN AND POPISH SCHOOLS.

Sir,—Your correspondent "Enlightened" has struck a note which applies not only to Popish schools on the Continent, but also to those at home. We see the same thing in the case of High Church schools; so-called Evangelicals and Nonconformists send their children to Ritualistic schools, regardless of the teaching they receive, and regardless of the fact that when they should be in school they are made to attend high mass in the church, which very often adjoins the schools. Then the children are sent home ill (so several parents complained recently in a North London police-court) from the effects of the incense; and, what is worse, ill spiritually—for what must be the effect upon their young minds of the idolatry they are obliged to take part in by prostrating themselves before a wafer god? Should a child happen to raise his or her head during the consecration prayer, immediately the wrath of the Sisters (as they are called) descends on that child.—Yours obediently, F. E. Osland.

CONVENT SUPERVISION.

Dear Sir,—Seeing a notice of the "Convent Supervision Memorial" in a recent issue of The Christian, I write in earnest hope that the object may be attained. At the same time I fear the very title indicates that even the petitioners come short of appreciating the facts, and present a petition which will appear to many to be a demand for interference on grounds which may admit of argument and question. The facts, on the contrary, demand the abrogation, once for all, of the most astounding interference with personal freedom and national law that can be conceived.

That convents may call for supervision need not be called in question by those who are convinced that they do so owing to their character; but this is not the primary question. Hitherto they have shielded themselves under the plea of being "domestic institutions," and have attained an immunity tolerated in no other case through the English abhorrence of home being subject to police or inspectional supervision. To proceed upon the grounds that they are not, truly speaking, family establishments or homes, or that, being so, they are foully abused, is, as it seems to me, both to court needless difficulty and to come short of the chief blot of the intolerable wrong now perpetrated.

Convents are at present covered by an unlawful and even illegal set of Parliamentary provisions. No power in England is capable of making the action of the law of England illegal, and yet this is precisely the condition under which (1st) Popish ecclesiastical buildings are erected without approved plans and evidence of conformity with such plans, open to verification at all times; and (2ndly) the duly appointed officers of the country do not keep the registry of births and deaths, with all due facility for the discharge of their duties.

To me it seems obvious that no power whatever can make the law of England of none effect except it be a superior power, and that for the legislative assembly of the kingdom to run Acts against its own authority is by no possibility legal except under the compulsion and acknowledgment of a higher and superior authority. But again, that higher power, if it exist and be acknowledged, must of necessity possess the lawful right to dictate in whatsoever it will. And this is precisely the Papal, or, in modern phraseology, the Catholic claim, be it Roman or Anglican. Will the Parliament of England stand this? If it should, will the country? That I hold to be the vital question in this case.

Chesnut House, Sutton.—Last year you drew attention to the opening of our little Home. May we tell of the good hand of our God upon us since we opened a year ago? Although we only accommodate seven visitors one hundred had passed through on our first anniversary. Ten ladies, through the kindness of friends, have been invited without charge. Others have been blessed, and in their turn have gone forth to be a blessing. We could tell how wonderfully God has used the Home, bringing those who needed the outstretched hand of sympathy and help. Any ladies who would like to bring a few young people down from London for a day could be provided with tea. It would give us great pleasure to welcome such, and the cost would be trifling. We thankfully record that with never a balance in hand every need has been supplied.

On the Blackdown Hills.

Dear Friends and Fellow-helpers,—For over thirty-four years the Lord has been giving us to see much fruit in this corner of his vineyard, and we can indeed say "Not one good thing hath failed us." We can raise our "Ebenezer," saying "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us."

Since the death of my dear father, in 1888, the superintendence and responsibility of the mission have devolved upon myself, and it has been a great joy to us to have been enabled of the Lord in any measure to live for Him and his work. He has given continued blessing, and is still giving us encouragement in the various meetings held in our six mission rooms; and we have much cause for cheer in the prosperity of our day and Sunday schools. Mr. Glover, to whom I have lent our Gospel tent for village missions, writes of much blessing; souls have been saved in each village visited hitherto. The meetings for adults and children have been splendidly attended, and many willing helpers have succoured him and co-operated in the work.

For many years I have resided at Clayhidon; but the Lord has very manifestly led me to remove from the old spot as a residence and has called me to work for Him in Clevedon. At the same time we wish our friends to know that we have not given up our responsibility for the work on the Blackdown Hills, but we shall still hope to superintend it as before. Mr. Showell (my father-in-law), who has been labouring with us for six years, will remain at Clayhidon and take local control, and will continue his pastoral and evangelistic work among the people as before; I shall hope to have opportunity from time to time of visiting the Hills myself as the need arises.

The Mission will be carried on as before in all its branches, many kind helpers having come forward to sustain the meetings. We trust our friends will continue their sympathy and help as heretofore, for we are still cast upon God for all the needs of his work and are assured He will not fail or forsake us.

My house is empty, and I am very desirous of letting it to some godly family who would love country life and be in sympathy with the Lord's work there. If any servant of Christ requiring such a house (it is charmingly situated, and very convenient) would communicate with me, I should be most happy to give full particulars, and be glad to arrange the matter on very easy and advantageous terms. Our wish is that the Lord would send some family who would take an interest in the Lord's work and be some help to the people. Pray for us, that the Word of God may have free course and be glorified both there and here.

Letters addressed as before (Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset) will be forwarded, or, if preferred, may be sent direct to my present address, 10, Albert-road, Clevedon, Somerset.—Yours very faithfully in the Lord, W. H. Brealey.

Evangelistic Notes.

Four weeks' successful mission services have been held at Southern Cross, Portslade, by Alexander Clarke, of the Evangelisation Society. This is his third visit during the past two years. All the services have been well attended. On Sunday many friends, finding it impossible to gain admittance to the tent, were content to listen outside to the word preached. During the stay of the evangelist he has conducted services in several places of worship, and many testify to the good they have received.

A series of special services for children and young people was held during the last part of May in Masuri (N.W.P. India), by Mr. Bernard Herklots, of the Children's Special Service Mission. They were largely attended and much blessed. Mr. Herklots' addresses were clear, searching, and full of power through the Holy Spirit in convicting of sin and pointing out the way of salvation. Praise God, many young hearts have yielded to Him and received Jesus at these services, and are now rejoicing in Christ. We trusted for much blessing, and, glory be to God! He manifested his power in the salvation of precious souls.

The Y.M.C.A.

The fourteenth World's Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s will be held at Basle next year, from August 24 to 28.

A special crusade amongst men in London against the evils of gambling, intemperance, and vice will be commenced in the northern portion of the metropolis in the early autumn.

An effort is being made on behalf of the young men of Poona, India, by the local Y.M.C.A. From August 21 to 29 a special mission to men will be conducted by Mr. Frank Anderson. The temptations which beset young men in India are very strong. Prayer is desired for this mission.

The first of the "training courses" organised by the Central International Committee for travelling and general secretaries, which was held at Berlin, was attended by seventeen young men. The course was divided into two parts—theoretical in the morning, and practical in the afternoon or evening.

Central Branch, Philadelphia, has been fortunate in its facilities for effective work during the summer months. A large new tent has been placed at the disposal of the Association for its Sunday afternoon meetings. The results so far have been exceedingly gratifying, the meetings being largely attended, and a deep spiritual interest manifested.

Mr. J. H. Oldham, B.A., who has been appointed Y.M.C.A. foreign mission secretary at Lahore, as the representative of the Scottish Associations, was born in India of Scottish parents. He is singularly fitted by gifts and training for the work in India to which he has been called. He is a distinguished graduate of Oxford, and as general secretary of the British College Christian Union, and of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, has had much experience of work among young men.

In addition to what the Scottish National Union as such is now doing for foreign missions, the Associations at Glasgow and Leith have for some years supported their own representative in China, and the Aberdeen Association has recently undertaken to do the same. Other Associations support native teachers in different parts of the mission field, while many others contribute towards various foreign mission schemes. In many Scottish Associations there are missionary bands and missionary parliaments, which have done much to stimulate the missionary spirit, and spread a knowledge of what is being done for the spread of the Gospel in heathen lands.

The eighth summer Conference of General and Travelling Secretaries of the Continent of Europe at Elberfeld was attended with great success. Sixty officers came together from different centres, and the discussions on various important Y.M.C.A. topics were of much practical value. Pastor Krummacher was president of the conference. The morning after the business had terminated, the delegates were taken by special train to Bielefeld, to hear a grand musical performance, offered to the Emperor and Empress of Germany by the Y.M.C.A.'s and Y.W.C.A.'s of the country, and given solely by members of these Associations. Places were reserved for the members of the Conference.

Some six hundred delegates will take part in the British Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations which opens at Glasgow on the 7th September. In addition to the representatives of the British Associations, there will be visiting delegates from all parts of the world, and it is expected that the gathering will be one of the most important in the history of the Conference. According to the provisional programme, the first important function connected with the Conference will be the opening of the Young Men's Christian Association Club premises, adjoining the Christian Institute, in Bothwell Street. This ceremony will take place during the afternoon of Tuesday, 7th September. In the evening the delegates will be entertained at a public reception by the Corporation. On the following day the first session of the Conference will begin at ten o' clock, under the chairmanship of Sir George Williams, president of the English National Council. The subject for discussion will be "The Future Work of the Y.M.C.A.," which will be treated under the three heads—(a) spiritual, (b) social, and (c) physical. Sectional meetings will be held in the afternoon, and in the evening a public demonstration will take place in St. Andrew's Hall, with Lord Overtoun in the chair, and Sir George Williams and Rev. John M'Neill as the principal speakers. The Conference will continue on Thursday and Friday, 9th and 10th September, when the subjects to be considered include—"How Associations may best train their members for distinctive work among young men," "The dangers of the Y.M.C.A., and how to remedy them," "How to influence classes of young men at present unreached by the Y.M.C.A." and "The relation of the Y.M.C.A. to foreign missionary work." The proceedings will be brought to a close with an excursion to the policies of Lord Overtoun. Since 1882, when the British Conference last visited Glasgow, it has greatly increased in membership.

Irish Notes.

The second of the splendid school buildings erected under the will of the late Mr. H. H. Boyd has been opened in Ravenhill-road, Belfast. The first is in Mayo-street, Belfast, and a third is yet to build. Each of these schools has cost £2,400, and is intended for educational and evangelistic work under the care of the Belfast City Mission.

The annual three days' Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life was held last week in Bangor, co. Down, and was largely attended. The speakers included Mr. Stuart Holden, of Cambridge; Rev. Jas. Entrican, of Cookstown; Rev. Wm. Gorman, of Belfast; and Professor Mackintosh, of Trinity College, Dublin, each of whom delivered impressive addresses.

The annual meeting of the deaf and dumb in Cork has been held in St. Mary's, Shandon. Rev. Dr. Gillandet, of New York, delivered an address, which was interpreted by Mr. McCormick, the missionary to the deaf and dumb in Cork. The deaf and dumb were afterwards entertained to dinner, and Mrs. Hungerford, of Shanakiel, opened her house and grounds to them and gave them tea.

West London Mission.

At the last public reception of new members in St. James's Hall, Mr. Price Hughes had the unspeakable happiness of giving the right hand of fellowship to more than sixty who have recently been converted. The majority of these were young men. The conversion and activity of young men become more and more marked features of the work at St. James's Hall. The only drawback just now is that the Men's Guild has such very limited accommodation. If someone, realising the inestimable importance of work amongst young men in West London, would place some suitable building at our disposal, this important feature of our work is capable of almost endless development and expansion. We are also greatly in want of men of culture, refinement, and experience, who would, at least, give a part of their time for various kinds of spiritual and social work that such men alone are qualified to do properly. We hope that the day is not distant when God will give us a settlement of men, who wil find in this neighbourhood the best sphere of mission work in all London.—Advance.

Unemployed in Calcutta.

Dear Sir,—The Industrial Home in Calcutta is an institution for European and Eurasian men out of employment. There are a large number of men who come to this country as seamen, or to take up employment promised, and for various reasons they find themselves adrift in a strange land, without friends, and without means of getting to the home country if they wish to go. In many instances men have come into the home, and after a few months or weeks, during which they have laboured at any work we can give them, they have found respectable employment and made a fresh start. Of course, one great part of the work is to try to bring these men under Christian influences. In this aim we have been blessed. During the year up to the present time we have been doing well in respect of outside help, and have had no difficulty in meeting current expenses and paying off several debts. We were encouraged to hope that before the end of the year the home would be clear of debt, and in a position to extend its work. Then comes the great catastrophe upon us. There is scarcely anyone in the city who has not sustained some loss or damage. Our manager has found it impossible to collect even the small amount required to make up the one month's expenses. Will the friends of India in England come to our help? England has been spared these troubles that have come upon India, and particularly Calcutta. For very thankfulness help us.

(Mrs.) A. F. Rempry, Honorary Secretary.

Scottish Reformation Society.—The encouragement of distinctly Protestant teaching by grants of text-books and the awarding of prizes continues to occupy a leading place in the society's operations. Dissemination of Protestant literature is another important branch of work prosecuted year after year, in the hope and with the prayer that the good seed of Divine truth thus scattered may, under God's blessing, prove fruitful. By such means, by lecturing, by directing attention to political measures in favour of Popery, by opposing these, and in other ways, the society does its utmost in discharge of the trust committed to it. Information concerning the promotion of classes, the supplying of preachers and lecturers, and respecting the entire scope of the society's efforts, may be obtained from the secretary, Rev. J. Sturrock, 17, George IV. Bridge, Edinburgh.

Obituary.

THE BISHOP OF WAKEFIELD.

We much regret to learn, as we are preparing for press, of the death of Dr. Walsham How, Bishop of Wakefield, which took place on Tuesday morning in Ireland, where he was spending a holiday. We are at present without any details. The deceased prelate will live in the memory of the Christian Church, if for nothing else, by his rich contributions to the hymnology of our day. His Diamond Jubilee hymn will be favourably remembered.

REV. D. H. HARRIS.

Intelligence has been received by his relatives in Newport, N.B., of the death of Rev. D. H. Harris, Natal. It is only a short time ago since Mr. Harris was on a visit to Newport, when he preached in the Congregational Church. Mr. Harris was returning to his labours, and had reached his brother's home on the Lower Umkomaas. He had gone to the river to bathe. On his failing to return, search was made, when his body was found on the beach. The funeral took place at Imfuma Mission Station, Mr. Harris's first field of labour. A local journal describes deceased as having been a "faithful, hard-working, devoted missionary."

BISHOP BICKERSTETH, OF JAPAN.

Bishop Edward Bickersteth, of South Tokio, eldest son of the Bishop of Exeter, died on Thursday morning last at Chisledon, Wiltshire, where he had been staying with his father-in-law, Mr. W. Forsyth, Q.C. Bishop Bickersteth contracted dysentery while on a missionary tour in Japan last autumn, and had to return to England at the beginning of the present year. By July he had recovered sufficiently to be able to attend the early meetings of the Lambeth Conference, where he introduced, at the request of the late Archbishop of Canterbury, the subject of foreign missions, but he was compelled by increasing weakness to withdraw. His medical advisers held out hopes that further rest would lead to complete recovery, but his constitution had been undermined by Indian fever, the result of many years' work in Delhi as Cambridge missioner; and on Sunday week pneumonia set in, from which he had not strength to rally. Dr. Bickersteth was educated at Pembroke College, Cambridge. He was the author of "The Church in Japan," "The Anglican Communion," and "A Basis of Christian Union." He was forty-seven years of age.

MR. ALFRED SUTTON, READING.

The death is announced of Mr. Alfred Sutton, J.P., who died at his residence at Reading on Saturday morning, in his seventy-ninth year. He was the second partner in the firm of Sutton and Sons. The business was founded by his elder brother, Mr. Martin John Sutton, who took him into the firm some sixty years ago. He took principally what may be termed the home part of the work, and thus assisted largely in building up the great business of the firm. Of late years he had retired from active life, the business being conducted by the sons of the two senior partners. Naturally of a retiring disposition, Mr. Sutton took no prominent part in public life, but he was deeply interested in educational progress, and for a time served on the Reading School Board. The British School and other similar institutions had in him a warm supporter. He was also a liberal subscriber to philanthropic societies and institutions for the sick and poor. He was a devoted Churchman, and for some years a warden at St. John's Church. All religious movements, especially those established for the benefit of young men, were dear to him. Missions, too, had in him an excellent advocate and a practical supporter.

MISS EMILY STEELE ELLIOTT.

This gifted Christian authoress and worker passed away on Tuesday of last week under an operation which she herself well knew beforehand might prove to her the door of heaven. She had been a great sufferer, and for twenty years or more had rarely left her couch except to engage in some special Christian service, or to take a journey for change of air. Her great literary talent was doubtless inherited from her godly ancestors. Amongst the best known were her father, Rev. E. B. Elliott, author of the "Horæ Apocalypticæ," and her aunt, Charlotte Elliott, the writer of the universally favourite hymn, "Just as I am"; whilst her strong missionary interests were in her own mind always associated with the fact of her near kinship with the well-known Venn family, with which her own family were closely connected by marriage.

For some years she edited the "Little Green Book," when children's missionary magazines were much fewer than now. Amongst her books the "Copsley Annals" is perhaps the greatest favourite of its class, whilst her "All the Day Long" has brought comfort and blessing to unnumbered Christian souls. Another of her writings that has been of great practical service to many is the charming little poem, "Do the Next Thing." Many of her poems were published together under the title of "Chimes of Consecration," and the reader of these will have been struck with the combination of high Christian tone, choice language, and chaste expression of thought. Her style—cultured, racy, and at times quaint—had a charm peculiarly its own, exhibiting under cover of deep and refined thought a certain Irish sparkle, which she probably inherited through her mother, the daughter of the late Sir Richard Steele, an Irish judge.

Miss Elliott was a deep student of the Scriptures, and those who had the privilege of attending her Bible readings and classes held from time to time in her own house at Mildmay will remember the penetrating insight into its deeper lights and shades that they were thus privileged to obtain. But, perhaps, the widest influence she exercised was by the charming little stories and Gospel letters which she wrote and circulated under the name of the "Christmas Letter Mission," which sought to bring to every inmate of our hospitals a bright, cheerful letter on Christmas morning, and which effort was latterly extended so as to include many classes of persons not originally contemplated. Her bright, cheerful, happy disposition and high standard of righteousness, were an inspiration to all who came in contact with her, and many will they be who will miss their cheer thus obtained.

Personalia.

Rev. John M'Neill spoke on Monday week at an open-air temperance meeting in Portrush.

Dr. Joseph Cook is now at his place at Ticonderoga, and is so far convalescent as to be able to write with pleasure.

Rev. Oscar Michelsen, having taken his wife to New South Wales for rest and change, has left again for his sphere in the New Hebrides.

The Bishop of Liverpool (Dr. Ryle), who has passed his eightieth birthday, has preached every Sunday since the end of his holiday last summer, and has (it is reported) had engagements for every week-day besides.

Miss A. M. Reynolds, general secretary of the World's Y.W.C.A., left London last week for a vacation in the United States. She will afterwards visit various State Y.W.C.A. Conventions, and hopes to return to England in November.

Miss Jennie Stoddard Clark, youngest daughter of Rev. Wm. H. Clark, D.D., of Detroit, Mich., sailed from New York on July 24 for London on her way to South Africa. She is going to Wellington, Cape Colony, to teach in Huguenot College.

Pandita Ramabai now has 200 famine girls, of whom all but about twelve are widows. The exceptions are orphans. It is her intention to still further enlarge her family, or rather families, of famine widows, for many of them are located on her farm some miles from Poona.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson and Mr. Crossfield have visited Suva, Fiji, in their tour of mission inspection for the L.M.S. Under the guidance of the Wesleyan chairman of the Fiji district, they paid a visit to one of the Wesleyan mission stations. They left for Samoa on Friday, June 11.

Rev. Charles Garrett has announced his retirement from the chairmanship of the Liverpool district of the Wesleyan Methodist Church. For a long period of years he has exercised a ministry of blessedness and power, and it is hoped that he will be spared many years to see the fruit of his unwearied labours.

Dr. James B. Angell, the new United States Minister to Turkey, has sailed for Constantinople. His mission is one of peculiar importance and delicacy (says an American contemporary), and he should have the prayers as well as the good wishes of all Christian people that he may have the wisdom required in his difficult position.

Rev. C. F. Nettleship, evangelist of the American Methodist Episcopal Church, is now on a visit to Great Britain, and will probably remain till next spring. Meantime he would be glad to assist any friends desiring his services in Gospel work. He comes with strong commendation from brethren on the other side; his address is 1, Corberry-terrace, Maxwelltown, Dumfries, N.B.

Mr. C. H. Dale, a wealthy miner of California, has left for Dawson city to establish a Salvation Army post in the mining camp. He was converted in San Francisco only three months ago, and since then has given much of his wealth to charity. He owns three mines. He may dig for gold at Klondike, but most of his time and attention will be devoted to Salvation Army work and to caring for the sick and needy.

Dr. Ramachandrayya, once a Hindu priest and now a Christian missionary, has lately been graduated from the Baltimore Medical College. He is a Brahman of the highest caste, a university man, and a learned Sanskrit scholar, a living refutation to the charge that the missionaries can reach only the lowest classes in India. He sounded Hinduism to its depths, studied Buddhism in its original sources, and after rejecting both as unable to answer the needs of his own spiritual life, he turned to Christianity, as taught in the missions, for light. He became convinced of the truth of Christianity, and declared himself a follower of Christ. He speaks perfect English and is a brilliant lecturer.

"The Excellence of Love."—1 Cor. xiii.

Golden Text.—"And now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; and the greatest of these is love."

PAUL has pointed out in the previous chapter that there is a work for each to do. All cannot be preachers, or prophets, or healers, but each may strive to possess the best gifts. There is, however, a better way still open to all. Each may possess the supreme spiritual gift, viz., Love.

I. Love is Best of All. It is better than:—

(i.) Eloquence (1). The teacher who loves his children has a larger influence than the one who talks well. Talk is hollow without love.

(ii.) Wisdom (2). Mother may not be so learned and shrewd as father, but she loves, therefore we love her.

(iii.) Faith (2). Faith is the coupling that joins the carriage to the engine, but love is the steam that makes the train travel. The coupling is useless without the steam.

(iv.) Sacrifice (3). That is where sacrifice is not produced by love: When the hand gives bread unprompted by the heart, it is "as cold as charity."

II. The Manifestations of Love.—We do not know what love is in itself. But we know when it exists in the heart by the deeds which it produces. "God loved the world." How do we know? "He gave his only begotten Son." "If any man say, I love God, and hateth his brother he is a liar." There must always be an outward and visible sign of the love that exists within us. Love shows itself by

(i.) Endurance (4). "Suffereth long." How a mother suffers for her child. Forgives him every wrong. So God loves us and suffered for us.

(ii.) Kindness. This is the common language of affection. We are kind to those we love—ready to act and think for them.

(iii.) Not envious. No father ever envied his son's success. Because he loves him. Brothers when they love each other rejoice in one another's prosperity.

(iv.) Humility. The lover is content to remain unknown if the loved one is glorified.

(v.) Courtesy (5)—i.e., good manners. In what small mirrors we see love. Offering your chair to the person who has just come into the room, giving a word of sympathy to one who is sorrowful, saluting a passer-by, doing all things gently without roughness or rudeness.

(vi.) Unselfishness (5). "Seeketh not her own.' Sometimes love makes us give up things we have a right to for the sake of others. Jesus had a right to all riches, but for our sakes he became poor.

(vii.) Patience. When we love someone we can bear a great many annoyances from that one without losing our temper. We are not touchy, sulky, or revengeful with people we love.

(viii.) Guileless (5). "Thinketh no evil." Not looking at everybody's actions through green spectacles. Closing our eyes to their faults, trying to excuse their weaknesses. Hesitating to find fault, and not thinking of it when found. Love covers a multitude of (other people's) sins.

(ix.) Pure (6). Taking a delight in things that are pure and true. Not rejoicing over another's fall, over hypocrisy, impure stories, and slander.

In verse 7 we get a gathering up of the many threads on which love has beaded itself in the preceding verses.

III. Love is Eternal (8). Prophecy is done with when it is fulfilled. Eloquence fades from the memory as time goes by. Knowledge becomes old-fashioned as fresh facts are discovered (9, 10). The knowledge of the child, though partly right, is lost in the fuller knowledge of the man (11). Life is to us a riddle now, but when we get to heaven the riddle will be solved, and we shall understand all the mystery of pain and sin. No longer looking at the reflection of God in the mirror of his works and our circumstances, we shall see Him face to face without a veil between (12). We cannot imagine ourselves living without a God to have faith in, or without a future to hope for. So these two will abide for ever. But greater than these is love, for God is Love, and, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God." So love is eternal, and the deeds of love abide for evermore. "The world passeth away, but he that doeth the will of God (loveth God) abideth for ever."

THE BOOK WORLD.

Bubbles. Dr. Barnardo's coloured magazine for boys and girls begins a new volume with the August part. This magazine appears in weekly numbers at a penny, and in monthly parts, with supplement, at sixpence. (Office, 158, Aldersgate-street, E.C.)

The Report of the Christian Endeavour Convention, held at Liverpool last Whitsuntide, makes a goodly book, much thicker than any of its predecessors. Edited by Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, and amply illustrated, the book is a budget of Endeavour information and instruction. (1s. Andrew Melrose.)

The Englishman on the Continent is a useful series of conversational manuals on the "Polyglot Kuntze System." The German and Italian issues are before us. They present such forms of speech as travellers require, with help in pronunciation, and are in shape just the thing for the breast pocket. (1s. each. Th. Wohlleben, 45, Great Russell-street, W.C.)

A very interesting chapter from the early Christian career of Mr. D. L. Moody is well told in the August Quiver. Another fresh and readable article, "We Ca' Them Lives o' Men," is devoted to an illustrated description of the herring fishing on the British coasts. A short story by "David Lyall" has in it some of the pathos of that writer, but there are some things that need explanation. "Kirk Sessions" are only to be found, we believe, in the Presbyterian Church, and no session or congregation in that body has the power of dismissing its minister.

Life of Richard Weaver. Edited by Rev. J. Paterson, B.D. (3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) The most imperishable memorial of the doughty evangelist who last year went to his heavenly rest will be found in the changed lives of those whom he led to the Saviour. But this record of his truly remarkable career will be welcomed and prized by many friends in all parts of the world. No one could possibly have told the story of Richard Weaver's early life and conversion so effectively as he did himself, and the reader will be correspondingly grateful for the autobiographical form of the bulk of the book. It is a deeply thrilling story, and ought to be a channel of spiritual stimulus and blessing to all who can be induced to peruse it. Mr. Paterson's personal recollections are admirable, and fit in well with the main narrative. The glimpses afforded by the story of the work of the late Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and others increase the interest of a memoir that ought to have countless readers. There are numerous and excellent illustrations, including a frontispiece, which is a speaking likeness of the evangelist in his later days.

A striking tractate on Romish idolatry is The Papal Anti-Christ, by Rev. G. Bennett. (½d. each, post free. Perkins, Bideford.)

The Gift of the Holy Spirit. By Charlotte Fenn. (5d. Marshall Bros.) A useful pamphlet, largely expository of Scripture teaching.

A Brief Exposition of the Lord's Prayer, by M. J. Pillans, is a simple treatment which will be useful to many. (2d. G. Stoneman.)

Sacred Similitudes. By M. J. Pillans. (9d. G. Stoneman.) Gospel parables and pictures are here made the subject of simple exposition and reflection.

The Saved Children Series of "Priory Tracts," by William Thomson, jun., should be of special service in work among young people. (1s. per 100. G. Stoneman.)

The Time of the End. By Walter Riddall, M.A., D.D. These pages are an exercise in chronology, largely but not entirely according to Mr. Dimbleby. (6d. Marshall Bros.)

The Penny Chronology, by W. T. Lynn, B.A., F.R.A.S., presents a series of important dates in the history of the world from the reign of David to the present time. (G. Stoneman.)

Everlasting Life: Words on John iii. 16. By George Kelsey. (6d. per dozen. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.) This booklet sets forth Scripture teaching on the way of salvation. It deserves a wide-spread circulation.

A tract of special value is Halt! Attention!! Right About Turn!!! By W. R. Bradlaugh. It gives "facts that soldiers ought to know." It ought to be circulated largely in Army and Navy. (6d. per dozen. J. Snow & Co.)

Emily Headland's booklet on the Ven. Herbert Maundrell, Archdeacon of Nagasaki, C.M.S. missionary in Madagascar and Japan from 1863 to 1890, completes the useful series of "Brief Sketches of C.M.S. Workers." (2d. Nisbet.)

Facts Stranger than Fiction, by Henrietta S. Streatfeild, is a booklet filled with striking facts and figures on foreign missions. It is marvellous what a large amount of information has been digested into these pages. (1d. Charles Caswell, Edmund-street, Birmingham.)

BOOKS RECEIVED.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The Corporation of London have voted fifty guineas to the Church Army in aid of the Society's work among the outcasts.

The oldest ecclesiastical building in Kilburn—known for many years as St. Paul's Chapel—has just been consecrated as a parish church by the Bishop of London.

The proposed missionary week throughout the country after the Church Congress has been abandoned, as the colonial bishops will mostly have left England.

Rev. Montague John Stone-Wigg, Canon and Sub-Dean of Brisbane Cathedral, has accepted the appointment of first bishop of the Anglican Mission in New Guinea.

The substitution of "Hymns Ancient and Modern" for "Church Hymns" in Canterbury Cathedral, which is made this month, is causing much regret among Evangelicals.

Preaching in Manchester Cathedral recently, the Bishop of Zanzibar urged upon all to assist in a generous spirit the spread of Christianity in foreign lands. One object of the Central African Mission, he said, was the raising up of a native ministry.

The Bishop of Hereford, speaking at a conference held in Oxford last week, said he did not remember a period in the course of his life when personal greed was so prominent, and had such a strong grip on private, political, commercial, and industrial life as it has now.

The Bishop of St. David's has opened the nave of Swansea parish church, which has been rebuilt at a cost of £14,000, from designs by Sir Arthur Blomfield. At a luncheon afterwards, the Mayor wished success to the movement now on foot for raising £12,000 for the immediate rebuilding of the chancel and tower.

The Earl of Carlisle's private chapel at Castle Howard has been reopened. It was closed a few years ago, the services being then conducted under the régime of the Church of England. They will now be undenominational, and will be continued once a month. Rev. John Holroyd, Congregational minister, will officiate.

Nearly 850 seven-day parochial missions have been held during the past six months, free of charge, by the van missioners of the Church Army, while £1200 worth of Bibles, Prayer Books, Gospel and temperance literature were sold to the villagers; thirty-three vans are constantly at work, and the committee hope to be enabled shortly to place several more in the field.

Deep regret is felt at the approaching retirement of Rev. J. G. Gregory, M.A., from the incumbency of Emmanuel Church, Brighton, which takes effect at Michaelmas next. During the nineteen years Mr. Gregory has resided in Brighton he has done a most useful and valuable work as a faithful and effectual ambassador for Christ, both by lip and pen. He will be greatly missed, but Brighton's loss will be Leamington's gain, for it is to the latter town that Mr. Gregory goes as incumbent of Christ Church.

Congregational.

Rev. George Hadfield has completed the twenty-third year of his pastorate of Wombwell Church.

The chapel at Wollaston, near Wellingborough, is to be reopened for services, after being closed for more than twenty years.

Rev. J. W. Atkinson's twenty-eighth anniversary of settlement as pastor has been celebrated at Latimer Chapel, East London.

The church in Friar-lane, Nottingham, which dates from 1827, is to be sold, and with the proceeds two churches are to be erected in the suburbs.

The Congregational Union will visit Birmingham to hold its autumnal session, under the presidency of Rev. Dr. C. A Berry (Wolverhampton), the meetings commencing Oct. 11.

Rev. J. Stephens, pastor, preached at the opening of Brynteg Chapel. The church dates from 1693, the old building, which is now being kept intact to be used as a vestry, having been built in 1846. The new chapel is lighted by acetylene, seats 650, and has cost about £1700.

Calls.—Rev. C. Mason, to be assistant minister at Burgess Hill (accepted); Mr. J. Osborne, of Mansfield College, to Runcorn; Rev. S. Knowles, Halifax, to Union Church, Winchcombe, Gloucestershire; Rev. J. Calvert, late of Nottingham, to Emmanuel Church, Margate.

Baptist.

East London Tabernacle Church is inviting Rev. W. Y. Fullerton, of Leicester, to the pastorate.

Rev. J. R. Cooper, of Portland Church, South Australia, has just returned to this country, where he hopes to enter upon a pastorate.

On a recent Sunday morning nine persons were baptized in the river at North Bradley, in presence of a large number of spectators, by Rev. C. Davis. A similar service was held at the waterside at St. Ives by Rev. S. Haynes.

Sunday-school teachers connected with the churches of South Lincolnshire recently held a conference at Skegness. Reports submitted were generally most encouraging. The number of scholars in the Union is 13,900, and there are 163 teachers.

The anniversary of the pastor at Clarence-road, Southend, (Rev. F. A. Hogbin) was celebrated on Sunday week, Mr. George Nokes being the preacher. At a public meeting on the following Wednesday it was stated that eighteen persons were baptized during the year, and twenty-nine added to the church.

Special meetings have been held in Bromley-road church Lee, in connection with the first anniversary of the new building. A sermon was preached by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch. Mr. William Olney presided over a public meeting at which Pastor J. W. Davies submitted a report which stated that a debt of £54 still remains on the new premises. At a subsequent stage of the meeting promises were invited towards this amount, with the result that it was more than cleared.

Calls.—Rev. W. B. Nicholson, Kirkintilloch, to the co-pastorate at Bristo-place, Edinburgh; Mr. David Stannard, formerly of the "Martyrs' Memorial" School, Beccles, to Pulham St. Mary, Norfolk; Rev. W. Carey Sage to Duffield; Rev. Wm. Lawrence Tweedie, of Cork, to Zion Baptist Church, Tenterden, Kent (all accepted).

Methodist.

Chapels in the Channel Islands are being well attended by visitors during the summer.

A "Dr. S. Antliff" Memorial Church (P.M.) is being erected at Draycott, Derby First Circuit.

Wesley Church, Padiham, has commemorated its jubilee. The church was opened on July 30, 1847, by Rev. George B. Macdonald.

London-street Church, Reading, has just celebrated its jubilee missionary anniversary. It has raised £1250 towards African missions.

Seventeen class-rooms, a reading-room, church parlour, and central hall are to be erected in connection with Centenary Church, Boston, at an estimated cost of £2000.

Epworth Leaguers from the United States, to the number of 20,000, went to Toronto for the annual convention. A prominent feature of the assembly was the repeated expression of cordial international amity.

Rev. Dr. Stephenson with Mrs. Stephenson are sailing for Canada to visit the Canadian Home, and especially to inquire into the probable result of the recent legislation in Ontario affecting juvenile emigration.

There are now 600 Wesley guilds, with 34,000 members. The movement has extended to India and other parts of the world. The activities of these institutions are numerous, and the object is the engagement of young people in earnest work.

"An Old Wesleyan" has offered £100, to be distributed as prizes for the three best essays on "The Leakage of Methodism." It is said that when they leave Methodism Wesleyans do not, as a rule, swell the ranks of non-church-goers; they join the Church of England.

Presbyterian.

Rev. A. Herbert Gray has been inducted as minister of Grosvenor-square Church, Manchester.

Dr. MacEwan's pulpit at Clapham-road Church is occupied during his holiday chiefly by ministers from Scotland.

The question of a successor to Dr. Pentecost at Marylebone Church has been postponed by the Selection Committee until October.

Extensive alterations are contemplated at St. James's Church, Wood Green. Accommodation will be provided for 240 additional sittings at a cost of about £1600.

Salvation Army.

General Booth is visiting Holland next week.

The work amongst the Chinese in San Francisco continues to progress. Numbers of converts are being made.

In Germany, where the work has signally increased of late, six new stations were opened on the 1st of the month.

Evangelistic work on the coasts of Newfoundland is being carried on with good results by the crew of The Salvationist, a vessel specially set apart for this purpose.

Arrangements are being completed for large extensions of the native work in South Africa. A corps is also to be opened at Buluwayo, and the commencement of operations in Matabeleland is an event of the near future.

Commander Booth-Tucker is in the West inspecting wild lands in Colorado and other places with a view of launching a colonisation scheme. His purpose is to establish training-farms near New York City. When they have become familiar with the business, he proposes to transport them to the lands selected in the West.

An enthusiastic farewell demonstration to bid godspeed to Mrs. Booth-Tucker, who is returning to her work in the United States, was held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday last week. She gave most interesting accounts of the all-round progress made by the Army in the States during the last twelve months, especially in connection with the Social operations.

Fallen Asleep.

At Padiham, aged sixty-three, Miss Margaret Oxley wife of Councillor Oxley, a deacon of Mount Zion Baptist Church.—At Bromyard, Mr. James Jinks, J.P., who founded the Congregational cause at Bromyard, and was prominent in every good work.—Rev. J. Morland Rice, for thirty-three years rector of Bramber, and vicar of St. Botolph's, Brighton.—Mr. John Skinner, formerly accountant in the National Bank, Aberdeen, for many years an office-bearer and leader in all movements connected with Blackfriars Congregational Church.—Rev. J. W. Henderson, at his residence, Dunelm, Bridlington Quay, who entered the Methodist ministry in 1862.—Mr. Edwin Lawton, for many years superintendent of the Sunday-school, and oldest member at Uppermill Congregational Church.—Rev. Wm. Whitelegge, hon. canon of Manchester, aged eighty-three.—Rev. John Evans, vicar of Landovery and rural dean, an earnest preacher and a sound Evangelical Churchman.—Mr. James Swallow, of Sunderland, father of the President of the United Methodist Annual Assembly, long and usefully associated with Dock-street Church.—At Cumlin, co. Antrim, Mrs. James Johnson, aged seventy-five years, an earnest and devoted Christian.—At Rathfriland, Mrs. Waterson, a liberal contributor to nearly every good cause.

Bethnal Green Free Library.—The committee appeal for funds to enable them to clear off liabilities that have accumulated during the organisation of the lending department for the free use of the population (about 130,000). The new feature is highly appreciated by the many borrowers. The treasurer is Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

British Empire Cruise.—Arrangements are being made for a cruise around the British Empire, in commemoration of the sixtieth year of Her Majesty's reign. The proposal has already received the sympathetic support of some very eminent representatives of the colonies. It is intended that the cruise shall commence on Dec. 28, proceeding by Gibraltar, Malta, and Cyprus, to Egypt; thence, calling at Aden, to Bombay, where a section of the party will travel overland through the Punjaub and the North-West Provinces to Calcutta, the majority going round vid Colombo and Madras to that port. From India, the vessel will proceed eastwards to Burmah and Singapore, touching the Australian Continent first at Brisbane. The vessel will then proceed from Queensland to New Zealand, and from the Antipodes the journey home will be vid Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide, and Perth, to Natal and Cape Colony. The cruise will occupy five months. Dr. Lunn (5, Endsleigh-gardens, N.W.) is arranging to charter the s.s. Berlin, a first-class Trans-Atlantic liner, 5641 tons, for the voyage.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WILL any readers favour the publishers by sending their copies of The Christian for January 7 of this year?

Sir Isaac Holden, who died last week, was not an "eight hours" man. As a boy, after working fourteen hours in a cotton mill, he attended evening classes, and "acquired a considerable acquaintance with mathematics, physics, and classics." He was a man of dogged determination and perseverance, and having once made up his mind that it was not, as he was assured, "impracticable" to apply machinery to the process of wool-combing, he allowed no discouragements to divert his thoughts from the idea. "Again and again," we are told, "he got close to success with his main endeavours, only just to miss it; but at last he triumphed, and took out his patent," though it took "twenty years of continued application" to accomplish his purpose. Nor were his religious convictions less deeply rooted. He was as "fervent in spirit" as he was "diligent in business." Such men the world can ill afford to lose.

One of the resolutions passed at the Lambeth Conference related to the proper attitude of the Church of England towards the work of successful missionaries of other communions. It is as follows :—

That in the foreign mission field of the Church's work, where signal spiritual blessings have attended the labours of Christian missionaries not connected with the Anglican Communion, a special obligation has arisen to avoid, as far as possible without compromise of principle, whatever tends to prevent the due growth and manifestation of that "unity of the Spirit," which should ever mark the Church of Christ.

Of course this may mean much or little, according to the interpretation given to the qualifying clause, "as far as possible without compromise of principle." In the mind of a narrow exponent of the Church's ecclesiastical principles it would mean nothing at all; in the mind of a broad-hearted Churchman it might lead to the friendliest relations with brother missionaries. On the whole, work in the foreign field has been done with a much greater willingness to work together in the best spirit than has been the case at home; and it is to be hoped that this resolution will help to make that co-operation more and more effective.

The death of the Bishop of Wakefield is raising again the question of fairness to parties in the appointment of bishops by the Government. Out of a total of thirty-four bishops, twenty are High Churchmen, of whom Lord Salisbury has appointed thirteen; there are five Evangelical bishops, of whom he has appointed three. Nearly half the Bench of Bishops is of his creating. We fail to remember any instance, unless we go back to old persecuting times, in which one man has had so much to do with making the English Church. The News asks :—

How could the Presbyterian or Nonconformist communions survive if their leaders were appointed, irrespective of the voice of their members, by patrons who held views opposed to their principles?

Of course, the party which is out in the cold is sure to complain; but the broad issue for men of all parties in the Church of England, and of others who do not belong to that communion, to face, is that we have the strongest and richest fellowship in this country half made by one man, and he a High Churchman. This is not after the manner of the Church at the beginning.

The English Churchman notices that while the Ritualistic party is actively preparing for the London School Board election in November, there is a great deal of reserve as to their ultimate objects, yet one thing is clear :

They are determined to use the Board school system for the purpose of teaching Ritualistic doctrines to as many of the children as they can secure.

Prebendary Montagu Villiers, Vicar of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, is taking a leading part in the movement. It is not easy, with so many claims pressing daily upon busy Christians in London, to realise that a sleepless enemy is ever at work in the religious world, ready to seize every endowment, to officer every institution, to proselytise every man, woman and child. The safety of the School Board depends largely upon the active and united efforts of all who love religious liberty and evangelical truth.

The threatened strike of telegraphists, on the ground of various grievances from which they had suffered, has been fortunately averted; first, owing to the conciliatory offices of Sir Albert Rollit, who brought about a conference between the Post Office authorities and the representatives of the men, and, since the unpopular award of the Postmaster-General was published, through the moderate spirit of the men themselves, who have wisely determined to postpone further agitation till the meeting of Parliament in February. It has been a victory for "conciliation" and common-sense, and the telegraphists have been well advised to avoid extremes. To have struck would have thrown the whole business-world into chaos, and utterly alienated public sympathy. The moderation of the complainants will tell greatly in their favour when the matter comes up for discussion in the House of Commons.

It is good to see that the new Passmore-Edwards Settlement in St. Pancras is to have a department for the encouragement of Bible study. This has been placed on a permanent basis by the establishment of a "Jowett Lectureship," under the management of a special committee. This department, like the rest of the settlement, will be absolutely free from sectarian influence or control. Nowadays, when such a multiplicity of startling books is issued from the press, the Bible is neglected for something new; and while we are fully aware that the most helpful Bible study must be in isolation, yet to get young people to undertake a systematic study of the Truth will do much to fortify them against infidelity. It will lead, too, to that experimental meditation which inspires for duty and temptation.

In consequence of the falling off in the membership of the Young Men's Friendly Society, and the somewhat feeble condition of the Church of England Young Men's Society, these two institutions are likely to be amalgamated, and possibly started on a broader basis. It is a strange fact that while undenominational societies like the Y.M.C.A. and the Polytechnic are growing and widening in their influence, these two distinctively Church agencies are struggling for existence. The Archbishop of Canterbury is giving his attention to the matter, and he will probably nominate a strong committee to formulate a plan for putting the work of the Church among young men on a more satisfactory basis. We are not without our strong suspicion that the sacerdotal spirit which is endeavouring to annex all departments of life in the Church of England is responsible for its lack of interest to young men. The more intelligent among them do not relish the assumption of priestly authority among the High Church clergy, who are greatly mistaken if they think their pretensions are popular among the laity.

Mrs. Benham, of the Sunday School Union, made rather a good suggestion at the British Chautauqua last week. Probably all who are interested in the work feel that the relation between the Church and the Sunday School should be much closer than it is at present. Mrs. Benham advocated the ordination of the officers and teachers in a church meeting. We can quite conceive that if the church set apart certain members of its communion for special work among the children it would give the teachers a more vivid sense of their responsibility and at the same time link the school to the church by a bond which does not exist at present. There would be no undue interference in this, for new officers may be nominated and even elected by the body of existing teachers and then set apart by the voice and prayers of the whole Church.

It is somewhat of a shock to one's early ideas to hear that Robert Raikes was not the founder of the Sunday-school after all. The Rev. C. H. Kelly, states that Theophilus Lindsay, Vicar of Catterick, in 1763, and Miss Hannah Ball in 1769, gathered children around them on Sunday afternoon to receive religious teaching. A writer in Longman's Magazine also points out that when Robert Raikes was a boy, Catherine Bovey, who lived in a village about twelve miles from his native city, held a small school on her own account. If we wished to find the first pious, kind-hearted soul who gave religious instruction to children on Sunday, we should have to go much further back than the dates mentioned, but in 1780 Robert Raikes called a large number of children together, and paid other people to teach them. This was the birth of the great Sunday-school system as we know it to-day.

The wheel of life goes round. Those who are at the top of society to-day will be at the bottom to-morrow. But the converse of this is also true. We have recently had several remarkable instances of college honours won by men who were once Board-school boys. Many of our most popular authors of to-day were born and bred in the homes of the poor. Not a few members of Parliament, including the gentleman just elected for Sheffield, are sons of the peasantry. How many of our present Sunday-school boys may, if influenced now for Christ, in years to come, when they, too, occupy lofty social positions, let their light shine brightly for their Master. One of the most important qualifications for a Sunday-school teacher is the ability to appreciate the dormant possibilities in every child who comes under his control.

A fortnight ago, writing on published statements regarding the inquiry into the management of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, we spoke of Lord Herschell's report as a "complete vindication." The full text of the report having since been issued, we have observed with much regret that there are reasons for this first impression being qualified. It is a pity that such a good cause should suffer eclipse through mismanagement; but Lord Herschell's various recommendations show that in some respects the administration has needed reform.

England is again busy with her "little frontier wars." In Mashonaland the last embers of rebellion are being crushed out. In India another tribe is reported to be in revolt, and an important struggle is being waged in the Swat valley. And now we are once more at work in the Soudan, Abu Hamed has fallen, and we are told that this must involve a "general advance." How far these movements are the fruit of political necessity, and how far in the real interests of humanity, it is not easy for those outside the secret councils of the Government to determine. The one bright spot in the Egyptian struggle is, as the newspapers say, that "the inhabitants, as was the case during the advance of the Dongola expedition, have shown every sign of rejoicing at their delivery from the Dervish tyranny."

The horrible assassination of the Premier of Spain, Señor Canovas, has sent the usual thrill of horror throughout Europe. It was the fruit of anarchist counsels, and once more an Italian figured as the assassin. The crime is stated to be in retaliation "for the cruel persecution and torture which the dead statesman inflicted on Spaniards who held advanced opinions of any kind." This is from a resolution passed by the executive of the Council of the Social Democratic Federation, which, while holding this view, professes itself strongly opposed to the theories and tactics of the anarchists. That Spain is a country where liberty of opinion has yet to be born is known to all the world; but liberty will never be born of murder and crime. The assassin, of course, poses as a martyr.

Some writers in the continental Press accuse England of permitting anarchists to devise plots and manufacture weapons against other Governments without any checks on their actions. This charge is quite unjustified. The whole anarchist colony, which centres in Goodge-street, W., is closely and unceasingly watched by Scotland Yard, though with as little publicity as possible. Arrests are made from time to time, and the confederation has been again and again broken up by sudden raids. The anarchist movement has never been more than "a very sickly plant in this country," and this is mainly because no opportunity is given to its members to pose as the victims of persecution. Just now the leading organ of Anarchist-Communism in England has ceased publication owing to lack of funds. There is probably no country in Europe where Anarchism is so moribund, or its advocates so discredited and discouraged.

The Sultan is assuming a new rôle, and is figuring through the Turkish Press as the humanitarian champion of down-trodden Islamism in India. The pet organ of Yildiz Kiosk, the Malumat, is engaged in a strong polemic against British tyranny beyond the Himalayas, the aim, of course, being to foment discontent among the Mohammedan subjects of the Queen. It is well-known that the Sultan considers England to be his arch-enemy, and he is not likely to stop at anything which he thinks will disparage her authority. How far he hopes to succeed in his new idea it is not easy to say; that he will fail goes without saying. Islam in India is not a powerful factor, nor are Mohammedans greatly beloved of their fellow-subjects. The movement is really significant only through the light it throws on the utterly unscrupulous character of the Sultan himself.

The French authorities seem determined to defeat the work of the L.M.S. in Madagascar. Their latest move has been to force the retirement of Rev. J. Richardson, who has been a missionary in the island for twenty-eight years, and the head master of the Normal School at Antananarivo for twenty-three years, by taking his school from him and handing it over to the French Protestant missionaries, on the condition that "no Englishman was ever to be allowed to enter it." General Gallieni, who visited the school, was forced to allow the excellent quality of the work of the L.M.S. educationalists, but told the newly-arrived French missionaries that "their influence is so great that it is necessary to crush it." It is very melancholy and disheartening to these good men to realise that the very quality of their work is the chief reason why they are debarred from carrying it on. Behind this "political policy" the hand of the Jesuits is to be plainly discerned.

A policeman must do his duty, and we suppose it is his duty to awake sleepers on the seats of the Thames Embankment, and tell them to move on. One such sleeper, when a policeman aroused him at two o'clock on Thursday morning, and passed on his beat, threw his hat on the ground, and shouting to his companions on the seat, "Good-bye, brothers in misfortune!" jumped into the river and was drowned. It is said that there were at least 250 homeless men and women on the Embankment at the time, and that a number of the women witnessed the suicide. The whole story is painfully sad. To-night the poor homeless creatures might be helped, but to-morrow night there would be as many or more of them again, not a few of whom would be incorrigible vagabonds. A millionaire might soon get rid of a fortune, and make things worse rather than better. Love and wisdom may do something, but behind the poverty are certain great causes which require to be dealt with.

Those who carelessly affirm that crime, as a whole, has increased since the Education Act of 1871, would do well to consider the following facts drawn from official statistics. To begin with, the number of prisons has decreased from 113 in 1870 to sixty-two in 1896 (five convict and fifty-seven local prisons). The average daily number of prisoners in local prisons in England and Wales in 1871 was 18,465, out of a population of 22,704,000. In 1896 this number was reduced to 13,982, out of a population of 30,731,000—i.e., it was proportionately far less than half. The contrast is still more striking in the case of convicts. These in 1870 amounted to 11,890; in 1896 they had fallen to 4159. These figures are conclusive evidence that, so far as social order and public morality are concerned, the non-sectarian teaching of the Board schools has been a vast boon to the country. As a matter of fact, very few children who stay long enough in school, to learn reading and writing, ever enter any prison.

But how is it, that in spite of these facts, the proportion of habitual offenders in the criminal population is steadily increasing? Mr. W. D. Morrison, in his book on "Juvenile Offenders," says that poverty is not the principal condition; "there is most crime where there is least pauperism." Nor is it drunkenness, for "only 15 or 20 per cent. of the boy criminals have parents addicted to drink." He finds the chief cause in the degrading effects of overcrowding in great cities, implying, as it does, early familiarity with the worst vices, and the absence of healthy public opinion. How to correct the evils of overcrowding is therefore one of the gravest and most pressing problems of the time. At present there is little public interest in the question, and until this has been aroused social reformers will find their work severely hampered.

The Rector of Spitalfields, Rev. W. H. Davies, in a recent interview, gives a touching account of Spitalfields, which has been called "the sink of London." He says that its squalor is largely the result of over-crowding. In an area of seventy acres, there are nearly 23,000 huddled together. The poverty that everywhere meets the eye is not altogether or chiefly due to drunkenness or vice. The people there are merely "inefficients." They come to us professing their willingness to do anything, and one knows as one looks at them that they can do practically nothing. Mr. Davies says a good word for many of the lodging-house keepers who abound in the neighbourhood, numbers of whom keep their places clean and respectable, and for the vestry, which is gradually improving the physical conditions, by widening the streets, sweeping away courts and alleys, and demolishing insanitary buildings. The churches are doing a good work, socially and religiously. So that there is hope even for Spitalfields.

The Fernley Lecture for 1897 by Rev. J. Scott Lidgett, M.A., is on "The Spiritual Principle of the Atonement, as a Satisfaction made to God for the Sins of the World." The choice of subject shows the unfailing hold that the Atonement has upon the mind and heart of every generation. The extent of the Atonement was the phase of the great theme which exercised the thoughts of men at the beginning of the century; and gradually the conclusion was reached that it was for the sins of the whole world; every man was remembered in it, and might at once receive Jesus Christ as his own propitiation. So common is this faith that in almost every church you may count on hearing it, if you hear anything of the Atonement at all. In later days, up to the present time, Christian thought in all churches has been directed to the nature of the Atonement, until it is now, we believe, a very generally accepted conclusion that the Atonement is "a satisfaction made to God." Dr. Simon, in his book "The Redemption of Man," points out how the personal relation between God and man is the view of Atonement which always comes to the fore in times of revival, when the heart and conscience are deeply stirred.

In Professor Goldwin Smith's new volume on "Guesses at the Riddle of Existence"—which is devoted mainly to the statement of objections against the Christian conception of life—one of the arguments against the scheme of salvation revealed in the Gospel is the charge that it assumes the earth to be the centre of the universe and the grand scene of providential action, and that the new astronomy makes this incredible. It is almost beyond belief that intelligent men should raise such a crude objection as this, and yet it appears constantly in anti-Christian literature. Because the earth is proved to be an outlying planet in the solar system, which in itself is but one system of stars among countless others, are we to lose faith in the interest and love of the Creator for man? Whatever science may or may not have proved, it has thrown no shred of doubt that man is, so far as we know, the highest created being, and his moral uniqueness and supremacy are as firmly established as ever.

But even if it were proved to demonstration that man were but one among many orders of spiritual beings in the universe, and that he alone had fallen into sin and needed a Saviour, the revelation of God's grace in the Gospels would be entirely in keeping with the facts. Our Lord's mission was mainly to the lapsed and the lost; his parables reveal the love of the Father to those on the far circumference of life, as well as those at its centre; and as though to anticipate such an objection as this, the main emphasis is laid on the purpose of God as embracing the most unlikely and unworthy classes. From what He tells us, we know that if only the farthest star in the universe had wandered from its orbit, or the least exalted among his creatures had fallen, there would the Divine love be revealed, there would the Incarnation and the Cross be lifted up. This is the clear implication of such parables as are contained in the 14th and 15th chapters of Luke, which are idylls of perfect love seeking the insignificant and the lost.

Dr. C. Diener, of Vienna, an eminent scientist, after an inquiry into the geology of the region, has been led to the conclusion that the basin of the Dead Sea was caused by a violent earthquake after a series of smaller undulatory movements. Thereby great volumes of subterranean waters were forced up to the surface, with landslips and inundations. On the eastern margin of the sea the crater of a volcano was opened at the same time, and an eruption took place. He contends that past and present geological conditions agree with his theory. This is another evidence that we can afford to wait for light on the Scriptures. They are as yet our only authority upon a great many questions belonging to nature and to history, and it is neither just nor wise to repudiate them when we cannot confirm them. Confirmation comes with the enlargement of knowledge.

The publication of a book should be considered, not from the point of view of the author, wishing to see his writings in print, but from the point of view of the public, who will be pleased, benefited, edified, instructed, interested, amused, amazed, or astounded by it—just as a preacher's aim must be, not to get off his sermon, but to reprove, rebuke, exhort, evangelise his audience. His mission—from God to the people. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link. A small selection, or even a single poem, of marked character or power will ensure success, whereas it might be lost amongst a number of inferior merit. In this age of multiplied bookmaking, to which one would think Solomon must have looked forward when he said, "Of making many books there is no end," no one ought to publish anything but his best, and that ought to have some definite object, and that object of sufficient general interest, and of sufficient merit, to secure attention and do good.

The Indian Witness, while admitting that the chaplains of the troops in India mean well, and are interested in the welfare of the men, also believes that to a large extent

> They have not the spiritual power to grapple with wicked hearts, and are not fitted for close personal dealing with individual sinners.

This is a very serious statement to make, and perhaps not so easy to substantiate. It is well, however, that the responsibility of all officers and chaplains should be insisted upon, for, as the Chaplain-General to the Forces says:—

> Men follow their officers hence the influence of the officers is most potent, and has ever to be reckoned with.

The life and influence of an officer must be tested by a higher than military standard, even a moral, much as it has been the custom to sneer at morality and religion.

Weakness of Criticism.

By Rev. HENRY STURT.

In speaking of the Higher Criticism, I have no wish to disparage the most searching investigation of all the books of the Bible. Truth, like a torch, "the more it's shook it shines." "The future," as the late Professor Huxley said, "lies with the men who have regard to facts." Only we must have all the facts. The investigation must be complete, and it must proceed upon sound principles. Speculation and guesswork must not take the place of evidence. A witness must not be put out of court because his testimony is not convenient. Facts must not be made to bend to a theory, but the theory must be framed in harmony with the facts.

It is here that I find myself brought to a stand by the Higher Criticism. Canon Driver, one of its leaders, tells us frankly, "that the inductive method, which draws its conclusions from facts, is not the one adopted, because it is tedious. The method pursued has often been to assume a conclusion to be established, and then to point to salient facts which exemplify or presuppose its truth." This practice is utterly unscientific and vitiates the reasoning along the whole line. In this respect the child is worthy of its parent. For theory-making is the characteristic, indeed the bane of the school that gave birth to the Higher Criticism. "It springs," says Bishop Ellicott, "from that aversion to the supernatural which has ever characterised the Rationalists, and even the more moderate advocates of it seem anxious to reduce that element to a minimum." With foregone conclusions that the supernatural must be false, they proceed to deal with the history, and with the books of the Bible in which the history is contained. No language could better describe the process than the following by Professor Robertson, of Glasgow:—"A specialist with a theory is a very unsafe guide when questions of evidence have to be settled. He may see possible combinations, constructions, or emendations, that the ordinary reader would never dream of; he may combine, transpose, eliminate, and amend, and so, by a triumph of ingenuity, bring out an unexpected result, while all the time a plain and simple meaning stares him in the face, from which he gets away to one recondite and fanciful."

The modern theory makes history to be a mere nose of wax, which can be twisted into any shape that may be wanted. It is a veritable bed of Procrustes. If the evidence is too short, it must be stretched; if too long, it must be cut to fit. The book of Joshua, e.g., is a fatal witness against the modern theory, proving the Mosaic origin of the laws of the Pentateuch. So it must be put out of court as a false witness. Words and phrases are found in the middle of verses, which do not suit the theory. So their authenticity must be questioned, and they must be assigned to some author who lived hundreds of years afterwards. The patriarchs, and Moses, and the early history of Israel, are said to be to a large extent mythical.

The Tabernacle in the wilderness is a monumental witness against the critics, and in favour of the Levitical legislation as the work of Moses. We are told that that is only "idealised history"; there was in reality no such thing! It was only the idea of Solomon's temple "made portable," and projected into the past by the writer of the fiction. But what about the Temple itself, with its swarming priests, and all its sacrifices, bearing witness to the words and works of Moses? "Oh," we are told, "that also is fabrication!" of the writer who wrote the book of Chronicles. Was there ever such a set of knaves, on the one hand, as these writers must have been, to palm such falsehoods upon an entire nation? And was there ever such a set of simpletons, on the other hand, as the rest of the people must have been to be so easily duped, that not a single witness ever rose to detect and expose the imposture? Surely, Professor Robertson is right when he says: "It is time we had criticism of a saner sort"; and the late Bishop Lightfoot spoke with truth when he declared it "an incredible inversion of history"; and Dean Chadwick had reason for the remark, "The modern theory is so heavily weighted with improbability and adverse evidences that it will break down with its own weight"!

That there are difficulties and peculiarities in the Old Testament, not easily explained, we all know. So there are in all ancient history and documents, which the great and competent historians of the world have dealt with in a very different way from that which the Higher Criticism has adopted in relation to the Bible. But difficulties do not disprove the broad facts which are written on the surface of the Biblical records, and were embodied in the actual belief and history of the Jews. They only show that we have not the full knowledge to explain them. Some of these difficulties are the mistakes of the critics themselves, or the creation of their inventive faculties, or the misreading of the Scriptures, which oftentimes not only fail to prove the point for which they are quoted, but frequently prove the very reverse. To attempt to explain the difficulties of the Bible by this strange theory, which makes them ten-fold greater in number and magnitude, is like the curious remedy of cutting off the head of a thing in order to save its life.

St James's Church, Bath.—The work at St. James's is the subject of a descriptive article in the August number of Church and People. The parish takes in the business part of the town. There are 4000 people, but quite 2000 of them live from hand to mouth. There is a large staff, viz., the vicar, two curates, two lay helpers, and two Bible-women. The Mission band renders excellent service, particularly in the open air.

Mountain-Top Experiences.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

AT this season of the year, when so many people are setting their faces toward the pure air and picturesque outlook of various "everlasting hills," it is a good time to say a word about the Christian's mountain-top experiences. Many of the greatest events mentioned in the Bible are linked with certain mountains; they are both nature's monuments, and the memorials of divine grace. Ararat, the patriarch of mountains, smoked with the first sacrifice in the restored world; Moriah reminds us of the victory of faith; and Nebo of the Christian's vision of the celestial Canaan. Sinai still towers as the sublime symbol of Divine law, and Olivet is redolent with Christ's loving interviews with his disciples. Carmel quickens our faith in the power of prayer; and Zion is the type of Christ's everlasting reign, and the saint's everlasting rest.

On a certain occasion Jesus took his three favourite disciples up into a high mountain apart; it was probably one of the southern spurs of Hermon, and it commanded a wide outlook. The Master is still doing the same thing with his followers. Worldliness has a tendency to dwarf us, and selfishness to cramp us into narrow quarters. We need to be called up where we can not only live higher but look more widely—where we will not think of our little selves, but of the wants and claims of other people. That is the way the Master deals with the men and women whom He wishes to make useful; He calls them up out of the lower atmosphere of selfishness, and teaches them that true religion does not consist in feeling happy, but in making others happy. That is the true "higher life," which lifts us into a closer fellowship with Jesus, and at the same time into a wider outlook. Then heavenly things come into our vision; for the things which selfishness sees are temporal, but the things which faith sees are eternal.

When Jesus took these three disciples up into that high mountain apart, he brought them into a close communion with Himself. They saw no man but Jesus only; and it was good to be there. The Master had times and places for quiet converse with his disciples; once on the peak of Hermon, but oftener on the sacred slopes of Olivet, and there He held his last interview before his ascension. Every Christian now should have his Olivet also. Most of us, especially in the cities and towns, live at high pressure. From early morning until bed-time we are exposed to the whirl. The world meets us at the breakfast-table in the columns of the morning newspaper; then we launch out into the crowded day. Care collars the tradesman, the lawyer, the mechanic—in fact, every man, as soon as he leaves his home. The day's furnace of exciting occupation is kindled in the morning, and glows at a white heat until the sunset. After such bustling days come the evening meal, the evening paper, the evening visitors, the social entertainments, and in some happy cases the evening prayer-meeting in the house of God. Amid all this maelstrom how little chance for quiet thought, for family worship, for God's Word, for prayer and heart-fellowship with the blessed Master!

Can no Olivet be found? Can Christian dwellers in the cities and the towns discover no times or places for meditation, for prayer, for spiritual reading, for their Bibles, or for heart-converse with their Saviour? Yes, they may if they will resolutely determine so. The leading Christian merchant of New York was in the habit of rising early and having a good half-hour over his Bible and on his knees before he met his family for household worship; and then he went to his place of business with his face shining. Another one walked home for his noon-day lunch with his family, and said that he thus caught time for good thought and secret prayer; Arthur Tappan had a private room for noon-day devotions up in his warehouse; and some catch a little refreshment in the noon prayer-meeting. Others keep conscientiously a quiet evening hour for bathing their souls. No Christian can keep his religion alive in the constant whirl of worldly excitements. Daniel needed to have an Olivet in his chamber amid Babylon's roar and idolatries. Peter found his on a housetop in Joppa, and Martin Luther found his in that "upper room" at Wittenberg, which is still held sacred. Let every child of Jesus resolve that he or she will have some place and season for meeting their beloved Master alone, and they will go forth from such interviews with their hearts lightened and their strength renewed. Our Olivets will prepare us for that mount of heavenly glory where we shall see Jesus as He is.

There is another kind of mountain top experiences to which every faithful Christian may aspire. John Bunyan, in his immortal allegory, brings his Pilgrims to certain "Delectable Mountains," which are clad with orchards and vineyards, with gardens and fountains of water. From these sunny heights they caught some glimpses of the Celestial City, and were regaled with pleasant fruits. Now there is no reason why any of us should be content to live down among the damps and the "dumps" of the low grounds, or in those marshy regions where the malaria of despondency prevails. Much of our unhappiness in this world is of our own making. We might have a great many more joyous days during our earthly pilgrimage. When we have had a conflict with some strong temptation, and by Christ's imparted help have conquered it, then we reach a delectable mount, and can sing our psalm of gratitude. Every good deed wrought for the Master or our fellow-men, every answer to prayer, every new discovery of Christ's love, every new attainment in the spiritual life, carries us up into a higher, purer atmosphere. We can read the eighth chapter of the Romans up there, and sing the one hundred and third Psalm. "They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles." In these best and holiest and happiest hours we rise above the petty vexations, the carking cares, and the wretched worries of life, and realise what it is to be the children of the King, and the heirs to a magnificent inheritance

Yet we must not expect to reach heaven before our time. Jesus Christ did not spend all his time on Hermon wearing a raiment as glittering as the sunlight. The impulsive Peter suggested that they should build tabernacles up there, and stay on that mountain summit. But the Master was needed down at the foot of Hermon, where a poor youth possessed of evil spirits was waiting to be healed. Duty forbids you and me to spend all our time in meditations, however profitable, or in devotions, however holy, or in psalm-singing, however sweet. There is too much work to be done, too many battles to be fought, too many crosses to be borne, too many trials to be endured. Spiritual frames should not unfit us for practical duties, but the hours on the mountain-tops should fit us all the more for the humbler valleys of every-day life. We can have the Master with us all the time, in our common rounds and our daily tasks. And the lowly valleys, in which we do our work and meet our friends and business associates, ought to be just as verdant and well watered as those mountain-tops where we see "no man, save Jesus only."

SOLOMON'S SONG viii. 1.

THIS passage has generally been regarded by commentators as an advanced Christian experience. Is it really so? In the joy of her first love the Shulamite had said: "Let Him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth: thy love is better than wine. As the apple-tree among the trees of the wood, so is my Beloved among the sons. I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste. He brought me into the banqueting-house, and his banner over me was love."

Here is perfect content with her Beloved. But in ch. viii., after various experiences grievous to Him and to herself, she says; "Oh that Thou wert as my brother, that sucked the breasts of my mother!" What husband would like his wife to express such a wish? Contrast Ps. xlv. 10, 11:

Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear: forget also thine own people and thy father's house; so shall the King greatly desire thy beauty, for He is thy Lord, and worship thou Him.

And why does she desire that He may be as a brother unto her? For the same reason that Abraham twice and Isaac once represented their wives to be their sisters—lest they should suffer for their sakes (Gen. xii., xx., xxvi.). So the bride would avoid being despised by them that are without (1 Tim. iii. 7), when she should show her affection to Him, and kiss Him in their presence. She never thought of them that are without when she said, in utter self-abandonment of love, "Let Him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth."

"I would lead thee." The bride should not seek to lead the bridegroom; still less should the saint seek to lead the Saviour. It is astonishing that this should ever be regarded as an advance in Christian life. It is more self-confident than Peter's saying, "Why cannot I follow thee now? I will lay down my life for thy sake." Peter must learn that Jesus would take the lead in that path, and lay down his life for Peter's sake: "Thou shalt follow Me afterwards." Compare John xiii. 36-38, xxi. 18-19, and observe the result of the lesson in Peter's emphatic words, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree." He laid down his life for my sake.

The Shulamite would bring her Lord into her mother's house, who would instruct her; and then she would cause Him to drink of spiced wine of the juice of her pomegranate. So sought Peter to bring the Lord into the house of mother Nature, and to cause Him to drink spiced wine of the juice of her pomegranate, when Jesus had said He must must be killed and rise again the third day. "And Peter took Him and began to rebuke Him, saying, Pity Thyself, Lord; this shall not be unto Thee." But He turned and said unto Peter, "Get thee behind me, Satan; thou art an offence unto Me, for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men." Not the spiced wine of the juice of our pomegranate, but the pure blood of the grape of the True Vine, was shed for us. "This cup is the new covenant in my blood, which was shed for many for the remission of sins; drink ye all of it."

The Shulamite recalls a lost experience when she says, "His left hand should be under my head, and his right hand should embrace me." This joy had once been hers (ii. 6), but it cannot be recovered under the instruction of mother Nature.

When her love had waned, and she had refused to open to Him; He reminded her of Himself: "Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness, like pillars of smoke" from the burnt-offering (the ascending offering), perfumed with the frankincense of the meal offering (iii. 1-6). Now He reminds her of her first love: "Who is this that cometh up out of the wilderness, leaning upon her Beloved?" As in later years, the word of Jehovah came to Jeremiah (ii. 2, 3): "Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith Jehovah, I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals, when thou wentest after me in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown."

He reminds her of her nativity, and of her second birth: "I raised thee up under the apple-tree, there thy mother brought thee forth; there she brought thee forth that bare thee." Which Ezekiel (xvi.) explains: "Thus saith the Lord God unto Jerusalem: Thy birth and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan; thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother a Hittite." The Jew and the Gentile are of the same Adamic stock; the flesh in the church and in the world is the same flesh.

"Set ME as a seal upon thy heart, as a seal upon thy arm." This cannot be the language of the bride, but of the Bridegroom. The less does not seal the greater, but the greater seals the less. The writer seals the letter; the prophet the prophecy; the king gives the seal of his authority to the minister; the government gives the seal of office to its ambassador; the Great King seals his faithful Servant, "Him hath God the Father sealed." The hymn is right, as hymns so often are—

Here's my heart, Lord, take and seal it,
Seal it from thy courts above.

So the Lord says to his disciple: "Set ME as a seal upon thy heart; let thy heart be true to Me. Set ME as a seal upon thine arm, for service: 'for ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price'; be not ye the servants of men."

"For love is strong as death." It brought Me to the cross, "that through death I might destroy the power of him that hath the power of death." "And jealousy is cruel as the grave." "Do ye think that the Scripture saith in vain that the Spirit that dwelleth in us jealously desireth us?" Waters of indifference cannot quench love; neither can floods of worldliness drown it. If a man would give all the substance of his house for love, it would utterly be contemned. Love must give itself. "He loved me, and gave Himself for me." M.

The Nestorians.—A Constantinople correspondent writes:—"Among the Nestorian Christians inhabiting the frontier lands of Persia and Turkey came a number of Russian missionary priests last May, representing that the Archbishop of Canterbury's protection was useless, and that they had better join the Russian Orthodox Church, thus securing moral and material protection. In consequence, the whole church, numbering 300,000 in Persia and 100,000 in Turkey, including many Protestant converts, have joined the Russian Communion."

The Life-saving Day.

By MRS. MERRILL E. GATES.

JESUS solves the problem of the right use of God's seventh of time, and He evolves what is involved in "keeping the Sabbath," when He obliges us to answer his crucial question, "Is it lawful to save life or to kill, on the Sabbath Day?"

Whatever falls under the head of true life-saving must accord with the true keeping of the day. To act upon the alternative, which the Lord of the Sabbath at that time illustrated by his act of healing love, is the divinely spiritual law of the day.

It is an inspiring and transforming thought that in the Day of Rest we have a time especially set apart for life-saving. Christians should go down to the great sea and patrol its coasts on this day, if on no other; should stand ready with the life-lines; should sight afar vessels out of their right course; and, after lighting their beacons, they should be ready to plunge into the boiling surge, if need be, and rescue the wrecked and weary souls of men. Can we doubt, having the example and the words of Jesus before us, that this is the great business of the day?

Teaching, healing, saving, honouring God and serving men by precept, parable, and miracle—in this way Jesus illustrated the true keeping of the holy hours. Life restoration, life renewal, life impartation—these followed the Lord of Life.

He is the supremest Sabbath-keeper who does most to save life on that day. He who does most for the deepest, most important, most vital part of a man's nature, does the most for that man. He who ministers most to his brother's spiritual being, whether to awaken or to enlarge that which St. Paul calls our "spiritual understanding," ministers most toward life-saving. He who reaches that spiritual understanding by kind and loving offices to those who need first of all physical aid and comfort is also a life-saver, as was his tender Lord before him.

How Jesus rescued those cast up at his feet by the surging tides of life! How, rather, He went far out on the slippery, shelving sands, and brought in one and another whose faces were blanched with terror, whose hearts had well-nigh ceased to beat with the on-set of the world's merciless storms! Where seas ran high there Jesus, the Life-saver, was sure to be. To how many at his touch inevitable death is changed into

ECSTATIC JOY IN LIVING!

If there be one service that is more heroic than another in our day, it is that of our life-saving stations. Says one employed to locate the stations of this service: "It is doing the noblest, most perilous work. The sea is often so high on the terrible coast of Cape Cod that it throws spray over rocks seventy feet high. Yet these men do not hesitate to launch their lifeboats in these mountainous seas, and in that awful surf go out to a vessel that has run aground." Courage and sagacity mark these men, and the value of their work, he says, cannot be over estimated, while in reality it is miserably underpaid.

Such work seems symbolic of the heroic self-forgetful efforts Christians should put forth on the life-saving day. Then it is they may hear amid the world-roar the cries of the perishing. It is a day for the saving of men.

This day of which we speak is a day when, if ever, the unconverted expect Christians to do something for them—to speak to them, to invite them and to warn them, to help and to comfort them. To how many, afar from God, come the better thought, the haunting desire, for good things on Sunday! And the half-allowed wish visits those of whom we should least expect it, that they, too, might partake of that life in Jesus of which they sometimes hear. Although Sunday in our cities, and in the country as well, is often made a signal day of special sin by the thoughtless and the evil, yet not infrequently it is a day of softened emotions, of relief from the deafening roar of the six-day looms at least, and so of the possible hearing of more heavenly strains; and can we not believe that when the spirit of man comes into the hush and abeyance of more material sights and sounds, God Himself does sometimes lift the curtains of the heart and reveal, even to those who are for the most part immersed in the things of the senses, a glimpse of his surpassing glory?

This is a day above all others when the Spirit of God works upon men's nature. Christians labour alongside of a tremendous energy on the Lord's Day. God works his mighty works on his own day. His rest-day is not a day of inaction, but it is the mighty repose of in Jesus. Let us believe that we do work for God with immense leverage on his own day. It is reasonable to think his work should be easily and well done in his own self-allotted time.

It is a day to do the works of Jesus, and also to rehearse his living words. The supreme work for us, like our Lord and Master, is to teach the wonderful words of life to men, to "minister to the hidden life of the brethren." This is the great compassionating of the wandering sheep. Is not this the kind lifting out of the unwary sheep who have fallen into the pit, which is lawful on the Sabbath Day? All kind and good actions are lawful on this day—in ministry to both the Divine and human element in man. The two go together, and are bound together in the true keeping of its hours.

May it not, then, be argued that whatever ministers to purely physical pleasure, to delight in life—in short, to recreation and amusement—properly falls under this idea of life-saving, as it enhances joy and builds up physical life? But between the lower and the higher forms of life we must discriminate. Jesus gives but the two alternatives. Whatever, either of labour or recreation, prevents men from knowing God, and deadens sensibility in the direction of life in Him, must fall under that other head of "killing," the diametrical opposite of "saving life." To save life, in its largest meaning, is to give men the knowledge of God, and this ought to constitute the supreme work of holy time. To rescue time, and to gain the attention of men for this urgent duty and highest privilege, Christians must join in resisting the desecration of the day, and secular encroachments on the heavenly import of its oft recurrence. Whatever kills or intends to kill the life, as when the bodily takes precedence of the soul life, is that mortal killing which is the breach of God's commandment by the tradition and custom of men.

Nyassaland.—On the west shore of Lake Nyassa and northwestward to the district where the waters of the Congo take their rise, the Scottish teachers, including several Dutch co-workers, have upwards of 80,000 children and youths in eighty schools under daily tuition in their native tongue—chiefly Nyanza—in English, and in useful handicrafts. Dr. Laws, the veteran and devoted missionary, has founded an excellent institution on Florence Bay, into which the most successful young men and women students are drafted. In it no less than 127 students, representing fifteen different tribes, are being trained as light-bearers to their fellow-Africans.

Paul in Corinth.

1 Cor. ii. 3.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

FIVE hours' sail across the Saronic Bay brought the Apostle to Cenchrea, the port of Corinth to the east, for this great and busy city commanded two water-ways. Through her western port, Lechæum, she was in communication with the Adriatic; and through her eastern port, Cenchrea, with the Ægean. The wares of the East thus passed through her to supply the omnivorous appetite of the metropolis; and vast crowds were attracted to her precincts for the purposes of trade. This commanding position thus gave her a quite unusual importance in the eye of the Apostle, ever eager to seize on any advantage which he could use for the Gospel of his Lord. To establish a strong Christian church there would be to cast seeds of Christian teaching on waters that would bear them east and west. Christian missionaries should be strategists, expending their strength where populations teem and rivers of world-wide influence have their rise.

But the Apostle entered the proud and beautiful city "in weakness, and fear, and much trembling." He could not forget the frigid contempt which he had encountered at Athens, and which was harder to bear than violent opposition. He may have been suffering from some aggravation of his habitual trouble, without Luke's presence to treat it; and he was profoundly conscious of being deficient in those gifts of learning and eloquence on which the Corinthians set such store. He knew that his speech and his preaching could never be in persuasive words of human wisdom, and it was his fixed determination to know nothing among them but Jesus Christ, and Him crucified.

There were many other difficulties to be encountered, which made his ministry in Corinth the more difficult; and his consequent success the more conspicuous.

I. The Necessity for continual Manual Toil.—In his first Epistle to Corinth, he lays great emphasis on this. Always maintaining the right of those who preached the Gospel to live by the Gospel, he did not use it; but suffered all things rather than hinder its progress or influence. No chance should be given to the merchants and traders that thronged the city from all parts, prepared to sacrifice everything for purposes of gain, to allege that he was actuated by mercenary motives. He, therefore, resumed his trade of tent-making, and was thankful to come across two Christian Jews who had been flung on this shore by the decree of the Emperor, which expelled all Jews from Rome. Suetonius, the historian, tells us that this decree was due to tumults caused by one Chrestus, evidently referring to violent disputes in the Jewish community concerning the claims of Jesus to be the long-expected Messiah. With them, therefore, he abode and wrought, for they were of the same craft; and a friendship sprang up between him and Aquila with his wife Priscilla, which was destined to have an important bearing on the spread of Christianity in the metropolis from which they had come, and in Ephesus, to which they would accompany their newly-made friend. Perhaps Paul was in their employ; but in any case work was short and wages scant, so that he was not unfrequently in actual want (2 Cor. xi. 9; 1 Cor. iv. 11, 12).

How strange that the movement which was to give Corinth a greater fame than her games, or architecture, or eloquence, emanated from a poor shop in the Jewish ghetto, where a handful of fugitive Jews wrought at their trade, speaking amid their toils of Jesus of Nazareth, who had been crucified in weakness, but was living through the power of God. They also were weak with Him, but they were destined to live and reign with Him, over the hearts of men through the power of God.

II. The virulent Hatred of the Jews.—According to his usual practice, Paul betook himself every Sabbath to the synagogue, and reasoned, persuading the Jews and Greek proselytes that the conception of the Hebrew Scriptures was precisely that of a suffering and crucified Messiah. This went on for some weeks; but the measure of his labours was somewhat curtailed by the heavy drain of his daily toil. It was not till Timothy and Silas arrived, the one from Thessalonica, and the other from Berœa, bringing cheering news of the steadfastness of his converts, their hands full of generous benefactions, that he was able to give himself with more leisure and intensity to the cherished object of his life. "He was pressed in the spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ." (Acts xviii. 5.)

This was more than the influential men of the synagogue could bear; they opposed, blasphemed, and drove him from the synagogue. Their attitude was more than usually virulent. They were unreasonable and wicked; they were animated by the spirit which had led their nation to kill the Lord Jesus and the prophets; they pleased not God, and were contrary to all men; they were filling up the measure of their sins. (1 Thess. ii. 14-16; 2 Thess. iii. 2.)

Their hatred culminated when the Apostle gladly accepted the offer of a God-fearing proselyte, Titus Justus, whose house was close to the synagogue, to hold meetings there. This new move was attended with instant and remarkable success. Among those that migrated with the Apostle from the synagogue was Crispus, its chief ruler, who believed in the Lord with all his house. Many of the people of Corinth also used to hear, believe, and receive baptism. As the new meeting-house became more crowded, and the movement increased in numbers and influence, the Jews became more and more exasperated, and at last rose in a body, seized Paul, and dragged him before the Roman Governor, who happened to be Gallio, brother to Seneca, the famous philosopher, and Nero's tutor. He was a man of unusual culture and refinement, sweetness, and loveableness. He represented the broad and liberal views of educated Romans, of the policy that Rome should exercise towards the various religions of the provinces; and when he discovered that the charge against Paul was of no imperial importance, and had to do, indeed, not with facts, or civil wrong or moral outrage, but with words, and names, and Jewish law, he would have nothing more to do with it or them, but bade his lictors drive them from the judgment-seat.

The Greeks were only too glad that contempt should be heaped on the hated Jews, and took the opportunity of seizing Sosthenes, the new chief ruler of the synagogue—who had succeeded to the post vacated by Crispus—and beating him in the very presence of the Proconsul. He regarded their horse-play, however, with perfect indifference. What did it matter if a Jew got a few stripes more or less? No doubt they were richly merited; and, so long as there was no public disturbance, the castigation might serve a useful purpose in cautioning the Jews against bringing their matters into public notice or trespassing on the public patience.

But the incident must have greatly aggravated the hatred of the Jews against the Apostle and his converts; the more so when, as it would appear, Sosthenes himself became a convert, and so intimately associated with the Apostle as to be coupled in after years with himself in the inscription of the first Epistle to the Corinthians—"Sosthenes our brother."

The Outlook in Japan.

ONE of the most interesting books of the present summer season is Mr. J. R. Mott's "Strategic Points in the World's Conquest." (3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) It contains notes of the author's tour round the student world in the interests of college and misssionary work. It gives the very latest impressions of an eye-witness as to the striking progress made in recent times among the educated young men of the civilised world, in the direction of accepting Christian teaching and of devoting life and energy to the service of Jesus Christ in the proclamation of his Gospel. The nineteen chapters of the work furnish glimpses of the spiritual condition of cultured young men in Europe, Egypt, India, Australia, China, and Japan, with many valuable and encouraging reflections as special characteristics of the different countries. Speaking broadly, the outlook is most cheering, and one feels that the near future must reveal many hopeful developments in this particular department of the world's progress from darkness to light and freedom. We very cordially commend Mr. Mott's book to the study of all thoughtful and purposeful young men.

The following extract from the chapter on Japan affords matter for prayerful and thankful interest:—

"The signs indicate that the cause of Christ in Japan is entering upon a new and remarkable era. The rationalistic wave which has done so much to chill the life and enthusiasm of the Japanese Church during the last few years is receding. The ultra-rationalistic feeling which has handicapped aggressive missionary effort is giving way. Since the war the signs of encouragement have greatly multiplied. The attitude of Government officials is becoming increasingly favourable to Christianity. Thoughtful people are beginning to realise the need of moral and religious culture and the insufficiency of Buddhism and Confucianism. Christianity has acquired a prestige altogether out of proportion to the length of its history and the number of its adherents. Although, on the one hand, there are but forty thousand Christians, and, on the other, millions of Buddhists, the two religions are spoken of as equals; and where any distinction is made among educated men, it is more frequently in favour of Christianity. In no non-Christian country are students and thinking men so accessible to the influence of Christianity. Wherever the worker goes he finds the people willing to hear the Gospel, and some who are drawn to it. The oldes workers say that not for many years have the people been so eager to hear earnest evangelical preaching.

"The impression seems to be general that the tide has at last turned, and that Japan is about to witness another great spiritual movement like that of the last decade, provided the Church seizes the opportunity and makes aggressive effort. The revised treaties between Japan and other countries which are now being made, and which will come into effect within two years, open the largest opportunity which has ever confronted the Church of Christ in Japan. By these treaties the whole country will be thrown open for the first time to missionary residence and work, thus affording a great highway for the Gospel. Of Japan it is pre-eminently true that what is done by the Church in the West must be done quickly. If Japan can be made a Christian nation, it will not only be a mighty fact in itself, but will have a vast influence throughout the entire East and the Pacific Islands world. We should be deeply impressed by God's dealings with this people. The providences which have opened Japan have been simply marvellous. What other nation has in one generation been so widely permeated with the spirit of Christianity? Dr. Verbeck told us that when he came to Japan there was not a single Christian, and that edicts against Christianity were nailed up all over the empire. About thirty years ago he baptized the first two Christians, and now there are over 40,000. God has always been in the life of this wonderful nation, but never so manifestly as to-day."

Personal Soul-Winning.*

(Concluded from our last.)

AGAIN, how much of real love for souls do we possess? We speak to a man, and he repels us; and we go away, happy that anyhow we have done our part. Perhaps some of us look back on a very different epoch in our lives—a time when, in the first flush of ardent zeal, the rush of a warm first love, we never tired of seeking to lead others to Him, when it was easy—nay, a positive delight—to speak of Him whom we so loved. "I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. Remember, therefore," is God's solemn voice to us, "from whence thou art fallen, and repent and do the first works, else——" I will not supply the blank.

But I feel that with many there is a reason deeper yet—Unreality. Can Christ, can his salvation, his love, his power, his joy, his perfect satisfaction, be very real to us, if we never think it worth while to pass on to another the good thing we, ourselves, have found? Can we truly realise what it means to have passed from death to life, to be rescued from the wrath of God and everlasting damnation and destruction, if we are so little anxious to rescue the unsaved? Or is it lurking, paralysing unbelief that is sapping our life-blood?—doubt and misgiving as to the reality of these eternal verities we profess to hold. Do we, do we believe that these men with whom we mix so carelessly, so easily, and lightheartedly, are without God and without hope, lost, for ever lost, except they turn to Christ and be saved? They know what we profess to believe, that he that hath the Son hath life, and that he that hath not the Son of God hath not life; but the wrath of God abideth on him; and they see what effect this faith produces on our life. Could we be surprised if, when we spoke to a man about his soul, he turned on us and said,

"My dear sir, what is the use of your speaking to me in this way? You don't believe one-half of what you say. You know I'm one of those you call unconverted; you know I'm going to hell, and yet you've known me all these years, and never said a thing to save me. You don't believe half you say, and I don't either."

My brothers, let us shake ourselves from this dull indifference. Perhaps we are unwilling to face this question, lest the thought of it should give us sleepless nights, give us no peace till, as far as in us lies, we have brought this question individually before the men in our own college.

LET US BE REAL AT ALL COSTS.

Let us see what we really do believe, or is there doubt as to the existence of God Himself? Do we wonder whether there be a God to know, or whether we can truly know Him?

Are we tempted to think the whole thing a matter of imagination or sentiment, of temperament, of early upbringing and environment? Some of us know what it is to pass through such a time as that,—times when we wonder what is left if we put on one side all we have heard or read of God, all others have told us of Him; all that we know is the orthodox thing to think or say about Him, and ask ourselves deep down below all this, What do I know of God? We need, then, to be much alone with Him, to wait on Him till He reveal Himself to us. What opportunity have we given Him of doing so? Is He going to manifest Himself in his awful holiness, when we are at our books, in the midst of our recreation, or our conversation with our friends? Surely He can only speak to us in the time of quiet, lonely communing with Him, when we get out of the busy world alone with our God.

Too often our times of prayer are one noisy, turmoiled rush of our own wants and petitions. We don't give ourselves time, or are not still enough before Him, to hear his voice. But those of us who have known what it is to get two, three, or four hours alone with Him, can we ever again doubt his reality? Yes, what the world wants is reality. Men want, first of all, to see consistency, to see our actions tallying with our words, to see us live out what we profess. Men want to see the Christian whose belief in the needs of a perishing world makes him have done with sloth, indifference, and easy-going luxury. And they long for one who will come and tell them of Christ with the simplicity, the reality, the straightforwardness of a deep, strong, settled belief. They want one who speaks with authority, the authority of Christ, who speaks what he knows and lives what he believes; one who will go to them with a "Thus saith the Lord." They don't want opinions; they want the certainty of the voice of God. And when a man speaks Christ's given words, he speaks with perfect ease, perfect naturalness, with no hindrance. Our religion should be one that compels the world to think. We cannot go to preach to others with a belief that is not part of ourselves, detachable, that has to be suddenly assumed, recollected, put on for the occasion. We cannot go and speak to others while our own beliefs are vague, unsettled, fluctuating. No, only conviction breeds conviction.

Need we go further for the reason of our failure to win souls for Christ? We do not get because we do not seek. Souls are not born again casually—that was a parting message at the Conference last year. Have we yet learned the lesson? All nature teaches us that birth means pain, and the more so the higher we rise in the scale of creation. Will it be less so, do you think, in the spiritual sphere? Death in order to fruit, that is the law of spiritual being also. Except a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. The salvation of the world meant death to Christ. It was not the shouts of acclaim as He rode in triumph into Jerusalem that won salvation for mankind.

He Himself that same day points out the true way. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto myself." It was alone, in the dark, on the hill-top of Calvary, while men hated and despised, that He poured out his soul an offering for sin. Who follows in his train? Soul-winning will not make us popular. It will make a death—a daily death—to self, and ease, and sloth, and pleasure, and the world's good esteem. But our death will mean life to others; our loss will be their gain. "So then death worketh in us, but life in them." The word μαρτυρος has a twofold significance. Christ's faithful witnesses have ever in a measure been martyrs, too.

"Ye shall be witnesses unto Me." Do we this morning reply, "Yes, Lord, but how?" He has Himself supplied the answer in the self-same verse—"When that the Holy Ghost hath come upon you"; "As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." Does this sound impossible? "After He had said this, He breathed on them, and said unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost." This is a fact of deep significance for us, that wherever Christ gave his disciples this high commission He conjoined with it the promise of his Spirit. With the command He gives the power to obey. God has cast us down this morning, but only that He may lift us up again. He has shown us this morning something of the immensity of our commission, and so He has opened to us, too, an infinite source of power on which to draw. "It is expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart I will send Him unto you, and when He is come He will convict the world of sin." And when He came to the Apostles their testimony was, "We cannot but speak the things that we have seen and heard." So shall it be with us. When He has found an abiding place in us—out of the abundance of the heart the mouth will speak. "He that believeth on Me, out of him shall flow rivers of living waters." This spake He of the Spirit, which they that believed on Him were to receive. Rivers, life-giving rivers to the dead souls about us—shall it be so?

Lord, we ask it, hardly knowing
What this mighty gift may be;
But fulfill to overflowing;
Thy great meaning let us see.

Scriptures for Uganda.—The committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society made a grant of 11,376 books of Scripture, in the language of Uganda, to the Church Missionary Society. The consignment includes 450 or more Bibles; nearly 3,000 New Testaments, in various types, and with or without marginal references; and the remainder in copies of the Psalms, separate Gospels, or the four Gospels and Acts in one volume.

Johannesburg Compounds.

THE Master continues to entrust us with new openings, and sends the necessary workers to fill them. The New Heriot Mine, centrally situated, and equidistant from Johannesburg and our next centre, is our latest trust. The manager very cordially and warmly gave us a free choice of sites for our school and workers' rooms. The school, a very modest structure of wooden frame, covered with galvanised iron, and a floor of virgin soil, is 29ft. long by 11ft. broad. The roof is only a few inches above the head at its lowest point, but the Lord does not disdain to visit it, and to own the efforts put forth to glorify his name and extend his kingdom.

It is built right against one wall of the compound, or sleeping quarters of the natives, and none of them can go out or come in without having to pass the school door. Two very little rooms, 8ft. by 10ft., and lined with boards, are occupied by our Messrs. Wilson (of Sunderland) and Germond (son of a Swiss missionary in Basutoland). They are assisted by a native evangelist, who speaks English and Sesuto, and has a slight knowledge of Zulu.

Their circuit includes eight compounds, containing about 7000 natives. Their duties consist in daily visitation of these natives, going from room to room and conversing with them, and in conducting the school afternoon and evening.

At the New Primrose we have Mr. Agnew and wife (formerly at Inhambane) and Mr. Rivett (from Bristol). Their circuit embraces between ten and fifteen thousand souls. Here we have our own claims, with a cottage for our workers, rooms for the two native evangelists, and a hall forty feet by twenty in which services and school are held.

We propose soon to move Brother Rivett on to Boksburg district, to another group of miners, and are just waiting for the Lord to open the way. Not long ago we went out there to take a preliminary survey of the field and needs. In one compound we gathered four hundred natives round us, and there in the midst of them stood one of our first pupils at the City and Suburban Mine. He had been home, and had come back to work in the mines again. He declared that he had been true to his temperance pledge, and was still following Jesus. They laughed at him, he said, when he knelt to pray, but he did not mind it.

Further on still—at the Nigel—we have Mr. Allister, from Newark, and a good work is being done. Our headquarters are here in Johannesburg. Rev. H. E. Mabille (son of the venerable M. Mabille), lately translated from Basutoland, three native evangelists, and the writer have a circuit embracing ten compounds and a population of between ten and fifteen thousand natives. Here we have two schools and a very encouraging work. A number of the converts accompany us on our evangelistic rounds on the Lord's Day, gladly give their testimony, and make themselves generally useful.

There is scarcely a compound in which the Lord has not given us the joy of seeing fruit of our labours, whilst on the other hand there is not a single compound in which we have not proved the truth of the Bible description of the carnal mind and the fallen state of man—dead and insensible to all but fleshly appetite, and yet not more so than the great multitude of their white brethren in the town. There are bright, cheery episodes and dark, sombre shadows in the work, but over all "the Lord reigneth."

The law prohibiting the sale of liquor to natives continues to exercise a most salutary effect, and is being more rigidly enforced. A strong effort has been made to modify it. It has been before the Volksraad, and has been referred to a committee for revision, and will be brought up again for reconsideration before the end of the session. We have no fears for the result. We believe the Lord is deeply interested in this law and has the legislators' hearts in his control. In response to a request in my last article in The Christian, Messrs. Marshall and Russell sent a packet of Horner's little books, which are being distributed amongst the white miners.

Relief Work at Van.

WHEN the last report was issued (April 1) we hoped soon to be able to cut off general free aid, but the late opening of the season delayed this step till about May 1. At that time the lists of those receiving work from the industrial department were carefully revised, throwing out members of families where there were able-bodied men, except in those cases where the number of souls to be supported was clearly disproportioned to the number of men. The lists thus thinned were quickly more than refilled from the helpless widows and girls, who during the winter had been receiving free aid, because unable to work on account of sickness in their persons or families. The general wail that ascended when this step was taken was pitiful to hear, and it was only the strong conviction that this course was demanded by the best interests of all concerned that enabled us to stand firm to our decision. Every sign indicated that the coming winter would bring prices very nearly to famine rates, and at any rate thousands of people would find themselves with no means of procuring bread. Hence it seemed inevitable that the need of help during the next winter would be greater than for the last two winters, while the hope of securing funds to the same extent as last year even is small. Hence prudence demanded that funds already in hand should be carefully husbanded for the greater needs of the winter.

The condition of the villagers is in some respects better, in some respects worse, than that of the people of the city. They live nearer to the soil, and can collect something from the fields and mountains even in dry times. They have been able to sow a small part of their usual acreage, in some places, by going into partnership with the Koords, the latter furnishing cattle and seed, and the Armenians the fields and work, the crop to be equally divided. Mr. Allen is administering some £T3000, sent to him and the English Consul for the purchase of cattle for the plundered villages, and this is heartening them up to some extent.

The funds now in hand not specifically designated for the Orphanage have been invested in cotton and wool for the industrial department, or in grain, which is stored for use next winter. I have even ventured to borrow £400 from the Orphanage fund, which is being kept for future use, for the purchase of grain, as it seems inevitable that the price of cereals will go up before winter sets in, and faith convinces me that some additional funds will surely come in and enable me to repay the loan. The Orphanage has sufficient grain stored on the premises to last till the harvest of 1898, if the number of inmates is not increased.

What to do for the great mass of orphans who are still unprovided for is a question ever pressing most heavily on our hearts. Accurate statistics of the orphans outside of the city have not yet been obtained. In the city we are now feeding about 300 children who are deprived of both parents, while as many more are fed by means of spinning issued to their mothers from the industrial department. Nor does this exhaust the list of needy orphans in the city alone. The number remaining in the villages must reach into the thousands. Arrangements seem practically completed by which we shall be able to care for from twenty-five to fifty in a near monastery, they being placed under such moral and religious training as will be entirely satisfactory to us and to the Armenians as well. This we do with the expectation that the funds of the monastery will enable it to assume half the expense after a year, and the whole after two years. But thousands are still uncared for.

Jewish Colony in Essex.—The auctioneer at a land sale last week was surprised to find among the bidders quite a number of Russian and Polish Jews who, with their families, had just arrived in the expectation of purchasing sufficient land to form an industrial colony, nor were they disappointed, three hundred plots being sold. A site for a synagogue has already been fixed upon. Arrangements are being made for the erection of small farms and factories, and it is evident that the intention of the Jewish settlers is to become regular agriculturists. This probably means, observes the Essex County Chronicle, that before many years have elapsed North and South Benfleet will become a flourishing town with a considerable population, chiefly Jewish.

Work in Tangier and Spain.

IT was extremely cheering to find, on returning recently to Tangier, what steady progress has been made during the last few years in the Spanish work carried on here by the North Africa Mission. Already quite a promising church has been formed, with some five-and-twenty regular communicants, and a large number of more or less regular attendants at the services. In spite of the counter attractions of the pleasant Sunday evenings for out-of-door recreation after the heat of the summer day, I was surprised to see what a nice congregation assembles each week, notwithstanding the fact that the pastor, Mr. Patrick, has had to go to England just now. During his absence the services are conducted by Mr. Barnard, now of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and till they left much assistance was received from Dr. and Mrs. Rocha, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. One sees that there is confidence between the workers and the converts, and the spirit of union which speaks of the presence of Christ. The most necessary day-school, which a few years ago was a struggling handful in the home of the founder, Miss Brown, is now, under the able direction of Miss Vecchio, a flourishing institution of between fifty and sixty pupils, who pay a trifle there, while they might get an education free at the Franciscan schools.

But encouraging as all this is on this side of the Straits, within sight is a British possession where the last of the Protestant schools has been given up, and the education of the whole civil population handed over to the Romanists, who have worked hard and have succeeded in attracting most of the paying pupils to their well-appointed Loretto Convent and Rooke House Academy, the latter directed by Irish "Christian Brothers." Until recently the Wesleyan Mission maintained what was once an excellent school in Gibraltar, but that having fallen off considerably, it has been abandoned, and even the undenominational public school has been closed in face of the opposition. The regimental schools in the barracks are closed to civilians, so that Protestants in Gibraltar who cannot afford to send their children to England have no choice but to commit them to the care of the Romanist missionaries, who lose no opportunity of influencing their pupils. Archdeacon Govett is in favour of a petition to permit civilians to use the military schools, but even if this were granted, it would only affect a section of the English community, leaving the Spaniards and the majority of people in Gibraltar unprovided for. Is evangelical England willing thus to abandon what ought to be one of her most promising fields for reaching Spanish Romanists with its absolute religious liberty? Budgett Meakin.

Eurasian Boys in India.

Dear Sir,—When Miss Anstey gave over the Kolar work to our mission she took up her residence in Bangalore, and after a while organised a home for poor Eurasian girls and boys. In September, 1893, not being able to give any industrial training to the boys, she sent a dozen or more of the older ones to us at Kolar, where we had an Industrial Mission. These boys became the nucleus of what is now an industrial school of thirty boarders. In June, 1895, buildings were bought at Bowringpet, eleven miles south of Kolar, and thither we removed the boys. Upon the buildings we have a debt of about £190.

The stratum of society from which many of the boys come is the very lowest; the people living in it are oppressed and depressed by poverty, sin, ignorance, and helplessness. An elementary education for them, combined with industrial tuition, is one way of solving what has become in India a very perplexing question—the Eurasian problem.

We have no mission funds upon which to rely for the maintenance of the work. The fact that our debt is increasing compels me to make known our needs. Several cases of application for admittance into the school have had to be refused this year. With a heart yearning over these lads, and longing to increase the usefulness of the school, I make this appeal, praying that God will glorify Himself in whatever He graciously sends or lovingly withholds. (Rev.) J. B. Buttrick.

Libraries for the Blind.

IN June, 1847, when embossed reading for the blind was in its infancy, the late Dr. Moon, who was then a young man, invented his very simple type to meet the needs of those who were unable to read owing to the complicated systems then in use. The alphabet consists of nine very plain and easily-decipherable characters, most of which resemble the Roman letters, only portions being left out to make them clear and open to the touch. The necessary contractions are so few that you can count them on the fingers of your two hands, which is of the utmost importance to the blind, as at least 70 per cent. have lost their sight after they reach middle-age, often from causes which shatter the nerves so much that when learning to read they should have as few difficulties as possible put in their way.

Fifty years have passed, and this system still holds its place as one that can be easily used by the mass of the blind. It is a very common thing for a blind person of fair ability to learn the alphabet in the course of an hour; it only then needs practice to read any book published in the "Moon type."

In this type there is a daily increasing English and foreign literature, one of the last works published being the Fourth Standard Reader in Tamil, also the Acts of the Apostles in Hindi. The characters were adapted by the late Dr. Moon to 400 languages and dialects, portions being prepared when needed in either of these. In English, besides memoirs of Her Majesty the Queen, the late Prince Consort, President Lincoln, etc., large numbers of interesting works are being brought out for the pleasure of those who are desirous of reading good, reliable, and interesting literature.

It is greatly desired that gifts of books should be made to the different societies that have been formed (about seventy) throughout the kingdom to search out the blind, teach them to read, and then lend them books from free lending libraries. Many of these societies have not funds sufficient to purchase fresh books as they are published. Many individual cases are also to be found in the homes of the poor.

Large premises are needed to carry on this extensive work for the blind, and such have been erected in the Queen's-road, Brighton, where the embossing and binding of the books is carried on, as well as the preparing of the plates from which the books are printed. There are now more than 53,000 of these plates stored away for use when needed. Miss Moon, hon. secretary and treasurer, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton, will gratefully receive help towards the objects of the Society, and will gladly give all information.

Friendless and Fallen.

The Homes and Open-all-Night Refuge are maintained in full operation during the autumn months, although daily expenses far exceed daily income. No suitable case is ever refused help because of an exhausted treasury. The Author and Giver of every good and perfect gift has, through his servants, supplied all that has been needful during the last forty years, and we cannot doubt Him now. During the past few days there has been a larger number of applications for admission than is usual; but of them all the following is perhaps the most piteous:—A poor girl, writing on her own account, says she has heard of rescue homes, and that she is a servant girl, very poor, and without one person in the world whom she can call a friend. She asks, "Do they take such wretched creatures as myself in? I have sinned, and it is to hide my disgrace I am leaving my present situation. I wish as far as I can to do what is right, although God only knows how sweet death seems at the present time." She concludes by saying that if any place of shelter can be found for her it would remove a terrible burden which is now crushing her down. Everything possible will be done to render assistance in this painful case.

Over 500 applications for admission have been already received this year, irrespective of those who have applied direct to the Open-all-Night Refuge, and been received there. The funds at the disposal of the committee are exhausted, and they face the holiday season with considerable anxiety, although not without faith and hope. All information respecting the work can be obtained, post free, of Mr. W. J. Taylor, 200, Euston-road, London, N.W.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, August 22.

"Take heed to yourselves, and bear no burden on the Sabbath-day, nor bring it in by the gates of Jerusalem."—Jer. xvii. 21.

In R.V. marg., "take heed to yourselves" is rendered "take heed for your life's sake," as if the matter dealt with in this paragraph closely pertained to the conditions of the best life. And is it not so? Is it not a matter of vital importance that we should keep the eternal Sabbath in our hearts, and suffer no burden to be brought through the gates of the soul. Even if we consider this matter from the lowest aspect, how certain it is that absence of worry and fret promotes length of days! But in the deepest sense we must, like Nehemiah, set a guard at the city portals, and insist that no anxiety should cross our threshold. Do you ask what sentry is strong enough to arrest the intrusion of burden-bearing thoughts? I reply, let the peace of God keep your mind and heart. Meet every anxiety with the one short, strong, sweet answer—God, God will see to it; God will provide.

In v. 24 we are bidden diligently to hearken to God in this matter. It must therefore be within our power. The will can direct the thoughts to what object it chooses. Do not look down, but up; not backward or forward, but God-ward. It is right to think calmly and deliberately about the issues of things, but to treat it as a positive sin against the love of God to allow anxious care.

The result is beautiful. Obey God in this, and the King Himself shall enter the gates of your city (v. 25). Your life will be filled with burnt-offerings and frankincense and thanksgiving (v. 26). And from the utter rest of your nature you will be able to look out with equanimity on the storm and change around.

MONDAY, August 23.

"And when the vessel that he made of the clay was marred in the hand of the potter, he made it again another vessel, as seemed good to the potter to make it."—Jer. xviii. 4.

God wants to make the very best He can of each of his children. He puts us on his wheel, and subjects us to the discipline which He deems most likely to secure our greatest blessedness and usefulness. But, alas! how often He finds a marred vessel left on his hands when He desired and sought perfect beauty and strength! This is through no failure on his part, but because some bubble of vanity or grit of self-will has hindered Him.

When, however, this is the case He does not cast us utterly away, but puts us afresh upon the wheel, and "makes us again." If He cannot do what He desired at the first, He will still make the best of us, and the weakness of God is stronger than men. Let God take a life which has proved a failure, He can make of what remains of it more than men could make with all earthly advantages on their side, and with nothing to hinder its regular development.

Yield yourself afresh to God. Confess that you have marred his work. Humbly ask that He should make you again, as He made again Jacob and Peter and John and Mark. Only be careful in all time to come, first, to give God sufficient opportunity by waiting before Him; and secondly, to be very prompt to obey all that He may impress upon you as being his holy will. There is simply no limit to the progress and development of the soul which is able to meet God with a never-faltering "Yes." Let the lifelike clay in the potter's hands be plastic to its Maker's touch!

TUESDAY, August 24.

"A potter's vessel that cannot be made whole again."—Jer. xix. 11.

An earthen vessel is a true emblem of human life, so frail, so brittle. But there is something frailer yet in our resolutions and efforts after holiness. And when once these have failed us, we can never be again what we were. Always the crack, the rivets, the mark of the join.

In Gideon's days there was a light within the earthen vessels, and when these were broken it shone forth. There is, therefore, a breaking of the vessel which is salutary and desirable. And it is of this that Miss Taylor sings:—

> Oh to be nothing, nothing!
> Only to lie at his feet,
> A broken and emptied vessel,
> For the Master's use made meet.
>
> Broken, that so unhindered
> His life through me might flow.

It reminds me of a piece of pottery I saw in the mountain burn, which was in the water and the water in it. If there be in any one of us a proud and evil disposition, a masterful self-will, which frets for its own way and makes itself strong against God, then indeed we may ask to be so broken as never to be whole again. "Take me—break me—make me," is a very wholesome prayer for us all.

The Apostle speaks of the heavenly treasure in the earthen vessel. How wonderful it is that God should put so much of his spiritual ointment into such common and ordinary receptacles. No one detects what is in the saints till they are broken by sickness, pain, trouble; then the house is filled with the odour of the ointment.

WEDNESDAY, August 25.

"There is in mine heart as it were a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I am weary with forbearing and cannot stay."—Jer. xx. 9.

The prophet had looked for marvellous results from his preaching. So great was his consciousness that God's word was on his lips, and his power with him, that he expected by his ministry to arrest the decay of his people. And when, instead of the success he sought, he found himself in the stocks, he was tempted to feel that God had excited hopes which were not destined to be realised. He did not give sufficient weight to man's awful power of resisting and neutralising God's best designs. We say this reverently, and using human methods of speech.

Yet, on the other hand, as he reviewed the steps by which he had come to act and speak as he did, he felt that he could not have done differently. And though he were suddenly to repress himself, the inward impulse would sweep away all his constraints, and assert itself in irresistible might. It was of no use placing the bushel over the light, for the light would burn the bushel; useless to shut in the fire, for the fire would burn through every obstacle to its flames.

What a glorious state of heart to be in! We have sometimes been weary in God's service; but, oh, it would be a greater weariness if we were dismissed from it. To speak is an awful responsibility and weight, but not to speak would be impossible. Have you the burning heart? Do you know what it is to feel unable to contain yourself, since the love of Jesus constrains? If not, daily pray that God may light a burning fire in your bones.

THURSDAY, August 26.

"Peradventure the Lord will deal with us according to all his wondrous works."—Jer. xxi. 2.

It was the last extremity of the siege when Zedekiah sent this message to Jeremiah. His people and he had postponed their compliance with the warnings and invitations of God's love till the last possible hour, and now they were more eager for immunity from the consequences of their sins than to repent and return to God. The answer was immediate, that matters must now be allowed to take their course. It was, however, added that even now all who dared to act in faith and go out to the besiegers would save their lives.

What a test of faith was here! It seemed as though it were worth while to risk everything and stay in the city rather than venture out to those terrible hosts that were gathered around. But there no alternative. To stay in the city was certain was death, to go forth into what seemed certain death would secure life.

Men may reach a certain point in wrong-doing, when the disasters their sins have courted are inevitable. As they have sown, they must reap. As they have set the rocks rolling, they must see the devastation wrought on their homes. And yet even then there is a way of escape. Dare to trust God; do what seems most foolish, most likely to land in still greater disaster, because He bids it; be guided by his word.

FRIDAY, August 27.

"Woe unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness and his chambers by injustice."—Jer. xxii. 13.

This denunciation was probably against the King himself. But it has a much fuller reference. He was the godless son of a godly father, whose character is sketched in three particulars. He judged the cause of the poor and needy; it was well with him; it was to know God. But the son had reversed all this. He built his palace of unrighteousness, his chambers of covetousness; but its width of space could not obliterate the memory of the forced and unpaid labour by which it had been reared. And God would plead and avenge the cause of those oppressed labourers.

When we see the splendid piles of business buildings reared by monopolists who thrive by making existence impossible to smaller but industrious tradesmen; when we hear of the vast fortunes made out of strong drink; or the manipulation of the market by millionaires, that make honest business impossible; we recur to these terrible words. God still arises to avenge the cause of the poor and needy. There is a God who judges in the earth.

In our vast cities it is not easy to trace the incidence of the Divine displeasure on a family of wrong-doers. Those who reside in our villages and country towns, and have long memories, could tell of many corroborations in their own knowledge. God's children can afford to be generous and open-handed to their employés, because their Master is rich. Let us maintain his honour, and the family name, by fair dealing. They who know God, judge the cause of the poor and needy; and to do this thoroughly is to know God.

SATURDAY, August 28.

"If they had stood in my counsel, then had they caused my people to hear my words, and had turned them from their evil way."—Jer. xxiii. 22.

Here is the cause of so much failure in our Christian work—we do not stand in God's counsel. The previous words explain what is meant by not walking in God's counsel: "I sent not these prophets, yet they ran; I spake not unto them, yet they prophesied." Alas! these words write our own sentence. How often have we run without being sent, and prophesied because the hour had struck, rather than because the message of God had been given. We did not stand in God's counsel.

Then our text follows so sweetly with its But. "But if they had stood." . . . We gather, therefore, that the stream of prophetic teaching was not limited to Jeremiah alone. There was no necessary exclusiveness in the Divine arrangements. He was chosen, and used as God's agent and medium, because he stood in his counsels. And the others might have the same privilege if they would conform to the same conditions. Without doubt, this is true for us all. Let us restrain our fussy activities; let us refrain from the desire to be always to the front; let us wait on God for his thoughts and words and messages. And let us claim the absolute fulfilment of this most blessed promise. People shall be caused to hear God's words, and shall be turned from their evil way.

Nature's Praise.

(Tune: "Toulon," 249, Bristol.)

Sweet are the lays the feathered songsters sing;
Loud is the praise they warble on the wing;
List as they lilt; for thus the notes ascend,—
"Glory to God on high, our faithful Friend."

Anthems arise from flowers and forest trees;
Anthems of joy awakened by the breeze;
And this the song in which their voices blend,—
"Glory to God on high, our faithful Friend."

From vale and hill; from ocean and from land;
From every rill that ripples o'er its strand,
Hymns rise to Heav'n the wise can comprehend,
"Glory to God on high, our faithful Friend."

We join the choir, for God is ever good,
Strike, strike the lyre, show forth your gratitude!
Praise ye the Lord: his mercies ne'er shall end!
Glory to God on high, our faithful Friend.

The Hope Trust.—The past session has been one of the most successful in the history of this Protestant agency. The agents have delivered 292 lectures to children, and 324 to adults, in various towns and villages of Scotland. The lectures have been well attended, and Christian workers generally have supported and encouraged the lecturers. The following subject shave been dealt with:—"The Scottish Reformation," "The Covenanters," "The Revolution Settlement, 1688," "Martin Luther," "Ritualism," "William Tyndale," "Romish Intolerance," "John Knox," "The Early British Church," and "Lady Jane Grey." The roll of Aiders and Aiders' Associations has increased, and as a consequence the circulation of Protestant papers has been much extended.

Is My Bible Really True?

WHERE DID WE GET IT?

By Rev. CHARLES LEACH, D.D., Manchester.

THE SCRIPTURES IN ANGLO-SAXON.—IX.

I WANT to take you for a moment or two to a monastery at Jarrow-on-Tyne, on a quiet evening in May, 735 A.D. There, looking out of the window of a cell, held up by his loving students, you see an old man quietly dying. He has been raised at his own request, and if you listen you will hear him saying, "Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost." His spirit takes its flight, and passes to the celestial city. That old man was the venerable and beloved Bede, the most famous scholar of his day.

Bede undertook to translate the Gospel of St. John into the Anglo-Saxon, the language of the people of England at that time. Before his work was done he fell sick and drew nigh unto death, but he would not relinquish his task. Calling his students to his side, he bade them write while he dictated to them. It must have been a pathetic and touching sight to see him, spending his last night on earth in putting the language of John the Holy Apostle into the common language of the people.

"Write quickly," said the dying man.

"There remains but one sentence, master!" said his pupil.

Soon the writer said, "It is finished, master."

"Finished," said the dying saint, and passed away to his rest.

There were others before Bede who had done a little in translating some portions of the Bible, especially the Psalms, into the Anglo-Saxon language, but we may pass on from him to notice the work of

KING ALFRED THE GREAT.

Of all the kings who ever bore the title of Great, the Saxon king perhaps deserved it most, for he was a most remarkable man—a Christian, a scholar, a soldier, a statesman, and a king all in one.

Alfred was born at Wantage, in Berkshire, in the year 849 A.D. This was a little more than a century after the venerable Bede had passed away. Alfred had the advantage of a loving and pious mother, who not only trained him in the practice of virtue, but created in him a spirit of patriotism, and the love of learning. When he was a child of six years, he was taken by his father to Rome, and though so young, received impressions which were permanent. Amid the studies of his youth he obeyed the call to arms, fought the battles of his country, and began to reign when he was about twenty-two years of age.

Many stories are told of Alfred which are interesting. Most of us have read or heard of his experiences as a baker in the cottage of one of his own people. Pressed by some necessity, he one day took refuge in the cottage of a labourer. The woman of the house did not know who he was, and bade him mind some cakes which were baking on the hearth. He was busy with his weapons, and forgot or neglected to turn the cakes as he should have done, and they were burnt. When the good dame of the house saw how he had she gave him a good scolding. It is said that he bore the reproof with the same grace with which he forgave the woman when she learnt who he was.

Alfred was a man who practised upon himself strict discipline and great regularity in all things. His day of twenty-four hours was divided into three equal portions of eight hours. He gave eight hours to business, eight hours to study and devotion, and eight hours to sleep and bodily exercise. In order to measure his time accurately, in those days when clocks and watches were not so common as now, he invented a plan of his own. He had candles of certain lengths and thickness made, which he consumed in lanterns, knowing how long each would burn.

He took part in no less than fifty-six battles, and is said to have founded the English monarchy. He built England's first fleet of ships; established a militia; rebuilt many ruined cities, among them London; saved his people in time of war; ruled them wisely and well in times of peace; gave them wise, just, and humane laws; greatly encouraged commerce and manufactures; devoted a seventh of his entire revenue to public works; and founded schools and seats of learning. He died in the year 901, when but fifty-two years of age, after having reigned for thirty years. He concerns us now as into the common language of the people. He intensely loved his Bible, and was anxious that his people should be able to read it in their own language. Accordingly, he worked upon a translation of the Psalms, a portion of the Bible specially popular in all ages, and also upon the Gospels. His somewhat early death cut short his work. The Saxon Gospels which have reached our days may have been the outcome of his work.

After Alfred's days, the work of translating the Bible into the language spoken by the people went on but slowly. About one hundred years after his death the first seven books of the Old Testament were partly translated by Ælfric, Archbishop of Canterbury. Also, in the eleventh and twelfth centuries some little was done. But it does not appear that the whole Bible was ever known in the English language at an earlier date than the days of John Wycliffe, whose work we will notice in our next article.

The Basim Mission.

DEAR SIR,—In former years your readers used to take an active interest in the work of the Lord here. I appeal to them in this time of sore distress to enable us to feed the starving, clothe the destitute, and rescue from human vultures helpless girlhood.

For the last two months we have been doing all in our power to relieve distress. The famine has not been as severe here as in some parts of India, yet for the last eight months, in this district alone, there have been some 8000 or 10,000 on Government relief works. Some two months ago these relief works were closed in some places; camps of three and four thousands were for some reasons reduced to as many hundreds. Doubtless this decrease was in some cases owing to the farmers returning to their fields as soon as the first rain fell, about June 15.

Since that time the number flocking to us for relief has steadily increased. At first we noticed few who very much emaciated, but for the last few weeks the number of these have been steadily on the increase. It is a daily occurrence for these poor starved creatures to drag themselves to our door, from the outlying villages, with scarcely strength to beg for the food for lack of which they are dying. For the last few days mothers have brought their children to us, begging us to save them from starvation. We have already twenty girls and thirteen boys. Of these twenty are famine children. We are anxious to take in as many of these little ones as possible.

The servants of the Lord must be on the alert, if they would bring those "other sheep" into the Good Shepherd's fold. Well-to-do Mohammedans are trying to secure these famine girl-waifs, for slaves—ay, worse than slaves—in their harems. My soul was stirred to indignation by the audacity of the "Kaji Sahib," the Mohammedan magistrates and their religious leader, sending two men to me asking me to make over any girls we could spare to him! We most emphatically refused his request. The next day he sent a very polite but urgent note, begging us to procure ten or eleven girls for him. I believe that God will hold his Church responsible for these helpless souls. Will you ask your readers to provide us with the means to rescue all of these helpless girls from a slavery to which death would be far preferable?—Yours in his name, Laura Wheeler Moore.

Perils in China.

WRITING from K'üh Tsing Fu, in the province of Yunnan, Mr. J. R. Pledger, of the China Inland Mission, describes an attempt to enter Ling An Fu, in the south of the same province:—

Mr. O. Stevenson and myself met by arrangement in Ling An, and were both of us pleased with the friendliness and courtesy of the people generally. We had to take up our quarters in a temple, as the inns were, even for China, really vile in the city. Soon after our arrival a man came and offered to let us his house. Upon inspection we found that it was suitable, and an agreement was come to. Before the silver could be paid over, the people around intimidated the man, and he refused us his place, unless the district mandarin issued a proclamation stating that we had power to rent property. When a visit was made the mandarin refused to see us. Very shortly large anonymous proclamations were issued stating that we were French, come up from Annam, and that we had come to spy out the place, calling the man who wanted to rent us his house a rebel, and urging people to destroy the house if we went into it.

Next morning we determined to leave the city rather than be driven out. Before going, however, we went to the Prefect's yamen, and were received by him most kindly. He at once sent to the district mandarin, and ordered a proclamation to be issued at once. We then left for Meng Tsi, and were absent ten days. Upon our return, we saw the temper of the people had not improved. Next day, Sunday, people crowded our house, and for eight hours we preached. As we were taking our evening meal, our landlord came in to say that a large mass meeting had been held, at which the people decided that if we would not go out of the city they would burn us up in the building where we were.

Seeing how things were, we re-visited the Prefect. As soon as we got on the street we were the centre of a mob who seemed far from friendly. The Prefect, hearing the noise, came out, and demanded to have the yamen cleared of the people, but his own soldiers were not sufficient, and thirty others had to come from a military yamen to assist. Because of the mob the Prefect did not deem it wise for us to go again to our old quarters, but invited us to stay as his guests. He himself then issued a proclamation which he hoped would set all at rest. But his paper had not been up a day before a large anonymous one of 1500 characters was issued contradicting the official one. It was divided into four heads. (a) We were not to be allowed to rent or buy property. (b) We were not to be allowed to buy any article of food. (c) No one was to listen to us, or allow their children to come near us. (d) We were not to be permitted to leave the city by a main road.

The Prefect gave it as his opinion that this was the work of the Ko-lao-huei; as there was no chance of our being able to work, we determined to leave this town again for a few months. Next day the mandarin had to get us coolies, as none would work for us. Guarded by three mandarins and a strong force of soldiers, we rode out of the city by a main street, having been in the yamen four days. We have not given over Ling An; we dare not do that, but we now need discretion as to when and how to visit this city. Will the readers of The Christian join with us in prayer that this place may soon be taken possession of for our King?

Mr. W. C. Taylor, of Chong-king, writes that China is honeycombed with secret societies. He recalls the outrage of the "Vegetarians," and described the practices of the Ko-lao-huei, whose aim seems to be to harass and weaken the Manchu dynasty, in the hope of placing upon the throne an emperor of their own race. Mr. Taylor tells of a colony of these terrible people inhabiting the neighbourhood of the new rapid which has been formed at Yang-tze-Kiang by the sliding of a mountain. The head of the gang levies blackmail upon passing boats, and if he is not satisfied he pronounces wicked threats, and marks the boat for attack. Not only is the mandarin on the spot unable to put down the unruly party, but he often makes large presents in order to pacify them, or get them to pass on to other districts

Dr. Comandi,

ITALIAN PHILANTHROPIST.

OUR sketch this week outlines the story of a remarkable man, whose work deserves to rank among the great achievements of Christian faith and devotion.

Dr. Comandi is a native of Montakino, in the province of Siena. Coming of a Roman Catholic family, he was early put under priestly care, and after a prolonged course of study graduated as Doctor in Political and Economical Science at Pisa. In this town, while enjoying the vigour of early manhood, Dr. Comandi made the acquaintance of a distinguished family, the head of which, Commendatore Mayer, had consorted with Mazzini, Gino Capponi, and other promoters of the Italian Revolution. Here he learned something of the Bible and Protestant principles, as a result of which, in due course, there was an awakening of conscience.

With this experience, and further study of the Scriptures, there came spiritual enlightenment. But this was not without a severe conflict, during which long hours of the night were passed in prayer, and the struggling soul condemned itself to a life of asceticism and mortification. Simultaneously with a sense of God's will concerning him, and inquiry into evangelical truth, there was still a regard for Romish rites—such is the binding power of habits which have been formed in childhood and commended by consistent parental example. Having been trained in a Romish atmosphere, Dr. Comandi encountered many difficulties in realising the liberty into which God was evidently calling him. Among other drawbacks was his utter inability (to which others have called attention) to understand the terminology of definitely Protestant instructors. So, together with the Bible, he read Thomas à Kempis, Bossuet, Massillon, and the meditations of other such writers. These helped to convince him of the emptiness of ceremonies, and to show him the need of the sinner dealing directly with the Saviour.

At length the moment came when Dr. Comandi felt impelled to confess his faith in Christ before his family and friends. He desired to study theology at Geneva, which in those days was considered a stronghold of Protestantism, so he opened his heart to his father, frankly and without reserve. It is difficult for those who have been brought up in evangelical surroundings to realise what this meant to all concerned. Protestants were regarded in priestly circles in Italy as the very monsters of hell; henceforth the father must hear that his son was one of these—and withal a Protestant preacher and leader! The father was not given to weeping, but on hearing his son's declaration, so manifestly sincere, he burst into tears. He entreated the son to go to confession as before, but in vain; he arranged an interview with an eminent theologian, but although unable to answer some of the questions of the Papal champion, the son refused to stultify the dictates of conscience, or to do despite the Word of God as it had come to him in the New Testament.

The pain of the father was doubtless severe in this conflict, but that of the son was, if possible, still more keen, for the conflict which rent his heart took the form—Shall I obey God or my father? Though without the encouragement or support of sympathising friends, Dr. Comandi stood his ground manfully, not insisting, however, upon going to Geneva. Later on, he studied in the Waldensian College at Florence, and his father, seeing that there was no reason to expect his retraction, gave orders that he should never again be named in his presence. Thus did Dr. Comandi realise the Lord's benediction: "Blessed are ye when men shall separate you from their company, and reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of Man's sake" (Luke vi. 22). Then, moreover, he inherited the blessing promised to those who, for the sake of Christ, "leave brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother" (Matt. xix. 29). The "hundred-fold now in this time—with persecutions" (Mark x. 30), was secured to him, and has been his portion ever since. When all supplies from what once was home were stopped, the Lord taught him to walk by faith, and opened up to him a life of signal usefulness, and therein he has walked till this day.

Having finished his studies at Florence, Dr. Comandi was led to launch the Boys' Protestant Industrial Home in that city.

Founded on an independent basis, this institution helps Protestants regardless of denomination. With its many associated works it has exercised a beneficent influence in Italy for more than twenty years. In a recent letter to us describing the work, Signora Comandi says:—

We have generally from ninety-five to 105 boys in our Home, and in our day-school we have about 100 poor children, the greater part of whom receive a midday meal. All who have left the Home are earning their livelihood, some as teachers and evangelists, others as cabinet-makers, wood-carvers, gardeners, soldiers, shoemakers, etc. In order to protect them when they leave the Home, we have in our premises a little boarding-house, where for a moderate sum they may have food and lodgings.

We have great joy in our teacher-evangelists. Some of our boys who have secured the Government diploma as schoolmasters, are sent to St. Chrischona, near Basel, to be trained as evangelists, and these dear fellows have been much blessed in their preparation and subsequent work. Now, the mission amongst the Italians in the cantons of Ticino, Zurich, Basel, and Beuggen, has been placed in the hands of our young evangelists.

For the evangelisation of our country we need schoolmaster-evangelists rather than pastors. The greater part of Italians dislike everything clerical. A schoolmaster-evangelist has entrance everywhere, and while he is training the children in the love of Christ he continually has opportunity to evangelise their parents and friends. In our work among the poor, we have Sunday-schools for adults, also mothers' meetings. A large number of these neglected ones have learned the way of salvation. We are not an organised church; those whose hearts God has touched join one of the different churches of the country. Many others, who, owing to peculiar circumstances, have not been able to have their names in church books below, have died trusting in Jesus.

We have good news of our mission in Siena, a town that has sent forth such remarkable persons for good and evil, including St. Catherine, Socini, Ochino, and Paleario. Although the town is small and bigoted, still our day-school has about eighty children, and ninety in the Sunday-school. It is very cheering that the church is recruiting her members from the school. Some of the children have been instrumental in the conversion of their parents. The mothers' meetings at Siena have been attended by about 210.

Our agricultural school has become a new centre of evangelisation among the country people. It lies between the headquarters of the Jesuits at Fiesole and a place of pilgrimage called Madonna del Sasso. If we had been there thirty years ago, we should have been burned; but, in spite of the opposition of the priests, and many threatenings and calumnies, our meetings have been well attended. In the last meeting we had 200 people, and it is most touching to see how these poor neglected ones listen to the Gospel. The opposition of the priests has only succeeded in making the Gospel more known than ever all over this large district of Tuscany.

Our beautiful farm has been a real gift of God. Our orphans were kindly received on the estates of Count Resse, to learn gardening and agriculture. But when this gentleman failed, and all his property had to be sold, we were very much perplexed. We were ready to give up this branch of the work if it was the will of God; but after a few months of waiting and prayer, God provided in a remarkable way the necessary sum (£2000) to buy this desirable farm. There we shall be able to keep a good number of our orphans, and it will be a great benefit for our Home. But, in order to complete the repairs, and to put this farm in good working order, we require about £800, part of which will have to be paid shortly. Our heavenly Father has provided till now all that has been required for the Mission. Very often we encounter difficulties, because we are working in a wilderness and surrounded by enemies; but we realise that He who fed the multitudes with five loaves and three fishes remains the same for the future as He has been in the past.

From these paragraphs the all-round character of the work is obvious. We trust our friends will long be spared to direct the excellent institutions to which they have devoted their lives. Dr. Comandi's address is, 6, Via Aretina, Florence.

Red Men of British Columbia.

Writing from Bella Coola, B.C., Rev. Thomas Neville says:—

"In company with Bro. Brett and three Indians, I left Bella Bella for Namu, to preach among the Indians who flock annually to the canneries for employment. Sunday was spent at Namu, and services held in the cannery. At nearly midnight on Sunday I left Namu, with three Indians as a crew, and one sick man belonging to our village. We reached Bella Coola on Monday evening, tired and hungry. We paddled every foot of the way, and covered sixty-five miles in twenty-one hours. Some of the Christians are away hunting, but there will be quite a showing. I have made arrangements to buy a magic lantern, and would like to know if any of our old friends have slides that they have no use for. I want slides that are of a tone that I could teach lessons from, and more particularly Scripture ones. I would also like a few copies of 'Sacred Songs and Solos.' With these people at present you have to a great extent to appeal to their senses in teaching. If they could read, the task would be much easier, but at present we have to use that which will be productive of the most lasting good. In our evening Bible School the lantern will play a useful part."

Suitable slides, or money for cost of same, will be received by Mr. Gilbert R. Kirlew, of Taxal Mount, Higher Broughton, Manchester.

The Gospel in Peru.

AFTER a brief stay in Great Britain, Mr. Charles A. Bright has returned to his sphere of labour in Peru. In a letter circulated among friends of his work, he says :—

"There is no religious liberty allowed by law, but we have our meetings with closed doors and admission by ticket, and are seldom disturbed by anybody. We have now a small native church, and the very first really Christian baptism of natives which ever took place in Lima must have been those I have had the privilege of baptizing. So this small flock of Peruvian and Ecuatorian believers form the first Evangelical Church of native Christians established in the capital of Peru.

"Printing forms a very important branch of our work—perhaps the most important. We have sent thousands and thousands of copies of our Spanish Gospel paper (sixteen pages) not only through Peru and Mexico, but also to many parts of Ecuador, Colombia, and Bolivia. The power of the Press is shown by the fear the priests have of it. A young man from Chili, who formed my acquaintance in Lima, went up into the Andes to open a school. I sent him a box of Gospel papers and some Testaments, which he as promptly put in circulation. The cura was soon in his wake, and ordered the village constable to arrest him. Hearing of this, I went to the Prefect in Lima, and got him released. But at the same time they sent the order for his release they also directed that the circulation of those papers be suspended, and I was told, too, that I must not circulate any more books without getting a licence for each and every one of them. I have not thought it best to obey that order, but have gone on as usual, and have not been hindered."

For years past Mr. Bright has been making himself acquainted with the facts regarding the Indian tribes, and he is anxious to promote evangelisation among the great Quichua family on the Upper Amazons. His address is—Apartado, 293, Lima, Peru.

It has been our privilege to spend the last few weeks in Huacho, a seaport town 100 miles north of Callao, combining the circulation of the Scripture with the preaching of the Gospel. Like many other places in this great continent, Huacho is branded with all the known fruits of Romanism. Though much hindered by the priests, we realised again and again the guidance of God, so that precious seed was sown in hearts prepared by the Holy Spirit.

One Sunday, whilst distributing tracts, the Lord directed to me a man who had come to Huacho the previous day to consult a doctor. After a long conversation, the man told me that when a boy he had seen and read a copy of the Bible, and through it he had been influenced against the wicked example of the priests, and had never been to confession. How delighted he was when I gave him a New Testament!

Another man from Sayan, twelve leagues distant, had received one of the Gospels by John, circulated gratis, and came to buy a Bible. The story of the crucifixion of Christ had so touched his heart that he could not go back to his mountain home without the Bible. He promised to send me a horse, if I would go and visit his village. In Huarua, a village six miles distant, with about 300 inhabitants, there are four ruined churches. This was once a stronghold of the Jesuits. In the course of my visiting I had a prolonged discussion with a priest, to whom I sold a "Protestant" Bible.

It was unspeakably sad to witness the great processions during Easter. Men and women dressed in black, men with heads uncovered, gaudy decorations, images, altars, and candles, the whole throng being led on by wicked priests. But what strikes me above all is the superstitious devotion of the people, born of fear rather than love and faith; and the way they have been turned away from God's love and Christ's atoning death to Mary as the sinner's hope and refuge.

Irrigation in India.

SOME months ago we noticed the publication of a volume of narratives of missionary work in India, by the veteran Dr. Jacob Chamberlain. The work is entitled "In the Tiger Jungle," and is published by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson, and Ferrier (3s. 6d.). In one of the deeply-interesting chapters the following account of irrigation work in India is given as an illustration of the spiritual refreshing produced by Gospel effort. We quote it in order to draw attention to the importance of this irrigation movement as a preventive of famine :—

"We have in India a magnificent river, the sacred Godávery, which, rising on the western coast, only a few miles from the sea of Arabia, among the hills to the north of Bombay, flows diagonally across the entire country to the south-east, and discharges its waters into the Bay of Bengal, north of Madras.

"The monsoon, or rainy season, on the western coast is different from that on the eastern, so that the river comes freighted with its mighty life-giving current during our dry season, flowing with swollen stream through a region parched and verdureless. Some thirty years ago the government of India, incited thereto by an enthusiastic and dauntless English engineer,* who had on military duty traversed the country, constructed an annicut, or dam, over two miles in length, costing four millions of dollars, across this mighty river, thirty miles from the sea, raising the level of its current some 30ft., and digging channels great and small, poured out its vivifying waters over a million acres of what had been an arid plain.

"Behold the change! What had for centuries been worthless sand plains were converted into fruitful rice-fields; the squalid inhabitants have become thrifty farmers; the famine-stricken region is a garden of plenty. What has wrought this marvel in these now harvest-laden counties? It is but the flowing in of the waters of that historic river.

"British skill did not create the waters of the Godávery. For centuries it had flowed as now. Bubbling up from springs among the Maráthi Hills, it runs a tiny brook; other springs from hillside and dale feed it as it speeds along; affluents from Berár, Nagpore, Hyderabad, Bustár, increase its volume; it becomes a river. I have followed its banks or travelled on its bosom for hundreds of miles. It is here a rapid torrent; it is there a placid stream; it is yonder a leaping cataract; here it broadens into a lake; there it foams between the perpendicular walls of a mountain gorge, as it bursts through the Eastern Ghats, whence in a broad and even stream it flows through sixty miles of rolling country and of plain until it buries itself in the sea. It is ever flowing, pure, refreshing, life-giving.

"On its banks successive generations had been living for ages and had seen its everlasting flood; successive generations had eked out a squalid existence on the sand plains a hundred miles southward; but neither had they comprehended its possibilities for good, nor attempted to utilise its wasted waters. It was left for a Christian nation, educated by the Bible, brought by the Bible and the Bible's Author to their proud position among the nations of the earth—it was left for such a nation to discover the possibilities, to advance the capital, to furnish the skill, to turn the watercourses upon the desert, and, while reaping their portion of the gladsome harvest, to confer life, as it were, upon the inhabitants of the droughty plains."

Some Village Heroes.

By NEWTON JONES.

THERE seems no theme that calls for more attention and sympathy than the villages of our land. From them the towns have received some of their best workers. Christ went about in the villages doing good—teaching and preaching. One can then scarcely conceive of a more Christlike work than to enter some of these hamlets and seek to encourage the lonely toilers. In these days of cycling it is made easy for many to get into deserted spots, hold meetings, conferences, conventions, and missions. The Sunday-School Union has, during the past five years, given some attention to village Sunday-schools, aiding them in many ways.

As evangelist for the S.S.U. I have already worked in over 120 villages in Herts, Bucks, Berks, Essex, Suffolk, Norfolk, Oxon, respectively. An excellent name to give some of these village toilers would be, "Hidden Heroes and Heroines."

Mrs. B——, my hostess, was seventy-seven years of age. She occupied the office of Sunday-school superintendent, chapel steward, society steward, and was a truly godly soul, full of Christian zeal and fervour. Her income, all told, 2s. 8d. per week from the parish, yet she was never absent from her post, and took it as a joy to entertain the preacher.

Bro. S—— was the shepherd; he was a Sunday-school teacher, and well he taught me to understand the 23rd Psalm, as I sat with him in the chimney corner and listened to his experiences of God's dealings with him.

Bro. B—— was a blacksmith and the village preacher. I sat with him in his study, which was the forge; between the strokes of the hammer on the anvil he would utter sayings that carried with them other fire. He would walk to all his appointments, preach twice, sometimes three times, weekly. He had paid to be taught Hebrew and Greek, and had some five or six young men then training in his spare moments.

Last year, in a Norfolk village, I heard of a youth who had just gone to London—the son of my host. He was doing good work in a suburban church. He had two years previously been a Sabbath-breaker, but was brought to Christ by hearing the old shepherd pray in the prayer-meeting for the conversion of souls. His grief was that there was no Sunday-school; he at once started one, and was greatly blessed, and a month previous to my arrival he preached farewell sermons to crowded congregations. Thus the villages are giving constantly to the towns fresh and noble workers.

"How do you get them in?" is a question often put to me. I would reply, By getting the children to a service—say at six p.m.—thoroughly interest them, give them the best you can; send them home with a message to give to their parents to come to the 7.30 meeting, and it will be strange if you have empty benches. There are many evangelical preachers in the villages who will welcome such aid.

There is no department of work that needs so much practical help as the village Sunday-schools and churches. It is indeed short-sighted policy to neglect them. For some of our wealthy Christians to reside in our villages would be the saving of many churches.

The S.A. in Holland.

Writing from Amsterdam, Mrs. Booth-Clibborn says :—

I am working in Marchiennes, a Roman Catholic town in Belgium, where we have crowds of anarchists, infidels, and Romanists in the open-air as well as in a hall. The attendance is admirable, and every day some stay to pray with us. Fourteen, all Romanists, rose to come forward on Sunday afternoon. One said, "I will trust and not reason"; another was a drunkard with bleeding head; another with a fearful past. Oh, the terrible confessions we hear—poor sheep with no shepherd! They are so glad to come and hear of the Saviour.

I am striving to put our work more than ever on simple Apostolic lines, sending two and two forth to visit, hold little meetings in kitchens, and so forth. It is beautiful to see how they win the hearts of the people, who send for them when in sorrow. I am so very poor, and need £300 at once

The Pomegranate.

THE Pomegranate is so often mentioned in the Bible that it must have special interest for all who read the sacred Book.

The Children of Israel complained in the desert that it was "no place of seed, or of figs, or of vines, or of pomegranates" (Numbers xx. 5). This implies that the Pomegranate trees were valued in Egypt. And when the spies were sent into Canaan and took of the grapes of Eshcol "they brought also of the pomegranates and the figs" (Numbers xiv. 23) to prove the goodness of the Promised Land. When Moses described the beauty and richness of the country, he said it was "a land of wheat and barley, and vines and fig trees, and pomegranates" (Deut. viii. 8).

This shows us that the Pomegranate was greatly esteemed by the people, and its presence was held to be a sign of God's favour, indicating the wealth of the land even without cultivation.

The name of the Pomegranate in Hebrew was Rimmon, from its "up-right" growth. It is a short shrub-like tree of the Myrtle family, with vivid dark green foliage and the flower conspicuous for its splendid crimson colour. It was a beautiful object alone or in groves, especially when in blossom or in fruit. The fruit is singularly rich in colour; as it ripens the rind becomes deep red, and when open is purple within containing a numerous supply of seed vessels. In fact, the whole fruit is a mass of seeds and juicy pulp from which a refreshing drink is made. Blood oranges are produced from an orange branch grafted on a pomegranate stem.

The pomegranate trees grow in Syria, Persia, and in North Africa. There commonness in Canaan is born witness to by the three or four towns that received the name of Rimmon, probably so called from the abundance of this fruit in their locality. One of the Syrian gods was called Rimmon, and its worship was probably connected with this tree. The three chief features of the pomegranate were (1) its beauty, (2) its usefulness, and (3) its suggestiveness.

1. Its beauty. It was one of the loveliest trees of the Holy Land, with its bright green leaf, its crimson blossom, and its purple-red fruit, it was worthy of cultivation simply because of its inherent beauty. It became an object fit for ornamentation in connection with sacred service, and was worthy to be reproduced or imitated by the skill of carver, painter, sculptor, or embroiderer. Almost all religious ornament and symbolism are taken from the most common, the most beautiful, and the most useful objects in nature, thereby making evident in perpetual memorial God's great goodness and man's gratitude and praise. The loveliness of common things was made radiant in the light of holiness and grace.

2. Besides the beauty of the pomegranate tree its usefulness made it conspicuous among fruit-bearing plants. The raw ripe fruit when plucked off the tree is still described by travellers as most delicious. The thick rind keeps the juice cool even in extreme heat. The healing properties of the pomegranate tree give it special interest. From the root and bark medicines were prepared, from the flower and the rind of the fruit a drug of great value was made, which became a remedy for fevers. These medicinal virtues would tend to give the tree a sacred importance. The bark was used for dyeing purposes, and is still employed for giving special colour to morocco leather. The fruit when gathered in abundance yields prolific quantities of juice from which a pleasant drink is made. Thus for many reasons the pomegranate was highly esteemed by the children of Israel.

3. Beyond the beauty and usefulness of the Pomegranate, its suggestive symbolism gives it a place in the Tabernacle and Temple service. The infinite multitude of seeds suggest an infinite power to reproduce itself that is unequalled in plant life. Each separate fruit holds the germs of forests containing in compact and concentrated mass some thousands of seed. It thus becomes the symbol of vitality. Its abundance of seed figures as in living parable a silent latent force. With an inherent principle of life it teems with power to perpetuate itself. This inner secret, mysterious, and multitudinous capacity to impart life is a picture in small of the Divine truth, the Word of God. Hence the natural fruit of the earth became the sign and symbol of God's promise. Here was a memorial of the covenant with Abraham in which God said, "I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth."

Therefore the pomegranate was embroidered upon the garment of the high priest (Ex. xxviii. 33) "and upon the hem of it thou shalt make pomegranates of blue, purple, and scarlet, and bells of gold between them round about a golden bell and a pomegranate." And for the same reason because the most real and vivid emblem and type of vitality, promise, and fruition, it found permanent place in the Temple of Solomon, upon the top of the pillars pomegranates were carved (1 Kings vii. 41), "and 400 pomegranates for the two networks, two rows of pomegranates for each network to cover the two bowls of the chapters that were upon the pillars." Thus the goodness, bounty, and beauty of God was set forth on the columns of the temple from generation to generation. This sculptured imagery reminded the worshipper that as the fruits are for man's enjoyment and use so they are to be dedicated and sanctified to God's service and for man's gratitude and praise continually. The recognition of all the produce of the land as belonging to God, both natural and cultivated, was enjoined on the Hebrew people as one of their chief duties. All the garden and wayside flowers and fruits are God's, and, therefore, it was the obligation and privilege of his children that they should yield to Him all He gave, the border of the high priest's robe and the top of the pillars of the temple should alike bear witness to this.

For the men, women, and children of old what could be a fitter symbol and more lovely foreshadowing of the fruits of the Spirit than these pomegranates from the watered plains of Canaan, embroidered on the hem of the priestly garment or wrought about the brazen columns which became a visible but unspoken prophecy of "the Word" of God, beautiful in lowliness and exaltation, that was to be the precious seed of eternal life sown in human hearts and taking root should spring up and bear much increase until the whole earth rejoiced and the desert blossomed as the rose, and "the Beloved" shall go down into the garden to see the fruits of the valley, to see whether the vine flourished and the pomegranate budded. J. Johnson.

How to Learn the Books of the Bible.

In Thessalonians we are taught the Lord will come from heaven;
In Timothy and Titus a bishop's rule is given;
Philemon marks a Christian's love, which only Christians know;
Hebrews describes the Gospels prefigured by the Law.
James teaches that faith without holiness is but vain and dead;
St. Peter points the narrow way in which the saints are led;
John, in his three epistles, on love delights to dwell;
St. Jude gives awful warning of judgment wrath, and hell;
The Revelation prophesies of that tremendous day
When Christ, and Christ alone, shall be the trembling sinner's stay.

Uncle Tom.

Official Outrages.

SOME readers chide us for opening our columns to the consideration of questions affecting the moral well-being of our Indian soldiery, on the plea that we are introducing our young unsophisticated readers to the thought of matters of which they ought to know nothing. It is a choice of evils, of course, but it appears to us to be more according to the mind and example of Christ to inform our readers of the diabolical things that are going on, so that the area of protest may be widened, even at some risk of individual contamination. How, for instance, can any Christian journal keep silent about such doings as the following extract reveals? It is taken from The Bombay Guardian:—

"A Christian Englishman holding a responsible position under Government writes to corroborate the statements regarding the official traffic in virtuous young Indian girls for military misuse. Mentioning four military stations, he says:—

"'The C.O. gave orders to his Quartermaster to arrange with the regimental Kutwal to take two policemen (without uniform) and go into the villages and take from the homes of these poor people their daughters from fourteen years and upward, about twelve or fifteen girls at a time. They were to select all the best-looking. Next morning these were all put in front of the Colonel and Quartermaster. The former made his selection of the number required. They were then presented with a pass or licence, and then made over to the old woman in charge of this house of vice under the Government. The women already there, who were by the doctor examined and found diseased, had their passes taken away from them, and were then removed by the police out of the cantonment, and these fresh innocent girls put in their places. This is the fruit of the system some titled ladies in England have petitioned the Government to have reinstated. Surely, if they understood this matter thoroughly, they would all blush for shame at wishing to have pure, innocent girls by hundreds in India forced into such a cruel life as this.'"

The Bible in West Africa.

IN the Bible Society Reporter for August there is a very cheering contribution on the influence of the Bible in West Africa in the shape of extracts of letters from a delegate in that part to one of the secretaries. Speaking of an auxiliary meeting held at Bathurst, he says:—

"I wish it were possible for me to give you even a brief outline of Rev. F. H. Johnson's speech. It was inimitable, and raised the meeting to a state of great enthusiasm. Mr. Hughes had said that ministers ought to feel it part of their duty to support the Bible Society, and Mr. Johnson, referring to that, exclaimed, 'Yes, and we should remember that if there had been no Bible there would have been no ministers! Many years ago,' he said, 'there were landed in Sierra Leone from a British man-of-war a number of African men and women recaptured from a slave vessel. They stood in the barrack yard, poor miserable creatures, with no clothing on them save fetters fastened round their necks and feet. My father was one of them! My mother was one of them! They were idolaters, they worshipped images and bowed down to wood and stone. Why am I not like them? Why am I a Christian minister who yesterday from this pulpit set forth the unsearchable riches of Christ? Why am I standing on this platform to-night with men more highly favoured than myself, who honour me by calling me brother? It is because of what the Bible has done for me.'

"He then addressed the women, and pointed out what the Bible had done for them in raising them to be the companions and helpmeets of their husbands. He referred to a conversation he had had with a Muhammadan, and showed that the Koran had not done for Muhammadan women what the Bible had done for Christian women. 'When you walk through the streets,' he said, 'and the men raise their hats to you, or when you enter a room, and they offer you the chair they have been seated on, preferring rather to stand than see you without a seat, remember that it is the Bible that has brought you this respect, and if you give up the Bible you do it at your peril.'

"The following incident testifies in a very pleasing manner to the influence of the meetings. Towards evening a native—a Mandingo by his dress—came to the house and handed Mr. Williams a small parcel bearing the words, 'Subscription for British and Foreign Bible Society.' We tried to stop the man, but he muttered a few unintelligible words and hurried away, without stating from whom he came. On opening the parcel I found it contained £5 5s. in French dollars and English silver. No name was given, and who the generous donor is we have no idea, the handwriting on the parcel being evidently disguised."

Mr. Johnson's appointment and work have been so appreciated by missionaries and churches in West Africa, that the committee have extended his engagement for a period of three years.

A College for New Guinea.

SIR,—Some of your readers have in the past been my helpers, and in our College here at Vatorata we have benefited by their practical interest. We shall be glad if they can renew their kindness now, and still further help us in our college establishment. The cottages for students, of which I wrote at the same time, have been built, and we have now twenty-two good houses which will soon be all filled.

The time for the remaining work has, I think, fully come. When I was in Australia last year a gentleman offered to give £100 towards a memorial church if I could get other £200. The church is to be in memory of the South Sea Island teachers, who began Christian work in New Guinea. From our mission churches in the South Seas we have have had since 1872 an unbroken succession of missionaries. They have been the pioneers for Christ on this great dark island. More than a hundred have died at their posts. Some of these fell by the spear and the club, many more by New Guinea fever; but all were faithful unto death.

Heroes and martyrs they were, but their names will in a few years be entirely forgotten if not saved from oblivion by some such memorial as that now proposed. The church will cost, with erection, £300. Its windows will be coloured with a scroll down centre containing the names of all the Polynesian teachers who have died in New Guinea up to the end of 1896. It will not only perpetuate the names of the heroes of the past, but as successive generations of New Guinea students worship within its walls it will be an object lesson and an inspiration to them.

The directors of the L.M.S. approve of the scheme. The Lieut.-Governor of New Guinea and his officers are contributors, as also the few English residents who are here; but we still want more than £100 before we can realise our plan, and proceed with the building of the church. W. G. LAWES.

Vatorata, B. New Guinea, June 5.

Rest Houses in India.

Two years ago the readers of THE CHRISTIAN helped me to secure several rest-houses. You will be glad to hear these have not only been useful to us as missionaries among the hill tribes, but some hundreds of people have been saved from starvation through them. We are more convinced than ever of the usefulness of these houses, which we can move about, and by which we are enabled to live among the people simply and at small expense. In these hills carts can hardly travel, pack animals are difficult to hire, and porters are expensive, so a hundred and fifty rupees spent on a cheap house saves money in the end.

I am now among a tribe called Bheels, perhaps one of the wildest in India. Every man carries a bow and arrow. I am taking the place of a missionary who is on furlough after fifteen years' continuous service. He has established besides the headquarters at Kherwara seven outposts, each with its school and rest-house, and from ten to eighty Bheel boys are learning to read, and hearing of the Saviour. Other villages are crying out for teachers, and some of the Bheel boys are asking for scholarships to enable them to qualify to become masters. Already six young Bheels are teaching schools, and doing fairly well. We can get land for nothing, and the villagers will help with timber and bamboos, but we require help in the matter of rest-houses, whereby we may live amongst the people. The houses will cost £8 10s., and the scholarships £2 per annum. At the present time there are remarkable openings on all sides among these hill-men. EDWARD P. HERBERT.

C.M.S., Kherwara, Rajputana, India.

Northfield Conference.

THE fifteenth Conference at Northfield, Mass., under the direction of Mr. D. L. Moody, opened on July 29, on the beautiful hillside near his home. Mr. Moody was the preacher from Jeremiah xxxii. 17, his topic being "Nothing too hard for God." For the first week there were only two meetings a day at the Auditorium. Mr. Sankey leads the singing, and a vast audience greets the various leaders in the exercises of each day.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of London, preached with great acceptance on the opening day from John vii. 37-39, his theme being the work of the Holy Spirit. The same day Rev. F. H. Marling gave a Bible reading, and the twilight meeting on Round Top, the picturesque knoll back of Mr. Moody's house, was led by H. M. Moore, of Boston. At the Auditorium during the day Rev. R. A. Torrey delivered a powerful sermon on "A Holy Ghost Revival," explaining in what the one described in the second chapter of Acts showed itself, and how the revival came.

Mr. Campbell Morgan spoke again on Saturday morning, and on Sunday preached in Boston. Sunday was a busy day, for in addition to Bishop Newman's sermon in the morning service from Acts iv. 12, he spoke again in the evening. Rev. Geo. H. C. Macgregor gave an address in the afternoon on the secret of failure in spiritual life and work. There were several prayer and praise services in the early morning and impromptu services of prayer in the woods and other shady retreats. The regular "Round Top" meeting was led at 6.30 p.m., by H. M. Moore, the speaker being Mr. David, the Tamil evangelist of India. Bishop Newman was the first speaker on the Monday morning, and Rev. George Macgregor followed him.

Northfield and Young Women.

THE Northfield Training School has completed its seventh year. It is one of the four educational institutions founded by Mr. Moody. It is not the Northfield Seminary, whose aim is the fitting of young women for college, but a separate and independent school, where Christian young women of twenty years of age and over, even if possessed of no more than a common school education, may be trained into skilful and effective workers in all forms of Christian service. Its origin is traced to the many applications which came to Mr. Moody from pastors and churches for female helpers in home mission work, and the appeals from young women willing and desirous to do that work, but lacking in preparation for it.

The chief feature in the training is the careful, earnest, and persistent study of the Bible, but in addition to that is included such special courses as blackboard drawing, music, and physical culture, and, more particularly, a practical knowledge of domestic science, dressmaking, cooking, and nursing, so that the graduates are "enabled to bring God's Word into the homes of the poor, the ignorant, the improvident, and the sick, and to enter with intelligent sympathy into the practical affairs of their daily life."

The Training School is supplied with students from almost every State in the Union, and from other countries, who leave it to go into foreign as well as home fields, to organise Sunday-schools, to become Y.W.C.A. secretaries, pastors' helpers, teachers of sewing and cooking in industrial schools, matrons of children's homes, nurses in dispensaries and hospitals, as well as in private families, and wherever they go carrying with them the knowledge of the pure Word of God and the power of his Spirit.

Free Church Council Movement.—Arrangements are being made by the executive of the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches for united missions to be held in every county in England and Wales during the coming autumn and winter. In addition to the services of "Gipsy" Smith, leading missioners of all the Evangelical Free Churches are being engaged to take part. A new departure of the Federation movement will be the issue of a monthly organ, The Free Churchman, of which Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Christ Church, has been appointed editor. The new periodical will be widely circulated among the District Councils, and the contributors will include representative men of all the Free Church communions.

The British Chautauqua.

[By a special correspondent.]

TO the general reader the word "Chautauqua" carries no mental picture. It is an Indian word meaning "a bag tied in the middle." The name is applied to a lake in New York State, and is so applied because the lake is in the form of the figure 8. But the name "Chautauqua" has been given also to a summer school for Sunday-school workers, which is held on the shores of the lake, and the latter significance of the word has already obliterated the former. This great American institution, with its membership of some three hundred thousand people, is founded upon a religious basis, and, while intended primarily for Sunday-school teachers, offers a course of study of the widest possible description, embracing in its ample syllabus almost every subject that is taught in our modern universities.

The British Chautauqua was suggested by Rev. G. Short in his presidential address before the Baptist Union, 1894, and one of the delegates present, Mr. Percy Webb, determined to carry the suggestion into effect. This, at Aberystwith, is the third year of the Conference, and those who were present to see its inception at Pwllheli, two years ago, are able to mark the marvellous strides it has already made.

It must not be forgotten that for the majority of the teachers this is their annual summer holiday, and the "play" must not be forgotten in the "work." Enjoyable excursions and fraternal intercourse are still much in evidence, as they should be, but the number of classes has been largely increased, and they are now held in the morning when the mind is most vigorous and receptive.

The Conference was opened with a sermon on Sunday afternoon, August 8, delivered by Rev. C. H. Kelly. It was a racy, comprehensive address on the text, "I have chosen you and ordained you." The true teacher, he said, must be called of God. Sunday-school work was a labour of the highest honour, and without Christ it could not be done. The aim of the teacher should be to lead the scholar to the Saviour, and any achievement short of this would be a failure. Mr. Kelly has a vigorous delivery, a full voice, and with his telling illustrations the service was altogether most inspiring. Monday was spent in a most delightful drive to the village of Pontrhydygroes, and in the evening of that day we listened to another stirring speech from Mr. Kelly, the president for the year.

The classes proper did not begin until Tuesday morning, when at ten o'clock Dr. Agar Beet rose in the large hall of University College to give a lecture on the Epistle to the Romans. It was a thrilling sight. Every seat and desk in the hall were occupied. Before each member lay Bible, notebook, and pencil, and for more than an hour this representative body of the great army of the voluntary teachers were busy making notes on new facts and thoughts about an Epistle with which they had been familiar from childhood. The day of the Sunday-school, so far from being past, has by no means reached its meridian glory, if scenes like the one we witnessed that morning are reproduced yearly on an evergrowing scale.

Then the party divided, some to attend the elocution class conducted by Miss Hallie Q. Brown, a lady who can admirably illustrate precept by example; others to be introduced to the beauties of Greek Testament by Prof. T. Williams, of the Aberystwith Baptist College, whose patient sympathetic manner is just as helpful to the beginner as his profound knowledge of the subject. He is one who knows and is apt to teach what he knows. These classes were continued daily through the week, except Thursday, when we took a pilgrimage to see the ruined abbey at Strata Florida.

On Tuesday night Dr. Lorimer, of Boston, gave us his masterpiece lecture on "The French Revolution." We sat spell-bound for two hours, and thought it had been scarce half the time. Wednesday evening was occupied by a debate on the "Relation between the Church and the School"—opened with wise brevity and much skill by Mrs. Benham—which might have been much more helpful than it was if speakers could be kept to the subject. Alas! even notable men talked for fifteen minutes and never come in sight of it.

On Thursday Dr. Lorimer discoursed on the newly discovered papyrus and pointed out its value in supporting Christian faith.

Friday evening was occupied by a lantern lecture on "The Tower of London" by Rev. G. Hay Morgan. It was a series of historic stories, political and religious, associated with one of the most ancient structures on our island. When the Chautauquans returned to the hostel from the lecture, they were visited by Mr. T. E. Ellis, M.P., who spoke a few warm words of welcome. He said that the four years he had spent as a student of Aberystwith College were the happiest in his life.

On Friday and Saturday mornings Mr. James Bailey, of Southlands College, gave two very interesting lectures on "Sunday-school Discipline and Method of Teaching," both of which were much appreciated, as they bore so directly on the practical experience of those present.

The devotional meeting held at 7.50 every morning in the Presbyterian Church was much enjoyed by early risers (and this seems to be a common virtue among the Chautauquans). Some have said that they found these times of communion the most helpful part of the whole Conference. The unity of the party was greatly enhanced by the issue (three times per week) of The British Chautauquan, a publication recording all the doings of the assembly and announcing the events of the immediate future.

Great praise is due to Mr. Percy Webb for the excellent and economical arrangements he has made. The price to be paid for all the good things provided is within the reach of even poor teachers, and it is gratifying to note that the number who have taken advantage of the Summer School this year is larger than ever.

At the close of the first week we feel that the Chautauqua is growing up into the shape its originators hoped—viz., an educative institution, where Sunday-school teachers may receive a stimulating aid for the great Christian work into which they have been called. The movement has vitality in it, and under the blessing of God it will become a channel of immeasurable power to the Sunday-schools of our land.

The Bellenden-Ker Mission.

SIR,—In June, 1892, my father landed here; three months after, his health failed, necessitating his departure for Sydney, where he died on June 3, 1893. Six months after the mission was begun the natives first came to the settlement, and the work has been carried on ever since amid great difficulties and privations, but at the same time with most encouraging results.

Nearly 500 natives are in touch with the mission. Seventy young people are permanently settled on the mission settlement, and young people from distant tribes are continually arriving and remaining with us. We have young people from six different tribes. The work has been greatly blessed of God; numbers have been baptized.

Five years ago nothing but a wilderness was to be seen. Now there is a settlement of eighteen buildings, comprising mission house, school, dormitory for girls, natives' huts and stores. A large number of tropical fruit trees have been planted and fenced in with wire fencing. A short distance from the settlement is the plantation, where bananas, corn, rice, and sugar cane are growing luxuriously; the young men are now busy clearing fifteen additional acres for the cultivation of rice and coffee. There are pig runs, poultry runs, and stock yards. A church is being erected, and a party of young men are engaged each day splitting the necessary timber in the scrubs.

Although the work has thus prospered, our needs are many. First and foremost, another worker is needed. Mr. Reeves and myself, being the only white men on the place, are sorely taxed. We have in the week to be carpenters, blacksmiths, and storekeepers, as well as teach in school and preach the Gospel each evening. With another helper visits could be made regularly to distant camps of natives. For many years the Christian Churches sadly neglected these people; but now there is a door wide open for good and lasting work to be done.

In the course of another year or so the settlement could, if well supported now, be made self-supporting. The sum of £50 is required to meet pressing needs.—Yours,

Ernest R. Gribble.

The Theatrical Mission.

MANY a sad and sorrowful heart beats under the gay trappings of the stage. Deep pathos is to be found in the lives of young girls whose earnings are the main support of widowed mothers and smaller children; while other girls in failing health are screwing themselves up nightly for parts for which they possess more talent than physical strength, driven thereto by the exigencies of the struggle for existence. The theatrical profession employs many who earn but a scanty and precarious living by work far more exacting than is generally imagined.

In many ways do those who constitute the staff of the Mission, which centres in Macready House (Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, W.C.), lay themselves out to compass the spiritual, moral, and physical benefit of stage employées. The work of this Institute, in its diversified forms, is under the direction of Mr. Alfred B. Harding, to whom all communications should be addressed. The weary young professional, after matinée or rehearsal, may rest and refresh both body and mind, free from the temptations of the streets, and surrounded by evidences of the thoughtful care which has anticipated need and entered into difficulties. Lodging accommodation at small cost for country visitors is an important feature; and intellectual and recreative aids are furnished gratuitously.

Friday reunions, held from October to March inclusive, with simple and earnest addresses by ministers of the Gospel and others, have been more than ever appreciated, as shown by the large attendance during 1896. On one such occasion a girl present announced her fixed intention of henceforth leading a Christian life, and asked the Lady Superintendent's prayers that she might be kept faithful. A Jewess and two Roman Catholics present one Friday were much impressed; and one of the latter, with three other girls, spontaneously asked permission on the following Sunday to accompany Miss Charlton to church.

Ladies interested in the work will find full scope for Christian service in writing letters with the view of maintaining the good influence of the Institute with regard to girls on tour; while strenuous efforts are made to induce friends in the provinces and on the Continent to show sympathy and kindness to such travellers. Invaluable work has also been accomplished in London visitation.

The institution has now attained its majority, having been founded early in 1876, from small beginnings; whether its "adult" life shall witness a great extension of its usefulness is largely in the hands of its supporters.

Tibetan Mission Band.

In a recent letter Mr. Wm. Sharp writes:—

"Letters arriving from time to time have told of Mr. Polhill-Turner having placed his wife and children at Chefoo (so that the children may attend the schools of the China Inland Mission there), and of his long journey westward by river; and finally of his meeting once again with the band of workers. On May 2 or 3 he had arrived as far west as Chungking, in the province of Sz-chuen, where he had the great pleasure of meeting his brother Arthur, with whom he originally went out to China, but whom he had not seen for many years.

"A letter, dated May 24, from Kiating, says of William Soutter and James Neave, from whom he had parted some fifteen months previously at Kalimpong: 'They are both looking well, though working hard, and are very keen for Tibet. They have both made very good progress with the language, and are able to make their way among the people by themselves. Both these brethren are anxious to work in the direction of Da-chien-loo. I had fairly settled in my own mind to make that our headquarters, with Sung-pan as a second station at the start.'

"As we have in the past taken our friends into our confidence in telling them how God has, through his people, graciously sent in the needed supplies, sometimes in abundance—so now we tell of funds at an end, so that those who can heartily do so may just now join us in prayer for the further supply of the needs of these labourers in the vineyard."

Mr. Sharp, who is treasurer of the Band, may be addressed—Woodfield, Beulah Hill, Norwood.

Evangelical Church of Italy.

THE twenty-sixth report of evangelistic and educational work connected with the Evangelical Church of Italy is as interesting as its predecessors. In a brief introductory note, Dr. MacDougall says:—"No fewer than 923 persons were brought, in 1896, into closest fellowship with the Church. Of these 302 entered into full communion, while the remaining 621 are being taught in the catechumen classes. The gifts of the churches for sustentation fund alone amounted to 9193fr., while a further sum of 25,620fr. was raised by them for all the other purposes of mission life and extension."

With very few exceptions, the Evangelical Church of Italy consists of converts from Romanism, who have entered upon spiritual liberty after escaping from hard bondage. The reports from the various centres are in many cases very striking, and in a large degree the following lines by Sig. Mazzetti on progress in Naples are typical:—

"Our meetings are always attended by 100 to 130 persons, nearly all members or catechumens, and some, though regular in their attendance, are as yet undecided. On extraordinary occasions, such as baptisms or festivals, we have from 250 and upwards. Among the newly admitted of last year there is a doctor of medicine, a student in law, and another in natural history, all of the University of Naples. The first, from an obstinate unbelief, has become an earnest defender of the faith, and has begun interesting apologetical conferences. And so has the student of natural history, as well as some old and new brethren, who do their utmost to scatter the good seed of the kingdom and to help the pastor in his preachings.

"One of these has been accepted as a student at our Theological College in Florence. There are also two distinguished teachers of music, two elementary teachers, several employés—that is to say, nearly all persons in an independent position, who, if they can only contribute in a small measure to the maintenance of the work, are at least no charge upon us, a thing which for those who know the actual state of the evangelistic work is worthy of note.

"A rich Israelite of Holland, who from his infancy has attended Evangelical churches, was last year in Naples with his relatives, who are also excellent friends of mine. He was desirous of having religious conversations with me, and in the end asked to be baptized. I read to him Acts viii., where the story of Candace the Ethiopian is mentioned, and I said to him: 'If thou believest with all thy heart thou mayest be baptized'; and he answered me: 'I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.' The ceremony was a very solemn one, both on account of the great number of persons present as well as from the earnest testimony borne by the neophyte and the clear replies to the questions put to him before baptism. He left a considerable sum for the poor of the church, and gave a donation for the new church and school.

"Among the more zealous catechumens who, please God, will be admitted at Easter, we have a doctor of medicine, an engineer, a professor of mathematics, a distinguished painter with his wife, and others, so that the work is progressing from every point of view and in all its branches. Our only subject of lament is that our place of worship is far too small for the congregation and for the school. It is urgent, therefore, that we should have a larger place. The ground for this purpose has been purchased and presented by Mrs. S. E. Pinkett, and she and I have already collected a sum for the erection of church and school, but we are far from having reached the necessary amount, and know not to whom else to apply; only we have faith that the Lord will put it into the heads of our friends to come to our aid."

It is impossible to read the report of the Evangelical Church of Italy without being enlisted as its helper—at the throne of grace, if not in other ways. Dr. MacDougall, the hon. treasurer and foreign secretary, may be addressed at the Presbyterian Church, Florence.

A Case of Cholera, apparently only too well authenticated, was found in East London last week. The victim, a young girl, died. It appears, however, to be an isolated instance, and the prompt measures taken for disinfecting have allayed all fears of an epidemic

A Month in Norway.

WE sailed from Leith on Friday morning, June 18, and had a fair passage to Christiansand. Two young men from Ireland were on board, men of prayer; and the captain was also a Christian. We visited our praying friends, Mr. and Mrs. R., and on Sabbath went to their meeting, when about twenty persons were assembled. We also visited a great meeting convened against the drink traffic, and in the evening had the pleasure of addressing a number of soldiers and others at the camp, a mile or two out of the town. We had the joy of seeing a young soldier anxious about his soul, and numbers on their knees praying for him, when he hopefully gave his heart to Jesus.

During this happy holy Sabbath day, three of us sat amongst some trees, and sang the twenty-third Psalm, and our Norwegian friends prayed. Then in his house we had solemn dealing for eternity with a lady who was anxious, amid prayer and tears; she also most hopefully gave her heart to Jesus, and accompanied us to the soldiers' camp.

On Monday, we arrived at our destination in the Seatersdall Valley, and saw the peasants with their quaint dresses and stately walk. The lovely scenery of hill and dale, river and lake, was most delightful. We had already been on the west coast, and at another time somewhat more in central Norway; but during this third visit we enjoyed the quiet valley very much indeed. Distributing Scripture cards in Norsk was of somewhat daily occurrence, and visiting the cottages and speaking a little word of cheer to the people was enjoyed time after time.

After much prayer, I left the beautiful Seatersdall Valley for Christiansand on my way home. We again met our praying friends there, and sailed out with them to an island, where they have a summer residence. When we arrived, a number of friends had convened, coming out from the town in boats, and we had a nice prayer meeting. Then we sailed back to town in three boats, singing hymns as we moved along.

Next day, we looked round the town with its beautiful broad streets and shady trees; in the evening we visited the Salvation Army meeting, where there was a good attendance, a nice band of music, and some stirring testimonies given. Then the parting from friends and dear Norway, and I am off to sea.

A fog came on and detained us some hours in the North Sea, but it was not lost time, as I got an opportunity to be in prayer with a lady on our knees. We needed the help of the Lord for safety. An aged gentleman told me he was ill of heart-disease, but as a man of science he could only deal with God the Father about his case. I referred to the hymn which a lady in our party in Norway often sang, viz.:—

The thorns, they were placed on his beautiful brow
To save a poor sinner like me.

I also mentioned that a Christian physician often said to me "We have just to come again under the sprinkled blood." I broke into prayer, somewhat paraphrasing what I had said, and then asked him, "Can you say 'Amen' to that?" "Yes," he replied," "I can." Thus our aged man of science humbly was led of the Spirit to acknowledge Jesus Christ that day.

O, cruel thorns to bruise that brow,
Before whom the archangels bow.
'Twas for my sin Thou suffered there.
Amazing love beyond compare.

Toilers.

"And He saw them distressed in rowing, for the wind was contrary."—Mark vi. 48 (R.V.)

O ye toilers on life's tempestuous main,
Why toiling and working so?
Your wearisome toiling is all in vain,
'Tis Jesus the heart must know.

In the Saviour's love there is perfect peace,
Tho' raging the storm may be;
The howl of the storm-blast will quickly cease,
If Jesus walks over the sea.

Yes, we need the sound of his loving voice,
Earth's tumults to stay and still,
With the touch of his tender pierced hand,
To quiet the restless will.

With a faith that can count, in all the way,
His giving must needs be best;
And knows in the tempest, or come what may,
With Jesus is sweetest rest.

Work in Tunis.

DEAR SIR,—In the intense heat it is impossible to work as in more temperate weather; it is quite out of the question to think of visiting between the hours of ten and three. Even the people seem to be so overcome with the heat they have little inclination to talk. The cafés are empty until five or six o'clock; then rows of chairs or mats are placed outside, and one by one become occupied by Arabs, who sip their favourite beverage and engage in converse or a game of draughts. The evenings would afford splendid opportunities for distributing tracts and scriptures, but a special order has been issued by the Government prohibiting this. The Lord has again given us opportunities of witnessing for Him in the bazaars. A number of Jews have come to our shop; some have visited me at the house.

Much pleasure has been afforded me by acquaintance made with the people in the saddlers' bazaar. One of these kindly allowed me to photograph his shop, and this led to further conversation. I may be able to read the Scriptures to them while they work. After a conversation I had been holding with some Jews, a young Arab student said he knew all the Bible contained, for he had read the Koran. I asked him a few questions, and found he was ignorant of even the outlines of Scripture history.

Though not a very favourable time of the year, I have begun a class for big lads. They are of the poorer sort, and gain a livelihood as porters, etc. Please pray for this class of lads. We have been much encouraged by the lantern meetings held for the Arabs. The people have listened with deep interest as the various slides have been explained and the lesson impressed upon them. There is a very large Italian population in this town. We have begun the study of Italian, hoping by next winter to have made sufficient progress to allow us to help in their evangelisation.—Yours sincerely, in Christ's service, Arthur V. Liley.

Miss Annie Taylor in Scotland.

DURING the past week Miss Annie Taylor has addressed large meetings in some of the leading summer resorts in the West and East of Scotland as well, as meetings in Edinburgh and Rutherglen. The meetings held in Dunoon and Rothesay were among the largest missionary meetings ever held in these places. The meeting in Dunoon took place in the Free Church, Rev. Professor Orr, of Edinburgh, presiding, Rev. Mr. Macmorran, minister of the church, very heartily co-operating.

The meeting in Rothesay was held in the large open space in front of the West Free Church, and drew a great audience. The novelty here of using lime-light illustrations in the open-air, arrangements for which were made by Mr. G. A. Barclay, of Edinburgh, who helped in all the meetings, had doubtless something to do with the great concourse of people which was drawn together; but Miss Taylor had as patient a hearing at this great open-air meeting as she had in any of the churches or halls where she has spoken. Rev. Messrs. Sutherland and Forgan co-operated very heartily.

On Sabbath last large meetings were held in North Berwick, Rev. Dr. Robertson and Rev. Mr. Davidson giving every help. The present visit of Miss Taylor to Scotland has awakened renewed interest in Tibet, and Miss Taylor and her Tibetan friends have been greatly cheered by the practical sympathy exhibited.

Witnessing in Germany.

For sixteen years it has been our privilege to witness for our Lord Jesus Christ at Berlin, Charlottenburg, and other places of Germany. The Lord has graciously blessed the testimony of His truth to the conversion of many. Some have become active fellow-labourers with us here and in other parts of Germany. Our halls are centres of spiritual life. Large numbers of young men regularly attend; our Bible classes prepare Christian workers for further service. During the past months we frequently addressed large numbers in some of our public woods at Berlin, and we know His word does not return void. Our home has been blessed to leading several young English friends to the Lord; they come to learn the language and find the Lord.

Of late faith and patience have been severely tried through lack of means, whilst heavy responsibilities rest on us. May I ask for sympathy and prayer?

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has been conducting services at Hartford, Conn., with large attendance. On July 25, while in the midst of his address at the Union station in that city, a man, with tears in his eyes, came forward and said, "I wish to shake hands with you, my train is coming, and I must go." Mr. Hammond asked, "Are you a Christian?" "No, but I wish to be." Mr. Hammond added, "You can come to Christ now, and be saved at once. Will you do so?" He assented. In a moment all heads were bowed, a short prayer followed, and soon the man was out of sight. At another service in the open air, a fine-looking conductor on the train from Hartford to Boston came to Mr. Hammond, and, with tears in his eyes, said that his heart had been much moved, and he was determined to be a Christian.

A week's mission, in the hall at Glossop, has been conducted by Mr. S. Arumugam, a high caste Hindu, of Madras, at present at Cliff College. The meetings were well attended. Christian people were greatly blessed, and sinners were brought to the knowledge of God. Also much sympathy and keen interest in the foreign field resulted from the visit of our Hindu brother. At a public meeting in the mission hall, presided over by Alderman Barnes, the Mayor of the town, Councillor W. Holdgate congratulated Pastor Howton on the success achieved during the last twelve years.

An esteemed correspondent reports tent missions, under the auspices of the Evangelisation Society, at Upper Parkstone and other places near Bournemouth. They were attended with much blessing, and this leads him to make a suggestion to churches planted in the midst of needy villages and hamlets. He writes: "Great service could be rendered by arranging for, and undertaking financial responsibility of, tent missions during the summer months. The expense will not be great, and when the matter is carried out by faith and prayer, God raises up willing helpers. Frequently it is asked, 'How can we help the villages?' Here is a practical suggestion which is surely worthy of consideration. For ourselves, the experiment tried so successfully this summer we hope to repeat next. Of course, it is subscribers to the Evangelisation Society which make the above possible to us, and we are very grateful to God and to them."

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh commenced last Sunday a twelve days' mission in a large tent in the Malvern-road, Kilburn. These services are in connection with Queen's Park Tabernacle. Mr. and Mrs. Wiggan, the well-known evangelists, are supporting the speaker, and much interest and sympathy is being enlisted in the work.

Mr. Richard Spragg has been labouring for some time past in the Midlands. He has concluded a fortnight's services at Walsall. His personal labours were very great, the whole of each day being occupied in the work. The Lord has given blessing; a goodly number professed to decide for Christ.

Fruits on Many Fields.

Gladdening news continues to come of revivals in foreign fields. The Zulu Mission, in particular, has been wonderfully blessed, and Mr. Bunker writes, in the August Missionary Herald, that the record of the experiences through which the 180 girls in the Inanda Seminary and the sixty girls in the school at Umzumbe have passed reads like the first chapter of Acts. The conviction of sin has led many to confess their wrong-doing, and so real has been the joy arising from the sense of forgiveness that the girls have been going out to the heathen kraals to tell the simple story of what Christ has done for them.

In eastern Turkey, also, there have been wonderful scenes. Mr. Browne has been conducting early morning meetings, beginning at 4.45 a.m. These were prolonged until he feared that the roofs on which they were held would give way. Nearly a score of those present would offer short prayers, and afterwards they pleaded with Mr. Browne to remain and gather in the fruits. "Think of it," writes Mr. Browne, "not a man to step in and gather this great white harvest."

Dr. Clark, of Bohemia, received in June twenty-three persons into his church.—Congregationalist.

Letters to the Editor.

"HIGH CONGREGATIONALISM."

Dear Sir,—I should not have supposed that anyone would have commented publicly on the position in regard to the Lord's Supper defended and advocated by Dr. Dale, and others who think with him, without at least taking pains to understand that position. A Christian teacher may well despair of ever making himself understood if it is possible to suggest in the public Press that there is any resemblance whatever between Dr. Dale's teaching and that of the Roman Church. I do not know what "the organ of the Catholic body" has said, as referred to in your paper; but misrepresentation has never been unknown in controversies conducted by Romanists; and, whatever they may choose to insinuate, I do not hesitate to say that they know that the doctrine as to the Lord's Supper held by Dr. Dale is the poles asunder from the gross and materialistic doctrine of transubstantiation.

Dr. Dale earned the gratitude of all Christian thinkers by the clearness with which he taught that Christ's "special presence" and special grace were promised to the Christian people. "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." That this revelation of Himself to believers was a reality, and may fitly be described as a special presence, is sufficiently indicated by the question of one of his disciples, "What is come to pass that Thou wilt manifest Thyself unto us, and not unto the world?" This doctrine sweeps away absolutely the whole priestly system, and substitutes the authority and privilege of the Christian brotherhood; and it is simply ridiculous to suppose that a difference so radical and absolute is not recognised by the Romanists.

Moreover, it is well to add that such a doctrine shifts the onus laid by Romanists upon the so-called consecrated elements and the priestly act of consecration to the individual partaker. Unless he be an earnest, sincere, devout, and consistent disciple those qualities are lacking in him which make the communication of Christ's love and grace possible. The elements are nothing; the officiating minister is nothing—he might with equal propriety be a lay member of the Christian brotherhood; the one qualification is the prepared heart, the surrendered will, the expectant soul. Grant an assembly of such worshippers, met in his name, pledged to his cause and service, and we believe we are justified in expecting from Him special grace and special privilege, for we have undertaken special responsibility.

It occurs to me that an impartial critic might not unnaturally suppose that such a position had been assumed because it was in radical and vital antagonism to the teaching of Rome. It has not been assumed for any such reason, but because those who adopt it believe it to be the teaching of the New Testament. That being so, its antagonism to Romish doctrine is certainly significant.—Believe me, yours very sincerely,

C. Silvester Horne.

Dear Sir,—There are two questions involved in the correspondence which you have published. One is, how far it is advisable to use the term "sacrament," and "trinity," and such like, which do not occur in Scripture, but have found favour on account of the convenience of having a single word which expresses a complex idea, for which many words would otherwise need to be used. Some will prefer to restrict themselves to the Scriptural word "ordinance"; but then there are many ordinances, and it becomes necessary to make a departure from Scripture usage if we say "the ordinance" in the sense of "the Lord's Supper."

The vastly more important question relates to the meaning which is to be expressed. As a Presbyterian I heartily accept the teaching on the subject in the Westminster Shorter Catechism, a little summary of divinity which is widely known and honoured as a help in circles in which, nevertheless, no authority would be conceded to it. It teaches that "a sacrament is a holy ordinance, instituted by Christ, wherein by sensible signs Christ and the benefits of the new covenant are represented, sealed, and applied to believers." There is here, and generally in the teaching of our divines, a guarded brevity and generality of expression, suitable to the infrequency with which Scripture refers to the subject. This infrequency seems to us to contrast strongly with the extraordinary prominence assigned to the sacraments in certain churches and by certain theological schools.

Yet we do teach that the sacraments are "sealing ordinances," as Christ holds forth the covenant and all its blessings to those who worthily (that is, in the exercise of faith, repentance, love, and resolution to live to Him) partake of the sacraments, and who in the use of them declare their acceptance of the covenant, and, indeed, of Himself, who is the substance of it. This expression, "sealing ordinances," no doubt has a special reference to Rom. iv. 11, where it is said that Abraham "received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had, yet being uncircumcised."

We understand the language in 1 Cor. x., xi. to imply that there is a real feeding on the body and blood of Christ, though we decline to go beyond Scripture in defining or explaining the process. With our Catechism, we confine ourselves to saying that "the worthy partakers are, not after a corporal or carnal manner, but by faith, made partakers of his body and blood, to their spiritual nourishment and growth in grace." We also emphatically reject all idea of a priest other than Christ; saying again, with the Catechism, "The sacraments become effectual means of salvation, not from any virtue in them, or in him that doth administer them, but only by the blessing of Christ, and the working of his Spirit in them that do by faith receive them." I quite agree with those who see no reference to the Lord's Supper in our Lord's teaching as recorded in John vi.—Yours very faithfully,

George C. M. Douglas.

"WELCOME MISSION," PORTSMOUTH.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me through your paper to inform my friends that there is no intention on my part of handing over this Mission to the Wesleyan Army and Navy Committee; that statement was made in the Conference without my knowledge or consent.

The only arrangement I have made or intend to make is that their chaplain holds a central "parade service" in the "Welcome" Hall on Sunday mornings, and a "voluntary service" on Wednesdays.

It was equally incorrect to assume that I referred in my reports to their visits to H.M. hospitals or warships. All cases given by me are visits made by one or more of my own helpers, two of whom are devoted exclusively to those branches of sailor-work.

The "Welcome Mission" is an interdenominational work, and does not favour one section of the Church more than another, but is the friend of all and the enemy of none.—Yours very faithfully,

Thomas Hogben.

NUNS AND THEIR FATE.

Dear Sir,—Again and again appeals have been made to Parliament to take the inmates of nunneries from under the jurisdiction of the agents of Rome, and to secure to them the rights and protection of British law. It almost baffles human comprehension how these appeals have hitherto been disregarded. Though, however, it is useless to look for redress to the High Court of Parliament, there is yet appeal to the God of heaven and earth. If the cause of the nuns—condemned to lifelong penal servitude through the error of their own choice in childhood or youth—were ordered before the Righteous Judge by earnest prayerful men, I am persuaded that a way would be made for their deliverance.

Could not a day be appointed whereon every week Christian brethren whose hearts are being led in this matter might meet at the same hour in various places, and unite in supplication for Almighty God to appear in this matter in such a way as will redound to his glory? In such a case controversy should be avoided, and the result should be patiently awaited.—Yours, etc.,

Edward Poulson.

India.—As information comes in with regard to the great earthquake in India, we realise how serious it was. The work of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists has suffered greatly in the loss of buildings and in the general distress among the congregations. It is estimated that the destruction in that section of Assam amounts to not less than 50,000 dollars.—N. Y. Independent.

The Y.M.C.A.

The British Conference, to be held in Glasgow, Sept. 7-10 next, promises to be the largest gathering of the kind ever held. Over 600 delegates have already been enrolled, and additions are being made to the list every day.

God has wonderfully provided the money—more than £11,000—for the aggressive evangelistic work among the 10,000 English-speaking native students of Calcutta. The new building was opened on July 16, with over 1200 people present at the two services held, and regular work is now in full progress, nine religious meetings each week already being held.

The opening of this well-equipped Association, says The Indian Witness, marks a new era, we firmly believe, in the history of missionary effort among the educated classes in Calcutta. Enjoying the fullest confidence and sympathy of the missionary colleges and schools, with which no doubt the Association will always feel it a privilege to co-operate to the largest extent possible, an unrivalled opportunity presents itself for helpfully influencing large numbers of the choice youth of Calcutta. The general secretary appreciates the situation, and is wisely planning to make the very most of the opportunity. On a recent evening we were pleased to see about 350 young men in Overtoun Hall listening most attentively to an address on a religious subject by Hon. Kali Charan Banurji. Goodly numbers attend the Bible classes, and the other privileges of the Association are freely patronised by students. Our confident expectation is that the Association will prove a most important factor in the evangelisation of the Bengali people.

An encouraging report of the past year's work of the Irish Union of Associations has been issued. Several new branches have been formed, and there has been an increase of nearly nine per cent. in the whole membership. Considerable attention has been given by Mr. R. McCann, travelling secretary, to the advocacy of Association work in the villages in the north.

The forty-fourth annual report of the New York Y.M.C.A. gives a remarkable record of work at the fifteen branches, supervised by Mr. R. R. McBurney. The following are a few of the particulars: Average daily attendance at reading and social rooms of 5262 young men; 4350 situations secured for young men; seventy-eight educational classes in thirty-three branches of study, and 2323 different young men enrolled as pupils; 4135 Bible-classes and other religious meetings, with a total attendance of 234,830, of whom 3713 personally sought and received Christian counsel.

The circular letter sent to the Association by Sir George Williams a few months ago, suggesting the holding by provincial and metropolitan Associations of demonstrations for men against the evils of gambling, intemperance, and impurity is meeting with very generous response; at many centres large mass meetings are being arranged for the coming autumn and winter sessions. This effort, and the special campaign that is being planned for parts of the metropolis, will doubtless do much to arouse public opinion on the importance of these subjects as they affect the young men of the community,

New Forest Gipsy Mission.

When I wrote the last report in the place of our greatly valued missionary, Mr. Bullen, who was then incapacitated through ill-health, I little thought it would so soon be my sad duty to inform you of his death. His cheery presence was a tower of strength to the Gipsies themselves, and he will be missed and long remembered. We have now to consider what is best for the future of the Mission, and we think, until the Gipsy families begin to return late in the autumn, Mrs. Bullen, who continues to live at the old address, Barley Mount, will be able to carry on the work herself. In the meantime, with the aid of the Country Towns Mission, we shall seek for a man adapted to such work, and filled with the same spirit as was our late missionary, and who, with Mrs. Bullen, will be able to carry out the work successfully. R. W. S. Griffith, Treasurer.

Eyeworth Lodge, Lyndhurst, Hants.

Hop-pickers in Worcestershire.—Last year an unknown donor sent special help for Tenbury district. The hop yards from Tenbury to Bromyard, and from Tenbury to Knightwick by all roads, and again and again across the Teme valley were visited. Other friends worked all the large central farms at Eardiston, also preached to large numbers of people. Any Gospel papers sent to myself, to Mr. Clissett, Stanley Hill, Ledbury, or Mr. Turner, Woodlands, Eardiston, Tenbury, will go to hop-pickers, etc., direct. T. S. Heley.

Obituary.

THE LATE MR. ALFRED SUTTON.

In our issue last week we stated that Mr. Alfred Sutton was taken as a partner in the Reading firm by his brother "Martin John Sutton." This should have been Martin Hope Sutton. The present head of the firm, Martin John Sutton, is the eldest son of Mr. Hope Sutton, and, of course, nephew to the late Mr. Alfred Sutton.

REV. JOSEPH PICK.

We regret to announce the death of Rev. Joseph Pick, for twenty years a missionary of the London Society for the Promoting Christianity among the Jews, having laboured first at Strasburg and later in Cracow, Galicia. Deceased died somewhat suddenly in Prague, Bohemia, on his way home from a visit to England, and the news of his death will no doubt come as a sad surprise to many English friends.

REV. S. B. CHARLESWORTH.

This well-known clergyman, who was rector of Limehouse from 1870 to 1882, died last week at his residence, 13, Devonshire-buildings, Bath, at the ripe age of eighty-one. Prior to taking up work in the East End, the rev. gentleman had been rector for fourteen years of Limpsfield, Surrey. Since leaving Limehouse he had lived in retirement. One of Mr. Charlesworth's daughters is the wife of Mr. Ballington Booth.

MISS PETRIE, KASHMIR.

The death is announced of Miss Irene Eleanora Verita Petrie, honorary missionary of the C.M.S. at Kashmir, Punjab. Miss Petrie entered upon her Indian sphere in 1894, and her Zenana-visiting covered a wide area, many ladies of position being among her regular pupils. She was third daughter of the late Colonel Martin Petrie, of Hanover Lodge, Kensington, and succumbed to enteric fever at the age of thirty-two.

THE BISHOP OF WAKEFIELD.

Dr. Walsham How, whose death we recorded last week, came of an old Shropshire family, and was educated at Shrewsbury, Oxford, and Durham. In 1851 he undertook the rectory of Whittington, in his native county, and held the charge for twenty-eight years. Almost at once he became diocesan inspector of schools, a position which he held for the eighteen years preceding the passing of Mr. Forster's Act. He was rural dean of Oswestry from 1853 till his elevation to the episcopate, and from 1859 to the time of his nomination to Wakefield he was a prebendary and the chancellor of St. Asaph Cathedral. Meanwhile he had become famous as a preacher and conductor of mission services, and his fertile pen had been busy in the production of a small library of devotional books, generally of a High Church tendency.

In 1879 Canon Walsham How became the first Bishop Suffragan of the diocese of London, with the title of Bishop of Bedford. He was an indefatigable worker, and greatly beloved by all classes. Accordingly, keen disappointment was felt in the Metropolis when, in 1888, he was appointed first Bishop of Wakefield. His labours were incessant, and though he never professed himself satisfied with the measure of progress realised in the diocese of Wakefield, the influence of his personal standard told strongly both upon clergy and laity. The late Bishop married in 1849 Frances Anne, daughter of Rev. Henry Douglas, Canon of Durham. Mrs. How, who with great devotion had seconded her husband's labours in East London, died in 1887. Among the most popular hymns written by the Bishop, a place must be given in the front rank to his funeral composition, "For all thy saints who from their labours rest."

Qua Iboe Mission.

Reports from the missionaries are very cheering. A hundred and forty persons sat down at the Lord's supper on a recent occasion. Mr. Bill's class for inquirers has now 107 names on the roll; he writes of their deep interest and attention, and earnest desire for instruction. Some from distant places have been led to come through the testimony of the native Christians, who have been in the habit of visiting their towns for the purposes of trade. The senior missionary (Mr. Bill) has been making a journey up the Qua Iboe river. He travelled about sixty miles, sometimes against a very strong current and had interviews with the chiefs and people of at least two tribes of considerable size who had never previously heard of the Gospel. J. H.

Requests for Prayer.—For a large outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the meetings held at the Railway Mission, Dover, during the coming weeks.—For an eight days' mission for boys at the Jubilee Y.M.C.A. Hall, Broad-street, Bath, commencing Sept. 19.

Personalia.

Lady Henry Somerset has written withdrawing her resignation as President of the British Women's Temperance Association.

Mr. Henry Conder, president of the Y.M.C.A., Bombay, sails for England on September 8, and will be due in London about the end of that month.

Mr. George Palmer, the head of the firm of Huntley and Palmer, biscuit manufacturers, Reading, is lying seriously ill at his residence in that town. He has been in failing health for a long time.

Rev. E. P. Hammond's widely-circulated book, "The Conversion of Children," has recently been translated into the Japanese language. This book is published in England by Messrs. Morgan and Scott.

Mrs. Bishop has nearly finished the book in which she describes her travels in Korea and other parts of the Far East. The book is more than a personal record of travel. Mrs. Bishop discusses some of the political problems of the Far East.

The late C. H. Spurgeon.—The official Life of Mr. Spurgeon is to come from the hands of his widow. This work, on which she is now engaged, will, to a large extent, be autobiographical, Mr. Spurgeon having left a considerable number of manuscripts for this purpose.

Rev. Leonard M. Isitt, of Christchurch, New Zealand, is about to visit England with a view to conducting temperance missions during the later autumn and winter. Mr. Isitt is expected to arrive early in October. All applications for Mr. Isitt's services should be made to the secretary of the United Kingdom Alliance, Grosvenor Chambers, 16, Deansgate, Manchester.

PLEASING GOD.

Having been regenerated, made one with Christ, and dwelt in by the Holy Spirit, we are both able to please God and responsible for doing so. We may not be able to honour Him by any great work or striking service, but we may give Him pleasure in our care to serve Him in the little works which He puts into our hands.—John Dickie of Irvine.

THE BLESSED LIFE.

If we live in the Spirit we shall be led by Him every day and every moment. What if you were to open your heart to-day to be filled with the Holy Spirit? Would He not be able to keep you every moment in the sweet rest of God? And would not his mighty arm give you a complete victory over sin and temptation of every kind, and make you able to live in perpetual fellowship with the Father and with his Son, Jesus Christ? Most certainly, this is the blessed life God has provided for us.—Andrew Murray.

CHRIST AS CAPTAIN.

The voyage of human life under any other head than Christ, and under any other wind than the wind of His Spirit, is sorrowful beyond all expression. Whatever port is reached, the port of peace, the joyful eternal home, cannot be reached. The vessel in which we are passing over the sea of mortal life is always driven by contrary winds, till the Lord embarks. All voyagers who know the pleasantness of having Christ on board, and the certainty of getting safe to land under Him, pray Him with all their hearts to abide with them. The loving, longing, prayer, "Abide with us," is always from those who have previously been acquainted with Him.—Dr. John Pulsford.

South India.—Owing to a great financial difficulty in our mission, combined with the famine plague and the devastating earthquake, we had to stop working in two prominent and most promising villages. I have at present only two native Christian workers with me, and we preach the Gospel in five villages to the caste Hindus, Pariahs and Mahomedans. I require £2 a month for the support of two catechists to proclaim the Gospel among my countrymen. (Rev.) K. R. Gopaiah Aiyar.

Methodist Episcopal Mission, Kodambakam, Madras.

Persia and the Jews.—In a decree recently issued, the Shah makes known his will on the relation of the Jews to the general population. "In order that the different nations subjected to his Majesty's sceptre may live at peace with each other, the Mussulmans are directed to cease their persecutions of the Jews and not to impose on them any distinctive badge. Severe punishment will be meted out to all who ill treat our non-Mussulman subjects or who seek to establish distinctions between them and others. All Governors are directed to publish these decree emanating from the supreme authority, so that everyone may act within the limits of the law."

August 29.

Paul Opposed at Ephesus.—Acts xix. 21-34.

Golden Text.—"Take heed, and beware of covetousness."—Luke xii. 15.

PAUL probably saw difficulties ahead for the Ephesian Church. Although he had planned to visit the Macedonian churches, and from there go to Jerusalem, and also wished to carry out a plan of long standing to see Rome, his plans were all upset by the trouble brewing in Ephesus (23).

The statue of Diana was made of ebony. It was supposed to have fallen from heaven. Her temple was the most magnificent ever built, even in Ephesus. The style was Corinthian, with 167 columns all round, each 60 feet high. This temple was the national treasury, filled with golden or silver statues of all the eminent men. The shrines of Diana (24) were medals stamped with the image of Diana and her temple.

The organiser of this attack on the apostles was a great employer of labour (24), having under him a number of skilled employés (craftsmen) and odd workers. Note some lessons from the conduct of Demetrius.

I. He believed in that which paid him. He was fearful for the welfare of Diana (27), and irritated by the preaching of Paul (26), because both in Ephesus and all other Asiatic cities his trade was being interfered with. His trade was his religion. Men excuse themselves for all kinds of wrongdoing if it pays. The publican pleads for a licence as though he were a benefactor to society; the owner of old cottages defends them on the ground that the poor could not afford better, and the Bible tells us to look after the poor; and the shopkeeper tells his assistant to practise small deceits, and justifies it on the ground that "others do it."

II. He defended his religion, prompted thereto by self-interest.—People are like him who are religious for what they can get by it. The beggar tries to touch devout hearts by singing hymns on the street. The tradesman attends all the churches in the district with the hope of getting customers from all. The fishmonger believes it is a very pious thing to eat fish on Friday; but he has to admit in the end that if it be good at all, it is only "good for trade."

III. He put self-interest in the wrong place.—He thought of his trade first (25); then his hatred of the apostles (26); last of all his religion (27). We ought to think of ourselves, but we shall take a short cut to this by thinking of our religion first. Christ said: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and all other things," etc. Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. So there is a place for self-interest. To give no thought to our own welfare is suicidal. The right position of self may be seen in the following story. When Charles Kingsley was about thirty years of age, completely broken down in health, he went to his favourite place—Devon—for rest. While there thoughts were floating in his mind about writing the "Autobiography of a Cockney Poet." He said to his wife: "This has been revealed to me so rapidly that I feel it has come down from above," and I must write it if only to pay the doctor's bill. To bring a selfish motive to support a religious and unselfish one, is right.

IV. He tried to incite others with his selfishness.—Having mobbed Gaius and Aristarchus they thronged into the great amphitheatre (29). Once a great mass of ignorant people is worked up to an excited state there is no limit to their cruelties—no thought or moderation in their conduct. We can almost hear their chanting, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." There is nothing like a taking phrase for the mob. So another crowd once shouted, "We have no king but Cæsar." What had become of Gaius and Aristarchus we do not know, but the heroic Paul wanted to share the fate of his companions if he could not deliver them (30). Wiser men saw how impossible it was to silence or calm this savage monster of a mob, and so dissuaded him from going in. Even some of importance in the city who were friendly (31) joined in the urgent request that he should not go into the theatre, but I think they must have held him back. We know the kind of answer he would have made to the defence of idolatry put forward by Demetrius. Now, the Jews were anxious to explain that, although they believed in the God of heaven, they had nothing to do with Paul (33). But the Ephesians knew no such fine distinctions, and hearing that Alexander was a Jew they refused to listen to him, and fell to their chant once more with fresh energy (34).

Though these men shouted themselves hoarse crying, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians," Diana and her religion are forgotten to-day. The test of a religion is its power to satisfy the needs of man, and to draw him up to a higher plane.

Temperance Notes.

Mr. Hall Caine is now preparing a work of fiction which will deal with the great drink question.

The second annual conference of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, Madras division, was held on July 2, in Madras city, when delegates from most of the unions were present. Those who were present and took part in the day's proceedings felt that it had been a happy day for India.

Temperance men in Canada are girding up their loins for the impending struggle. The Ontario Alliance met last month in Toronto to discuss ways and means in connection with the plebiscite shortly to be held throughout the Dominion. It was decided to oppose vigorously the tacking on of any other question to the simple issue of Prohibition v. Licence.

There are now five authorities in Lancashire and Cheshire which have taken up a decisive attitude on the question of supplying drink to children, the magistrates of Liverpool, Bootle, and Birkenhead, and the Standing Committee of the Cheshire County Council having already warned licensees under their jurisdiction that the practice will be regarded as a ground of complaint against the licence.

The jubilee of the Band of Hope movement is to be held in November. There is to be a Mansion House reception, a sermon by Archbishop Temple, whose temperance enthusiasm is well known, and services in all the cathedrals and the great majority of other places of worship, both Church and Nonconformist. The number of children at present enrolled in Bands of Hope is over 3,000,000.

It is proposed to commemorate the work of the late Mr. Raper and Dr. Lees, who worked for nearly sixty years together in the total abstinence cause, by the foundation of a scientific lectureship, in the interest of the movement. An influential committee has been formed, under the presidency of Sir Wilfrid Lawson, with Mr. W. S. Caine and Mr. W. J. Crossley (of Manchester) as treasurers. The hon. secretary is Mr. Samuel Pope, Q.C., to whom contributions should be forwarded at Broad Sanctuary-chambers, Westminster, S.W.

The British Medical Journal says that the development of abstaining temperance had assumed so organised a form by the year 1837, when the Princess Victoria succeeded to the throne, as to warrant the description of the great temperance movement as a distinguishing feature of the Victorian era. With little more than 100 abstinent ministers of religion and no ecclesiastical dignitary in 1837, we have now in Briton some thousands of the clergy of all denominations, including two archbishops, sixteen home and more colonial bishops, and lesser dignitaries by the score. From less than a dozen abstaining members of the medical profession sixty years ago, we have now over 1,000, including six university professors, (453 of whom have associated themselves in the British Medical Temperance Association for the promotion of abstinence). With no university abstinence society in 1837, there are now several, the first having been founded by a medical student at Glasgow in 1857 with a 100 members, of whom one-third were medical. In the legislature as elsewhere, abstainers are now seen by the dozen where none were known sixty years ago. Even in the navy and the army, in which services only a very few men abstained when the Queen ascended the throne, abstainers are to-day numbered by the thousand.

Soldiers in India.—Mr. R. J. Drummond, who carries on an unsectarian Gospel work among British soldiers at Deolali Camp, Bombay Presidency, reports to us on the efforts put forth, which consist chiefly of tract distribution and personal effort among the men in camp. He states that he has not been able to get permission for open air services in the camp. We would be glad of supplies of good tracts and literature.

For Deserving Tramps.—The Church Army Lodging House Union grapples with the whole question of vagrancy. A chain of lodging-houses is being established throughout the country, beginning in the south-eastern district, at distances of nine or ten miles from each other. Into these any poor traveller producing a duly signed work-ticket will be admitted, given a work test, fed, lodged, and passed on the following morning, with a stamped way-bill to the next lodging house on the route. Fourpenny work-tickets are issued at the nominal charge of a 1s. per dozen, based on the calculation that not more than one in four will be used, as the undeserving tramp has a strong dislike to work. If this system be thoroughly carried out, then the charity of the benevolent will be limited to those deserving it. "Tramping," as a profession, will, it is hoped, be abolished, and the genuine work-seeker will not be contaminated by mixing with criminals, and will be saved from the casual ward.

THE BOOK WORLD.

The Official Handbook of the Presbyterian Church of England is a useful denominational manual. The issue for 1897-8 is thoroughly up to date. (6d. Publishing Office: 14, Paternoster-square.)

His Name Immanuel, by Rev. Robert J. Patterson, LL.B., of Armagh, is a booklet containing four striking discourses, entitled "A Visit from Jesus Christ," "A Visit to Jesus Christ," "The Burdens of Life," and "The Law of Liberty." (Armagh: R. P. M'Watters, English-street.)

The Forgotten Truth: or, The Gospel of the Holy Ghost, with selected Hymns of the Spirit By Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D. (1s. "Home Words" Office.) It is a good sign that there is a sustained demand for this little book. The present is the fourth edition, produced in a compact form for the pocket.

Primeval Revelation: Studies in Genesis i-viii. By J. Cynddylan Jones, D.D. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) We welcome a second edition of this very readable and instructive work. Students will find these pages full of suggestion on the subjects which arise during an examination of the early chapters of the Bible. Modern theories and speculations are here reviewed with much insight and refreshing candour, and the book deserves hearty commendation, for it has a definite message for the present time.

More Words of Faith, Hope, and Love. Being Letters and Extracts from Letters written by the late John Dickie, of Irvine, Scotland, to his Friend and Brother in Christ, James Todd, Dublin. (3s. 6d. Partridge & Co.) Beyond giving the particulars set forth on the title-page, it is only needful to say that the writer of these letters was a man of rich religious experience and deeply taught in the Scriptures. Written by one who was for many years a confirmed invalid, these letters will be specially interesting and consoling to those who occupy the chamber of suffering and weary solitude.

Heroic Endeavour presents, in tasteful form, a word of hope to young men, written by Rev. W. Elsworth Lawson. (6d. Allenson.)

The Publication of The Kingdom of God, an instructive study by Mr. James Van Sommer, has been issued in a third edition by Partridge & Co. (2d.)

Pilgrim Songs, by George Morison, is a re-issue of pieces in varied metre, and some of them very beautiful. (Geelong: Ebenezer Bible & Tract Repository 203, Corio-street).

For the People had a Mind to Work is a sketch of a working church, from the pen of John Cocks, Ryton-on-Tyne. (1d. Bible and Tract Depot, 35, Pilgrim-street, Newcastle.)

The Dearth of Conversions, by Rev. Andrew Murray, is a reprint in convenient form of four searching chapters which originally appeared in The Life of Faith. (1d. Marshall Bros.)

Respect the Hedge, by Rev. W. L. Watkinson, is a timely word to young people on the sense of shame, the code of courtesy, and the rules of business. It deserves many readers. (1d. C. H. Kelly.)

Miss Symons's Monthly Missionary Letter to Sunday-schools, issued from the Church Missionary House, is a valuable little publication. The August issue tells the story of Robert Moffat. (3s. per 100 post free.)

The Literal Interpretation of Scripture, by Robert Anderson, C.B., LL.D., presents in pamphlet form an abbreviated report of an address delivered in October last year at the Prophetical Conference at Mildmay. (1d. G. Stoneman.)

Are You a Christian? The Confession of Evelyn Thornton. (6d. Passmore & Alabaster.) The title-question is answered by showing that a Christian is not made by a ceremony, but becomes such by faith in Christ shown by a life of loving discipleship.

The Second Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ is a booklet by Rev. Robert Middleton, vicar of St. Martin-at-Oak, Norwich. It is for the most part a classification of passages of Scripture, and is accompanied by an illuminated explanatory chart. (3d. Jarrold & Sons)

The fifth booklet of the Errors of Rome series, by H. B., deals with "Confession." As in previous publications, the author sets forth Romanism in the words of Romish writers. The entire series of booklets is useful. (3d. London: J. Kensit; Hastings: Apel's Library).

A Seeker after Rest: How he found it and used it. This very readable issue of the Monthly Tract Society (No. 374 of the new series) tells the story of the late John Stabb, for many years a devoted worker in the London City Mission. (1d. Office of the Mission, Bridge House, 181, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.)

"Out-of-the-way Boys."—The late Mrs. James Hunter, of St. Andrews, used to say of Dr. Chalmers: "The Toon's folk called him Daft Tam Chalmers', but there was naething daft about him; he was a wild, merry, reel-o-Bogie laddie, full of fun and mischief, but very clever. I aye thought he would turn out something uncommon, but I never thought he would turn out a saint." No; and no one would have thought that that wild, clever actor of a boy from the Blue Bell Inn, Gloucester, who would amuse himself by rushing into the Dissenting Chapel, and deriding the minister, Mr. Cole, by calling out "Old Cole, Old Cole," would become the saintly and consecrated George Whitefield. It is just these out-of-the-way boys who, once touched by the love of Christ, do become saints and apostles.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

An anonymous donation of £1000 has been received for the Clergy Sustentation Fund.

The Queen has given £100 towards restoring the spire and tower of Canterbury Cathedral.

A Cape Colony Diocesan Mission to Seamen has at length been formed for the shipping frequenting its shores.

Hitherto it has been the custom to give up the evening services at Westminster Abbey during August and September. This year they are being continued.

Rev. Frank Smith, preacher and assistant at St. James's, Piccadilly, has been appointed to succeed Prebendary Harry Jones in the incumbency of St. Philip's, Regent-street.

The Bishop of London has licensed Rev. E. G. C. Parr, M.A., formerly chaplain of Northampton Prison, to the incumbency of the Church Army Church, Upper Berkeley-street, W.

The Bishop of Southwell has constituted Ambergate an entirely new Derbyshire parish, to serve the locality in the immediate neighbourhood of the Midland Railway junction in the village.

The Church Congress will open at Nottingham on Sept. 28. The subjects to be considered cover a wide range. Among the speakers will be Dr. Handley Moule, Rev. W. H. Aitken, and Rev. E. A. Stuart.

A diocesan mission to the Jews resident in or near Newcastle has been commenced by Rev. C. P. Sherman, rector of St. John's, Lee, near Hexham. Mr. Sherman was formerly a missionary to Israel, and will devote Saturdays to the work.

A lady has given £500, with a promise of another sum of like amount, for the establishment of a Home for Crippled Boys by the Waifs and Strays' Society, and a gentleman has given £500 to the general fund in lieu of leaving a legacy of that amount.

Rev. T. C. Collings, late of Spitalfields, has accepted work under Rev. Lucius G. Fry, as mission-curate at St. James's, Upper Edmonton. A spacious mission-hall, built a few years ago, will serve as the headquarters of this new "Church Forward Movement."

A lady has presented the Church Army with the £100 necessary for placing a second mission and colportage van in the Truro diocese. The gift is in memory of the donor's husband. "A Yorkshire Lady" has also sent £50 towards a van for the York diocese, while "A Rector" has sent £50 towards a "Peterborough" van. The Church Army has thirty-three of these vans at work, summer and winter, and through the generosity of friends more are being built.

The new report of the Young Men's Friendly Society shows a considerable falling off in the number of members. It is understood that proposals have been made for amalgamating the institution with the Church of England Young Men's Society, but the latter also is reported to be in a feeble way. The whole question is engaging the attention of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and it is understood that he will shortly appoint a strong committee to formulate a plan for putting the work of the Church amongst young men on a more satisfactory basis.

Congregational.

At the forthcoming meetings of the Congregational Union at Birmingham a scheme of church extension, involving an outlay of £100,000, is to be considered.

Rev. Chas. Garnett, pastor of the Ancoats Church, Manchester, has sailed for America to fulfil a number of preaching and lecturing engagements. He expects to return early in September.

Rev. Dr. Owen Evans is chairman, Mr. W. R. Evans (Brixton) treasurer, and Rev. J. Machreth Rees secretary of a committee appointed to make preparations for the visit of the Welsh Union to London in 1898.

Dr. C. A. Berry has arranged to leave England for America on October 27, to fulfil his engagement to preach in Plymouth Church on November 7. He will also preach for Dr. Amory H. Bradford at New Jersey on November 14, and probably in Chicago on November 21.

A religious conference has been held at the Carver Memorial Church, Windermere. Nearly all the Congregational ministers of the Preston district of the Lancashire Union were present, and also a number of ministers from Free Methodist and Baptist churches. Dr. Parker gave a spirited address on "Christian Churches and their Present Duties." He said there was a good deal of subsidence of the true theology, a great deal of absorption into the world, its fancies, fashions, and sophisms. Grace before meat would be the next thing given up, after the Sunday evening service; then followed old habits, old doctrines, old sympathies, old companionships. The conference also considered the subject of "Preaching; its methods and doctrine." Dr. Parker urged the ministers present to have their sermon in their blood and soul more than in their pockets. This, however, did not mean they were not to make careful preparation for the pulpit.

Calls.—Rev. T. Simson Ross, Newquay, Cornwall, to College Chapel, Bradford; Rev. Augustus Julian to Long Sutton; Rev. T. R Donaldson, to Chudleigh, South Devon; Rev. George Henry Sandwell, late of New Britain First Congregational Church, Conn., U.S.A., to Leytonstone; Mr. Wm. Moncrieff as assistant to Rev. Dr. Alexander Mackennal, of Bowden; Rev. E. J. H. Peach, of Nailsworth, Gloucester, to Wimborne (all accepted).

Resignation.—The Rev. Thomas Clifton, of Blyth Church, after celebrating his ministerial jubilee.

Baptist.

The report that Rev. W. Y. Fullerton, of Leicester, has been invited to the pastorate of the East London Tabernacle is contradicted.

Rev. W. B. Taylor has resigned the pastorate of the Broadway Church, Chesham, which he has held for fourteen years, and has accepted a hearty invitation to the pastorate of Zion Chapel, Cambridge.

In consequence of the ill-health of Pastor R. Baily, the church at Ealing-road, Brentford, has unanimously given to him a three months' rest, his place in the interim being taken by the Rev. W. Page, Captain Clark, R.N., and Mr. W. Grew.

A lecture was given in the Milton-street Church, Chester, on Thursday last, by Mr. Marcus G. Daniel, evangelist, a native of Kurdistan. Dressed in Kurdish costume, Mr. Daniel told the story of the Nestorians and their missionary zeal; also described their present social and spiritual condition. He also unfolded the plan of the mission to his countrymen which it is his intention to found in the near future.

Calls.—Rev. S. A. McCracken to Finchley Lane, Hendons N.W. (accepted); Rev. W. Hughes, of Crewe, to Worth, a co-pastor with Rev. J. Alderson, of Keighley; Rev. E. Francis, Exeter, to Hope-street Church, Devonport; Mr. G. W. Fairhurst, to Fressingfield Church (all accepted).

Resignations.—Rev. A. Copley, Stapleford Church; Rev. P. G. Scorey, Kingstanley, Gloucestershire.

Methodist.

Bible Christians now have 358 Bands of Hope, with a membership of 27,700, being an increase this past year of 1047.

At Crewe the Sunday-school has more than doubled its numbers during the past year. The congregation has also grown.

A great effort is to be made during the U.F.M. connexional year now commencing, to raise the missionary income to £15,000 a year.

The West London Sisterhood will be represented by Sister Lily at the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union meetings in Toronto, Canada.

Among Primitive Methodists, church membership has increased during the past twenty years by 16,829, but the ministerial staff has only increased by five, the number of preaching places having meanwhile actually decreased by 541.

Middlesbrough revival continues to spread. Although no extraordinary agencies or meetings have been employed, hundreds have professed conversion. It is said that the movement has mainly arisen out of the Christian Endeavour movement.

The U.F.M. Temperance League has now associated with it sixty-three adult societies, with 3766 members; 610 bands of hope, having a membership of 64,490 and 2620 officers; 88 joint societies with 8715 members; a total of 761 organisations with 76,971 members.

The missionary jubilee thanksgiving fund is to be closed in November with a week of self-denial and central meetings in the various districts of the connexion. The fund was commenced five years ago with the view of raising £50,000. Of this amount about £34,500 has already been received.

The prosperity which has marked the work of Lodge-lane Church in the south end of Liverpool has eventuated in the taking upon lease for a number of years of the commodious premises in Smithdown-road, known as the Friends' Meeting House. Crowded congregations attended the opening.

The important question of amalgamation between the Bible Christians and the Primitive Methodist communions has been considered at the conferences of both bodies. Resolutions have been adopted advocating the union, and a strong representative committee has been elected to deal further with the matter.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. John Forbes, who has accepted the invitation to become minister of the Central Hall congregation at Nottingham, expects to begin his work towards the close of September.

Reports just issued contain statistics showing the strength of the English section of the denomination in Wales and some of the principal English towns. Churches, 229; chapels and preaching stations, 251; communicants, 16,499; listeners, 52,738; collections towards the ministry, £17,461, the total collections amounting to £44,218.

Calls.—Rev. R. Duff, of Belgravia, to Mount Pottinger, Belfast.

Salvation Army.

A new Home for soldiers and sailors is to be opened at Chatham.

Professor W. G. Blaikie has written an article in the Scotsman eulogising the work of the Social wing in this country.

Commander Booth-Tucker is pushing his colonisation scheme, by which he proposes to take hundreds and thousands of the poor of large American cities to the unoccupied lands of Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, and South-western Kansas, and make farmers of them.

Society of Friends.

The general meeting of Scotland was held in Edinburgh on Monday, the 9th inst., and was attended by several English as well as Scotch Friends. Some public meetings were held in connection with it, and one of the English visitors spent the Sabbath (the 8th) in Glasgow. There seemed a hopefulness about the tone of the meeting that cheered the visitors, and there is undoubtedly plenty of room in Scotland for the promotion of spiritual truth as held by the Society of Friends. Two of the English Friends travelled north to hold meetings in Dundee and Aberdeen.

The great event during the last two weeks has been the "Scarborough Summer School," so largely attended and so ably conducted. Eminent professors and other well-qualified teachers—of both sexes—have imparted the most important truths to the 600 "scholars" assembled to hear them, and learning and recreation have been so blended as to make the "school" gatherings the pleasantest of memories. There must be an immense outcome, and probably there will be a large step upward and onward in the promotion of fundamental truth. The "school" has not sought official sanction, and is in the highest sense voluntary, yet its influence will be none the less real and lasting.

Fallen Asleep.

At Liverpool, Rev. Henry Pritchard, of Ystalyfera, for many years a useful minister among the Wesleyan Methodists of South Wales.—At Leicester, Mr. John Joshua Carryer, senior deacon of Charles-street Baptist Church, at the age of sixty-four, leaving behind him a testimony for Christ not soon to be forgotten by those who knew him.—At Toro, Uganda, Rev. J. S. Callis, one of the youngest missionaries of the C.M.S. in point of service.—Mrs. Sarah Arnold, widow of Rev. Thomas Arnold, of Northampton (Congregational), at the age of eighty.—Mr. George King, senior deacon of Commercial-road Baptist Church, Hereford, for sixty years a total abstainer.—Mrs. Frances Jane Humphrey, one of the oldest, if not the oldest, Methodist in Gosforth, in her eighty-seventh year.—Rev. Walter Guppy Abbott, rector of St. Luke's, Old-street, one of the best-known and most hard-working of the London clergy.—Mr. A. Somerville, who held office as an elder in the Presbyterian Church at Kirkintilloch for more than fifty years.—Rev. Edward Simms, M.A., a venerable clergyman and writer, Salterton, Devon.—Mrs. Heape, the wife of Rev. F. E. Heape, of Doncaster.—Mr. Henry Smith, Crewe, a member of forty years' standing in the Methodist body.—Mrs. Hough, aged ninety-five, for sixty years a member of Hill Cliffe Baptist Church, Warrington.—Rev. William David, for forty years rector of St. Fagan's, Glamorganshire.—The wife of Rev. R. Gwynfan Hughes, of St. Paul's Congregational Church, Newcastle.—Rev. S. Parkin, of Sheffield, a man of gentle spirit, a Methodist preacher of considerable intellectual power.—Rev. John Wilkinson, vicar of St. Paul's, Gateshead.—Mr. Benj. Serjeant, one of the oldest members of the staff of The Sheffield Independent, and an active Sunday-school worker in Carver-street Methodist Circuit.—At Belfast, Mrs. Nixon, wife of Mr. J. Nixon, circuit steward of Crumlin-road Methodist Church, and an earnest Christian worker.—At Beechhill Crossgar, Mr. David M'Mordie, for over fifty years an elder in the Presbyterian Church, a Sabbath-school superintendent, and an earnest temperance worker.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, August 16, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WHEN Jesus saw "much people," and 'was moved with compassion toward them because they were as sheep not having a shepherd," "He began to TEACH them many things." Here it is plain that He looked beneath their bodily weariness, their physical unrest, their hunger and thirst even, for the time, and saw deep down into the unshepherded state of their spirits. It was to the starving worn spirit's apprehension that he conveyed at once, as the first compassionate, pastoral care, the eternal, God-desired, life-giving truth.

How small a portion of our truly Christian people ever get to any great gathering, to an assembly of their own denomination, where men familiar by name and held in high esteem may be seen and heard, or to a conference of representatives of many denominations. Such gatherings may be useful to those who attend them, and mediately to thousands who are compelled to stay at home. Indeed, their reason for existing is in this twofold ministry. Nevertheless, it is well to remember that the springs of the spiritual life are fed from the common means of grace, which are accessible to the poorest and humblest, from prayer and study of the Scriptures. The poor in spirit and such as hunger and thirst after righteousness are evermore satisfied as they wait upon God; and maybe they think all the more of what they receive directly from Him, because they receive so little through human channels.

A keen observer of congregations and their ways remarks that "many want a sensation rather than an opportunity to render service to Christ—not to do work for Him, but to be prominent in a demonstration, or at least partakers in it." It has been so since the days when one said, "I am of Paul"; and another, "and I of Epollos"; and another, "and I of Christ." A small congregation where useful work can be done, and fruitful meditation in the truth enjoyed, and undistracted worship offered to the Father, has no attractions for such as want a sensation. Large congregations are not composed of those who have "a passion for the titillations of mere pleasure," but they certainly draw such to them. Some weary souls who go the round of churches and get nothing would get much if they first of all considered what they might do and give.

The visit of the Duke and Duchess of York to Ireland has awakened a warm exhibition of loyal feeling in that country, where there has been not a little soreness at the unfrequent visits of Royalty. The suggestion that a Royal residence might with advantage be established in the island has been again made. If carried out it might do more than a little to lessen the antagonistic attitude of the Irish to British rule, and lead to a better understanding on both sides on matters where so much alienation exists. The nearer our future King and Queen come to the daily life and struggles of the people during their sojourn the better they will prepare themselves for their high duties in the future, and the closer the bonds of sympathy between rulers and subjects be woven.

After lasting for a full year the Penrhyn Quarry Strike is at an end. It has caused a vast amount of loss and suffering, and disorganised an important industry, so that full recovery will be a matter of years. The terms of settlement were signed on Saturday last. Briefly, they mean victory for Lord Penrhyn in the matter of terminology, and for the men in the matter of grievances. They are not allowed to have a "committee" to negotiate future differences, but they may elect a committee who shall appoint a deputation for the purpose. The "standard" wage of the best workmen is not to be fixed, but the "average" wage is to be at a certain rate. And so on. It is in effect just such a settlement as was asked for at the beginning of the dispute, and it is a thousand pities that Lord Penrhyn, who after all has been the largest sufferer, did not long ago discover the proper language into which to put his concessions while retaining his dignity. It is a matter of thankfulness, however, that he has done so at last.

The wisdom of permitting "free speech" was signally demonstrated by the character of the Anarchist meeting in Trafalgar-square last Sunday. That kind of Anarchism which inspires the assassination of presidents and statesmen was conspicuous by its absence, and the five thousand people who assembled contented themselves with passing a humanitarian vote of censure on the alleged cruelties of the Spanish Government towards political offenders. One young shop assistant who shouted, "I am an Anarchist! I am an Anarchist!" explained his position at once by adding that it was not by the explosion of bombs, but by the growth of self-government among the people, that the objects of true Anarchists would be attained. There is no other country in Europe where such a meeting would be possible, although toward the end some opposition was evinced by the crowd; and certainly in no other could it have been carried through in so temperate and harmless a spirit. An open volcano tends to exhaust itself.

Preparations are already in active progress, according to The Boston Congregationalist, for the International Congregational Council to be held in that city in 1899. The last was held in London in 1892, and did a great deal in promoting the sense of a world-wide brotherhood in that denomination. These world reunions of various religious bodies and organisations are full of promise, as tending to break down international prejudices, to quicken united effort, and to awaken a spirit of hopefulness and love among the people. They bear impressive witness to the fact that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men," and to the still more inspiring fact that believers of all races are "one in Christ Jesus," their common Lord and Saviour.

According to the new report of the Army Temperance Society, the temperance movement in India is laying a firm hold of the English troops in that country. Its success has been so gratifying, that a parallel but independent movement is to be started under the name of the Army Purity Society. Rev. J. H. Bateson, of Simla, is one of the leading spirits. The progress of temperance in the Army has been largely due to the hearty support of the military authorities, and it is gratifying to learn that they have already given some encouragement to the new effort to secure a better standard of social morality among the rank and file. This is exactly what has long been wanted. Mr. Bateson appeals for the prayers of English Christians in his arduous undertaking, and we feel sure they will be heartily given. It will be half the battle if the genuine support of the officers can be gained.

The great influence of officers upon the men under their charge is known to all, and must be counted upon by the nation as one of its possessions in the effort to keep young soldiers out of temptation. Regulations and orders are all very well in their way, but a good officer who knows and cares for his men is worth a ream of them. The nation commits the men to his keeping, and he can take means to maintain their health and efficiency for service. He can do a good deal for them off the parade ground. The general in command of a station may take such an interest in his men as men as shall stimulate every subordinate and touch every private. One such commander, it is said, has issued a private circular, in which, while appealing to the men as rational beings actuated by motives, and not simply swayed by passions, he has arranged that the state of each company shall be reported to him every month. The company is treated as a family. The credit of the officer is bound up with the health and efficiency of his men; thus right through all ranks a better tone is produced. The commander has been exalted into the man, and all are improved by the influence.

The astonishing progress of the Band of Hope movement, which is to hold its jubilee in the autumn, may be gauged from the following figures, contrasting the first and last reports of the Union. In the former, it was stated that "several" Bands of Hope were formed in London and the provinces; these have now become 22,302 societies, with 2,813,000 members. In lieu of the two or three special meetings and two conferences held during the first year, thirty lecturers and agents are now employed, 2554 meetings were last year addressed by deputations, big towns and cities visited by school lecturers, who addressed 3730 day lectures to 403,320 scholars, and 1,138,570 publications were sold. The annual financial receipts during this period have risen from £85 to £9796. This vast activity has had its fruits in a much more sober generation of men and women. There is, however, plenty of work yet to be done ere England is a really sober country, and we are glad to see that the Union is alive to its responsibilities.

We have heard complaints lately from many quarters of the difficulty of carrying on the weekly or bi-weekly temperance meeting. The general opinion seems to be that the meeting degenerates into a promiscuous entertainment, in which the total abstinence teaching is reduced to the most microscopical proportions. We would suggest that the money now spent in such effort should be devoted to a Week's Gospel Temperance Mission at the beginning of the winter. If there be special speakers and singing, and above all special prayer among the workers, we are quite sure that more aggresive temperance work will be done than by any number of the above forms of attraction.

A notable and suggestive article by Mr. W. E. Russell in the current Contemporary contains a valuable testimony to the value of sound early Evangelical training as a deterrent in after life from the captivating influence of Romanism. He tells us that in the sixties, when an undergraduate in Oxford, he came under the influence of the Ritualistic wave that swept so many into the Roman communion. Why he was kept from following their example he puts in these words: "It was all due to my Evangelical training; to the deep conviction at the very root of my consciousness that 'he that hath the Son hath the life,' and that union with Peter cannot be a vital necessity if union with the Lord of Peter has been secured." The same conviction has made Mr. Russell, though a Churchman, feel that neither is union with the Episcopal Church any more necessary, but that all men outside that communion who are true believers in Christ are brothren in Him.

Now and again the true aim of some clerical advocates of "denominational schools" breaks out through the platitudes in which it is usually veiled. A charge brought by The Guardian against the "Voluntary" schools of Lincolnshire on the ground that the denominational instruction in them was not "sufficiently distinctive," has brought forth the following utterance from Canon Pennington, of Lincoln (italics ours):—

> Our syllabus is so arranged as to give that distinctive denominational instruction. I always saw that it was given when I was a diocesan inspector, and always asked the children, chiefly the children of Nonconformists, questions bearing upon it. This is the case throughout Lincolnshire. Thus, in fact, we are training the children of Nonconformists to be children of the Church.

This bare-faced avowal of a desire to instil High Church ideas into the minds of Nonconformist children, under the pretence of giving them adequate religious instruction, throws a flood of light on the attitude of both parties in the educational controversy, and forces the friends of spiritual freedom into whole-hearted protest against the policy of the dominant party in the Church of England.

By way of a contrast to this kind of thing one reads with refreshment of heart the story of Dr. Arnold, of Rugby, and his method of solving the same difficulty in his day. In Principal Findlay's newly published volume on that great teacher, to whom we "owe almost all the bright features of public school-life today," there are suggestive extracts giving his views on how to deal with the children of Dissenting parents. He said:

> I would avoid dwelling on the differences between us, because I could teach all that I conceive to be essential in Christianity without at all touching on them.

If this method were followed by all teachers to-day, there would be but little heard of the controversy that is once more becoming so accentuated and bitter.

There are other features of Dr. Arnold's method of conducting a great school which are worthy of attention on the part of all who have the care of boys and girls. His principle was threefold. First, his own pure and lofty personality, with its hatred of all that was low and immoral, made a deep impression on his scholars. Secondly, he laid the utmost stress "on interposing between masters and school a strong body of older boys, in whom responsibility would tend to 'anticipate the period of manhood,'" and through whom he could act in keeping down the vices of school-life. Thirdly, in lieu of expulsion, he made a point of getting "such boys as were not getting good, or were exercising a bad influence on others, quietly removed." By this means he transformed Rugby into a centre of moral and spiritual influence which helped to produce some of the finest men of the last generation, and has been an encouragement through the whole educational world since.

A striking discourse by Dr. J. C. Rawlings, a Methodist local preacher and leading physician in Swansea, was recently delivered on "Recreation from a Christian Standpoint." Three or four cardinal principles were laid down which if followed would materially help seriously-inclined young people in their choice of amusements. These must be right in themselves, right in their relations to others, right in their associations, and right in their proportion. "Pleasure must not overlap duty." "Excess in innocent amusement is sin." These tests cover the whole ground, and if they were conscientiously applied in practical life, not only would the world be purer and healthier and happier, but many of the sad problems that arise out of the condition of our "recreative" institutions would be solved without further trouble.

Mr. Alfred Halstead writes to the Theatre, pointing out the changed attitude of Nonconformists towards the stage, and of the stage towards Nonconformists. The success of some modern stage ventures "is owing even to Nonconformist patronage." We are sorry to hear it, if it is true. On the other side, the stage is ceasing to lampoon and satirise its new friends, who, we are told,

> Still stick to the old morality, believe in the sacredness of the marriage-vow, and insist on a clean and wholesome play, in which the old-fashioned virtues are not ridiculed, and the lessons of love and self-renunciation are maintained.

We have our doubts about the whole representation here set forth. As to the purification of the theatre, Mr. Hall Caine in his last book is said to have painted it and the music-hall as "centres of corruption and foci of moral ugliness," yet he boasts of having taken infinite pains to be true to every phase of life he has portrayed. While the outside of theatres are deformed with such pictures as a passenger walking can see to be degraded, it is in vain to talk of a pure and elevating inside.

How does the respectable working-man, who neither drinks nor gambles, who goes in neither for politics nor Socialism, and who never goes to church, spend his Sundays? A working-man of this class gave a writer in the Echo the programme of his own day of rest as typical of thousands of others. He is fond of his home, and devotes the Sunday to his family. In the morning he helps the "missus" in various ways, after breakfast takes her and the little ones to the nearest park, where he smokes, reads his paper (perhaps), and enjoys doing nothing. Home in time to prepare and eat a good dinner; in the afternoon a "rest," or another walk with the family till the evening, getting out as much as possible and greatly enjoying the new facilities given by the "County Council" of seeing the blue sky and the green earth.

There is here nothing, as the writer says, which the strictest Puritan could say was wrong in itself. Negatively, the Lord's Day has been strictly kept, with no trace of vice and no suggestion of conscious irreverence. And yet one cannot read of such a method of spending Sunday without feeling a great gap in it. To quote "Nemo's" apt words—

> The physical rest is right, the social enjoyment is equally so; but man is something more than a splendid animal or a social being. He has brain, and unless the instinct of universal man be wrong he has more than brain. The utter neglect of mind, and of that which lies behind and within mind in this working-man's life, is sad indeed. Is he too busy with baby, with his Sunday meals and walk, to open a book, to think, and to look in the face of that which he knows does not live by bread alone?

It is this "newest and most powerful factor in London—Secularity"—which is the besetting sin of the respectable, irreligious working-man.

How to alter this state of things is a problem that ought to be resolutely faced by those who have the highest good of working-men at heart. Few of their own leaders—though this is not true of all—appear to be conscious of the spiritual void that exists. A good deal has been done by the great mission-hall movement. "Pleasant Sunday Afternoons," when conducted on right lines, have been a blessing to thousands; some of the churches are well attended by the class in question. No one, however, can claim that more than a fraction of the respectable working-men of London, or of our great towns, ever cross the threshold of a religious building. What is the root of the mischief? One reason is certainly widespread; rightly or wrongly, thousands of working-men are prejudiced against religion because of the unfavourable impression left on them by the conduct of professing Christians around them. More consistent lives on the part of those whose true mission is to "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour" would do much to break down this alienation, and prepare the way for better things.

Rev. J. Shaw, of Ewell, was wisely guided when, as chairman of the Surrey Congregational Union, he took for the subject of his address "Some of the Characteristics, Tendencies, and Requirements of the Day." One thing he sees everywhere and in everything—secularism, which (speaking with modesty as a pastor of a village church) he considers is killing the spirit of all noble and self-sacrificing devotion to the kingdom of God, and adds: "This ascendency of the secular spirit is also a deep and a strong form of a common distrust of God." This tendency may not be a permanent condition. Man cannot be satisfied with the things of time. But it will not be remedied by any other power but the Gospel. Mr. Shaw's words on the inadequacy of any reforms short of the renewal of the heart are very trenchant. Our great evil is the evil of sin. Too faint a perception of this evil, he thinks, is the reason why the cross is not seen so clearly as it ought to be as the power that saves from sin's horrors and terrors.

There are reliable signs in the world of French thought that the crass materialism which has reigned since the days of Comte is beginning to give place to a more spiritual philosophy. The leader in this movement is F. Brunetière, a member of the French Academy and editor of the great French review. An article in the Christliche Welt on this subject (summarised in last week's Methodist Recorder) puts the burden of the new demand for a faith thus:—

Philosophy has failed to keep its promises. We threw away bread when we gave up the mysterious gifts which hover over us unreachable and inexplicable. We have overlooked the necessities of the heart, which now gradually assert themselves in their primitive strength, inspiring irresistible discontent with the existing. The unknowable is not abolished when it is declared unknowable; and the practical needs of the heart are not done away, even if they are banished from the field of strict philosophy.

This is a good beginning for a renewal of Christian faith in France. After a century of freethinking the old verities are insisting on being heard, the radical needs of the human heart clamour for the Bread of life.

Those who rely on conscience alone for their guide through the perplexities of the moral life, apart from the illumination of the Holy Spirit, give it a place it is incompetent to fill. It is scarcely the function of conscience to tell us infallibly what is right and wrong, but rather to enforce such ideas of right and wrong as we have otherwise learnt. It "accuses or else excuses" us according to its degree of enlightenment. In itself it simply reflects the standards of morality in which we have been trained. That is why conscience bears such diverse witness in different men. Its nobility consists simply in this, that it is eminently responsive to higher light, faithfully reflects such light as it gets, and is never finally at rest till it is the mirror of the holy will of God. To illuminate the moral sense is thus one of the functions of the Holy Ghost. Let us beware how we resist Him.

But the "Spirit taketh of the things of Christ, and showeth them unto us." It is in the light of the teaching of the Saviour that our conscience is truly sensitised, its range widened, its ideals purified. He transformed the moral sense, and changed the Jewish into the Christian conscience by putting universal principles in the place of temporary rules and regulations, subordinating acts to dispositions, establishing us in our true relations to God and men, bringing in a new standard of discrimination, and reinforcing our motives in the light of His cross. Thus morality is exalted into religion, and conscience made a true handmaid of the will of God. Without this permeation of the ethical sense by the religious, it remains impotent, and barren, and contradictory, and unloving; with it, we are "no longer servants, but friends" of the Lawgiver who is also the Bridegroom.

A lady correspondent writes:—

Repeated unsuccessful efforts to obtain employment for an intelligent Christian man of fifty-four has brought to my notice the apparently almost universal rule nowadays in business life of accepting no applicant for employment who is above the age of forty. In the majority of cases the limit seems to be set much below this.

Can men swayed by the spirit of the Master systematically turn from the pleadings of their middle-aged brethren who could competently serve them, because the energy and push, etc., of younger men would bring them in larger returns? And will this course bring them in the largest returns of all, that is truest and best even here? Still less on the day of reckoning.

I am writing not only on behalf of the multitude of middle-aged, would-be workers, driven well-nigh to despair by constant refusal, but quite as much for the sake of those who, in many cases, I am convinced through want of thought, are missing blessed opportunities within their reach of fulfilling "the law of Christ."

An evangelist, having some experience in village work, while lamenting the spiritual darkness of many outlying districts, says:—

We speak of the indifference of men and women to the Gospel and to the claims of Christ. But are not we, as Christians, largely responsible for this state of things, by our own lukewarmness, inconsistency, and worldliness? Jesus said, "Ye are the light of the world" (Matt. v. 14), and the reason why there is so much spiritual darkness is because there is so little light. If a dimly burning lamp began to complain about the darkness, should not we answer, "It is your fault; you shine brighter and there will be more light"? Thank God there are shining lights in our villages who are witnessing nobly for Christ, but we want more. Let the people see our earnestness in the means of grace and our deep concern about their souls.

"Oh, ye saints! arouse, be earnest!
Up and work while yet 'tis day.
Ere the night of death o'ertake you!
Strive for souls while yet you may."

A Parable of the Sea.

A very choice book, published by Mr. C. H. Kelly, is Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's "Pictures and Parables," (2s. 6d.). Teaching by parable has the sanction and example of the greatest of all expounders, and Mr. Pearse in this respect treads very closely in his Master's steps. His writings positively scintillate with gems of suggestive and beautiful imagery. Some of these have been culled by a sympathetic hand, and with Mr. Pearse's permission they appear in this charming volume. We cannot commend it better than by reproducing one of the "Parables of the Sea," which will be appreciated by many at this holiday time; it is entitled—

Aspirations.

FAR up against the deep blue sky, lightly passing on the summer breeze, was a pure, white, fleecy cloud—a thing so utterly unsoiled it seemed to belong to heaven much more than to earth. The great sea lay and looked at it, and whispered to itself, "They say that thing of beauty was once down here where I am," and the sea sighed within itself: "How fair a thing it is, how peaceful, right up there among the stars, in the very bosom of God."

And then the sea grew vexed. "It is nonsense. How could I ever get up there, heavy and clumsy as I am? And if I got there how could I stay there? Besides——" and the sea was silent. It thought of the fierce passions that slept within it—the cruel storms; it shuddered as it pondered of the dreadful things that dwelt in its depths; of the wrecked ships, and the dead men. Then it sighed again: "Not for me, indeed. I could never be like that."

And yet the sea could not rest. Still it looked, and wondered, and longed. Then it roused itself and said, "I will try." It gathered its strength, and it borrowed the force of the wind. I saw it as it rose up in the strength of its purpose, arched in its pride, dashing on in its desperate resoluteness, till it hurled itself against the rocks, and leapt high up, a quivering column of spray, and seemed to catch at the height. Then it fell, baffled and beaten; and as a hundred rivulets of foam it hastened to hide itself in the depths, as it hissed, "I knew it was not for me."

Reader, has my parable any meaning for you? Is it not the story of longings, and strugglings, and failure? Come, then, and it shall teach us the secret of success.

At last the great sea lay quite still in the silvery light of the morning, and it looked up at the sun. "Canst thou not help me?" it cried. "The moon draws me hither and thither across the earth, but it cannot uplift and transform me. Canst thou?"

"Yes," said the sun, "indeed I can, if thou wilt let me." And the sun sent down a noiseless ray that shone upon it, and warmed it, and loosened it, and uplifted it. And lo! the sea knew not how, nor cared to know, but it cried, "I am there." And there it was, a pure, white, fleecy cloud, against the heaven's blue.

"He that hath ears to hear, let him hear," with eye, and heart, and hope, and longing fixed upon Jesus Christ our Lord. He Himself bendeth over us; He shineth upon us; He looseneth; He uplifteth. How, it is not for us to know or care, but this we do know—we are transformed by beholding.

Sacred Song in the Sanctuary.

By Ira D. SANKEY.

I HAVE been asked to give my views on the general question of how the service of praise should be conducted in the churches so that the best spiritual results may be obtained. I know full well that my views on the subject will meet with strong opposition from certain quarters; nevertheless, with the hope that I may be able to make some suggestions that may be helpful to those who are troubled over the question, I will venture to say a few things.

In the first place, I do not think it is a question of whether the choir is a paid choir or not, but rather whether the singers are Christians or not, and whether they try to conduct the service of praise in accordance with the spirit of the world, or in accordance with the spirit of the New Testament, as indicated in Col. iii. 16: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts unto God." I am sure there is nothing more trying to a spiritually-minded minister than having to contend with a worldly-minded choir and organist, who insist upon singing what they call "high-toned music," but which is too often simply operatic music, known and appreciated only by those in the church who frequent the theatre and opera.

The leader of the choir and the minister should, if possible, be in perfect accord, the latter having the right to select such hymns and tunes as he may wish the choir and people to sing. The anthem should be left to the selection of the choir. The organist is usually the person who kills the congregational singing or makes it eminently successful, and he should be looked after, far more than he is, by those in authority. He should not be allowed to ride rough-shod over the spiritual worship and sensitive nerves of the congregation by playing the organ with such thundering power and loudness as to drive half of the worshippers into a state bordering almost upon distraction. Such organists should be laboured with, and, if possible, toned down, so that they may lead with skill, moderation, and grace; for as they set the pace so the tune will go.

If I could not have a choir that would help in the spiritual work of the church, I would let them all go, and adopt the good old Scotch plan of having a precentor, a man with a good character and a good voice, and let him raise the tune and lead the song. In this case you may be sure the tune will not be of the latest, up-to-date, opera class, but one of the grand old songs of Zion, such as all the people can and will sing.

I think a great improvement might be made in the singing, in many churches, if the minister would speak about the hymn when giving it out, and read the hymn through in such a way as to interest the people in it; and then, like Mr. Spurgeon, who would have neither organist nor choir, join with the precentor and congregation in singing it through to the end.—S.S Times.

A Living Sacrifice.*

By Rev. JOHN BRASH.

MOST important is the question—how we may be brought into such happy relation towards God that our lives may continually move in sweet harmony with his will, bringing to us the testimony that we please God. Can you conceive anything on this earth more to be desired? I do not know a sentence in all the New Testament where this question is answered so concisely as in Romans xii. 1. Paul had been discussing Christian doctrine, and he proceeds in these words to enforce practical Christianity: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies, a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."

The service, then, which our God demands is represented here under the figure of sacrifice. It will help us to understand the word if we remind ourselves that Jewish sacrifices were of two kinds—sacrifices offered before reconciliation and in order to obtain it, and those offered after, in order to acknowledge and celebrate it. We all admit God's claim on such a service as is presented by the word "sacrifice." Some say: "Oh, yes, of course; we must make sacrifices." A few weeks ago I attended a meeting to consider the best means of promoting and strengthening the spiritual life of a church, and the burden of all the speeches was: "We must make greater sacrifices." True enough. But this passage is further reaching than such views contemplate. "Present your bodies a living sacrifice." What can it mean but your entire selves? It would be absurd to suppose that Paul means anything less than this. Does he mean mere outward service and morality? He does not depreciate that, but he means: All you have, all you are, and all you can do. What, all? Yes; nothing kept back. We are to call nothing our own? No!

How many sacrifices we are ready to make rather than the one which God requires of us. It is not a larger portion of our income, a greater amount of work, but ourselves. How slow we are to surrender self. You say: Was such a sacrifice ever made? Yes. You do not need to go beyond the man who spoke these words. What did Paul mean when he said, "I am crucified with Christ"? What could he mean but that all his purposes, all his designs, had become identified with those of his Master and Lord? He had renounced all low ambitions, all selfish schemes; the love of the Lord Jesus had taken possession of every faculty of his mind, every affection of his heart, and had become the ruling pattern of his life. "Present your bodies"—your life, with all its possibilities.

Paul guards this doctrine against a certain misapprehension which is very often the source of mistakes in the life. The sacrifice of the burnt-offering in the old dispensation was a dead sacrifice. Paul seems to have this thought in his mind when he said: "Present your bodies, a living sacrifice." Some have denied themselves the food necessary for vigorous life, and thus unfitted themselves for active work in the Master's service. A friend of mine in Manchester, a High Anglican clergyman, a man of intense devotion, so wore himself down by fastings and vigils that he sank and died. It was plain that he had committed self-murder—a dead sacrifice. Some deny themselves the recreation and change of occupation necessary in order to physical and mental vigour. I have a friend—the noblest man I have ever known—who to-day is in a lunatic asylum, in spiritual despair, because he never allowed himself rest and recreation.

Others have misunderstood the passage, and have separated themselves from all human society, spending all their leisure hours in reading, prayer, and other acts of devotion. They thus become examples of intense selfishness; living as though all they had to do was to save their own souls, never caring what becomes of the world outside. Others say a Christian ought not to increase his wealth, or to take honour and position from his fellow citizens, even when he can do it honestly. The Bible does not teach us to take these courses. We are to accept such benefits and consecrate them in the service of the Master. The sacrifice is to be active and living, not dead and passive.

When God requires us to yield ourselves to Him it is not to lie at his feet in ecstasy; it is to rise up in the strength of his grace and to do his will in our daily life. When He enjoins what we call religious duties, it is not for the sake of the duties; there is no merit in them. Services, meetings, and ordinances—these are not Christianity. They are, as we say, "means of grace," which we should use to the increase and strengthening of our spiritual life. Christianity is the life of Christ in the human soul, manifesting itself in Christian actions, words, tempers, and dispositions. Meetings and ordinances are worth just as much as they can do to make us more Christlike in daily life; to give us patience under provocation; grace to give a soft answer, and to imitate Him who, when He was reviled, reviled not again; calm resignation to the Divine will in the hour of darkness and sorrow; grace, in the time of bereavement and loss, to say trustfully, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away." That is Christianity. Self-forgetting efforts to promote the comfort of others—to give the easy chair, or the best seat in the railway carriage, to comfort the sorrowful, to relieve the poor, to raise the fallen, to bring the wanderer home, to save the lost, to make earth more like heaven—that is Christianity.

But we have not reached the end of the Apostle's exhortation. "Holy, acceptable unto God." The sacrifice must be holy, or it cannot be acceptable to a holy God. How shall I present such a sacrifice to God? Angels present a holy service; with their pure spirits unstained by sin or evil, they serve Him day and night and do his perfect will. We have a depraved nature, which has been increased by actual sin. How can we bring a clean thing out of an unclean? We must go to the old Covenant for answer. A lamb is chosen for a burnt-offering. When it has died it ceases to be a common lamb and has become a holy lamb (Ex. xxix. 37).

The same truth is taught by Christ Himself. "Whether is greater, the gift or the altar that sanctifieth the gift?" (Matt. xxiii. 19.) But what meant that ceremony? It could not really change the nature of the gift. We see that the altar was a type of the Lord Jesus Christ. He is the great medium through whom sacrifices can be presented to God and which He can accept. When I acknowledge that I am not my own, and put myself into his hands, leaving my inmost self at his disposal, He willingly and gladly accepts the offering; sprinkling it with his own blood and stamping it with his own merit He presents it, in his own dear name, to his Father, thus securing its acceptance. Not only so (for we never seem to come to the end of what the Lord Jesus Christ is to his people), but He communicates his own life to me, fills me with his Spirit, and forms Himself in me, so that my life is in some degree a manifestation of the Lord Jesus to the world—his gentleness, patience, meekness, unselfishness, his unquenchable love to the sinful and vile. "A living sacrifice, holy and acceptable." How beautifully simple it is!

Just a few words on the grounds on which God claims this whole-hearted devotion to Him. "By the mercies of God." Not a word about judgment. Why is that? Because the Apostle is writing to Christians. Warnings and threatenings are for those who turn their backs on the Cross. In writing to Christians there is a principle in their hearts to which he could make much more powerful appeal than that which comes from mere judgment.

"By the mercies of God." Where shall we begin to recount them? Shall I spend a moment or two in reviewing them? Think of personal mercies, providential mercies, redeeming mercy. To all eternity we shall be learning how much we owe to it. Think of long-suffering mercies. Sad to say, there are some amongst us who have shirked God's claim for years. We have said: "He may wait." When every other desire is gratified, every other purpose accomplished, every other end gained, we may consider God's claim. Is not that the way we have sometimes treated Him? Oh, the mercy which waited and lingered for our returning! Think, too, of the forgiving mercy. Time after time it has been extended to us. Think, also, of covenant mercies.

All this is glad, reasonable service, but the unbeliever says, "It is not reasonable; it is well to have a little religion, but not too much." How men shrink from this utter renunciation of self, this entire submission to the will of God, this perfect separation from the world. It is true that He asks perfect consecration, but let us never forget that perfect consecration brings perfect love. It is no sacrifice to live for those we love. I have had all sorts of experiences, but I can only say—and I speak from my heart of hearts—let this whole living sacrifice be bound to the altar by the silken cords of love, and you will never want to take it back again.

Is it reasonable to live to yourself? No. Self is the greatest of all tyrants. There are no two things more inseparable than selfishness and misery; there is no service so reasonable as the service of God through Jesus Christ. If you want to know liberty, brightness, joy, and freedom in service, present a living sacrifice. Do not say "No" to God. Do not let your heart whisper "No"; you have thought about it a great deal too long.

* Notes of an address at Keswick.

The Three Rivers.

A STREAM shall become a river, and a river a great sea. Thus has the stream of prophecy broadened down the ages, bringing hope and faith and love, as with ever deepening voice it has made known the story of man's redemption.

The three great rivers of the Bible are typical of Christ in his threefold character as Prophet, Priest, and King. The river of Genesis, the river of Ezekiel, and the river of Revelation are each of them the river of life, but each of them discovers God in a new relation to man. The revelation of Ezekiel is fuller than the revelation of Moses, while that of John is more glorious than either.

In illustration let me point out that the river of Genesis flows from the tree of life, the river of Ezekiel between the tree of life, and the river of Revelation beneath—that is with the tree of life, "in the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river."

The Prophetic river had its rise in the Garden, where was the Voice; the Priestly river flowed from the Sanctuary by way of the Altar; and the Kingly river flows from the Throne of God and of the Lamb. The river of Eden bore the promise of life, the river of the Sanctuary made sure the promise of life, the river of the City shall fulfil the promise of life.

Life is full of revelations; every day discovers something new; the glory of the future is more than the glory of the past. Christ has yet to manifest Himself as King—oh, the glory of that sight!

Caring for Prisoners.

By Mr. D. L. MOODY.

CHRISTIAN workers are apt to overlook one of the most hopeful fields of labour open to them. I refer to the gaols and penitentiaries of our land. There are seventy-seven hundred counties in the United States, and nearly every one has a county gaol; some, more than one. When men are arrested, they are confined in these until they come to trial, when they are passed on to the penitentiary, or some other penal institution, if convicted.

It often happens in the West and South that prisoners are kept waiting month after month for trial. In the course of my visits to the gaols in Texas I found one young man who had been awaiting trial for fourteen months, and his case was not unique. A recent editorial in a leading New York daily paper was headed "Delayed Trials," and censured the administration of the State because "it takes men, locks them up, two, three, and four in a cell, under conditions less healthful and more irksome than those surrounding convicted criminals serving sentence, and leaves them there for months untried."

In some States, after a man has been sent to the penitentiary, he is set to work, but while in the county gaol the prisoner is kept in more or less close confinement, with nothing to do. In other States, they are kept by law in enforced idleness all the time. By a provision of the new constitution in New York State, all work which competes with labour outside is prohibited in the penal institutions in the State.

Now, prisoners fear this idleness worse than anything else. A leading prison physician has given his opinion that ten per cent. are in such mental condition that enforced idleness will result eventually in their insanity. General Lathrop is reported to have said that no prison manager anywhere has had the fertility of resource to maintain a number of prisoners in idleness, and at the same time prevent the deterioration which culminates too often in insanity or death. Facts prove that prisoners prefer even self-murder to life under such conditions.

It is at this critical time that, in my opinion, the influences of the Gospel can be brought to bear upon the prisoner with good advantage. He is alone, except for the recollections of a wasted life. He is glad of something to read to occupy his mind, to take his thoughts off himself. A good book placed in his hands may have unending influence for good.

It is not right to think that all prisoners are hard-hearted criminals who are beyond hope of salvation for this life or the life to come. A friend has furnished me with figures showing the commitments to the New York penitentiary on Blackwell's Island from January 1 to July 1 1896. Nearly forty-five per cent. were under twenty-five years of age. At this time of life a young man or woman is not supposed to have become set in character. Many a young man has committed a crime in a moment of passion or weakness, or under the influence of liquor, and not because he is a hardened criminal.

The chaplain of the Hartford, Connecticut, county gaol recently told me of a sad experience. One Sunday morning, at the usual service, he saw a lady crying as if her heart would break. He stepped down and asked her what was the matter. She said that she was a stranger in the city, and had come to the service simply out of curiosity, but had seen her son among the prisoners. She had not known that he was in the city of Hartford.

What I now propose is that Christians shall be more active in bringing them the Gospel while they are behind the bars. If it were not for atheism and infidelity, there would be no need of prisons. It is sin that is at the root of the matter, and the only sure cure is regeneration—a new heart and a new life in Christ Jesus.

Since I became specially interested in this line of work two years ago, we have sent over one hundred and fifty thousand Bibles, Testaments, and books for distribution in gaols, etc., all over the country, by means of the prison fund connected with the Bible Institute Colportage Association, Chicago. Our method of work is to secure the co-operation of the chaplain or local committee that has charge of Christian work in the gaol. We have found numbers of cases where nothing whatever was being done for the spiritual welfare of the prisoners, but in such cases the sheriff or warden has usually been glad of books to distribute.

I do not know of anything in which I have engaged, outside of evangelistic work, that has brought such quick results. Hardly a day passes without our hearing of definite instances of conversion or blessing by means of books we have sent out. If a helping hand is reached out to these men in time, there is every hope of saving them before they sink lower and lower.

A young man applied to the Young Men's Christian Association secretary at Brockton, Massachusetts, for help. The secretary handed him a few colportage books, told him to go out and sell them, and keep the proceeds. The young man seemed greatly moved, and said that, if it had not been for one of these books, he would not be there applying for work. A copy had been given him in gaol, and had led him to see the error of his ways.

The chaplain of the penitentiary at Michigan City, Indiana, wrote: "The books which you sent to the prisoners have done a wonderful amount of good. They were sought for, and eagerly read by the men. . . We have no money, and are so anxious that they should have reading-matter that I am taking collections from the different churches. Forty of those converted in the prison have joined the church, and we hope many more souls will be saved."

Several months ago a student of the Bible Institute, Chicago, gave three books to a prisoner in the Cook county gaol at Chicago. Some time afterwards, this student was at Joliet, Illinois, and visited the penitentiary on Sunday morning. Here he discovered by accident the prisoner, who had meantime been convicted, and sentenced to serve a term of years. It transpired that he still had the three books, one being out on loan at the time. The paper cover of one—"The Way of God"—had been torn off in usage, and was stitched on again with thread. On the blank page inside were written the names of nineteen men. On being asked to explain, the prisoner said that these nineteen men had read the book through, and had afterwards signed their names by his request. Three names had crosses against them, thus: "X." Asked what these meant, he answered:

"Oh, those are brothers. They were converted by reading the book, and so I call them my brothers in Christ Jesus."

Inquiries of the prison authorities confirmed the truth of the above facts.

The friend who distributed books at a prison in Wheeling, West Virginia, wrote as follows:—

"I asked one of the prisoners to give me the book he had gotten from me, as I wanted to make some extracts for a sermon. He told me he would not give it up. He kept it in his inside pocket, and told me, with tears in his eyes, that he was glad someone had given him that kind of reading-matter, and that, if he had had it before, he would not then have been in the coils of the law, and in the bonds of sin and Satan."

Many other cases like these might be cited, showing what can be done by God's help; and it is my earnest desire to stir Christians to greater activity on behalf of those confined in their local gaols. We want their co-operation in the distribution of books. Letters addressed to my home address at East Northfield, Massachusetts, will always find me.

Famine and Foe: a Parable.

"THERE never can be such a famine in India as in past years," I heard an Indian official say; "railways make all the difference. There was grain in plenty in other parts of the country in those days of widespread starvation, but we had no means of transporting it to the scene of want."

In like manner, during the late China-Japan war, so numerous were the troops China could muster, that experienced Englishmen and others ridiculed the idea of her defeat at the beginning of the campaign; but "the Middle Kingdom," in her blind obstinacy, has resisted the laying of railways as a hateful "foreign" innovation, so in her time of need she had no means of massing her soldiery on the scene of conflict, and long ere their wearisome month-long marches on foot, their creeping canal journeyings, were ended, the brisk movements and splendid transport service of their apparently insignificant foe had won the day.

It seems to me that we have here some very suggestive illustrations with regard to the relation of churches at home and missions abroad, and the part we all can do in furthering the cause of Christ in heathen lands. Multitudes far away are spiritually starving, while with us is the Bread of Life in abundance; the enemy of the Cross is carrying all before him in the midst of populations for which Christ died, and many soldiers of the Cross are ready and waiting to go forth to the help of the Lord in the far-off fields of battle. But how about the transport service?

Many an instance have we known of chosen and well-equipped workers debarred, or, at least, delayed, from going forth to heathen mission fields by lack of funds for their journey and support. Well has it been said with regard to this matter that every true Christian in the homelands is bound "to go, or let go, or help go"; and even as each wheel of the railway van—aye, each spoke of each wheel—is an indispensable as the powerful engine to the train which carries bread to the starving or soldiers to the strife, so the humblest offering of time, talent, money has its practical part in the furtherance of the Saviour's cause—in the speeding of the Bread of Life to dying souls, of the warriors of the King of Kings to his warfare with the prince of darkness—and may have issues only to be fully known, surely to be richly recompensed, in the day of his appearing. O, send out thy Light and thy Truth!

Psa. xliii. 3.

THOU knowest all my need—
So will I rest;
No more I seek to plead
What I think best,
But leaving all my care within thy hands,
I wait expectant thy supreme commands,
My Saviour blest.

To Thee I yield the choice,
Master, all-wise;
Oh, let me hear thy voice
Bid me arise.
Show me thy path, all other paths are vain,
Only thy light can make the future plain;
Open mine eyes!

Speak, Lord! thy servant hears;
I will obey;
Resting in Thee, all fears
Have passed away.
Thou who dost Israel keep wilt shelter me;
Teach me thy way and I will follow Thee,
From day to day.

Hop-Pickers in Kent.—I am arranging again for work amongst the hop-pickers, who will be congregating shortly in Mid-Kent, and would ask the prayers and fellowship of your readers on behalf of this work. We purpose distributing books, holding services, and where practicable giving free teas. Tracts, etc., will be thankfully received.

THE SONGS OF DEGREES.—I.

THE last mentioned of the wonders of Solomon, which left no more spirit in the Queen of Sheba, was the Ascent by which he went up to the house of the Lord (1 Kings x.). To the Degrees or stages of this Ascent allusion appears to be made in the fifteen Songs of Degrees or Songs of Ascents (R.V.) contained in Psa. cxx.-cxxxiv. They correspond to definite stages in the Christian's ascent to "the house of the Lord." David says, "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after: that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple." The goal of the Songs of Degrees is to "stand by night in the house of the Lord." The believer will recognise those degrees or stages as he reviews or anticipates his own experience, in meditating upon it in the Word of God. (With the one thing desired by David compare the one thing needful, the better part, which Mary chose and which she shall not lose; and with Paul's "This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press along the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Psa. xxvii. 4; Luke x. 42; Phil. iii. 13, 14).

Psa. cxx.—CONVICTION AND CONVERSION.

The soul longs for deliverance from the lying lips and the deceitful tongue of the old man, the flesh, the body of sin. "Woe is me that I sojourn in Meshech and dwell in the tents of Kedar"—forms of fleshly bondage; see meanings of the names. Kedar was son of Ishmael, born of the flesh, who persecutes him that is born of the Spirit (Gal. iv. 24-31). Compare Rom. vii. 24: "O wretched man that I am: who shall deliver me from this body of death?" He who seeks peace shall surely find it, though the desires of the flesh and of the mind war against it.

Psa. cxxi.—SEEKING AND FINDING.

It is useless to look to the hills, to any earthly or human source, for help. Only Jehovah the Creator, the covenant God who made heaven and earth, can help. He who made the machine knows all its parts and possibilities. He that keepeth thee will not slumber. Therefore commit the keeping of thy soul in well doing to thy faithful Creator (1 Pet. iv. 19).

Thou art of Israel, and He that keepeth Israel will neither slumber nor sleep. The safety of a part is assured in the safety of the whole. If the body is safe so is its every member. Tempted believer, foil the adversary, and strengthen your own soul in God, with this blessed assurance: "I am part of a whole, and I cannot be lost without damage to the whole. I am an integral part of Israel, the beloved of God's soul, and not the least grain shall fall (Jer. xii. 7; Amos ix. 9). I am one of 144,000, and the symbolic number cannot be made incomplete. I am a member of the Church of the living God, who hath put all things under Jesus' feet, and given Him to be Head over all things to the Church, which is his body, the fulness of Him who filleth all in all (Rev. vii., xiv.; Eph. i. 15-23). The body of the Christ can have nothing superfluous or lacking in its parts (Lev. xxi. 16-24)."

The proof of faith is its permanence; and if in your heart you believe in God, who raised your Surety from the dead, and gave Him glory, be assured that Jehovah is your Keeper; He will preserve your soul; Jehovah, the covenant-keeping God, will preserve your going out and your coming in for evermore. See John vi. 16-21.

This is in the largest sense the traveller's psalm: the psalm of the pilgrim from the city of destruction to the City which hath the foundations, whose Builder and Maker is God.

Is My Bible Really True?

WHERE DID WE GET IT?

By Rev. CHARLES LEACH, D.D., Manchester.

No. X.—JOHN WYCLIFFE.

AFTER the death of Alfred there came a long pause in Bible translation. Here and there, it is true, a little was done. Passing from King Alfred in the ninth century, we learn that at the close of the tenth, or early in the eleventh, the first seven books of the Old Testament were partly translated by an Archbishop of Canterbury named Aelfric. Towards the close of the twelfth century the Psalms were put into a poetical version, and about the middle of the thirteenth there was a poetic narration of the chief events recorded in Genesis and Exodus. In the early part of the fourteenth century there were two prose versions of the Psalms. The year 1382 is the earliest date at which it can with certainty be said that the entire Scriptures were known in the English language. This was chiefly the work of John Wycliffe, the "Morning Star of the Reformation," at whose life and work we must now rapidly glance. Wycliffe lived in

DARK AND TRYING TIMES.

The Church of God had sunk to a sad and desperate condition of spiritual decay. The lives of the clergy were a reproach to the name of religion. Men were promoted to high position in the Church who were not only intellectually unfit, but who were scandalously impure in their conduct. The upper classes, too, were impudently wicked and unchaste.

John Wycliffe was perhaps the first reformer in England who dared to stand alone and rebuke the leaders of the Church, and fearlessly assert the freedom of religious thought and teaching against the dogmas of the Popes—for before he died two rival Popes were in possession of the field!

It is with Wycliffe as a translator of the Bible that we have to deal. He laboured hard to put the Word of God into the common language of the people, and succeeded to an extent which none before him had done. About 1382 he was able to send forth the whole Bible in the English which the common people spoke.

It would seem that about the first half of the Old Testament was translated by Nicholas de Hereford, one of Wycliffe's friends at Oxford; the other half and the whole of the New Testament was the work of the Reformer himself. It was then that the English people became possessed of the Word of God. The Bible was no longer merely the property of the priests and the few scholarly men of the time. It was now to be had in the mother tongue of the people, and the dream of many to enable every ploughboy to read the Bible was in a fair way of being realised. Wycliffe's Bible had a large circulation. But we must remember that it was in MS., for printing was not yet invented.

It is impossible fully to measure the influence which Wycliffe's Bible had upon the English people and upon the world. It was eagerly sought after by the people. Though it was sold at a high price, its treasure came down to the very poorest. Wycliffe's preachers went about the country reading the pages of the Book, and telling of its contents in their sermons; and often parties were gathered together to hear someone read a page or two, or recite their contents.

This great work of Wycliffe laid all succeeding ages under deep obligations to him. As a translation it was not so perfect as the Bible which we now happily possess. We must recollect that it was but a translation of Jerome's Vulgate, that is,

A TRANSLATION OF A TRANSLATION.

Men in those days had not access to the original MSS. of which we have spoken.

Wycliffe's work was so well done that its influence remains upon our version to this day. Unfortunately, however, the men in office and power in the Church in Wycliffe's days did not appreciate his work. Indeed, he came into serious trouble for his pains, and had a narrow escape of his life. Not only did he publish the Bible in the language of the people, but he attacked the false and wicked position of the leaders in the Church. For all this he was called to account. He was summoned to appear before a great council at a monastery at Blackfriars, with Courtney, the Archbishop of Canterbury, presiding. There he stood alone—tall, pale, and thin. That brave man presented a great contrast to the dignitaries, clothed in their purple and satin and damask gowns, as he stood before his judge, surrounded by scowling abbots and monks, and bishops and priests.

You may ask, For what offence is this poor, pale, friendless clergyman brought here? Has he been guilty of some grave crime? Does some nameless immorality sit upon his head? Has he been impure, unchaste, and wicked? Had such been his offence, he might easily have escaped. He had been guilty of a serious offence. He had attacked the Church, and denounced the sinful practices of some of her priests and monks. As did Luther at a later date, he spoke boldly against the sale of indulgences, and against masses for the souls of the dead as systems of fraud and dishonesty.

And worse still, he had translated the Word of God into the English tongue, so that men and women were able to read it as well as the priests. Some consternation was caused during his trial by which came at the moment, and made London tremble. Many of the men in that assembly grew pale, but the Archbishop declared that the trial must go on, and said that this earthquake was to purge away the evils which such men as Wycliffe brought upon the land.

The result of the trial was that, after some three days, the teaching of Wycliffe was condemned, and he was excommunicated. He returned to his home and his church at Lutterworth, and there amid his books and poor parishioners he continued his labours for a short time.

It was only for a short time. On the last Sunday of 1384 he was administering the Lord's Supper in his church. In that awful moment he fell to the floor, was seized with a fit of palsy and never recovered, lingering only to the last day of the year, when his soul passed on to that land where all is peace and love. But what a priceless legacy he left behind him!

Mrs. Talbot's First Patient.

IT was a singular fancy, but a very fortunate one. Mrs. Talbot was eccentric enough to think that there was more real satisfaction to be extracted from money spent for the happiness of others, than from its outlay in expensive personal adornment. So when her husband proposed buying her a set of emeralds, she coaxed him to let her have the costly price instead. With it, and some other smaller sums similarly and unselfishly saved, she indulged herself in a long-cherished project, and was a very happy and exultant woman.

"You see, Tom," she said, when her husband grumbled a little, "it is such a delightful little place in the very heart of the country. There are two or three extra rooms which we can have fitted up for ourselves, and whenever you want a few days' fishing and I an entire rest, we can go there, and it will be quite Arcadian."

And so for the sake of this miniature Arcadia, so cunningly and skilfully drawn, Tom was induced to accept the whole scheme, which included a small hospital for sick children from London slums, with matron, nurse, and hitherto undreamed-of comforts for the little waifs. It was now no longer torture to Mrs. Talbot to go on her rounds of visiting, for she could open out avenues of untold delight to some of the poor little sufferers whom hitherto she had been so helpless to relieve. Many of them had listened, as to a fairy tale, when their healthier little neighbours came back again with wonderful stories of a day in the country, but to them it had seemed that their poor diseased lives must always be encompassed by the dreary sights and

SOUNDS AND ODOURS OF A LONDON COURT.

Now she could transport the very worst and most hopeless cases to her Arcadia, and watch the pinched faces brighten, and the shrunken limbs quiver with delight, when they first breathed real country air, and could watch living flowers grow, and hear uncaged birds sing, and be laid in clean little beds in a room whose simple homely comfort was untold luxury in their eyes.

One of the first subjects of this bewitching change was Mary Keenan, daughter of a besotted mother, who traded on her child's diseased condition, and made great gain amongst the charitable public by a well-timed display of the sores which were gradually draining away strength and life from the underfed frame. It was a matter of extreme difficulty to get freedom for so profitable a captive. "Moll" Keenan did not want her child to be better for obvious reasons, and it was only by skilful tactics, a little bribery, and an appeal to a spark of motherly feeling that gin had not yet extinguished, that the brave woman gained her end, and succeeded in obtaining permission, duly signed and attested, to keep the little girl for six months.

Mary's was one of those rare natures that nothing seems to sour or spoil. She had never ceased to love even her cruel mercenary mother, had never murmured at her sordid lot, and now her delight in the kindness and sweet wholesomeness of the Home at Farcham amounted to rapture, tempered with awe as at something too transcendental to last.

"I didn't think nothink could ever be so foine as this," she said in her weak, shrill voice, when Mrs. Talbot came from town and sat by her little cot, and the lady saw in the shining eyes and rapt expression something that compensated her for emeralds even had she ever regretted them. Into the eight years of Mary's life no teaching about God had ever come, the Name itself being only associated in her ear with words of violence and hate. But such children are ready subjects of the Kingdom, and she surprised all her new friends by the eager intelligence with which she listened and learned about the Saviour-Friend of little children. "The lydy says He's a-gettin' a mansun ready for me up in the sky somewheres, as nice as this 'ere room, she says, but I spose not quite. But isn't it awful kind of Him, nurse? and then I needn't never go back to Brook's Court."

The doctor was very pitiful when he examined the deep-seated ulcers, and told Mrs. Talbot that the case had gone altogether beyond human cure; but to Mary the care and gentle treatment far outweighed the increasing pain and weakness, and when other wee patients came into the ward she radiated brightness and pleasure on them all. Sometimes she was lifted into a lounge-chair near the window, or even wheeled outside into the fairyland of trees and flowers, and then her quaint sayings and overflowing gratitude were an education for her rougher companions. There was a wonderful native refinement and courtesy about her that made her appreciative of the most ordinary care, and the attendants could not help loving the little girl whose dark eyes always met theirs with such winsome gratitude. Her large heart in turn enclosed them all, but in the very centre of her being was enshrined the "beautiful lydy," and with a yet deeper sacredness of feeling the Saviour, who has always had such a magnetic power over "little children"; and often, when they thought she was sleeping, a murmur of glad words would be heard about "the mansun Lord Jesus was a-preparin'."

Moll Keenan never came to see her, so she was left in peace, but Mrs. Talbot's heart was often filled with foreboding as the months sped on towards the appointed limit, and she heard from the neighbours, when visiting Brook's Court, that Moll was bent on having her child back again, though she would so gladly have kept her. "I can only pray that she may be soon taken to the 'mansion' she talks so much about," she said to her husband, whose mutinous feelings towards his wife's "fad" were considerably modified, though, with true masculine dignity, he kept up a protest, through which the 'cute little woman saw with clearest vision.

They had been away for a Continental holiday, and immediately after their return Mrs. Talbot drove down to Farcham eager to know if Mary, of whose rapidly failing strength she had heard in letters, was still living. The matron had sad news to tell her of a visit from "Moll," who had kept careful record of the time, and had appeared on the scene to give notice of claiming her child on the following Thursday, upon which day the six months' agreement ended. "And did she see Mary?" Mrs. Talbot asked. "Only for a minute or two. I think she was a little softened when she saw her looking so sweet and spirit-like, but she kept to her word about taking her away, and Mary only smiled at her and said, 'But p'raps Jesus will come for me first, Mammy; I think He'll have

NEARLY FINISHED MY MANSUN.'"

Mrs. Talbot went into the ward, and there was a world of welcome in the little girl's face, but she was very weak, and could only murmur, "It ain't quite ready yet, lydy"; and then she was quite content to lie and watch the face which to her was as the face of an angel, and to listen to low sweet words about her "mansun," and the Saviour who was preparing it.

Wednesday came, and, almost to the disappointment of the friends who with such keen interest were watching the race between life and time, Mary seemed much brighter and stronger; and their hearts sank as they thought of the dreaded arrival on the morrow, and of the possibility of their little charge being snatched from them by a hand more cruel than the hand of death. But Mary had no fears; she lay smiling with a sweet content at her own thoughts, and when tea-time came she was able to be propped up in bed, and, surrounded by her little companions, it was made quite a festive occasion. And then her eyes rested on each one in turn, and lovingly and admiringly on each familiar object in the room, which for six months had been to her as the vestibule of heaven. Suddenly a quick flash of joyous surprise lighted up her face, and in eager tones, that faded as she spoke, the words came, "My mansun is ready! I'm going. Good-bye." Jesus had come to receive her unto Himself.

Letter from Oxford.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

THE Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Rev. F. Chavasse, is preaching a special course of sermons at St. Peter-le-Bailey during August. As so many pastors are absent from their churches during this month the effort is appreciated all the more. The large congregations and the growing interest indicate the profit and the pleasure Mr. Chavasse is giving not only to his own parishioners, but to many others, some of whom come from long distances. It is well that the central Evangelical church of the city should make special efforts during one of the quietest months of the year.

Oxford seems to be a busy centre for the work of the Girls' Friendly Society. It is only a few weeks since the annual meeting was held, and on Thursday there was a large and important gathering at Iffley. Mrs. T. H. Green gave a most helpful address on "Thrift." She remarked that thriftiness and saving are not attractive, and that enthusiasm goes with generosity and open-handedness. Yet often such open-handedness is only a form of selfishness, and leads to dependence on others. Provision for ourselves and others is a duty, and not selfishness. The importance of laying by small sums was urged, and "total abstinence" advocated as one of the best means of saving.

The Bishop of Colombo pleaded the cause of his diocese last Sunday at St. Philip and St. James. It is well that we should be reminded of the needs of the heathen millions at a time when unnecessary sums are often spent on recreation and holidays.

The Extension Students still continue to arrive, and the favourable weather has enabled them to carry out the more active features of their programme, as well as those items of a studious nature which demand a more or less close attention at the examination schools. It is pleasant to welcome so many strangers at a time when there is a certain lull in the life of the city. Their presence, too, is noted in the congregations on Sunday.

At the anniversary services of the Primitive Methodist Sunday-school in Pembroke-street much encouraging information was given regarding the work among the young. There was very much to stimulate and encourage in the reports of the various work. A growing church must have its nursery, and the friends in Pembroke-street appear to have a number of very devoted nurses co-operating with their pastor in the training of the young.

The Mormons are said to have sent nearly a hundred men among the poor whites who are struggling for a living among the mountains of North Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama. They carefully conceal the blasphemies they hold regarding the persons of the Trinity and their other monstrous and debasing doctrines. They urge upon the people their selling of all they have, and proceeding to the promised land of Utah.

Paul in Corinth.

1 Cor. ii. 3.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

(Concluded from last week.)

III. The Character of his Converts. Corinth has been compared to Paris for its vice; to Newmarket for the preponderance of the sporting interest; to Chicago for the mixture of its population; to Vanity Fair for its frivolity and lightness. Thither gathered the scum of the world. Soldiers and sailors, slaves and prostitutes, jockeys and chariot drivers, athletes and wrestlers; Romans with their imperial bearing; Greeks with their regular features; Jews with their unmistakable badge; Scythians from the shores of the Black Sea; men of Mesopotamia, Pontus, Egypt, and Asia Minor. All bent on business or amusement, and daubed to a greater or less extent with the exceeding evil of this grossly impure city. The Temple of Venus, with its thousand priestesses, legalised vice; the Isthmian Games, held once in three years, established betting and gambling; the motley character of the population encouraged a wild admixture of thought and opinion, for which there was no recognised standard or court of appeal.

To such a city Paul opened his message, encouraged by the assurance of the Lord that He had much people there. How often to his tried and persecuted servants does the Master come as He came to the Apostle! They may be conscious of weakness and much fear, may speak his word in trembling, may be derided as a spectacle and laughing-stock, may be encompassed with toil and pain and persecution; but He stands beside in a vision, and says: "Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace, for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee. They may gather themselves against thee, but not by Me. Whosoever shall gather against thee shall fall for thy sake. No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise in judgment against thee thou shalt condemn."

With this encouragement in his heart, Paul laboured for a year and six months in this gay and sinful city with marvellous success. It is true that not many of the wise, or mighty, or noble of this world, were among the chosen ones; they who were accounted as weak, and base, and contemptible by the high-bred leaders of Corinthian society were selected as the foundation-stones of the newly gathered church. There might be a Crispus and Gaius, a Stephanas and his household, all of whom, contrary to his usual practice, the Apostle baptized before Timothy and Silas arrived; but these were exceptions to the general rule. Perhaps women preponderated in the young community, as the Apostle devotes so much space in his Epistle to regulating their behaviour. We know, at least, of Phœbe, the deaconess of the church at Cenchrea, who bore his epistle to Rome; and of Chloe, whose household slaves were the medium of intelligence when Paul was at Ephesus.

The majority of his converts, however, were of the lowest caste, and of those who had been deeply stained with the vices that made Corinth notorious. The city was the resort of fornicators, idolaters, adulterers, effeminates, thieves, covetous, drunkards, revilers, and extortioners, and such had they been; but under the preaching of the Cross, in the power of the Holy Ghost, had passed over them—they had become washed, sanctified, and justified, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and in the Spirit of our God. Jesus had become their wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. Delivered from the power of darkness, they had become children of the light and of the day, heirs of God, and joint heirs with the Son of his love.

A marvellous change

What a contrast between that little church and the great heathen world out of which it had been chosen! We may imagine one of its meetings towards the close of the Apostle's visit. It is a Sabbath evening. Outside, the streets are full of pleasure-seekers and revellers. Groups of idlers are discussing the last chariot race, or staking their money on an approaching boxing-match. The varied costumes, vivid gestures, handsome equipages, the mimes and plays, the processions and shows, compose a never palling picture of movement and colour. But within the little meeting-place all are hushed and still. Paul is speaking of things which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor the heart of man conceived; or the men in turn are contributing to the edification of the rest, with a psalm, or a teaching, or a revelation, or the interpretation of an unknown tongue; while the women, modestly veiled, listen in silence. Now the love-feast is being partaken of, each bringing some contribution of victuals to the common store; and presently the Lord's Supper will conclude the evening engagements, partaken of according to the method delivered to the Apostle by the Lord Jesus Himself (1 Cor. x. and xi.).

This was a marvellous sequel to his timid and unadorned entrance among them. But it is evident that the Apostle was far from satisfied. He complained that he could not speak unto them as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, as unto babes in Christ; that he was obliged to feed them with milk, and not with meat. He, doubtless, detected the first working of that unhallowed leaven which was afterwards to break out in such fearful ferment. Even before he left there were probably manifestations of party spirit, of the appraising of gift above grace, of the mistaking licence for liberty, of the undue prominence of women in public assemblies, of greed in the love-feasts, confusion in the ministrations, and heresy in the doctrine of the resurrection. It must have been, therefore, with no small misgiving that he tore himself away at the close of his protracted sojourn, leaving the infant community to the tendance of God with much of the same solicitude with which Jochebed launched the cradle ark on the tawny waters of the Nile.

Many reasons, however, prompted his departure from Corinth, and amongst them the desire to proceed to Jerusalem to ascertain the feeling of the mother Church. Still further to conciliate the conservative element there, he had bound himself in the vow of a Nazarite, and was anxious to perform the concluding ceremonial within the Temple. He was obliged to have his head shorn at Cenchrea, because the month had expired, but he carried the hair with him to be burnt on the great altar within the Temple court. Aquila and Priscilla probably thought that Ephesus would be a better mart for their wares than Corinth, so they sailed with him. And thus the first memorable missionary tour in Greece came to an end, and for the fourth time since his conversion the Apostle approached the city which was doubly dear to him—memories of his Lord being now entwined with the sacred associations of David, Solomon, Hezekiah, and Ezra.

A French Village.

Directly to the north of Havre stands the large and populous village of Sauvie. Before the terrible persecutions under Louis XIV. the place was one of the strongholds of Protestantism, but persecution has so completely done its work that the village has been for years and years abandoned to the mercy of Roman Catholicism.

A small mission-room, capable of seating about eighty persons, has been opened there, and we hope under God's blessing many real and lasting conversions will result from the three meetings we propose holding there every week. We need a harmonium to lead the singing. We have also to raise £14 per annum for the rent of the mission-room. If any friend of evangelistic work in France is disposed to help in this new and hopeful work, we will send further and interesting details.

A Naval Hero.

"Young man, may I speak to you?" The speaker was a helper in the "Welcome" Mission, Portsmouth, and was on her usual errand of mercy to the sick and dying in Haslar Hospital.

The attendant turned, and saw a kindly mother-face, and eyes beaming with solicitude beneath a crown of snowy hair.

"Will you accept this?" It was a pocket Testament, which he took with thanks.

"Have you given your heart to Jesus?"

"No," was the grave reply.

The heart of the faithful worker yearned over this son of some fond mother, and she pleaded tenderly with him, feeling that the Holy Spirit of God was very specially with her in power.

"I pleaded as I had never pleaded with a soul before," she said, as we spoke of him together; "and he listened attentively."

"I will pray for you," she said. "I will put your name in my 'One by One' book, and ask God to save you and use you to win souls to Him."

She pointed out to him what great opportunities he would have to glorify God among the sick, if only he were Christ's.

He thanked her for her words, and said: "I will go down on my knees, and ask God to teach me how to read his Word, and to help me to understand it."

Then they parted—she to plead with God on his behalf, he to seek Jesus and to find Him.

A few days later she went to Haslar. Familiar faces passed her. Familiar voices greeted her. But where was he?

"Died this morning," someone said.

"He came into this ward one day," said one invalid, "and asked me if I had given my heart to Jesus. I told him, 'Yes; three years ago or more.'

"He said he was so glad to meet someone who loved Jesus, for it made him so happy to talk about Him, as he had only just given his heart into his keeping."

Then followed the good news that he had taken the name of Jesus to other sufferers as his Saviour and theirs.

Immediately after his conversion he had asked to change to the fever ward, where he was speedily stricken for death, and his loss had cast a deep gloom over all the hospital, "for," said one sick man, "everyone loved him."

And she who had led him to seek Jesus, and had interceded upon his behalf, listened with full heart and overflowing eyes, and thanked God who had honoured her prayers and glorified his own name.

O mighty power of prayer, which "moves the muscles of Omnipotence"! Vera.

By the Sea.

By Mrs. Merrill Gates.

A Sabbath by the sea,
There by Galilee,
In the old days, upon its shining beach,
Such waters blue were there,
Such crystal, sparkling air,
And there I might have heard the Master teach.

How sweet his words would fall,
Here by this old sea wall,
'Mid ancient rocks, and firs, and spruces hoar,
Sea-grass and mosses green!
As then, calm and serene,
His voice would sound on this far northern shore.

Surely the Christ is here,
Speaking in accents clear!
His flowing robe, his sandalled feet are yet,
As once, by Galilee,
By this lone voiceful sea,
Here teacheth He as by Gennesareth.

Surely I saw Him pass
Across the bending grass!
His blessing, like the sea air, breathes around.
His is this tide of light,—
His crystal ether bright,
His voice still speaks as flowing waters sound.

And what if by the sea,
The Kingdom's mystery,
As in those far-off days, should be made plain!
What joy if here the Lord
Should speak the living Word,
And break the living bread to men again!

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, August 29.

"And I will give them an heart to know Me, that I am the Lord; and they shall be my people, and I will be their God, for they shall return unto Me with their whole heart."—Jer. xxiv. 7.

WE know God with our heart, the seat of our moral life, and specially of our affections. As the Apostle puts it, it is needful that the eyes of our heart should be opened that we should know. He that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is love. He that loveth knoweth God, and is known of Him. If there is anything unloving in your nature, it will blur your knowledge of God, as condensed breath on a window-pane will shut out the fairest landscape.

But the heart which knows God is his dear gift. Be willing to have it; ask for it, and it shall be yours.

The special aspect in which we are led to know God is as Jehovah—that He is the I AM, the unchanging, ever-loving one; the God who comes down to deliver and save. This is the aspect that we need most. When overcome with failure and sin, when thoroughly discouraged with abortive efforts, when overtaken by some sudden gust of temptation, we need to know that our sin cannot surprise God, or staunch his love, or wear out his patience. We need to rest upon the revelation of his unaltering tenderness even to sinners; we need to know that He is willing to receive us graciously and be our God and take us for his own. This brings the wanderer back from the ends of the earth with his whole heart and soul. If God has given you a heart to know Him, be sure and give the whole of it back to Him.

MONDAY, August 30.

"Lo, I begin to work evil at the city which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished?"—Jer. xxv. 29 (R.V.).

This is a terrible chapter, in which the disasters that were to befall all the surrounding nations are described as a potion presented to each for drinking. If any refuse, the answer is to be given in the words before us, which suggest those of Peter: "The time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God, and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the Gospel of God?" (1 Peter iv. 17).

God always begins with his own people, because their sins traduce his character and bring it into contempt, and because sinners might otherwise establish a just charge of favouritism against Him. Besides, He loves them so dearly that He is eager to see them rid, as soon as may be, from the blight and parasitism of evil. It is a terrible thing to be an inconsistent child of God; for just in proportion to his love for you will God put forth the most strenuous and unremitting efforts to bring you back to Himself.

But if the righteous be scarcely saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? Even though Babylon had done God service, as the instrument of his chastisement to his own people; yet, because in performing thus she had grossly sinned, she must drink the cup of his wrath. Oh disobedient and ungodly soul, thou mayest serve God's purpose, yet He will not let thee be unpunished. Your condemnation now for a long time lingereth not.

TUESDAY, August 31.

"Then spake Jeremiah unto all the princes and to all the people, saying, The Lord sent me to prophesy... Therefore now amend your ways and your doings."—Jer. xxvi. 12, 13.

Naturally, Jeremiah was constituted with a very nervous and sensitive disposition. He compares himself to a child that cannot speak; he laments that he had been born into such troublous times. But at the moment of his call it was distinctly promised that he should be made from that day "a defenced city, an iron pillar, and brazen walls... against the kings, princes, priests, and people of the land." Though they should fight against him, they should not prevail (Jer. i. 18, 19).

What an admirable comment on that promise is presented by this chapter. Here is this timid man standing alone for God against this surging multitude, in which priest and people are merged. Though his life is in the balance, and it might seem necessary to purchase it by absolute silence, he refuses to hold his peace; he insists that God has sent him, and calls on the maddened crowd to amend their ways and return unto Jehovah. Had John the Baptist spoken thus, or John Knox, we had not been surprised. But for this sensitive, retiring man to speak thus is due to the transforming power of the grace of God.

There is hope here for those who are naturally reticent and backward, reserved and timid. Take your nature to God, and ask him to encrust it with iron and brass. Above all, seek a vivid realisation that God is with you. Then open your mouth and speak. Greater is He that is in and with you, than he that is in the world.

WEDNESDAY, September 1.

"The nation...which will not serve the king of Babylon, and that will not put their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, that nation will I punish, saith the Lord."—Jer. xxvii. 8.

It may be that, like the people of Israel, you have grossly sinned and violated the bonds of holy fellowship and relationship with God. The result of this not improbably has been some form of chastisement and disaster, which lies heavily on your life. This is what the invasion of the king of Babylon was to Israel and the surrounding nations. Now learn from these striking words that your best attitude is one of humble and reverent submission. Put your neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon. When Samuel told Eli the inevitable results of his negligence to correct and restrain his son, the old man said, "It is the Lord, let Him do what seemeth Him good." Through the infliction of his troubles he discerned the right-ordering and permissive providence of God.

So let it be with you. Accept the deserved chastisement. Humble yourself under the mighty hand of God. Look beyond the pride and cruelty of man to the permissive providence of your heavenly Father. Set yourself to learn and take well to heart the lessons of the present discipline. It is for a limited period. Do you feel that men meanwhile are going beyond their rights? Avenge not yourself; give place before their wrath; leave the matter with God; vengeance is his, He will recompense.

THURSDAY, September 2.

"Amen: the Lord do so: the Lord perform thy words ...Nevertheless."—Jer. xxviii. 6, 7.

The prophecy of Hananiah of the speedy return of the exiles and the break-up of the power of the King of Babylon was evidently dictated by a desire to win popularity with the people. He spoke in the name of Jehovah, and may even have supposed that his message was divinely given, but his soul was filled with human voices and reasonings, which made him unable to distinguish the still small voice of inspiration. Jeremiah was quite as anxious as he was that his country should be spared further suffering. He uttered a fervent Amen to Hananiah's predictions. Nothing could have given him deeper pleasure than their realisation; but standing as he did in the counsels of God, he knew it could not be.

So is it still. Men who follow simply their own thoughts, or are deeply dyed with the spirit of society around, are apt to prophesy smooth things to such as live selfish and worldly lives. "There is no such place as the outer darkness, no such experience as the second death." So they speak. But we know it cannot be. Earnestly as we might wish for it, and say Amen, we know that it cannot be immaterial how men live, and that wickedness is destined to bring infinite anguish and pain. Ah, how terrible will their position be at last, who cried Peace, Peace, when there was none, and encouraged rebellion against the Lord. Let them be warned by the fate of this false prophet!

FRIDAY, September 3.

"Seek the peace of the city, whither I have caused you to be carried away captives; and pray unto the Lord for it."—Jer. xxix. 7.

For seventy years the captives must make themselves at home and happy in Babylon. It was of no use to scheme and plot a speedier return: They must work out the predicted seventy years, and in the meanwhile let them seek the peace of the great heathen city to which they had been borne, and pray, not only for Jerusalem, but for it.

How many who read these lines are captives in positions against their will and choice. Servants and governesses in worldly homes; apprentices and clerks amid uncongenial associates; travellers in distant towns, and commercial hotels; people in all kinds of positions in which they would not choose to be.

The natural tendency of all such is to fret, and begin endeavouring to secure their emancipation and removal. "Let me get away from this as soon as possible." Or, at least, if unable to get free, they take as little interest as possible in their immediate associates, making themselves cold, and stiff, and inaccessible. This is not God's way. Wherever you find yourself, seek the peace and comfort of those about you. Jesus bade us salute those who do not salute us. Lift your voice in intercessory prayer for your oppressors and persecutors. As you go your way, when God shall open the door, leave behind the bright and genial impression of a holy, loving personality, so that men may miss you, and feel that they are better because you have come across their path.

Saturday, September 4.

"I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have scattered thee, but I will not make a full end of thee; but I will correct thee with judgment, and will in no wise leave thee unpunished."—Jer. xxx. 11 (R.V.).

There is a great difference between the punishment of the ungodly and the chastisement of God's children. In the former case there is destruction. The sirocco passes over the grass, and there is nought left but burnt and withered stubble. In the latter case there will be restoration and an aftermath.

Are you just now passing through a season of chastisement and pain? Take to heart these tender words: God will not make a full end of you. It may seem as though nothing will be left; the furnace is so hot, the stock is cut down so near to the ground. But God knows just how much you can bear, and will stay his hand.

Chastening also anticipates a blessed restoration. This chapter has many tender gleams of hope in it. "I will restore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds, saith the Lord." "I will turn again the captivity of Jacob's tents, and have compassion on his dwelling places." Look on, poor suffering one. Beyond the dark clouds light is shining on the hills. When the discipline is over the Lord will take you to his care, and wash your stripes, pouring in oil and wine, restoring comforts to you and to your mourners, and satisfying your soul with favour and joy. Read the closing verses of this chapter, and find in them suggestions of the harvests of joy that these sad days of sowing will yield.

F. B. M.

Soldiers' Home, Gosport.

The work of the Home in Avenue-road has been carried on by the Misses Ridout since 1888 with evident tokens of much blessing upon efforts to win soldier lads for Christ. We regret to find that 1896 closed with a considerable financial deficit to hamper operations. The Home is conveniently situated for barracks, forts, Browndown musketry camp, and the harbour, and is open daily to all soldiers, sailors, and marines, who are disposed to avail themselves of its advantages. On the premises, which have been twice enlarged, are coffee-room, temperance bar, comfortable rooms for reading, writing, and games, a large room for Bible-classes and Gospel meetings, a small prayer-room, bedrooms, baths, and a good lending library.

In addition to what is done in the Home itself, barracks, hospitals, and ships are visited regularly and papers distributed among the men. Interesting testimony concerning consistent Christian lives have been received with respect to men who once enjoyed the benefits of the Home.

Doncaster Races.—The secretary of the Open-air Mission intimates that a large staff of evangelists from that Society expect to labour at these races from Tuesday to Friday, September 7 to 10. They will be most thankful for the sympathy and prayers of the Lord's people, and any whole-hearted workers who can join them will be welcome at the Y.M.C.A. rooms, St. Sepulchre Gate, either morning at 10 a.m.

"This Gum Sticks."

From an excellent account in last week's Baptist of a students' reception by Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon at her residence, Westwood, Beulah Hill, Upper Norwood, we take the following notes of an address by Pastor Thomas Spurgeon:—

THE quietly humorous talk was based upon a "text" which, he said, he had taken from his study gum-pot—"This gum sticks." He said to himself at once that there should be no need to trumpet such a fact, and he recognised a tacit admission in it that all gum does not stick. Some Christians had but a name to live, and some students did everything but study. Good gum performed well its one duty. If we are students, let us study; if preachers, let us preach; if Christians, let us live up to our profession in our homes, classes, and churches. His father's sermons, preached years ago up and down the country, were well remembered by people who heard them, and these people need not be credited with remarkable memories, for he had the power of putting a lot of sticking stuff into his discourses. If as preachers they stuck to the truth, the truth would stick to them. The secret of his dear father's power lay in the fact that he stuck to the Word and to the Cross.

The other day he had read of a good man who wrote, saying he had acquired rights in the chapel burial ground, and he and his wife hoped to be buried there "if God spared their lives." The moral of that story was clear. Some students and preachers seemed intent on being buried in the chapel or church yard if God spared them, though what good they would ever be to church or chapel it was difficult to see. If they professed to be workers, let them be as busy bees in the hive. The gum was only made to stick. "This one thing I do." As students let them take the hint, so that their gathered knowledge might in due time tell effectually upon their preaching. A certain American orator had said that "the British lion, whether he was roaming in the deserts of India or climbing the forests of Canada, would not pull in his horns or retire into his shell." It was only an American who would blame the British lion for not doing that, for it was not in the nature of the lion so to do. And he begged to say it was not according to his or their second nature to lose any opportunity or miss any advantage in regard to their work.

He was not a great believer in boy preachers, though he once heard a "buoy" preach a sermon he should never forget. The buoy was situate in an intricate channel, up which the steamer in which he was sailing was making its passage. Anchored to a sand bank, the buoy was swinging to and fro. There was no bell upon it, though perhaps it was lighted at eventide; but just then, simply a buoy, it was sticking to its post, and performing the task of warning off the rock ships that otherwise might have come to grief. Just now they, as students, were anchored to their classes; let them labour with all zest and zeal, for the more they adhered to their studies the more they would like them, and make progress in them. He remembered an old proverb: "Good wine needs no bush"; and so, good gum needed no push. He looked suspiciously on people making big pretensions. He had been glad to find a modest tone prevailing with the new students, and he wished for them a successful, gracious, and glorious career. But let them not profess too much, then it would be easier to be what they did profess. Let them stick close to Jesus, who would ever stick close to them. Might He, as their Elder Brother, be the companion of all their days, and He would befriend them to the end.

Beyrout Moslem Schools.—Miss Jessie Taylor, of the Beyrout schools for Moslem, Druse, and Jewish girls, completed her seventieth year on July 29th. The occasion was made one of thanksgiving for the goodness of God in so long sparing her for service there—just upon thirty years. To enable her to get about with more facility, her friends had purchased for her a handsome mare, which together with a purse of £70 was then presented to her. Among other appreciative testimonies was one from Dr. Post, of the American College, Beyrout, who spoke of the results of her work which he met with in his contact with the husbands of those who had been influenced thereby. The schools will reopen in October, and it is hoped that ample means will be provided for carrying them on. Mr. Wm. Ferguson, Kinmundy, Mintlaw, N.B., will gladly send reports to any friends who may apply.

Mr. James Stokes,

OF NEW YORK.

FOLLOWING the good example of its esteemed founder, many active and successful business men in different parts of the world, have thrown themselves heart and soul into the work of the Young Men's Christian Association. Those who occupy places of influence and observation in the commercial world, are better qualified, perhaps, than any others to see and to appreciate the priceless service that such an Association renders to the youth of our time. Among these practical friends of Association work the name of Mr. James Stokes, of New York, takes high rank. Both by lavish gifts and by personal effort he has furthered the best interests of young men in a way that calls for grateful recognition. Scarcely less has been the sympathetic help he has given to the sister institution, the Y.W.C.A.

Mr. Stokes comes of a goodly stock. On the maternal side, his grandfather was Anson G. Phelps, founder of the great commercial houses of Phelps, Dodge, and Co., New York, and Phelps, James, and Co., of London. These houses have been noted for their sympathy with all good and Christian work. Mr. Phelps was one of the leaders in the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, the American Bible Society, and other organisations. Mr. James Stokes' paternal grandfather was one of the founders of the London Missionary Society, and a worker with Robert Raikes. Mr. Stokes thus had the best hereditary surroundings, which were fully fostered by a godly father and a sainted mother.

Going himself through various grades of experience in church, Sunday-school, and mission work, he entered an enlarged sphere of usefulness in connection with the Y.M.C.A. Beginning as a boy in the New York Association, which was being reorganised in the years after the great civil war, he took an active share in its work. He was in due time appointed a member of the International Committee, and later the American member of the World's Committee, located at Geneva.

Mr. Stokes has been chiefly known as an organiser. As such he took a leading part in beginning the work among the railroad men in New York, also among the German young men, and later among the French-speaking young men of the same city. This last was in connection with a special call which he felt came to him to labour among the Latin races in Europe and America. As to this part of his life-work a well-informed friend writes :—

Mr. Stokes' interest in the work of the Y.M.C.A. has been manifested in an exceptional manner by his active co-operation in the development of the French Associations, and particularly in that of Paris. On several occasions, now many years ago, Mr. Stokes sent his representative, Mr. Cree, to study the means for the organisation of the Paris work on a larger scale. Its removal into more spacious premises was made possible by him, and the sympathies of the French Protestants enlisted and increased, especially that of Mr. Alfred André, who up to the time of his sudden decease was the firm friend of the Paris Association.

The Christian generosity of Mr. Stokes showed itself gr ndly when the erection of a large and handsome building at 14, Rue de Trevise, now exclusively devoted to the work, was resolved upon. He made a regal contribution to the cost, and his example led the French Protestants to contribute largely to the building fund. The French Government, wishing to acknowledge the great services rendered to the country by Mr. Stokes, made him knight of the Legion of Honour. He also by large annual donations contributed to the current expenses of the organisation.

Mr. Stokes did not confine himself to Paris. By his initiative, and with his open-handed co-operation, the Lyons Association was much enlarged. It is no exaggeration to say that Mr. Stokes may be counted as one of the most faithful and devoted friends of our French Associations. Not satisfied with financial contributions, he gives to the work his personal thought and effort, the benefit of his practical experience and advice, and carefully follows its results and progress.

Mr. Stokes has also purchased for the Young Men's Christian Association of Rome a building well situated at 64, Via Consulta.

Two years ago Mr. Stokes' home life was broken up by the death of his only child, followed a few months later by the death of his wife. He felt called to throw himself entirely into useful Christian work, and thus he entered on a wider sphere of action even than before. He has recently made a tour of the world, partly for recreation, but visiting Young Men and Young Women's Christian Associations in Japan, China, India, and Ceylon. He was a delegate from the American International Committee, the World's Committee for Young Men, and the World's Committee for Young Women, whose headquarters are in London, as well also from the American Young Women's Associations.

He is now visiting amongst the various Young Men's Christian Associations of Great Britain, having recently opened the new Dublin building; and is also attending various Christian and students' conferences. From Great Britain he is invited to Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and other parts of Europe; after returning to London his special work will be a tour amongst the Associations of France, and a revisit to the Rome Association, thence on to Africa and Syria.

Mr. Stokes was in business in America for some years, but has retired early in life. He retains a connection with various financial and commercial corporations, but gives a large share of his time to direct Christian work. He is a graduate of New York University. He is a member of the New York Bar, as also of the Historical, Geographical, and other societies.

London Missionary Society.

THE one-hundred-and-second report of this Society has been issued, and is worthy of close attention as a candid record of Christian evangelisation in many lands and in various forms. The Missions of the Society are found in Polynesia, South and Central Africa, India, North and South, China, New Guinea, and Madagascar. In the last it has met with remarkable success, having there, according to the report for 1895, 288,800 adherents, and 5,917 native preachers. Adverse influences arising out of French intervention have made statistical information unreliable, but the number of European missionaries is now thirty-three.

In the other wide fields occupied by the Society there are 161 male and 67 female missionaries 392 ordained and 832 unordained native preachers, 1061 male and female school-teachers, 226 Bible-women, 133,342 adherents, and 34,473 church members or communicants.

The large proportion of native agents to European missionaries is evidence of the wise policy of the Society and of its success; so is the fact that whilst its ordinary income for the year amounted to £136,200, no less than £21,000 was raised and appropriated at the mission stations.

Some of the Society's fields of labour exhibit signs of steady progress in numbers and consolidation, but these are not always the surest signs of Divine blessing. "The Kingdom of God cometh not with observation," and especially when there are vast populations, as in India and China, dominated by ancient and powerful superstitions. There may be, and indeed is, much good accomplished which cannot be tabulated, and only the experienced can understand.

The home affairs of the Society are not without their solicitudes. The income is but slowly advancing, with the result that the purpose formed three or four years ago to increase the missionary staff to three hundred has not been carried out; nor have the missions in India and China been adequately strengthened.

There is, indeed, before some, if not all, our foreign missionary societies, a time of serious stress and strain which will require great wisdom, courage, and faith in their leaders, and continued loyalty and prayerfulness on the part of their many friends.

St. John's College, Agra.

This college is connected with the Church Missionary Society, and was established in 1850 with certain aims which have been somewhat modified since then. While welcoming as before all Hindus and Mohamedans desirous of receiving a liberal education under Christian influences, the College has become recognised more especially as an institution where the education of Indian Christian youths is made a matter of primary importance.

The principal is Rev. J. P. Haythornthwaite, who has also found opportunity amid the many claims upon his time for effective administration of a famine relief fund. He refers with gratitude to fellow-Christians in England as well as in India, who have afforded the means of practically demonstrating to the famine-stricken people the great idea of Christian love. The various high schools of the C.M.S. in the North-Western province of India, Oudh, Central Provinces, and, to some extent, in Bengal, Punjaub, and Bombay, from time to time pass on their successful students to St. John's College, that they may continue their higher studies under the same religious influences to which they have been accustomed. A Students' Temperance Association is steadily flourishing, the number of members enrolled being 250; and the College Y.M.C.A. is an amalgamation of pre-existent organisations for such good works as bazaar and village preaching, Sunday-school work, and various other forms of Christian activity.

Concerning the United States.

By Mr. HENRY VARLEY.

WHEN some time ago I promised another letter the thought was not in mind that it would be fulfilled within sound of the great bell of St. Paul's. Such, however, is the fact. Certain business matters, need for rest, and preparation for a lengthened campaign in Canada and the United States have rendered this necessary. After almost incessant service in preaching and teaching Christ since I landed in San Francisco in January last, just "a wee bit" sense of weariness made a trip across the Atlantic refreshing and reviving.

What famous times for travel we are living in. On Aug. 10 I held two large meetings in Wilkes Barre, about 160 miles from New York, took passage on board the St. Louis for Southampton, and reached London at 11 a.m. on the 18th, just seven days, after paying five hours to the "forward movement" so as to keep time with Greenwich. What would our grandfathers say if they read this, and were in ignorance of the facts? "Guess" our reputation for veracity would be at a discount. But surely we have in this ability to travel a wonderful incentive to be abounding in the work of the Lord. Our American cousins say, "Be sure you're right, then go ahead." In the evangelisation of the world, and the fact that "the King's business requireth haste," and that this represents the King's will, this proverb should be ours.

You will be interested to have some news from the other side. First and foremost, Northfield has just had refreshing seasons, and our dear brother Mr. Moody has had abundant occasion to rejoice. I was not able to join them, being pledged to service in other spheres until the day we left. From some who were present, and especially from the graphic and well written reports given in the Daily Tribune of New York, I gather the facts. Next to the timely addresses of our brethren, McGregor, Pierson, Campbell Morgan, Torrey, and others, we rejoiced to note the part taken in the young men's meeting by the sons of the esteemed host of Northfield. May the enduement of the honoured and beloved father abide with them.

I had a pleasant change from the baleful influence of Mormonism and Salt Lake City on entering Minneapolis. Encouraging, indeed, was the campaign in this beautiful city, and a fairly good one in what is known as the twin city, St. Paul. In the latter place the heat was almost unbearable, and practically broke up the meetings. Nor this only. To my view these cities represent both a warning and a startling contrast. Romanism is an overshadowing power in St. Paul. It has an archbishop and a dominant ecclesiasticism which is as far removed from the great spiritual truths which make St. Paul's letters so glorious as it well can be.

St. Paul has a large population, much capital, many fine buildings, several great railway magnates; but it lacks the healthy freedom which the Word of God and real civil and religious liberty always bring. It is almost like a little piece of Spain, with priests and nuns in abundance, dropped down in Minnesota.

In striking contrast is the fair city of Minneapolis, only ten miles distant, but here you are in a new sphere. Free churches abound, and Protestant doctrine graces platform and pulpit. A sturdy, vigorous Lutheranism is another great Divine force in the vast grain, flour, and timber centre. With a population of 220,000, Minneapolis is truly "beautiful for situation"; her parks, gardens, avenues, terraces, and streets intertwine and mingle with a luxuriance of trees and foliage seldom met with. There are, it is said, 8000 lakes in the State of Minnesota, and several magnificent streets of water grace the extraordinary suburbs of this wonderful city. Its splendid houses and home life present a charming feature, and must strike every observant visitor.

The great Mississippi river pours her wondrous volume of water through the wide valley which winds around and bisects the city. On her energetic bosom huge floats of timber are borne downward from the upper waters which stretch away northward and westward for hundreds of miles. The enterprise and energy displayed are marvellous. One huge flourmill (Pilsbury's), probably the largest in the world, grinds sufficient grain to supply the whole of the cities of New York and Philadelphia. This is but one of many that are there.

Then the wonderful sawmills and timber yards. There you may stand in unabated wonder and surprise. The river runs immediately below you. From its eddying waters are being guided into an endless chain-cradle large lengths of trees. Up they come as though they were mere trifles destitute of weight. They weigh from 10 to 30 cwt. or 2 tons. The gripper handles them with astounding power and precision. Down they roll to the fixed spot where the huge saw, attached to what looks like a great railway luggage truck, works rapidly backward and forward.

In two minutes from leaving the water the planks are sawn, the tree ceases to exist, and the timber is being sorted, selected, and carried away on the ceaseless revolve of the chain rollers to all parts of the great "lumber" yard. Millions, literally, of these immense pieces of timber are dealt with from the flowing waters.

Such is the magnificent position of Minneapolis that a small part of the flow of the waters is now being diverted and builded within solid masonry, and turned aside so as to produce sufficient power for the whole of the electric lights and motor forces of the city. Built upon a series of undulating land rollers, the outlook and varieties of scenery are delightful and picturesque in the extreme.

I must not, however, unduly occupy space. The campaign in Minneapolis proved a marked success. Thousands attended the services. Many were brought to Christ, and large numbers told with joy of increased spiritual life. The Word of God has become to many a new book, "living and powerful."

In the main the work was amongst believers, which is a great need in the United States. In about a fortnight I return thither for protracted work. Church membership is one thing there, regeneration quite another. Excellent work is being done in the Lutheran, Baptist, and Presbyterian Churches in Minneapolis; while a valuable Christian mission work is carried on by Mr. W. A. Petran.

From Minneapolis I passed onward to Lake City, for a brief stay in Rest Island; thence to Bloomsberg, in Pennsylvania, where the State Conference of Y.M.C.A. was being held. It was refreshing to meet the large company of young men who had come together in the holiday season solely for the study of God's Word. Truly it was a time of power, and all were sorry when the ten days of meetings closed.

I next had a special mission in the City of Bloomsberg, from thence to Wilkes Barre and on to Pittston. In each of these centres I have seen many proofs of Divine blessing, as also of the exact adaptation of the Word of God and the Gospel of Christ to meet the deep needs which belong to all sorts and conditions of men, who, as fallen sinners, must have his salvation who said, "I am come to seek and to save them that are lost." I have visited sixteen cities in all.

In conclusion I may add that in the United States the "higher criticism" seems to be a spent force. The volumes which have represented it are lying in dishonoured heaps in the publisher's and booksellers' stores, a drug in the market.

I trust a new Berean era is at hand which a modern paraphase of a well-known passage might describe thus: "And many of them that fashioned curious notions, and presented them in cultured language and handsomely bound volumes, brought their books together and burned them before all, and they counted the price and it ran into 250,000 pieces of silver. So mightily grew the Word of God and prevailed."

It is currently reported that since an Egyptian woman dropped the Tel El Amarna Tablets on the feet of the higher critics their foundations have been sorely crushed; whilst certain others were so stricken by the Lachish Stone that "there remained no more breath in them." Indeed, it is more than probable that if the recent Egyptian and Assyrian discoveries had been made fifteen years earlier most of the exploded hypotheses of the last decade had never absorbed the printer's ink nor blinded the minds of thousands who received the cultured poison to their own undoing. The great business now is to work against the mischief wrought in the minds of many who have been led astray. The Gospel of Christ is the power of God unto this end.

Alpine Notes.

THE Riffel Alp, Sunday, Aug. 15.—About 200 people are collected in this capacious hotel, 7000 feet above sea-level and about 2000 above Zermatt, which lies immediately below us. We have had a melancholy occurrence in the death of Mr. E. F. Gedge. He came here three weeks ago in quest of rest and health, but partly from the heat, partly from continued climbing exertion, but chiefly because the condition of his heart was not suited to the rarified atmosphere, he became very ill. The local physician was convinced that to remain at this height would be certain death. To descend at once to Zermatt might save him. Last Thursday, laid on a litter, well covered up, attended by wife, daughter, and friends, and the doctor, he was carried down from the hotel. By request of his wife, a special prayer meeting had been held, when some personal and other friends earnestly committed him to the care of his heavenly Father. He bore the transit down the mountain to his bed, but suffered from great exhaustion. Next day he quietly passed away in the evening. Early this morning his body was interred in the English churchyard. He was a useful Christian, and only to-day a packet of Italian tracts reached the hotel, which he had ordered that he might distribute them among the large number of Italian workmen constructing the new mountain railway to the Gorner Grat.

Dean Lefroy preached two very appropriate sermons to-day, characterised by his accustomed eloquence, fervour, and evangelical usefulness. The little church was crowded. The prayers were simply and devotionally read; while the singing of favourite hymns was very hearty.

A few days ago the Dean went to the Rhone Glacier to open the new English church erected there under his auspices. The Dean holds a short service here every morning at 8 o'clock, in the place of "family worship," and after breakfast often delights a number of friends by conducting them on some excursion over the glaciers, he being a skilful ice-man, and a careful while brave climber. His genial bearing towards all the company, and these athletic feats, give additional interest and power to his earnest ministry. Newman Hall.

Thousand Island Park, on the river St. Lawrence, which was established a score of years ago by the Methodists, has become cosmopolitan with its homes for five thousand or more people. A tabernacle meets the needs of the Sunday audiences and the occasional lectures and entertainments, but there is no continuous and elaborate assembly, although there may be schools of oratory or pedagogy from year to year. The park is kept religiously—no bars, pool rooms, Sunday boats, and an unwritten law calling for early quiet o' nights. Along the river at commanding points large communities have gathered and taken to themselves suggestive names. The Baptists, Universalists, and Presbyterians have colonies.

Restored to the Rock.

PASSING along a hot, dusty road, a little distance from the sea, I noticed in a corner some limpets.

"This is not the place for you," I said; "you ought to be down in the cool sea, clinging to the rocks."

But they had been roughly torn and borne from their happy resting-place, and must perish if they remained in that far-off position.

Picking up a couple, I looked to see if there was any hope of restoration. There was hardly any response to my touch, yet I thought I would try what a sea bath would do.

As I carried them along I thought of boys and girls who ought to be clinging to the Rock of Ages; but sin has taken them away and cast them beside the highway of life, where they must perish if Jesus does not save.

One good thing, my limpets did not cling to the dusty road; they seemed to know it was not the proper place for them. Alas, we cleave to sin.

"Could they not get back to the sea themselves?" do you ask. No, they were without legs. Nor do boys and girls get back to God without aid, Divine aid. What I did for the lost limpets Jesus does for us.

I first bathed them, cleansing them from dust and dirt. Then I let them rest in a little rock-pool. As I took them out, I felt they were beginning to cling—yes, life was reviving. Putting them in again, I soon found my efforts to save them had not been in vain.

Jesus thus "raiseth up the poor out of the dust" (Psa. cxiii. 7); "Cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John i. 7); and as He gives us life by baptizing us in the sea of his love, we begin to cling to the Rock, and are able to say, "He restoreth my soul" (Psa. xxiii. 3).

Don't you think those two restored limpets would cling to the rock more firmly than ever? I expect they would.

And don't you think they were much happier when restored than when dying upon the dry, dusty road? They saw life, you think. Yes, but seeing life meant death. Their true life was where the sea-waves splashed and dashed. We are never truly happy away from God. In Him is life.

Day by day as I passed along that road, I saw the ruin of the limpets which were not restored. Upside down in the world, they were kicked about, run over, and perished. Only two were saved; the rest were destroyed. How few boys and girls are saved! How many we see ruined in the world's highway! Yet, "it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish" (Matt. xviii. 14).

For God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life," (John iii. 16).

Now let us sit under these rocks by the sea, and sing about our Rock. Who will start the tune?

The Lord's our Rock, in Him we hide:
A shelter in the time of storm!
Secure whatever ill betide:
A shelter in the time of storm!

Oh, Jesus is a Rock in a weary land!
A weary land, a weary land;
Oh, Jesus is a Rock in a weary land—
A shelter in the time of storm!

A shade by day, defence by night:
A shelter in the time of storm!
No fears alarm, no foes affright:
A shelter in the time of storm!

The raging storms may round us beat;
A shelter in the time of storm!
We'll never leave our safe retreat,
A shelter in the time of storm!

O Rock divine, O Refuge dear:
A shelter in the time of storm!
Be Thou our helper ever near,
A shelter in the time of storm!

Boys who Work.—The missionaries at Elatte, West Africa, train their boys to do garden work to pay for their cloths, thread, needles and Bibles. It takes them fifty hours of work to get a whole cloth or a Bible, six hours for a spool of thread, and one for two needles.

A Brave Christian Doctor.

AT the seaside the other Sunday I heard a missionary relate the following incident:—

Away in China, where he lives, the poor people have no idea what to do if their children get burnt or hurt in any way, and so he began a medical mission for them, where they may bring their little ones to get cured if possible.

One day a man came in carrying his little girl, who could not walk because her leg had been burnt, and the part below the knee had grown into the thigh, and so the poor child could never unbend her leg.

Her father asked the missionary if he could do anything for her. "Yes," he said, "but it will take a long time, as I must cut down this flesh which has united, and then it will have to heal up again." The father was very glad to hear his little girl could be made well, and the operation was performed. After a few weeks, however, he came in again to see how she was getting on, and asked how much longer she would have to remain in the hospital. The doctor said it would take two months more before she could go home.

"Ah, then," said the father, "I cannot afford to let her remain; she is only a girl, if she had been a boy I might have found the money."

"But you only have to pay for her food," said the doctor; "all medicine and attention is free. Surely you will not take the poor child away."

"Is there no other way to get her well quicker?" asked the Chinaman.

"Yes, there is another way," replied our friend. "If you will let me take some pieces of skin off your arm, I can sew them over the wounds, and they will heal much sooner."

"Very well," said the man, and he bared his arm ready for the operation. But as soon as the doctor began to wash and scrape the arm to get it quite clean, and took his knife, the man drew back and said, "No, no; I cannot bear it." Then the doctor turned to the mother and said, "Let me take a piece from your arm for your little child's sake? Surely you will bear this for her?" But the mother drew back too, and said she could not have it done.

"Then," said the missionary, "I will have it cut out of my arm." And he called one of the assistants to do it for him; but he refused, as he could not bear to hurt the good missionary.

"Then I must do it myself," he said. And with a sharp instrument he cut a piece of skin out of his arm and divided it into five pieces, which he stitched on to the little Chinese girl's leg. In course of time she was able to go home and run about, but she will always carry with her the marks of the missionary's self-sacrifice, for in her leg are the five little pieces of white skin. When her friends ask her about it, and say the missionary healed her, she says, "No, it was the dear Lord Jesus who healed me, for he made the good missionary love me, and bear all that pain for me."

Was this not a very practical way of showing the Chinese that he was willing to give himself for their sakes? We are not called perhaps to bear so much as this good man, but we are all called to give up for others in our daily life. How often do we give up some pleasure that we may have been looking forward to that another may be able to enjoy it instead of us?

Every day brings some opportunity to bring comfort or joy to others at the cost of a little self-sacrifice on our part. I wonder if we try to seize them!

"Would You Dare Tell God That?"

Mary is a thoughtful little girl. She is very careful about what she says. Her brother is quite unlike her in this respect. She thinks before she speaks, while he speaks first and thinks afterwards, and very often when too late he is sorry for, or ashamed of, what he has said.

One day he came home very angry with a schoolmate about something that had happened on the playground. He told Mary about it, and the more he thought and talked of it, the angrier he grew, and he began to say terribly harsh, bitter, and unreasonable things about his comrade. Some of the things he said Mary knew were not true, but he was too angry and excited to weigh his words. She listened for a moment, and then said, gently:—

"Would you dare tell God that, Ralph?"

Ralph paused as if someone had struck him. He felt the rebuke implied in her words, and he realised how wickedly and untruthfully he had spoken.

"No, I wouldn't tell God that," he said with a very red face.

"Then I wouldn't tell it to anybody," said Mary.

"Oh, that's all right for you to say," said Ralph, "but if you had such a temper as I've got——"

"I'd try to get control of it," said his sister, gently. "When it's likely to get the upper hand of you, just stop long enough to think, 'Would I dare tell God that?' and it won't be long before you'll break yourself of saying such terrible things."—Selected.

Current Events and Opinions.

THE METHODIST FORWARD MISSION.

THE indefatigable workers of the Wesleyan Mission at the Central Hall, Manchester, are not aware of the deep interest with which the Mission is viewed by Nonconformists throughout the country. The ninth annual report of the Mission (says The Manchester Guardian) deserves to be pondered over with gratitude by all who are interested in the social and religious work of the Free Churches. At a moderate estimate, between 7000 and 8000 people are gathered together each Sunday for worship, but the success of the philanthropic and labour sections is still more remarkable. Some 13,000 meals have been served and 6500 beds been occupied during the year. The sales of the firewood prepared in the labour yard have exceeded the sum of £500. And what is being done in Manchester is only a sample of the work carried on in other large cities with more or less success.

AN AFRICAN TOWN.

In a sketch of the growth of Buluwayo, South Africa, a writer in The Daily News says :—

"In the matter of religion the town is proceeding but slowly. The High Church branch of the Church of England is perhaps making the most headway, and daily services are held in a small brick-built church which, not being large enough for the Sunday congregations, is about to be substantially added to. The Dutch Protestant Church is well supported; Rev. Isaac Shimmin, who is in charge of the Wesleyan cause, has a large following, and his little chapel, which is immediately to be replaced by a substantial building, is crowded every Sunday morning to overflowing. The Baptists, Congregationalists, and Presbyterians do not, at present, seem to have made any way; but, on the other hand, the Jews, who are strongly represented in the town, have already begun building a synagogue, which will provide accommodation for a large congregation. It will thus be seen that Buluwayo is fairly on the way to be, if it is not already, a substantial, civilised, commercial city. In place of being the location of a tribe of savages, which it was only a few years ago, it is now a thriving and rapidly advancing town, and is fast becoming the commercial centre of a district whose material resources are believed by those who live in it to be almost limitless in extent, and of incalculable intrinsic value."

THE SULTAN'S CHRISTIAN SUBJECTS.

A correspondent of The Dundee Advertiser, in describing the Christian subjects of the Sultan and their many trials, remarks :—

"How is it that the Sultan can keep his Christian subjects in such subjugation? Because the Christians are scattered, have no unity in race, language, or church; are weakened by the oppression they had to endure for centuries; they have no training in organisation, and they are everywhere surrounded by well-armed, hostile Moslem tribes; because there is the Turkish army ready to act; and because of the fast-and-loose policy of Europe, whose interest in the Eastern Christians has been of a questionable character. It is sad, but it is a fact plainly seen in the whole course of their policy, that the interest of European Powers in the Sultan's Christian subjects has not been religious or philanthropic, but political. The Turks have known that too well, and they have taken every advantage of it. The Christians have been very slow to perceive it, still more slow and reluctant to believe it when they did see it, and they have suffered for it. The Europeans have made a show, when there were political reasons for it, of defending the suffering Christians either by treaties or by remonstrances; and then in critical moments they have abandoned them to a fate much worse than before."

THE CONDITION OF ARMENIA.

British Consuls in Armenia report a discouraging outlook in the condition of this distracted and oppressed people. The large sums distributed by the Relief Committee have barely sufficed to ward off starvation from the Armenians, and further help will be required this year, as the seed grain for the crops was seized by the Government in payment of taxes. "There can be no hope of a revival of trade (writes the Vice-Consul at Kharput) until personal and public security have been re-established. Such merchants as may have remained in a position to carry on business subsequent to the disturbances alluded to feared, for the most part, to do so owing to the unsettled state of the country and their want of confidence in the future. The persistent threats of the Moslems, and the consequent anxiety and discouragement of the Christians, in conjunction with the scarcity of capital now prevalent among the latter, render the commercial prospects of the vilayet for the present year far from encouraging."

THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

In commenting on the presidential address of the Association, delivered last week in Toronto, The Leeds Mercury says :—

"When he comes to ask, Where was the cradle of the human race? Sir John Evans admits that he is obliged to invoke imagination in aid of science; but he presents a very plausible hypothesis that the Palæolithic population originated in Eastern Asia, assumed a more nomad character, and was forced by circumstances to migrate gradually westward. At any rate, Sir John prefers this theory to the one that has of late grown in favour, and which professes to find the earliest traces of human life in North-Western Europe. Towards the close of his address Sir John Evans discussed the chronological relations of the Palæolithic and Neolithic periods. Sir John owns that there is no trustworthy evidence of any transition from one age to the other; but he says there may be traces of man's existence in the South of Europe during the transitional period. At the same time he does not think it would be 'in defiance of all probability' to suppose that owing to failure of food, climatal changes, or other causes, man's occupation of Western Europe ceased absolutely, and that after a long time the continent was repeopled by 'a race of men immigrating from some other part of the globe where the human race had survived, and in the course of ages had developed a higher stage of culture than Palæolithic man.' But here we are in the realm of speculation; and that is a region which science ought to eschew, although not a few of our scientists soar through it at times when they believe they are on the solid ground of fact."

A PAN-CONGREGATIONAL COUNCIL.

The most important event to Congregationalists the world over during the closing years of this century (says a writer in The Manchester Guardian) will be the International Congregational Council to be held in Boston in 1899. "Preparations are, I hear, already under way, and arrangements are being made to receive representatives probably numbering nearly double as many as attended the London Council, which was composed of 300 delegates—100 from America, 100 from England, and 100 from other lands. The topics, of course, cannot be definitely announced for some time yet, but the final outcome of the committee's labour will be a series of subjects dealing with the great and vital concerns of modern theology and sociology, with peculiar Congregational problems and opportunities, and with the wide realm of missionary activity at home and abroad. The Council will be in session for eight working days. The exact dates will be determined by the English Congregationalists, who in 1891, the year of the first International Council, accorded to the American representatives the choice of the season of the year most acceptable to them."

A GLOOMY OUTLOOK.

A leading article in The Rock, commenting on the international troubles in Europe and India, thus concludes :—

"Meanwhile, we have our own domestic troubles in labour disputes in this country, and a potato famine affecting a large part of Ireland. Is it not a time when we should especially humble ourselves for our many shortcomings, for our tolerance of evils both in Church and State, for our neglect of God? We may err in too arbitrarily linking cause and effect, but the sinful national, social, and individual selfishness of the times is too patent to be ignored, and calls for repentance and reformation. Is it presumptuous also to see in these grave events some of the signs of the last times? They are at least a call to renewed effort in spreading the knowledge of the Gospel of the Grace of God—the only panacea for human ills, the only source of individual peace, social contentment, and national rest."

THE GREAT SPECIFIC.

In the course of an able address at the opening of a bazaar in Forres, N.B., Lady Middleton, of Applecross, said :—

"I met not long ago a great doctor, a specialist on diseases of the nerves and brain. He talked in a most interesting, if alarming, manner on the great increase in such maladies induced by our present mode of living, the rush, the competition, in fact, the steam pressure of to-day. At last I fairly gasped, and said, 'But, doctor, this is horrible; you doom us all to asylums, if not worse; what is to save the world?" He gave me this answer—most notable as coming from a great scientist: 'Religion. It is the one soothing and calming influence we possess.' But, say some, have we time for contemplation, time for thought, time for prayer? The rush and whirl bear us along and sweep us round. Now, can we give the hour that is claimed from our necessary duties and enjoyments for retirement to our closet in quiet religious thought. We have two great aids: we have our blessed Sundays, the very law of the land helps us here; we have our churches, and that even therein our attention should not wander, and 'outward things be strong,' let us make our churches comfortable. I say it advisedly as well as reverently, that no chilling airs or cramped sensations may make our minds more errant than need be, but that our soul, being soothed and quieted by the surrounding influences, can give itself wholly to its Maker."

THE QUEEN AND THE BISHOPS.

The following reply to the bishops assembled at Lambeth Conference has been sent by the Queen to the Archbishop of Canterbury :—"I have received with much gratification the address from the Lambeth Conference, and I desire to sincerely thank you for your fervent expression of good wishes towards my Throne and person. I earnestly trust that these periodical gatherings of bishops from all parts of the world may tend to promote the cause of peace and good will and the increase of charity among men, in the furthering of which you may ever rely upon my hearty sympathy and co-operation. I pray that Almighty God may bless your work and grant a safe return to those whose sphere of labour is in foreign lands.—VICTORIA R.I."

THE LASH FOR SOLDIERS.

In a letter to The Record on this subject, Mr. Livingston Prescott (who has recently embodied his views in a work of fiction) says :—

"It is not the slight modification which has been languidly proposed, but the abolition of the lash as a penalty for prison offences which Britain should demand for those soldiers who, whatever their faults, freely lay down their lives in her service. There is yet a more solemn aspect of the matter. Human authority, especially to rudimentary minds, to a certain extent represents God. If cruel or unjust in its operation, it is not against his fellow-men only that the victim's soul revolts, but against his thus misrepresented and maligned Creator. Can any Christian, beholding for himself, or by the description of others, this writhing, suffering, degraded presentiment of God's image, sometimes—I quote an eye-witness—'groaning and crying,' sometimes heroically dumb, 'never saying a word"—can he, seeing a fellow-creature thus chastised for errors so slight, conscientiously consider such a travesty of justice pleasing to the great Judge of all? If not, in his name let his people—and especially his ministers—make their voices heard in firm but respectful protest. If they do, the general public will soon relinquish the extraordinary apathy of its present attitude, while the clause in our beautiful Litany in which we plead for all prisoners and captives shall take new force and meaning for ourselves by being translated into generous action."

JUDGE LYNCH'S HORRIBLE HARVEST.

Lynch law, says The New York Observer, appears to be gaining ground in parts of our country. The morning papers of one day last week recorded the lynching of one man in Georgia, one in Louisiana and one in Kentucky, besides the narrow escape from mob vengeance of a criminal in Florida. The offenders were for the most part negroes, and they were accused of "the usual crime" of assaulting white women. In the Kentucky instance the mob hanged a man of bad character "on general principles," and on the vague charge of murder and without proof of his guilt. Having put him to death, they proceeded to strip his wife to the waist and whipped her till she was covered with blood. These cases are but a part of the recent crop of such horrors. We have not published the horrible details of the revolting proceedings in the instances cited, but they were such as to make true patriots sad. The crimes for which most of the negroes so treated are made to suffer is atrocious enough, but the remedy is as demoralising as the crime it seeks to cure. It is time that wise and thoughtful men should seek to stay the crime both of the negroes and their lawless avengers.

THE FAMINE IN INDIA.

Telegraphing from Simla, August 20, the correspondent of The Times says:—

"Good rains have fallen everywhere, save in Bombay and the Deccan districts, during the past week. The crops promise to be exceptionally large. The numbers on relief works are steadily declining, but some weeks must pass before the numbers of those gratuitously relieved show a marked decrease. There are now under 53,000 persons on works in the North-West Provinces and Oudh, but over 300,000 remain in the Central Provinces and Bombay respectively. Madras, on the 14th inst., was the worst with 478,000 on works and 218,000 in receipt of gratuitous relief, but rain fell in the affected area this week, which should materially change the outlook. The famine, in fact, is rapidly disappearing."

THE CONGO.

A Reuter telegram, dated Liverpool, August 22, says:—"The African Steamship Company's mail steamer Niger has arrived here from the west and south coasts of Africa, including the Congo, from which river she brought several missionary passengers. One missionary, Mr. White, of the English Baptist Mission, died two days after embarking. The body was landed and interred at Mayumba. Mr. White had been in the Upper Congo territory at a place called Yakuse. This is in the neighbourhood of Stanley Falls, where Mr. White, who was accompanied by his wife, established a mission. Mr. and Mrs. White had been over twelve months on the Congo, and started as far back as April 6 to return home. They descended the river in their mission steamer, and had one day's travelling on the Congo Railway. The Belgian officials were spoken of in the highest terms. Apart from the revolt of the Batetelas the whole territory, at any rate that part of it up to and about Stanley Falls, was in a very peaceful state. The natives were collecting rubber and other produce, and were working very harmoniously with the State people."

THE EARTHQUAKE IN INDIA.

The results of the earthquake have been most disastrous to many missions. Buildings that cost a large amount to erect have been seriously damaged or completely destroyed. The Welsh Mission in the Khasi Hills, Assam, has especially suffered. A correspondent of the Indian Witness says, "Every building belonging to the mission is in ruins, and all the churches built by the native Christians, many of which were large and built of stone with corrugated iron roofs, are in the same condition. The same is true of our station in Sylhet. The cost of erecting the buildings which have been levelled was not much if anything under two lakhs of rupees. Besides all this, scores of pukkha houses belonging to the native Christians have shared the same fate. There is hardly a stone left upon a stone in the whole of the Khasi and Naintia Hills District, every building, both private and public, being in ruins. It would be difficult to exaggerate the extent of the damage done. As far as buildings are concerned the mission is just where it was when it began operations fifty-six years ago. All the missionaries with their families escaped unhurt. Some of the native Christians have lost their lives, but it is not yet known how many. One of our native ministers lost wife, child and grandchild, all three being buried under the debris." In other parts of Assam the missionaries are without houses, and are living in temporary sheds. There were many narrow escapes, but as far as we know no missionary has been killed. The Indian Churchman publishes a very long list of churches and mission buildings injured by the earthquake. Some of the churches have been totally destroyed, while very many have been seriously damaged. The cost of making all the buildings safe will be enormous.—The Harvest Field.

Prophetic Conference in Chicago.—Writing from Oak Park, Ill., on August 7, Mr. W. E. Blackstone says:—"We look for a season of great profit and blessing in our coming Prophetic Conference, September 30—October 2. We earnestly beg the prayers of the friends of Israel on behalf of the conference and all who attend and participate."

Kensal Rise Tabernacle.

MRS. BAEYERTZ has concluded a sixteen days' mission at this church, and we have enjoyed a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. On the very first Sunday evening the building was crowded, and while God's servant was speaking the spirit of conviction seemed to fill the place. Both saints and sinners felt that a solemn, sin-revealing power was present. At the close of the meeting a large number went into the inquiry-room, and this has gone on more or less from night to night.

The Christians from the various churches in the district have entered more fully into the life of fellowship with the Son of God. Another evident result of the Mission is seen in the increased love for and delight in the Word, which is manifest throughout the entire assembly. No one can listen to Mrs. Baeyertz, without noting that she seems to have entered into the secret depths of the life of prayer, and to have caught the mantle of those glorious pleaders of ancient days, while she opens up the Scriptures with clearness and simplicity. In her preaching there is no straining after effect, but a quiet and sometimes an awful power. Her appeals to the conscience and the will seem at times almost irresistible. Mrs. Baeyertz is, I believe, a chosen instrument raised up for a special work.

Stirrings in Bohemia.

COMMUNICATIONS from Bohemia are of the greatest interest. Pastor A. Adlof—who ministers to a gathering of converts from Roman Catholicism in Prague, himself being a convert and a native Czech, and whose labours God has greatly owned in various parts of that interesting country Bohemia—tells me of a village in South Bohemia, named Strmechy, where a revival has begun. Twenty-one converts have gathered, and amongst them a teacher who, in consequence of his conversion, has lost his situation, and who cannot find any new appointment. Adlof visits this village once a month; the other Sundays this teacher ministers the Word to the people, but he has nothing. Pastor Adlof asks: "Do you not know anyone who would be willing to help to raise a salary to the amount of 400fl. (about £33) per annum? The work is of great importance; in less than a year's time the Lord has changed a desert, and made it a garden."

Are friends ambitious to claim an active part in this work of God?—Yours faithfully,

Belgian Missionary Church.

ABUNDANT blessing has been granted to our Belgian Missionary Church during the last ten years. The number of our churches and stations has risen from twenty-six to fifty-four, and that of our pastors from seventeen to thirty. Nineteen new chapels or places of worship have been built or purchased. The receipts have also increased. The native churches have made great progress in liberality.

Our resources are unfortunately absolutely insufficient. The synod which met a few weeks ago was informed that the deficit, which, when the accounts were closed on March 31, amounted to 25,000frs., had increased to 41,000frs. This painful situation is made all the worse by the fact that several societies in Great Britain, which had accustomed us to count upon their assistance, have given us notice that they must in future reduce their grants, and several others that they can no longer continue them.

Our needs, however, are most urgent, and they increase every year. Our staff of pastors is altogether insufficient, and we ought to increase their number. Sunday after Sunday, notwithstanding the co-operation of devoted lay friends, we have the greatest difficulty to provide for all our services. Just when we ought to be extending our field of labour, we are in fear of being obliged to curtail it.

If immediate help be not given us we shall be under the necessity of making deductions from the stipends of our pastors at the end of next September, and yet these are, as it is, barely sufficient.

While expressing gratitude to our friends abroad for their generous assistance, we beg them to come to our aid in this our great need.

"GENTILES GIVING FOR JEWISH CHRISTIANS."—2 Cor. ix. 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Ye know the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, that, though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich."—2 Cor. viii. 9.

THE monetary contributions referred to (1) were for the benefit of Jerusalem Christians who from several causes were poor. Pursued by the rancour of the Jewish Rabbis, they were deprived of their property and boycotted in employment. At this time there was so much general poverty that Agrippa II. found work for numbers in public improvements like paving the streets with marble. In addition to this a famine had cast its dark mantle over the world, and food could not be obtained even by those of ordinary means. So the contribution of the Gentile Christians was similar to those made by the English churches recently for the Armenians and the sufferers through the Indian famine. To get Gentiles to give money for poor Jews, and Jews living in another land, was a big link in the growing chain which Christianity is forging and which will some day bind all nations into one great brotherhood. Note

I. A good example. The Corinthians had already become an example in Christian liberality (2) by which others had been stimulated. Paul now sends Titus and another to remind them of the promise made a year before (2, 3). He had already praised them so loudly that both for their sakes and his own they should be ready with their contributions (4). He did not wish them to tarnish their good name either by tardiness or by giving with a stinting hand (covetousness) (5). The desire for the approval of others has been placed in us by God, and we should use it in urging ourselves to do the best we can in all good work. Every Christian should strive to be exemplary. Not asking themselves how little they can give without appearing mean, how few of God's commands it is essential they should obey, how near they can walk to the river of sin without falling in. On the contrary, we should give to the utmost limit of our capacity, "fulfil all righteousness," and "abstain from all appearance of evil." If we strive to do this we shall be raised above the average level, and so be an example to those around us. As surely as we are an example, so surely will our conduct be imitated by some.

II. How we are to give (7).—Not grudgingly, or as a matter of duty. For he who gives merely because he is bound to deprives himself of the blessing, and he who begrudges what he gives not only loses the blessing himself but also brings the recipient down to the level of a pauper. We should give cheerfully. Christian giving is a great privilege, and we should enter into the full enjoyment of it. There are Christians who delight in giving, and they are the ones whom God loves. The morose and melancholy can never do much good in the world. They turn all the milk of life sour. A small service rendered readily is of over more value in the sight of God than a great one performed with grumbling.

Paul does not mention the amount to be given; that must be left to the circumstances and conscience of the giver. God judges not by the amount of the gift, but by what is left after the gift is made. So the widow cast more into the treasury than they all, because she gave her sole possession (though but two mites), while the others had only cast in but a portion of their riches. We should also give regularly (7)—"purposeth in his heart" (after counting cost, etc.). One penny a week brings larger blessing than an occasional subscription, because the good cause is brought before us so frequently.

III. The reward of the Giver (6). What we sow we reap, both in kind and in amount. The blessing applies to both material and spiritual (compare Mal. iii. 8-10). God will not long remain in any man's debt. Even if we give so much that we impoverish ourselves God will see that we do not want (8). He who gives us seed to sow, and then gives the harvest (bread for food) will also see that the seed of charity bring forth good fruit (10); We need not trouble as to the future, God will see to that. "Day by day the manna fell."

Apply the lesson also as giving not only money but life, character, time, talents. What we give to God we cannot lose.

A Quaker Summer School.

SOME six or seven hundred members of the Society of Friends have been spending the fortnight Aug. 4-18 most profitably at the beautiful seaside resort of Scarborough. The arrangements for our physical well-being were kindly and efficiently supervised by the Friends of Scarborough, whilst Dr. J. Rendel Harris, assisted by a committee, provided for the mind.

The day began with a devotional meeting at 9 a.m., followed before lunch by three lectures; the afternoons were occupied by excursions on cycle, rail, or steamboat; in the evenings lectures of a more popular type had been arranged, to several of which the public were admitted.

The earliest lecture on each morning had the Old Testament for its subject. Prof. Rogers, of Madison, New Jersey, a great authority in Assyriology, showed that the great difference between the Jewish and Chaldean traditions of the Creation and the Flood was that the former knew God; the latter did not. He also interested his hearers much in the light shed by Assyriology on the list of nations in Gen. x. and the four kings with whom Abraham fought in Gen. xiv. The remainder of the lectures on the Old Testament were given by G. Buchanan Gray, Tutor at Mansfield College, Oxford, and were occupied by a fearless and reverent handling of the problems presented by the growth of the canon, the growth and structure of the several books, pre-prophetic religion, the prophets, the exile, and post-exilic life and thought.

The second lecture of the day was usually taken by Dr. Rendel Harris. The subjects he dealt with were "The Education of our Lord and his Apostles," "Books that had Influenced our Lord and his Apostles," "The Growth of the New Testament," "The Diatessaron of Tatian," which shows that the Gospel of John was placed on a level with the other Gospels, and had therefore been long known in 170 A.D., and some recently discovered early Christian documents, such as the Apocalypse of Peter. Bernard P. Grenfell, M.A., gave a very interesting lecture on "The Newly Discovered Logia of Jesus"; Dr. Harris subsequently giving it as his view that the Logia were authentic, and probably translated from sources very early indeed.

The third hour found us with somewhat exhausted powers of attention, but many enjoyed the lectures by Prof. T. R. Glover, of Kingston, Ontario, on "British Christianity in the Seventh Century"; whilst the papers by Dr. Thomas Hodgkin on "Sacerdotalism and Apostolic Succession," and those by John S. Rowntree on "The Place of Friends in the Religious Life of England," were felt to be appropriate and helpful.

The evening meetings were addressed by Prof. R. G. Moulton on "The Literary Study of the Bible"; Anne W. Richardson, of Westfield College, on "Socrates"; Dr. R. F. Horton, on "The Bible and the Spirit"; Prof. G. A. Smith, on "The Early National Poetry of Israel" and "The Book of Jonah"; Mrs. Lewis, of Cambridge, on "Mount Sinai and its Manuscripts." Difficult as it is to judge between these lectures, each in its way delightful and useful, many derived the greatest help from that on the "Book of Jonah," in which the author's lofty view of the universality of Jehovah's Kingdom was so clearly brought out.

The success of the School was largely contributed to by the kind permission to make use of the fine premises of the Westborough Wesleyan Church. The Primitive Methodists showed the same brotherly spirit by the loan of their St. John's-road Chapel on Sundays; and the Rev. T. Robertson (Congregationalist), of the large Bar Church, presided at two very well-attended meetings held therein on "Armenia" and on "Unity among Christians."

William White, George Cadbury, Samuel Price, and William Littleboy, of Birmingham; W. S. Lean, Henry S. Newman, Ellwood Brockbank, Frederick Andrews, and Wm. C. Braithwaite were amongst many Friends who were helpfully present.

We have been told that George Fox's power was derived from his first-hand knowledge; that he brought men immediately to Christ. We hope that many who have been at Scarborough can revive the frequent testimony of early Friends, that they were "brought into a more soul-satisfying knowledge of God than before." R. C. B.

FROM "THE TIMES."

This Summer School of Theology held at Scarborough, the first of its kind in the Society of Friends, has met with an unexpected amount of success, having been attended from August 4 to August 18 by 700 ladies and gentlemen accustomed to minister in meetings for worship or to teach in the Sunday-schools. It is one of several related movements, little known as yet to the outside public, which have been quietly revolutionising the Society and introducing into it fresh life and unwonted activities.

The opinion is often expressed that the Society of Friends is, in this country, a dwindling body. This was certainly the case from the beginning of the last century to a period somewhat later than the middle of the present century. But that this is no longer so is proved not merely by the small yet constant increase in membership for the last thirty-five years, but even more by the vigour of the new movements within the body, and by the throwing aside of trammels and restrictions whi ch cramped its work and diminished its numbers.

First in order of time comes the very valuable Adult School movement, which, commencing in Birmingham nearly fifty years ago, has by degrees extended over the whole kingdom, so that now every Sunday morning between the hours of eight and ten (and sometimes even earlier) the Society, with a membership of 16,000 men, women, and children, is bringing its influence to bear in an undenominational way on more than 40,000 adults, mostly artisans. These schools are not like ordinary schools. The opinion may be hazarded that they owe their form, unconsciously perhaps on the part of the promoters, to the Quaker method of worship. The skilful adult-school teacher gives little direct instruction; now and again with a light hand he guides and controls, all the while encouraging to the utmost, like Fröbel, the self-activity of his pupils. The class, indeed, almost seems to manage itself. To these Scripture classes are linked on weekdays and Sundays so many other varied agencies that the schools may well be called schools of brotherhood and beneficence. In 1860 came

THE RELAXATION OF RESTRICTIONS.

The late Right Hon. W. E. Forster used to say he had been excluded from the Society for the very best day's work in his life—his marriage with the daughter of Dr. Thomas Arnold. But after 1860 any exclusion for such a cause ceased, and, at the same time, any rigid insistence on distinctive dress or speech. In 1865 came a development in foreign mission work. Such work, conducted after the plan of the apostolic journeys, had always been a prominent feature in the Society's activity. For months or sometimes years together ministers under a sense of duty had devoted themselves to work abroad, often with the help of an interpreter. To this older form of mission work, still carefully cherished, was now added work similar in kind to that of the great missionary societies. The logic of circumstances had prevailed. If lands like Madagascar, India, and China were to be reached, it must be by workers who had mastered the languages and were giving more than intervals of their life to the work—whose wants, therefore, must, wherever necessary, be provided for out of a common fund. Of such stated, permanent missionaries there is now perhaps a greater percentage than in any other Christian body except the Moravians.

If, through the exertions of the celebrated physician, Dr. John Fothergill, in the last century, and of many who have followed him since, the standard of education amongst Quakers, both rich and poor, had not been unusually high, it is difficult to see how so much good work could have been accomplished by ministers and workers of an unprofessional character, who receive no remuneration and who have sought no special human training for their ministery. In no Church is the prophetic gift so highly valued, so widely distributed. It may fall on young or old, on rich or poor, on either sex, on the learned or the less learned. The disadvantages of a ministry potentially so free may a priori be held to outweigh the advantages. Of the advantages

THE RESULTS THEMSELVES MUST SPEAK.

With regard to the disadvantages, many characteristic criticisms have been uttered in public by leading Friends. It is regretted, for instance, that there are too many "slovenly preachers," and that the ministry loses so much of its power by want of meditation and forethought; and the late Mr. Spurgeon is quoted as expressing his surprise that the Society of Friends has been able to survive "the poverty of thought and doctrine" due to unprepared utterances. But there is one special disadvantage of a pressing nature which is hardly to be overcome by any means previously employed. The problems of Biblical criticism, more particularly with regard to the Old Testament, are not to be solved by spiritual earnestness alone. They need for their solution study more or less prolonged, in which the skilful guidance of a teacher is of the greatest help.

It was to provide such guidance that this summer school was set on foot. It owes its origin to no official sanction on the part of the Society of Friends, but is due to the initiative of thirty-three of its leading members acting as individuals. They occupy positions so influential, and their action has so evidently met a felt want, that there is no likelihood of its being in any way disclaimed. Their object, as set forth in their own words, has been to "stimulate thought, promote healthful reading and study, and awaken in the Society a fuller conception of the place in the service of Christ of the trained and consecrated intellect.' Great care was exercised in

THE CHOICE OF SUBJECTS AND SPEAKERS.

The promoters did not confine themselves to scholars within their own borders, but in each case sought the help of leading experts, whether in their own or other churches.

Every endeavour was made to get face to face with actual facts. Two "heckling" hours at intervals of a few days provided opportunities for clearing up difficulties that had arisen, the questions having been previously sent in on a slip of paper. A museum of facsimiles of the leading MSS. of the New Testament, of some Hebrew, Syriac, Armenian, and Greek MSS., and of early printed editions formed the subject of several informal lectures; and a carefully chosen library of the freshest and most important books dealing with the matters in hand was most useful in suggesting the best books to purchase. Opportunity was also given for commencing or continuing the study of Hebrew and New Testament Greek.

But what was said and done at this summer School is of less importance than that the School should have been taken in hand at all by such a body and in such a way. The Society of Friends has been, or at any rate has seemed to have been, a "garden walled around," even then influencing in some directions public life and thought in no small degree. Now that it is receiving so freely from other churches of their best, and giving as freely of its best in return, it is interesting to think what fresh fields of service it may win. At the death of George Fox, 206 years ago, it was computed that it had a membership equal to that of all the other Nonconformists put together—a membership certainly larger than that of the Wesleyans at the death of John Wesley a hundred years later. Wistful glances are often cast backward at this time of growth and expansion, which was also one of bitterest persecution; and glances as wistful, yet not unhopeful, are often cast forward in anticipation of its return. That this is not mere sentiment, but has resolute purpose and steady conviction behind it, seems clear from recent developments. And at the present time a religious democracy like the Society of Friends, in which freedom and order are found side by side, must, as long as these developments are maintained, have in it the promise and the power of increased service to Church and State and to humanity at large.

A Notable Conversion.

The following case, related in the new report of the Religious Tract Society, ought to be an encouragement to all workers:—

The following is related by a colporteur at Hamburg:—"S—— was one of the worst drunkards in his town. When sober, at the latter part of every week, he was a thoroughly good and clever artisan, but during the first days he was always drunk. Many were afraid of him on account of his strength and roughness. When I first saw him he threatened even me with a thorough thrashing; but after some conversation allowed the Messenger of Peace to be left, and even to be brought regularly. By my constant invitations he at last consented to come to our services. But his heart remained untouched; and when he came home he beat his wife so unmercifully that he was imprisoned.

"There he had time to think over his past life, and when released he sent for me. Of course I went at once. Then he asked me, 'Is there still any hope for me?' I repeated to him as many suitable passages from the Scriptures as I knew by heart. He had torn his own Bible to pieces and used it for lighting his pipe. From that day I went regularly to fetch him to our services, and before long he rejoiced in the forgiveness of his sins. His wife and mother-in-law were also converted, after seeing the great change produced in this man by the Gospel message. Now the house resounds with Gospel hymns, where formerly nothing was heard but swearing and screaming."

St. Giles's Christian Mission.

In their thirty-seventh annual report, the conductors of the St. Giles's Christian Mission gratefully acknowledge that from insignificant beginnings, through many difficulties and discouragements, and often with very insufficient resources, their work has been carried on with a considerable amount of success. The operations of the mission may be classified under the headings of prison work amongst adults in prison and amongst adult ex-prisoners, work amongst children, work amongst the sickly, and mission work amongst adults.

The prison work is carried on by the superintendent, Mr. William Wheatley, who in one London prison saw during the course of last year a total of 611 adult prisoners at their own request. "Their applications for assistance were," he says, "as various in character as it is possible to imagine, and the assistance many of them seek is money, not work, which they abhor. Needless to say we do not waste our subscribers' money on this class." On their discharge from prison all short term ex-prisoners are invited to a breakfast provided in one of the halls near the grounds attached to the prisons. Last year 18,300 discharged prisoners accepted this invitation, of whom 5800 were permanently assisted in various ways. Each year the Mission receives about 500 boys, and gives them shelter in one of its five homes, whence, after the test of a short probation, they are placed in suitable situations. Last year the general expenses of the Mission amounted to a little over £11,000.

The Y.W.C.A. is briefly sketched in connection with its new and handsome headquarters at George-street, Hanover-square, in the September issue of The Sunday at Home. The writer says, "It is an inspiration kept alive by the Divine breath that kindled it—one more of God's modern miracles."

Letters to the Editor.

"HIGH CONGREGATIONALISM."

Dear Sir,—I am a little surprised, and still more anxious, about sentiments put forth under this heading. I know that Dr. Dale held a view which many of his brethren would have so designated. I yield to no one in reverence for Dr. Dale and in respect for his teaching; but I have never been able to grasp what he meant by his statements about the Lord's Supper being "not merely a commemorative rite, but a veritable channel of Divine grace."

Such words appear to me to say either too little or too much. Words of Scripture, the meeting together of Christians, utterances of prayer—all these are, or ought to be, "veritable channels of Divine grace." But, I suppose, what is contended for is, that the Lord's Supper is a channel in which grace flows more easily, more fully, and in some more direct manner than in reading or prayer or the meeting of Christians. If not, then I ask Why use such words? If so, then I say that we are on the road to error and superstition. We may not be far on the road, but I think we have entered it.

I do not say this without reason. Years ago there appeared a volume of exquisite expositions on the Book of Joshua. They were spiritual, they were evangelical; but the reader was startled by a mystical chapter which seemed to teach the doctrine of the Real Presence. Being introduced to the gifted writer, I ventured very humbly to remonstrate about the teaching of this chapter. I was told that I was mistaken, that I must be mistaken, for the writer had not unlearnt the lessons imparted in the Society of Friends—her early Christian home. Where is that writer now? Mr. Macartney and others have told me that they believe she has found a congenial home amongst extreme Ritualists.

My dear friend Mr. Crosbie, and E. R. P., assure us that their sacramentalism has nothing to do with sacerdotalism. But is sacerdotalism the only danger to Christianity? Is not all superstition a danger? Is it not contrary to the spirituality of all Christ's teaching to connect any special Presence with bread, or "the breaking of bread"? Besides, if the view be harmless while held by "High Congregationalists," it becomes most harmful when held by Episcopalians, tending greatly to accelerate the advance of Ritualism.

In saying all this, let me not be thought to be one to diminish our loving reverence for the Lord's Supper. I should like to see it observed oftener. I believe that it is a means of great good; but that it does its work, as any other service does, by the thoughts and desires it kindles, not by any special Presence.—Yours sincerely,

Brighton. J. B. Figgis.

Dear Sir,—Rev. Silvester Horne, whom I hold in very high esteem, says:—"The one qualification is the prepared heart, the surrendered will, the expectant soul. Grant an assembly of such worshippers, met in his name, pledged to his cause and service, and we believe we are justified in expecting from Him special grace and special privilege, for we have undertaken special responsibility."

But why did the Committee of the Congregational Union excise from "Congregational Principles" Dr. Dale's passage on the Lord's Supper if this was all it meant?

Where is the difference between a prayer-meeting or a church-meeting and the Communion, if Mr. Horne states Dr. Dale's view correctly? There is no "special grace" at the Communion if the same grace is in every gathering of believers.

But what is Mr. Horne's view, or, rather, the explanation of the view he gave in his article in the Christian World on Dr. Whiton's book? He spoke of something missing in the Nonconformist communion; but if he only meant what is referred to above, it never was missing. Ever since I was a boy have I been familiar with old men at prayer-meetings pleading the Saviour's promise to be present with them.—Faithfully yours,

A Perplexed Reader.

CRIME AND OVERCROWDING.

Dear Sir,—I would refer to your "Notes and Comments" of last week on crime and overcrowding, in which drunkenness as the main factor in producing these evils is minimised to some extent. It is generally admitted that nine-tenths of the crime arises from intemperance, and though the connection of overcrowding and drunkenness may not be so apparent, nevertheless, directly or indirectly, it will be found that nine-tenths of the overcrowding springs from the same cause. The only way of removing the overcrowding in Spitalfields and elsewhere is by stopping the sale of intoxicants in those districts. There is no other way of solving that which you say is "one of the gravest and most pressing problems of the time."

You may "demolish insanitary buildings, sweep away courts and alleys, and widen streets, the churches may work socially and religiously," but if we do not include death to the liquor traffic, the labour will be in vain.—Yours truly, 52, Ferntower-road, London, N., Wm. Peters.

Homes for Aged Christian Blind.

Quiet work has been done and steady progress made of late in these Homes, under the honorary superintendence of Rev. H. and Mrs. Bright, 77, Hanley-road, Crouch Hill, N. Founded in 1880, for the needy blind of all Protestant Evangelical sections of the Church of Christ, the latest development of the work is a seaside branch at Southend-on-Sea; and the report mentions a deficiency of £650 in the sum necessary to cover the cost of this much-needed addition. The need for these Homes is as great as ever, and no sooner is there a vacancy than there are several applicants to fill it. The inmates, of whom there are now eighty-two, come from twenty-eight counties, their ages varying from thirty to ninety-three years, the majority being over seventy years of age. Sunday and week-night services, conducted by ministers and others of various denominations, are marked by signs of Divine blessing. Visitors at any time are gladly welcomed.

In Lonely Places.

Writing from the Isle of Mull, a friend says:—"We went from Kelso to Rothesay, then to Campbeltown, Edinburgh, Oban, and now we have found our way here—an out-of-the-way place indeed. If we have done nothing else we have cheered the heart of the Baptist pastor, and perhaps others.

"Nobody knows what a minister's life is away in these islands and highlands. We could visit the little gatherings of the scattered flock to profit. None of the congregations are large, but many of the ministers glad of fellowship, though they have nothing else to give and cannot even take us in. We are in lodgings in a little hotel, so called, only seven rooms in it altogether, but are quite happy and well, through mercy. I am preaching in the Baptist church, a little whitewashed building on the beach."

The Pakefield Conference, under the presidency of Rev. L. Price, was recently held. Speaking at the opening of the Conference, Mr. Price referred to the abnormal amount of Sabbath desecration that took place in Lowestoft and Pakefield at the present time, more particularly in the usage of brakes and steamers, which he strongly condemned. He was sorry to say that many professing Christians were the greatest sinners in this respect. Rev. A. J. Begbie expressed the belief that persuasion and not coercion was the best line of argument to adduce in a question of that sort. Canon Garratt made a sympathetic reference to the tragic death of Rev. J. S. Callis, in Uganda. The Bishop of Liverpool addressed a crowded audience in the evening, and declared his conviction that the only real Christian unity was the unity through grace.

Women's Work in London Homes.—In a pamphlet, entitled "A Year's Record of Women's Work in London Homes, etc.," the committee of the Christian Instruction Society and Deaconesses' Mission have issued their annual report. At the present time they are employing a staff of thirty deaconesses, who visit the houses of the poor with the message of the Gospel and convey practical sympathy to many of the darkest homes in London. Through these agents they arrange for the relief of the destitute, the nursing of the sick, and the care of the dying. Casual wards, hospitals, infirmaries, and workhouses are systematically visited by these volunteer workers. A series of extracts from the reports sent in by the members of the working staff are given to show the character of the work done and the conditions under which it is carried on. In response to pressing applications of churches in poor and crowded localities, they have been compelled to increase the number of deaconesses, but the funds of the Society have not increased in proportion. The expenditure during the last year amounted to £1300; and if their work is to be maintained at its present level, they require an additional £300.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. William Nobbs has of late been moving in the Western and Southern Counties. He had the joy of attending a recent meeting at Barnstaple, where the beloved R. C. Chapman (now in his ninety-fifth year) opened by reading the first verse of each section of Psalm cxix. He has been engaged in Gospel service at Crediton, Tiverton, and Exeter, also at Wellington (Som.). Having visited, with several other places, Stroud and Malvern, he has now gone to Southsea, where he is helping Mr. John Denning in his tent work on the common. Mr. Nobbs has been privileged to see much fruit of his labours.

Mr. Richard Spragg held a fortnight's meetings in the Central Hall, Dudley, in July, and has been labouring in the Gospel there again for another week with some blessing, although the attendance was not large.

Mr. Henry Collins, of the Evangelization Society, has been at the "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, during August, and has preached the Gospel to ever-increasing congregations with marked faithfulness and acceptance. Not a few have been led to decide for Christ, several of Dr. Barnardo's Labour House lads among the number. Mr. Collins's straight Gospel talks to the men of the P.S.A. are models of their kind.

Mr. R. M'Lean, of the Evangelization Society, has conducted a Gospel tent mission at the west end of Dundee during this month. He is a clear, intelligent preacher of the Gospel, scriptural and intensely earnest. The interest has been deepening all through; many have waited for conversation and have professed faith in Christ. Through the Bible-readings Christians have received great blessing. One feature of the work has been the number of invitations to visit and speak with anxious ones in their homes; these have come from the sick, the poor, and in some cases from the wealthy and cultured. W. Ferguson.

Strangers' Friend Society.

This, the oldest institution in existence for relieving the sick poor throughout the metropolis at their own dwellings, is now in its 112th year. There is ample evidence that such discriminating service as it renders continues to be widely needed, and that, without its aid, many whose environment is in every way against them would sink in the struggle for bare existence. The 165 visitors of both sexes who bear the Society's wisely dispensed monetary aid to homes of wretchedness, carry with them the light of the Gospel, and these doers of good, who belong to various sections of the Christian Church, seek their only recompense in the glory of God and the welfare of mankind.

God blesses this quiet work, and the poor appreciate it. The operations of the Society are well organised, and have the commendation of many prominent Christians and philanthropists. Mr. B. H. Gerrans is secretary, and the offices are at 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

Toronto Mission Union.

The Union was founded in 1884 to meet the spiritual and moral needs of the non church-going masses, the 200 voluntary workers, representing almost every denomination in the city. From its band over 20 have been promoted to foreign field work. The mission is supported by the free-will offerings of God's children, the treasurer being Mr. A. Sampson, 141, Beverley-street. Christian solicitude has covered all manner of need among the teeming masses of the city, and multifarious operations branch out from the halls, one central and the other in the east end of Toronto. Besides these there are day-nursery and dispensary, an old folks' Home, and a Bible-women's Home, which is a centre of missionary power and influence. Noon, factory, and other meetings among young women, efforts for the educational good of young men, varied work among the children, and Sunday and Tuesday evening gospelling, are some of the activities attended by most encouraging results.

Request for Prayer.—For blessing upon a Mission to be conducted by William Hill at East London, Cape Colony, commencing Sunday, September 5.

Irish Notes.

Open-air services have been held in many parts of Ireland during the past week, including the south and west. Rev. E. W. Daly addressed 1000 persons at Mountpottinger, and Rev. P. E. Donovan nearly the same number at Shankill-road, Belfast.

Mr. Geo. Horner, J.P., of The Lodge, Cliftonville, Belfast, has died, aged seventy-seven years. Deceased was a native of Yorkshire, but settled many years ago in Ireland. He was one of the largest contributors to the funds of the Methodist College, and he also took a deep interest in hospital work and in missions.

The Dublin University Fuch Kien Mission is about to send into the mission field the following four undergraduates of the Dublin University:—Rev. W. S. Walsh (son of the Bishop of Ossory), T. D. Studdert, M. MacKenzie, and Dr. Pakenham. With one exception no such number of Dublin University men ever sailed at one time for the foreign field before.

The Irish committee of the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews have resolved to reopen, under the charge of Rev. D. H. Dolman, the Enquirers' Home at Hamburg, which did such noble work in the past. Mr. Dolman is a Dutchman, and a graduate of Cambridge University.

Mount Hermon Orphanage.

The Girls' Orphan Homes carried on at No. 55 and two other houses in Cambridge Avenue, Kilburn, N.W., have for some years been under the superintendence of Mrs. Parry. Since the inauguration of the work in 1864 by the late Miss Mary Ann Cole, of honoured memory, some seven hundred children had been sheltered and trained in the Homes and passed on into good situations, fully equipped for the battle of life. The training is firstly Christian, the chief aim being that each child may be brought into the conscious knowledge of an individual and loving Saviour. During 1896 twelve additional children were received into the Homes, and ten left for service.

This work is entirely dependent upon voluntary contributions for support; and the records of the past year, with its trials and blessings, have afforded abundant instances of Divine faithfulness to those who seek to be instruments in God's hands for good to the little ones.

Orphan Working School.

This excellent charity, in its two branches at Maitland Park and Hornsey Rise, now provides accommodation for 600 children; and during the 139 years of its existence the Institution has been the means of maintaining, educating, and sending out into the world to earn an honourable livelihood 5400 orphan and destitute children. From the offices at 73, Cheapside, E.C., Mr. Algernon C. P. Coote, the secretary, issues an interesting detailed and illustrated statement, from which we learn that during the past year both the senior and junior schools have been placed under Government for educational purposes.

It is satisfactory to find that 1896 has been marked by a reduction of expenditure in every department, side by side with an increase in the average number of children maintained, as compared with the previous year. In connection with the organisation there is a useful convalescent home situated in Harold-road, Margate, with accommodation for twenty-five children.

Cruelty to Children.—The current issue of The Child's Guardian says:—Whilst we have been waiting for the verdict of Lord Herschell's inquiry, it has cost the Society in loss of income from £10,000 to £15,000. The Society's Jubilee appeal, just when it was full of promise, had to be withdrawn, and its ordinary income, since the inquiry began, has diminished 50 per cent. This is a calamity which needs only to remain unredressed a little longer to end in disaster. In order to meet the immediate necessities of carrying on its work throughout the nation £5,000 has had to be drawn from the reserve fund. As the weekly expenditure over the whole land is about £1,000, this sum cannot be made to last out very long. It is a vast, mute cry of children in pain which we voice when we plead, as we do most earnestly, with those who can save us from a disaster which would be ten times harder to bear than all the criticisms, just and unjust, into which the inquiry has been made.

THE BOOK WORLD.

Wells Cathedral, by Canon Church (1s. net, Isbister & Co.), is the latest addition to the beautifully got-up series being issued by this house of brief descriptions of our national fanes. The exquisite illustrations, by Mr. H. Railton, delightfully illuminate the text.

Micky Magee's Menagerie, by S. H. Hamer (1s. 6d. Cassell & Co.), will afford much diversion to the little nursery folks, with its amusing rhymes and stories about strange animals and their doings, profusely illustrated by exceedingly clever and droll pictures from the pencil of Harry Neilson.

The Chairman's Manual. (1s. Elliot Stock.) This concise handbook of the qualities, duties, and responsibilities of a chairman will be found most valuable by all who have to preside at public assemblies. The rules laid down and the illustrations given are drawn from the procedure in the House of Commons.

The Federation of the Powers. By C. D. Farquharson. (1s. F. Warne & Co.) This thoughtful and earnest pamphlet is a plea for a real, mutual, working federation of the great European Powers. It is a thing most devoutly to be wished for, and we trust these essays may be used to bring the desired end a step nearer the possibility of attainment.

Modern Thoughts on Ancient Stories. By Rev. Joseph Rush. (C. H. Kelly.) Here we have some well-known Bible narratives retold in modern phrase, with many sententious practical comments and applications. The discourses sparkle with good counsels tersely and epigrammatically expressed. The discourses must have been very good to hear, for they bear reproduction in cold print marvellously well.

The Separated Nation is the title of an interesting and instructive essay by Mr. H. L. Hastings, editor of the "Anti-Infidel Library," of Boston, U.S.A. (9d. Marshall Bros.) It sketches the character and training of the Jewish people. Their persecutions, their longevity, their morality, the reasons for their dispersion, and their hope of the Messiah, are all discussed in an able and interesting manner.

Unsearchable Riches, and other Sermons.—By Rev. G. E. Grubb. (15s. Marlborough and Co.) These discourses from a well-known missioner make very stirring and stimulating reading. Their purpose is to exalt Christ as a Divine Redeemer and Deliverer. They have all the directness and fervour of diction and the exultant faith that mark Mr. Grubb's utterances. A rich blessing must accompany their circulation.

Temperance in the Victorian Age. By Dawson Burns, D.D. (Ideal Publishing Co., Memorial Hall.) Among all the movements of progress during our Queen's reign few are more marked than the advances in temperance sentiment and practice. In this interesting handbook Dr. Dawson Burns traces the growth of the reform in its varied ramifications and brings together a large array of encouraging facts that ought to nerve temperance workers to still further efforts in the same direction.

The Smedleys of Matlock Bank.—By Henry Steer. (3s. 6d. Elliot Stock.) The name of Smedley will ever be associated with the annals of the hydropathic system of bodily cure. In this well-illustrated volume we have a deeply interesting and well-written account of Mr. and Mrs. Smedley, their personal characteristics, and, chiefly, the wonderful work they accomplished in promoting the health and spiritual well-being of the people. The book is a worthy chapter in the history of the service of mankind, and its publication will help to popularise an undoubtedly valuable specific for the cure and prevention of disease.

A parcel of attractive story books for young readers comes from the Wesleyan Methodist S.S. Union, Ludgate Circus. Jackalent (1s. 6d.), by Mrs. J. A. Smith, is a touching "epic of the streets" and waif life. Isabelle's Story (1s.), by Alice Briggs, takes the reader back to the times of Wm. Tyndale and his priceless services in making known the truths of Holy Writ. Marjorie's Stranger, by Isabel Robson; Little Parables for Little Folks, by Edith Rhodes; Golden Deeds Told Anew, by Annie Craig (9d. each); The White Mouse, and other stories, by W. J. Foster (8d.); and Ladyboy's Story, by Helen Bristow (6d.) are all excellent in their way. Four "Infant Class Reading Books" (2d. each) contain extracts from Scripture story, and are in large type.

The sermons lately preached before the University of Oxford by Canon McCormick will be issued in a volume by Messrs. James Nisbet & Co., Limited, under the title "What is Sin?"

Messrs. Cassell & Co. are about to issue a very cheap edition of their well-known publication "Our Own Country," describing the various localities to which natural beauty, ancient remains, historical events, or great industrial achievements have given renown in each of the three kingdoms. This edition will be completed in twenty-two weekly parts, and will cost less than one-third of the amount at which the work has hitherto been procurable.

Obituary.

MR. WILLIAM J. RIDGE.

The death of this brother, formerly of Wolverhampton and latterly of Pasadena, Cal., occurred on August 2, at Cazadero, soon after the close of the great camp meeting held there. He had intended visiting his old home in England, and having started was doing work en route. Owing to weakness, he had only been able to give one address during the meetings, and was obliged to take to bed the day following the close of the convention. From this he never rose, and after a week's suffering he passed peacefully away.

REV. MARCUS RAINSFORD, SEN.

Our readers will hear with regret of the death at Cromarty, in Scotland, on Sunday week, of Rev. Marcus Rainsford, for over thirty years minister of Belgrave Chapel, Pimlico. Mr. Rainsford died after only three days' illness. He had for some time been in failing health, and recently had a slight stroke of paralysis, from which, however, he partially recovered. The early years of his ministry were passed in Ireland, where he was for ten years curate of Holy Trinity, Dromore, and from 1854 to 1866 Vicar of Dundalk, the seat of the Earl of Roden. In the latter year he received the appointment to the incumbency of Belgrave Chapel, and his ministry there has been distinctly successful. Last year we gave a sketch of Mr. Rainsford's ministerial life. Many London friends will recollect with pleasure the prominent part he took in the Gospel mission held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey at Wandsworth.

REV. DR. J. H. WILSON.

The death is announced, at the residence of his son at Blackheath, of Rev. James H. Wilson, D.D., aged eighty-six. He was for many years associated in an official capacity with the Congregational denomination, and for some years, up to the time of his death, was honorary secretary of the Congregational Memorial Hall and Library in Farringdon-street. He was educated for the ministry at Aberdeen University, and became minister of the Congregational church in that city in 1853. During his ministerial life in Scotland he was closely identified with Dr. Guthrie in the work of the Ragged Church Missions, and was one of the earliest pioneers in the temperance movement in Scotland. He was for over twenty years secretary of the Home Missionary Society. In this work he was brought into close contact with the late Mr. Samuel Morley, with whom he visited all parts of the country on behalf of the Society. On his retirement from this position he accepted the charge of the New Kent-road Congregational Church, which he held for a few years. He was an intimate friend of John Bright and Joseph Sturge, and took part in many campaigns with the latter philanthropist.

MR. GEORGE PALMER.

Mr. George Palmer, founder of the firm of Huntley and Palmer, biscuit manufacturers, died at Reading, last week, after a long illness. He was born in 1818, and was the head—as he was practically the founder—of the great house of Huntley and Palmer, "biscuit bakers to the Queen." Coming from Somersetshire when quite a young man, he joined his cousin, the late Thomas Huntley, in a small baker and confectioner's business at Reading; and in 1850, his tastes lying in that direction, he invented a machine for cutting and stamping biscuits, which proved to be entirely revolutionary of the ancient trade of biscuit making. Mr. George Palmer, like his brother William, was a consistent member of the Society of Friends and a staunch teetotaler. Almost his last public act was, in conjunction with his brother, Mr. Samuel Palmer, to present to the town a valuable site for the erection of an art gallery as a memorial of their brother, Mr. William Isaac Palmer, who died, generally lamented, in the year 1893. This gallery is now in course of construction. Mr. Palmer was a somewhat extensive landowner in Berkshire and the adjoining counties, and was an excellent and considerate landlord. He was most liberal in the judicious distribution of his great wealth. He leaves a family of four sons and three daughters. The funeral took place on Monday, at the Friends' Burial-ground, Reading.

REV. J. S. CALLIS, UGANDA.

The death is reported of Rev. J. S. Callis, at Toro, Uganda. The Woolwich Herald gives particulars of his life and work. Mr. Callis was born at Ipswich in 1870, and received his early education at Norwich Grammar School. After taking his B.A. degree he became a lay worker, under the direction of Prebendary Webb-Peploe, at St. Paul's, Onslow-square, where he developed an intensity of spirit in his work which ever after characterised him. In 1892 Mr. Callis went to Wycliffe Hall, and was ordained to the diaconate at Rochester Cathedral. His only curacy was that of All Saints', Shooter's Hill, of which the Rev. the Hon. Talbot Rice was then vicar. Into the various good works connected with the parish he threw himself with all his characteristic energy and devotedness. On reaching Uganda he received orders to proceed to Toro, about 200 miles farther into the heart of the Dark Continent. The heartiness of Mr. Callis's reception and welcome by the Christian King David and his people filled him with joy and gratitude for the call to such a post of service. Mr. Callis was the first ordained missionary appointed to that most distant and outlying station, and his first duty was to journey from centre to centre in which the Buganda teachers had been, gathering converts. But the work no sooner began than the labourer was called from the field. Two brief months, and he rested from his labours.

Personalia.

Mr. S. Woods, M.P., has, it is stated, accepted the editorship of The British Workman.

The late Rev. J. MacNeil.—A memoir of this Australian evangelist is being edited for the press by Rev. H. B. Macartney, of Melbourne.

Dr. Moulton and a Sunday at the Leys School, Cambridge, are described and fully illustrated in the September issue of Sunday Hours (R.T.S.).

Miss Cusack has had a very severe illness, which her medical advisers expected would prove fatal. She is now recovering, unexpectedly, and is at present at Weymouth.

Dr. Newman Hall.—We deeply regret to hear of the serious illness of Dr. Newman Hall, in Switzerland. Some Alpine notes from his pen appear in our present issue.

Pastor A. G. Brown has been presented by his friends at the East London Tabernacle with a testimonial consisting of an illuminated address, accompanied by a sum of £300.

Rev. Thomas Lydiatt of the Liverpool Evangelisation Society has received from friends and fellow labourers a token of their personal esteem in the shape of a gold watch, on attaining his sixtieth birthday.

Mr. Thomas Lund, a well-known member of the United Methodist Free Church, bequeathed to the Pudsey Church the sum of £1500. He also bequeathed large amounts to various charities in Bradford.

Mr. Henry Varley, whose letter on American matters is given on a preceding page, will preach at West London Tabernacle, Notting Hill, on Sunday next, at eleven and seven. He is returning to New York in a few days.

Ex-Bailie Lewis, J.P., a noted temperance reformer of Edinburgh, is sketched in the Dundee Advertiser of Friday last. He has been prominently associated with the temperance movement in Scotland since its origin.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon left London on Monday week, intending to spend the next month on a holiday tour. During his absence, Mr. Charles Spurgeon will, in addition to occupying the Tabernacle pulpit, also undertake the presidential duties of the College.

Mrs. G. E. Ardill, of Sydney, has arrived in this country, accompanied by Miss Murcutt, of the W.C.T.U. They will be glad of opportunities to give Gospel temperance addresses or lantern lectures on life in the Australian colonies. Communications may be addressed to the care of our publishers.

The late Jean Ingelow, the poet, is the subject of an appreciative tribute by Mrs. Fyvie Mayo in the Sunday at Home for September. She was, says Mrs. Mayo, "a living proof that high literary effort need not bate one tittle of womanly domesticity, nor blemish the most delicately dignified reserve."

Rev. Dr. Dallinger, the famed Wesleyan preacher and scientist, is the subject of a sketch, with portrait, in the forthcoming number of The Leisure Hour. "By sermon and lecture he finds his joy in keeping in touch with his fellow men, learned and unlearned alike, and sharing with them the treasure trove of his arduous life."

Rev. Alexander Kersey, a representative of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, is paying a second visit to this country. He is open to engagements to preach and lecture, his rule being to give his Sunday services without charge and make a collection on some week-evening for the work he represents. His present address is 2, Charmouth-place, Beeston Hill, Leeds.

Mr. Andrew Spence, a native of Canada, but for thirteen years resident in California, is a bicycle missionary. His cycle is fitted up with various appliances. He has rigged it with a sail, which is a great help with a favourable wind. The Ten Commandments are printed on the sail, and on the mast and yardarms he displays religious charts. He has already covered large distances on his wheel.

Mr. Nestorius Marcus, of Urumiah, Persia, who is pursuing a course of study in Edinburgh, and has the endorsement of college professors and others, will be glad of opportunities to address meetings on life in the East, or tell the story of his own remarkable career. Mr. Marcus speaks English well, and has a warm evangelistic spirit. Further information may be had from Mr. Grant Jackson, 44, Dick-place, Edinburgh.

Mr. Moody.—The American daily Press has circulated a report calculated to cause surprise among the friends of Mr. Moody. It was said that he was to cease from active work, and that Rev. Wm. Patterson, of Montreal, was to be his "successor." But from Northfield comes the assurance (says an American contemporary) that the famous evangelist is in the best of health, and that he has no intention of giving up his work.

Mr. Budgett Meakin writes from Tangier (where he has been at work on his forthcoming book on Moorish life) that he hopes to return to England in September, to fulfil his lecturing engagements. He is open also to deliver addresses descriptive of Christian work abroad, and to take evangelistic or other services free of charge. Address, El Manor, Parliament Hill, Hampstead, N.W. Mr. Meakin will have the sympathy of many of our readers in the loss of his father, who recently passed away after a prolonged and painful illness.

Rev. Robert Mackay has for more than three years been the efficient secretary of the Christian Instruction Society and Deaconess' Mission. Believing that the regular income of the society did not warrant the payment of his salary, he resigned the position, and his resignation has been regretfully accepted by the committee. Next month Mr. Mackay intends to take a holiday and business trip to Canada. His friends think it a favourable moment to join in asking his acceptance of some useful present as a token of personal regard. Mr. E. Wilson Gates, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, is hon. treasurer of the fund.

The Lambeth Conference.

"Abide in Me!" this was the last great note
That thrilled the minister, where, two hundred strong,
Bishops of Britain's world-wide Church and tongue
Knelt at the mother shrine from lands remote.

Thence to the world's last bound, O fishers ye
Of Galilean line, God's net cast forth
Meshed with wide mercy; so get heaven new mirth,
Dare for such deathless spoils life's stormiest sea!

Abide in Me—the Everlasting Now!
Abide in Me—the one Eternal Whence!
Abide, and crucify the question How!
Abide, and triumphing o'er time and sense,
Wield with faith's meek audacity the sword,
Of truth's grand child-words left by Calvary's Lord.

Rev. Charles A. Fox in the Record.

Palestine Flowers.—Mrs. Howie, of Shweir, Mount Lebanon, Syria, has collected, pressed, and beautifully mounted on cards, flowers of Palestine. For a P.O. of 5s. on Beyrout, Syria, an assortment of twenty of these cards will be posted to any address.

A Link with the Past.—By the death of Mr. Donald Maclean, over whose remains the grave has closed at Kilpatrick, Mull, another link with the past has been snapped. Born a short distance from Fort William and in close proximity to the Caledonian Canal, at which he wrought, under the supervision of his father, in his youth, in 1795, he completed 102 years in June last. The large concourse of people who attended his funeral at Kilpatrick, seven miles from Phionphort, testified to the esteem in which he was held in the district. He was an ardent member of the Free Church, in whose affairs, until incapacitated by age, he took a deep and active interest.

The Orchard Mission is an unsectarian Christian work carried on in Blue Anchor Lane, Peckham, by a number of honorary workers who have been "at it" now for some ten years. The result is that efforts originally confined to open-air services among the poor children of the neighbourhood have extended to the conversion of an old house into a Mission Room. Here the story of Jesus and his love has been faithfully told and much fruit gathered to the praise of God. Much of the success is due to the fact that each home around the Mission is visited for Bible reading, a kindly word, and prayer. The workers engaged in this branch of service receive a very cordial welcome from the poor folk. In cases of temporary sickness relief has been given. It is impossible to enumerate all the departments of work which sanctified ingenuity has devised. Mr. G. T. Binstead, 95, High Street, Peckham, S.E., is one of the hon. secretaries, and the regular sources of income stand in much need of augmentation.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Mr. James Wrigley, a missionary in China, has succumbed to an attack of typhus fever.

The Bishop of Pretoria has accepted the office of a vice-president of the Church Missionary Society.

Dean Farrar is spending a few weeks in the North of Ireland, accompanied by the Bishop of Tasmania and Mrs. Montgomery.

Fifty guineas have been sent by the Corporation of London to the Church Army in aid of the Society's work among the outcast.

The health of the Bishop of Bedford, who has been a complete invalid for the past few years, is occasioning some anxiety to his friends.

It is announced that the division of the diocese of Western Equatorial Africa has been decided on, and that Bishop Tucker will become Bishop of Uganda.

The Archbishop of York recently opened a new Seamen's Institute at Sandside, Scarborough, in connection with a mission which was started some six years ago by the Bishop of Hull.

By the death of the Bishop of Wakefield, the Bishop of Norwich is entitled to take his seat in the House of Lords. Dr. Sheepshanks was appointed to the see of Norwich in 1893 by Mr. Gladstone.

The appointment of Rev. J. A. Dodd, rector of Lower Heyford, Oxfordshire, to the living of South Hackney will bring back to London one who was formerly amongst the most popular of the East-end clergy.

Rev. W. Carlile, hon. chief secretary of the Church Army, has received the following letter:—"The Queen deeply appreciates and sympathises with the excellent work in which the Church Army is engaged."

The Bishop of Rochester and the Hon. Mrs. Talbot, accompanied by Canon Gore, propose to spend the months of September and October in the United States, the diocese being left in charge of the Bishop Suffragan of Southwark.

The Archbishop of York has addressed an appeal to his clergy on behalf of the Pastoral Letter Fund, upon the collections for which the Diocesan Church Extension Society and Board of Education depend largely for their annual incomes.

Goodwood Races were the scene of vigorous evangelistic work carried on by the Chichester Diocesan Church Army van missioners, in conjunction with the C.E.T.S. A number of meetings were held on the course, and it is believed much good has been done.

The open-air services held on Douglas Head, Isle of Man, are being attended by great crowds of attentive listeners. Canon Denton Thompson, of Southport, in the opening service said it reminded him of the great open-air congregations of the Gospels.

It is announced that Rev. A. F. Winnington Ingram is to be the new Canon of St. Paul's, in place of the Bishop Designate of Bristol. Mr. Winnington Ingram has worked hard in the squalid neighbourhood of Bethnal Green for many years, and has done much to improve the condition of the poor people there.

The report of the Church Pastoral Aid Society shows considerable progress made during the past year. Upwards of £66,000 has been voted for clerical and lay assistance in the poorer parishes of the kingdom. The society seeks to throw its strength into the great centres of population, and the chief towns of Lancashire are well supplied with Church Pastoral Aid Society workers.

Two South London clergymen have found it necessary, on account of ill-health, to resign their incumbencies—Rev. T. G. Gardiner, vicar of St. George the Martyr's, Southwark, and Rev. F. G. Sanders, vicar of St. Saviour's, Brixton Hill. Mr. Gardiner ceased to officiate last week, but the resignation of Mr. Sanders, who has held the living for eighteen years, will not take effect until October.

The vicarage of Clifton, one of the most important benefices in the gift of the Simeon Trustees, has been offered to the Rev. G. S. Streatfield, honorary canon of Rochester, who for the last fourteen years has been vicar of Emmanuel Church, Streatham. The Rev. H. Nevile Sherbrooke, the present incumbent, is resigning the living on account of ill-health, but will continue to live in Clifton.

It is stated that the general subscriptions to the Archbishop Benson Memorial Fund amount to £2000, and that in addition to this the Governors of Wellington College, of which Dr. Benson was the first head master, will contribute £500 in order to make up the amount required to build a new aisle to the school chapel, which is the work intended to be carried out in commemoration of the labours of the late Archbishop.

Congregational.

A large assembly hall in connection with the Social Settlement at Ipswich is being built to meet an urgent requirement.

The unveiling of the memorial statue of Dr. R. W. Dale in the Art Gallery, Birmingham, will probably take place in the middle of October.

Over £3000 has been subscribed towards the Murphy Memorial Hall in Lambeth. The building will seat 1000 persons, and vestries and class-rooms will be provided.

Dr. Isaac C. Meserve, who was pastor of Davenport Church, New Haven, U.S.A., for twenty-three years, has resigned his charge, and is now on a visit to this country.

Rev. G. Y. Jeffreys, who in 1857 became pastor of the first Congregational church in Natal, after forty years' work in South Africa, is now staying at Glastonbury for twelve months.

Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., and Mr. Mark Oldroyd, M.P., have each promised a contribution of £1000 to the national fund of £100,000 which it is proposed to raise for church extension in large towns in connection with the Congregational Union.

Mr. Alderman Evan Spicer and Rev. D. B. Hooke have been warmly welcomed at Cape Town, and are now visiting Johannesburg and other stations en route. Mr. Hooke hopes to be in England in time for the autumnal meetings at Birmingham.

Rev. T. Lee Hutson has been invited to remain at St. Andrew's-road Church, Birmingham, at the termination of his present engagement. It has been decided to erect a new church at a cost of £2500, towards which £400 has been promised.

Rev. W. H. Richards at the annual meeting of the church at Kimberley reports progress in every direction. There have been ninety-two members added to the church during the year, and the number now on the roll is 393. During the present pastorate (five years) 376 new members have been admitted to fellowship. A Bible-class for lads has been successfully carried on.

Calls.—Rev. J. B. Rudall, of Plymouth, to Rowland Hill's Tabernacle, Wotton-under-Edge; Rev. J. A. Hamilton, to Penzance; Rev. D. Wynne Evans, Llanelly, to Queen-street Welsh Church, Chester; Rev. W. Butterworth, of Tutbury, to Bedworth; Rev. D. G. Evans, of Llanelly, to Gelli Church, Rhondda Valley.

Resignations.—Rev. W. Tucker, of Princes-street Church, Gravesend.

Baptist.

A revision of the Bengali Bible has just been completed by Dr. Rouse, of the Baptist mission.

A new church, to seat 350 persons, erected at a cost of £750, has been opened at Pokesdown, Hants.

Rev. F. G. Kemp has been appointed chaplain to the Baptist troops stationed at Aldershot.

Rev. T. Atkins, of Canada, is on a visit to Chard, where he was formerly engaged as a colporteur.

Rev. F. J. Walkey has resigned the pastorate at Sherborne for the purpose of continuing his college training.

The managers of the Baptist congregation have purchased the ground at the corner of Shore-street, Gourock, with the intention of erecting a church on the site.

More trouble is apparently brewing for Baptists in Russia, the Holy Synod having convened a conference at Kasan to discuss the best means of checking the progress of "heterodox" bodies.

The local battalions of Volunteers at Abersychan attended service at the English Baptist church. At the close of the service the men's officers expressed the desire that the invitation may be repeated.

The work started by Pastor Thomas Wheatley at West Green Hall, London, nearly two years ago, is increasing, and friends are negotiating for a piece of ground on which to erect an iron building suitable for the work.

The report of the Cambuslang Baptist Church Flower and Sick Aid Mission states that during the past year nearly 2000 bouquets of flowers have been taken to the sick in the district, besides jellies, beef-tea, grapes oranges, etc. Over 500 fresh eggs have also been distributed throughout the district, and also several carts of coals.

Call.—Mr. Bosworth, of Rawdon College, to King-street Church, Wigan.

Resignation. — Rev. H. S. Boulton, of Heaton-road Church, Peckham.

Methodist.

There are ninety national schools in Ireland under Methodist management, with 9562 scholars on the rolls.

The General P.M. missionary secretary, Rev. J. Smith, has been lecturing on his African experiences in St. Heliers.

A new church to seat 120 is being erected at Swymbridge, Barnstaple circuit, on a site given by the Duke of Bedford.

Rev. J. Headley, of South-street Methodist New Connexion Chapel, has gone to China to take up missionary work there.

At Barrack Hill Bible Christian Chapel, Newport (Mon.), a Society of Christians has been started with very satisfactory results.

Rev. W. E. Daly, of Ballymacarrett, Belfast, will succeed Rev. R. Jamison as superintendent of Newry circuit at next Conference.

The Methodist Times of last week has the first of a series of articles by Rev. H. Burton on the rise and growth of American Methodism.

It is to be hoped that the Primitive Methodist missionaries at Jamestown, West Africa, will enjoy better health in the new mission house now almost completed.

A donation of £100 has been given by the Methodist Trust Assurance Company, of Manchester, to the Irish Methodist Ministers' Superannuation Fund.

Rev. R. Woolfenden (United Methodist F.C.), of Ningpo, has had to return home on account of ill-health, but hopes to be able to go back to China early in 1898.

It is arranged that a great united rally of the Primitive Methodist London First District Christian Endeavour Committee should be held at Stoke Newington in October.

Rev. George Lowndes, of Bridlington Quay United Methodist Church, has accepted an invitation to Brunswick Church, Burnley, for next year, in succession to Rev. Jos. Hocking.

It is desirable that parcels of saleable articles should be sent as soon as possible to the Mission House for the Wesleyan Missionary Exhibition and Sale of Work, which is to be held in London next October.

The United Methodist F.C. propose to increase, as soon as possible, the minimum salary of ministers in full connexion from £100 to £110 per year. Every minister is also entitled to a furnished house with rent and taxes paid.

The twenty-third annual report of the Primitive Methodist Sunday School Union, recently published, shows that since the formation of the Connexional Christian Endeavour movement a year ago the number of the societies has rapidly increased, until now 587 societies are registered, and every week additions are being made to that number.

The South-east London Primitive Methodist Mission has raised £2000 towards the new hall and schools to be built in the Old Kent-road. This is supplemented by a promise of £2000 from the General Missionary Committee. It is intended to devote all the money raised at the stone-laying and opening services to a fund for the purchasing of the freehold.

The South-east London Mission connected with the Primitive Methodists, superintended by Rev. James Flanagan, reports that during the last twelve months over £2000 has been raised towards the hall and schools proposed to be erected in the Old Kent-road. The Missionary Committee has engaged to provide another £2000. Mr. Flanagan reports that he is now commencing to raise a further £1000, which he purposes to obtain by next May, after which the building operations are to be commenced.

Presbyterian.

Principal Prys has sent £150 worth of standard works to the Treveca College Library.

The Moderator of the Synod, Rev. H. L. Mackenzie, returns to his work in China on November 5.

Miss Legate, the Assembly's missionary at Damascus, has resigned, owing to ill-health; and Miss Gill, daughter of the late Rev. Dr. S. M. Gill, has been appointed in her stead.

The annual Conference of the English Churches is to be held in Swansea September 21, 22, and 23. Revs. Dr. Denny and Ellis Edwards, Bala College, are to preach the Conference sermons.

Revs. Principal Dykes, Dr. J. Murray Mitchell, Dr. David MacEwan, A. Halliday Douglas, and Mrs. Lewis will take part in the forthcoming annual conference of the Evangelical Alliance at Cambridge.

Next March the Otago Presbyterian Church will celebrate its jubilee, and the Colonial Committee of the Free Church will send out a deputy to be present. Founded by Dr. Burns, it began with one minister and one congregation. It has now eighty-eight charges and ministers, and is in a flourishing condition.

The English Presbyterian Women's Missionary Association supports nineteen lady missionaries in China, as well as native teachers, Bible-women, and school matrons. There are also three agents in India. The Association's agents have 500 girls under instruction, and country visiting is engaged in at 140 out-stations.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE Bishop of London, in his Diocesan Magazine, has written an important letter on the School Board controversy. On the whole, it is a model of wisdom and moderation. He asks that the operations of the Board should be conducted with entire fairness towards the other (voluntary) class of schools, and that the Christianity of the Board's own schools should be, so far as the Board can obtain this, a real Christianity. This, he says, is no question between Church and Dissent, but the broad question whether the teaching should be the teaching of a Gospel and a Saviour, and not merely that of "a Christianity with an ad libitum dilution, or of morality with a Christian tinge." While every consideration should be shown in pressing this matter home—and it would be probably unwise to apply tests to the teachers, or what they would deem to be such—there should be, at least, no obscurity about the Board's intention and desire in this matter.

As to the suggestion of putting the Apostle's Creed upon the syllabus, the Bishop favours this with his warmest sympathy, but thinks it would be wiser to authorise and recommend rather than to compel its use.

Let us remember that in a compromise system like the School Board it is impossible to put things too logically, and unjust not to secure a real freedom of career for the teachers.

Finally, he recommends "the Church's special duty of quiet and continuing prayer to God, who can guide all things according to the counsel of his will." The letter breathes throughout a spirit of conviction tempered with charity. Those who disagree with the Bishop, equally with those who are of his mind, would do well to enter the contest in this mood. Controversies often do more harm by the temper in which they are carried on than through the issues involved.

The Church Times repudiates the right of the "Wesleyans" to call themselves by that name, and claims John and Charles Wesley as Anglicans of the High order, who believed in the sacrifice offered in the Communion and in a sacred priesthood. The true Wesleyans are the High Churchmen. To all which The Methodist Recorder replies with good-natured contempt :—

If the readers of The Church Times find any satisfaction in calling themselves the "true Wesleyans," by all means let them do so, and at the same time imbibe somewhat more of John Wesley's type of "Catholicism." The Church and the world will be the better for it.

The same claim is made by this High Church organ to the Puritan party. Thus history is being rewritten in a manner which is certainly novel and amusing, if not altogether illuminating.

Archbishop Leighton drew a true distinction when he said that Christian unity is not caused by a disdainful indifference, by thinking one religion as good as another; that is not union, but confusion, not a knitting together, but a freezing together. Heat first makes a separation of things that differ, and then unites those that are of the same nature. Hence all our efforts at union can only be successful as the heat of the love of Christ and the fire of the Spirit have cleared away our sins and made it possible for us to be of one heart and one soul.

By the death of Sir George Osborne Morgan the cause of religious freedom and liberty of conscience loses a champion who, while holding his own opinion with tenacious grip, yet was untainted by that rabid bigotry which sees no good in an opponent and no truth in an opponent's beliefs. If it be true that "virtue is a mean between two extremes," then Sir George was virtuous, for he had a level head and a charitable heart that enabled him to look at social questions from many points of view, and yet "make no compromise with sin." His career has been a remarkable instance, not so much of genius or great natural ability, but of unswerving devotion to duty and unflagging perseverance in the work to which he put his hand. The House of Commons could do with a few more of the same type to-day.

What would be the condition of England to-day but for its unpaid workers? Think of the gratuitous labour and self-denial represented by Sunday-school teaching alone. A large proportion of the spiritual influences of the country are thus maintained; and this goes on from generation to generation. Surely we have here an indication of the Divine origin and motive power of true religion. What uninspired tenets or secular purposes could command so noble an army of active volunteers?

The number of young people engaged as Sunday-school teachers is always a noticeable and cheering sign, and we would not in the least discourage it. But there is also something to be said for the enrolment of elder men and women, not to displace, but to augment them. There are, we believe, many competent persons of mature age and experience who would be glad of opportunities to occupy and improve their present, instead of being left in leisure to contemplate, and perhaps mourn, their past. And many a Sunday-school would be the better of a few such helpers.

Apropos of this, an esteemed correspondent thinks that while

Women will be found the best teachers for infants and for boys up to ten or twelve, none but men should take lads between twelve and eighteen. Control over the budding male mind is not safe in other hands between these ages, all open as it is to levity and bad influence.

Mere abstract Bible reading is of little effect unless applied with the personal experience of mature life to illustrate it. Women and youth can hardly do this for restless boys just entering life, choosing their calling and studying their immediate future. It is rather the duty of men who can teach, from their own experience, the lesson of the battle of life, and point out by personal knowledge the dangers and pitfalls of early years.

The reports published in the American papers concerning the rush to the Klondyke gold fields form mixed reading. The prevailing tone is one of continued warning and discouragement owing to the terrible hardships of the climate. The rose-coloured accounts of the fortunes made unfortunately came first, and many thousands in a boundless thirst for wealth have gone out to make a carnival of death during the winter. Already there are countless victims. One miner who has escaped with a fortune—and a ruined constitution—says that four years ago he was a sturdy, healthy fellow, 6ft. tall; now he is a cripple for life and badly broken in health. He says that all the gold brought out of the country does not represent the findings of individual miners, a large proportion being the confiscated effects of miners who have died from exposure. "What doth it profit a man to gain the whole world if he lose his own life," is a text these gold-seekers would do well to remember.

The popular imagination is struck by the spectacle presented to Europe just now—the autocrat of all the Russias hobnobbing with the erstwhile tanner who represents the people of France. There would be nothing remarkable in these two meeting as men, for human nature is a given quantity in all grades of society, but they meet as rulers, and as such the spectacle is significant. Republicanism and autocracy do not often join hands, but this unequally yoking together of two rulers may rouse the Russian peasantry to see the superior position of their brothers in France, and it may also do something to humanise the Russian Government in its treatment of the serfs who form the peasantry of its vast acres.

Two independent and reliable authorities have published their views of the future of Turkey, and are in complete accord. Prof. W. M. Ramsay, whose twelve years' sojourn in Asia Minor has resulted in such light on the journeys of St. Paul, and on the authenticity of the Book of Acts, has published a book called "Impressions of Asia Minor" (Hodder and Stoughton); and M. C. Werl, a Swiss, who has studied the same ground, has written a series of letters to a Zurich paper. They agree that it is hopeless to expect anything like progress under Turkish rule, and that the hope of the Near East is to be found in an extension of Grecian influence—an idea that has lately been discounted owing to the results of the late war. M. Werl quotes a remarkable opinion of Von Moltke, who also spent years in Turkey, and which leans in the same direction. That eminent strategist and keen observer said :—

I have come to believe that there is only one possible solution of the Eastern problem which can be said to be a natural solution, and that is the creation of a Christian-Byzantine kingdom, with Constantinople as its capital, independent alike of Russia and Austria; and I do not see how such a kingdom can be formed except through Hellas.

Prof. Ramsay utters the melancholy prophecy that in one direction the policy of the Sultan has been completely successful, and that the Armenians are likely to be exterminated, "except the remnant that escapes to other lands." The rush of events in the East has of late quite overshadowed the original trouble which gave rise to these complications. The terrible massacres of the last two years, have given place to a steady, persistent persecution on a small scale. For eight centuries these poor people have survived all attacks on their faith and their nationality. It would seem to be reserved for the reign of the "Concert of Europe" to see their utter extinction. A more shameful spectacle of the callous subordination of the interests of humanity to political expediency and intrigue has never been witnessed in history, and it is bound to bring some terrible judgment in its train.

When we consider that for half a century we have been the political allies and supporters of the Turkish empire, which would long ago have come to its natural end but for our help and countenance, and then read the following indictment of the course of Byzantine rule, is it not enough to brand us with inconsistency and hypocrisy? Professor Ramsay says:—

> The action of the Turks in every department of life has simply been to ruin, never to rebuild. It is not merely the cities, the buildings, and the governments of old Rome that they destroyed. Their work was far more thorough and far more dangerous. They destroyed the intellectual and moral institutions of a nation; they broke up and dissolved almost the entire social fabric; they annihilated every educative and humanising influence in the land; and they brought back great parts of the country to the primitive simplicity of nomadic life.

These facts ought to make it impossible for England ever again to link herself to an alliance that is the enemy alike of God and humanity. The national conscience ought to rise against the slightest attempt to buttress up Turkey in future.

Mr. Baring-Gould has, in an evil hour been induced to write "A Study of St. Paul," for he has done it as "a man of the world, a novelist with some experience of life, and some acquaintance of the springs of conduct that actuate mankind." His opinion of Stephen shows that he is unable to understand some of the purest and strongest motives that have actuated the best of men, for he says:

> To certain tempers, where there is no breeding, the opportunity of saying offensive things gives positive satisfaction, rendered acute if those addressed be superiors in position and in educational endowment...The Deacon gathered together what he could out of the history of the nation wherewith to affront his hearers.

If this was Stephen's purpose, to gratify his bad breeding, the same thing may be alleged against many of the psalmists, against the prophets, and against our Lord Himself. But bad breeding has not been confounded by Jews and Christians for thousands of years with righteous faithfulness. Paul, according to his latest biographer, "could not bear to have his will crossed." Timothy followed him with blind docility. This, and much more of the same kind, shows that novel writing is not necessarily a qualification for writing about an apostle.

A striking article in The Spectator on "Two Types of Self-made Men" emphasises a distinction which has recently been illustrated in such men as Barney Barnato on the one side, and Isaac Holden and George Palmer on the other. The former represents the men who think only of themselves, who exploit the labour and the energies of others with a single eye to increasing their own wealth, and who have none of the great elements of character which make the possession of wealth a blessing to the world. The two other men stand for honest inventive power, organising faculty, steady industry, and earnest religious faith. Barnato believed all men to be as selfish as himself, and acted accordingly, squandering his constitution as lavishly as he heaped up his gains, and dying miserably by his own hand at forty-five, his life was "played out." Sir Isaac Holden and Mr. George Palmer died at almost twice his age, honoured, lamented, and in sure hope of a blessed immortality. The contrast is as dramatic as it is vital. The Psalmist was envious at the prosperity of the wicked, "till he considered their end." The apostle with clearer vision, pointed out that "Godliness is profitable for all things, having promise of this life, and of that which is to come."

The late war between China and Japan seems likely to work as much good, if not more, to the defeated as to the victors. Rev. T. B. Richard, a Baptist missionary in China, and a keen observer, bears emphatic testimony to the contrast in the attitude of the educated classes in that country before and since the war. It is difficult, he says, to make Western people realise the contempt with which foreign teachers were regarded before the war. Now the leading people in the various provinces are seeking the white teachers, asking their advice about the best methods of education, and schools on Western principles are being started in all directions. What the result of this movement will be no one can tell. It will at least remove that contemptuous quality of the Chinese mind, which has so far been the greatest barrier to the progress of Christianity.

Objection is often made to Christian converts in India, and especially to the native Christian servant. To which Mr. Lefroy, in a paper on "Work in the Delhi Mission," replies by pointing out that the number of native Christians who are servants is very small, not ten out of a congregation of 470, and that even admitting these ten to be bad, there still remain the 460 to be accounted for. These servants also generally drift to the cantonments, and are no fair representation of the converts of native congregations, which comprise men engaged in all manner of callings. A South India missionary testifies that in his congregation of 250 to 400 persons there are only four who are servants. Mr. Lefroy is justified in begging all military men, civilians, and tourists alike "to remember the very serious responsibility they incur by giving utterance to such light and ill-considered judgments." He appeals chiefly to military men who have served in India, and who seldom know the language or the peculiarities of native life.

According to the annual report of the Board of Trade, the loss to creditors through bankruptcies last year was less than that of any previous period whose statistics are available, being about a third less than the year before. But there was a great increase in the number of failures through extravagance and gambling. In one case extravagance led two persons to incur a debt of £335,000, while their united assets are scarcely £1800. "Financial and speculative enterprise" account for a large proportion of loss, and reckless dealings on the part of trustees and solicitors. Another fruitful cause of loss is the iniquitous conduct of money-lenders who make an unprincipled use of the power they gain over their clients. If these items be deducted from the total, the result will show that an unusual wave of commercial prosperity has passed over the country. "To whom much is given, from them shall much be required."

Professor Witherspoon, of Louisville, Kentucky, in discussing the question of how the non-church-going masses are to be reached, deals with the always obvious and always difficult point that they must be made to feel that they are welcome in our churches. He thinks that the people do feel themselves to be welcome in the Roman Catholic Church, and that because nothing is done to weld any Roman Catholic congregation into a social unit. The Roman Catholic Church "is a place of worship, not of social recognition. Rich and poor are willing to meet there, because they are not expected to know each other outside the door." The same thing, we believe, may be said of a great many Protestant churches, but the isolation and exclusiveness are not supposed to be an attraction. Dr. Witherspoon has, however, a good deal on his side when he says of our social endeavours to bring all classes together, we "only advertise and make more apparent the social lines that, right or wrong, we cannot obliterate." An ordinary social meeting often practically means half a dozen small meetings in the larger ones.

Dr. Witherspoon carries us with him when he declares that if in any church of five hundred members every member could be induced to see privately and invite cordially to the church services every non-church-goer of his acquaintance, the church would soon be filled. Mr. Moody knows how to use this personal element. Sunday afternoons would be fruitful of good Sunday nights if spent by Christians in calling upon persons in the neighbourhood of their churches, and inviting them to come. But it needs patience and faith, for one call is not enough. The work needs constant attention, doing over and over again, especially where the population is changeable.

At the Newcastle-on-Tyne Licensing Sessions the Chief Constable presented a report which contained several recommendations that are good for other places besides the busy coal capital. He has so reformed the abuses of the bottle and jug departments that "surreptitious drinking by females has received a wholesome check." He would like the magistrates to prohibit the use of back doors by customers, "such doors being for the most part used by females and habitual tipplers." Then, again, he and his officers are of opinion that "a great deal of domestic unhappiness and juvenile depravity are, to a great extent due to the habit of lazy and intemperate parents sending young children to public-houses for drink at all hours and in all seasons, thereby exposing them to bad examples and most mischievous influences." It is an excellent thing for a city to have a good Chief Constable. We have known one or two where he is much too friendly with the publicans.

An interesting educational experiment has recently been carried out with great success at the Battersea Polytechnic. Hitherto it has been taken for granted by educationists that it is advisable to separate boys and girls into different schools or departments. Mr. S. H. Wells, principal of the institution, has just published the results of an attempt to bring up boys and girls under a system by which they mix more or less freely in work and play. Both intellectually and morally the results are pronounced excellent. He says that this joint education softens the manners and habits of the boys, and that the girls are made more dignified, self-reliant, serious, and zealous. These results are worth pondering by all interested in education.

Hindering the Gospel.

By Rev. F. C. SPURR.

ST. PAUL had many hopes, all of which were surely grounded, and to which our attention is being frequently directed in the sacred writings. But he had also at least one great fear which is expressed most succinctly in his Epistle to the Corinthians, "Lest we should hinder the Gospel of Christ." In the context he is speaking of his undoubted "rights"—the right to marry, the right to refrain from manual labour, the right to live well. Then, having vindicated these, he speaks with great humility of his voluntary renunciation of them all, adding as his reason for so doing, "Lest we should hinder the Gospel of Christ." Earlier in the same Epistle he expresses, in other words, the same fear. This university man, who has at his command the wealth of the world's literature and its wisdom, elects to leave unused these riches, in so far as their employment in preaching is concerned, again giving as his reason, "Lest the Cross of Christ should be made of none effect." So that he makes a double renunciation—the one of personal preferences, the other of official privileges, and these are made in order to give an unimpeded course to the Gospel. The hence the worker's views and preferences must be severely subservient to the chief thing. Whatever else happens the work must not be hindered.

WORK IS GREATER THAN ANY WORKER;

The presence of such a fear in the heart of any Christian worker must be in his life an element of great strength, for it is at once a restraint placed upon forces which easily take a false bias, and a liberation, through restraint, of these forces for God.

There are morbid fears which derange the lives of those in whom they hold sway, and there are wholesome fears which help to steady us. Every true life has its wholesome fear—the fear of failure, of disgrace, or of collapse; and many a man is more indebted to his fear than he is aware of.

The Apostle's fear was lest the Gospel should be hindered. We must first bring before ourselves the fact that it is within our power to hinder the Gospel. The recollection of this opens a great and a grave question as to the relations between the Divine purpose and man's free will. Yet, without entering into the theology of the case, it is an undoubted fact that men have hindered and do hinder the Gospel of Christ. On one occasion the hands of Jesus were locked, and "He could do no mighty work because of their unbelief." The sin of man does in some mysterious way check the operations of God—at least for a time. Sadder than this is the thought that men who are ostensibly devoted to Christ, and whose interests seem identical with his, may yet hinder the Gospel. And the hindrance from within is always more cruel and deadly than the hindrance from without, although it may not be meant.

"Hinder" is a much milder word than "resist." Resistance of the Gospel comes from persons who hate its message and its claims, and who are determined to prevent it getting further foothold. Hindrance of the Gospel may be the work of people who are under solemn pledges to further its interests, but who nevertheless are determined to further their own interests also. St. Paul mentions two things which hinder the Gospel. First, the preaching of spiritual things in an unspiritual dialect, and, second, the tenacious clinging to one's personal "rights." Let us look at these two things in turn.

"Christ sent me to preach the Gospel, not with wisdom of words, lest the Cross of Christ should be made of none effect" (1 Cor. i. 17). A preacher of the Cross is not free to choose his own vocabulary; his dialect must be consistent with his message. If his message be spiritual his language must agree therewith. It is and there is a tone in true preaching which is never learned at the schools: One only can teach it, and He is the Holy Spirit. The cleverest and most graceful language will fail to convey the true inner message of the Gospel to human hearts if it lacks that indescribable tone. This is, I take it, what St. Paul meant when he spoke about "words which the Holy Ghost teacheth." We expect no miracle of words newly coined and newly taught, but we have a right to expect that the Holy Spirit shall import into old and familiar words such meanings as will most quickly convey to men the mind of God.

The temptation of many servants of God is to use "wisdom of words"—making the wisdom to consist in the use of the most elegant words. Where this temptation is yielded to, men run the risk of neutralising the Gospel. Human words, whether they be rough or elegant, may become a vehicle of communication between God and men, provided they possess the supernatural tone which alone gives them weight and success; but, lacking this, the elegant words simply shine without burning, while the rough speech becomes offensive. To say this is not the expression of a theory; numberless facts witness to the truth of the principle. Known to all of us are men of culture, some of whom preach elegantly but without spiritual effect, others of whom preach elegantly yet with marvellous spiritual power and result.

On the other hand, there are men who pride themselves upon their uncouthness of speech and their unconventionality, whose speech grates, and nothing more; while others of rough manner and words are used of God to the conversion of multitudes. It is this spiritual tone that makes the difference. We may all have it if we will, upon the condition that we become the disciples of the Holy Spirit. God deliver us on this line from hindering the Gospel.

The other thing mentioned by St. Paul as likely to hinder the Gospel is the too rigid insistence upon our personal rights. "Suffer all things lest we should hinder the Gospel of Christ" (1 Cor. ix. 12). Here we are in another sphere altogether. The Apostle makes out an indisputable claim to do certain things, and then he declares that he deliberately renounces it for the larger good of the Gospel. There is no coercion brought to bear upon him—it is purely voluntary. His is the action of a man who has in life to which everything must yield. On the one hand there are certain comforts to which he is entitled by virtue of his office; on the other hand there are vast numbers of people who are not yet "gained" or "saved." He does not hesitate a moment—every impediment shall be removed out of the way—the Gospel must not be hindered.

Here again we are face to face with a great principle, viz., that even the "rights" of the personal worker must be renounced if there is any likelihood of them coming into competition with the great work. We must not begin with ourselves, asking whether this or that shall be done; we must begin with the Gospel—and take care that it has an uninterrupted course. If we do this we shall be surprised how many vexed and puzzling questions will answer themselves. Get the proper standpoint, and everything will fall into place. One reason why so many lives are unhappy and tormented with conflicting forces is that the wrong standpoint has been adopted. These people have been examining themselves and planning for themselves and trying to deny themselves, until their lives are more negative than positive. If, on the other hand, they had surrendered themselves unreservedly to Christ and his Gospel these personal and tormenting questions would not have arisen.

This principle of the supremacy of the Gospel once grasped, the life is free to serve God without interruption, and there will be no doubt about its issue. "Lest we should hinder the Gospel." How often we do hinder it by selfish love of luxury, by snappish temper, by questionable example, by libellous speech, by sourness, by laziness. The good Lord forgive us for all the stones of stumbling we have placed before the feet of his little ones. In our best moments we are ready to vow that we would die rather than hinder the Gospel. And God knows we really mean what we say. We fail because often we only say it (with good intent) in reliance upon ourselves. We shall not fail if we place ourselves utterly in the hands of God and remain there.

"His Sisters."

Matt. xiii. 56.

ALL women who know anything of the Lord Jesus Christ are glad to be included in this relationship. "He is my Elder Brother" is surely a thought full of comfort, giving a sense of rest and dependence—a shadow of a great rock ofttimes in a weary land. We think of the whole family in heaven and earth, of the hundreds who here are known and read of all men as his Sisters, not because of uniform or creed, but because they have the spirit of Christ; and our hearts go out in praise to God for his mighty working that in this year 1897 women are such a power for good in the world.

This verse has been specially in my mind with regard to the class of women commonly called "lost," but let us call them more pitifully "not found yet." Do we ever realise as we ought that they are his Sisters equally with other women? Do we half realise what a tremendous responsibility rests with us to help them to recognise their Elder Brother? What must the Lord Jesus Christ think to see his Sister walking the streets? Surely we whom God has blessed in home and family should do our part in helping some of these girls to honesty and purity of life. It is so easy to walk through the London streets and feel a horror as you meet them, wondering perhaps, if your interest is so far roused, what made them enter the life? But it is no use wondering from your own pedestal of purity; you must love these women, shoulder to shoulder, for only by love can you ever reach them, and it must be the Christ-love which endures to the end.

Let us at least be pitiful; let us at least pray. But if you want to be practical as well, come down to the Borough, and there in a side street you will find a "haven," and truly such it is to some of "His Sisters." A steep, ladder-like staircase leads to this home, for it is but a poor place, and like the Lord's first resting-place in that it is over a stable. There you will hear from the deaconess in charge of work done and doing, and if you want to help you will hear of many possible ways—clothes, new or old, are in great request, food, vegetables, and money. There is always one girl ready to be lifted up by you on to a new plane of living—you may not be called personally to these women, but you can nevertheless help to save.

Suggestive Readings.

THE SONGS OF DEGREES.—II.

Psa. cxxii.—One with all Saints.

THE first instinct of the new-born soul is to worship the Giver and Lord of his life: "Lord, I believe: and he worshipped Him" (John ix. 35-38).

Then he recognises his oneness as a member of the body with other members, and joyfully acts upon it: "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord." Precisely this was manifest at Pentecost: "And they, continuing daily with one accord, did eat their food with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favour with all the people" (Acts ii. 41-47).

"Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem...a city...compact together." The Jerusalem above is our mother; her children, when Jesus is glorified and the Spirit outpoured, are of one accord, of one mind, in one place—builded as a city that is compact together (Acts ii., Phil iii., Eph. ii. 20-22). "Thither the tribes of Jehovah go up unto the testimony of Israel, to give thanks unto the name of Jehovah." Still the parallel with the early church holds good: "Parthians and Medes... Cretes and Arabians...we do hear these Galileans speak...the wonderful works of God." "The testimony of Israel" was the Ark of the Covenant. And that Ark, containing the Covenant, was the type of Him who said, "Thy law is within my heart." In the vision of John (our brother and companion in the tribulation and Kingdom and endurance in Jesus) concerning the mystery of the seven churches, God's temple of the tabernacle of witness was opened in heaven, and in it was seen the Ark of his Covenant. For as the pattern of things in the heavens was given to Moses in the Mount, and to David by the hand of God upon him, now that Jesus, in whom it was fulfilled, has gone out of this world unto the Father, the Ark of the New Covenant is seen in heaven. Therefore the present testimony of the Israel of God is to the risen Saviour. With great power gave the Apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and great grace was upon them all" (Ps. xi. 8; Rev. i. 9, 19, 20; xi. 19; xv. 5; Heb. viii. 5; 1 Chron. xxviii. 11, 12; Acts iv. 23).

The Psalmist exhorts, "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem...For my brethren and companions I will now say, Peace be within thee." And the Apostle, of one accord with the Psalmist, beseeches us to "walk worthy of our calling...endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" (Eph. iv. 1-3).

"Because of the house of the Lord our God I will seek thy good." As this psalm begins, so it ends with "the house of the Lord." If we think of the holy city New Jerusalem, that great city the holy Jerusalem descending out of heaven from God, of which the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple, we see a new and deeper significance in this utterance of the Psalmist, and in the record concerning the Queen of Sheba that there was no more spirit left in her (Rev. xxi. 2, 10, 23; 1 Ki. x. 5).

Psa. cxxiii.—The Afflictions of the Israel of God.

As he began by looking to Him who made heaven and earth, so now he lifts up his eyes to Him that dwelleth in the heavens. Similarly the Apostles, after having been straitly threatened, and let go after having been further threatened, lifted up their voice to God with one accord as the Maker of heaven and earth and sea (Acts iv. 13-33).

The Psalmist prays very little for himself in these Songs of Ascent to the house of Jehovah; it is all for Israel exceedingly filled with the contempt of the proud. So also the Apostle rejoices in his sufferings, and fills up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in his flesh for his body's sake, which is the Church (Col. i. 24).

Psa. cxxiv.—And the Deliverance.

The sweet singer gives voice to Israel's joy and praise, acknowledging that had not their covenant-keeping God been on their side men would have swallowed them up quick, and the proud waters of contempt and scorn (of the previous Psalm) would have overwhelmed their soul—their very life. And again he traces their help to the Creator of heaven and earth (cxxi. 2). So the Apostle says, "As the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ. We were pressed out of measure, above strength, so that we despaired even of life." But in harmony with the New Covenant he does not speak of his trust in the Creator of heaven and earth, "but in God who raiseth the dead." This is well worthy of meditation, for the act of God in raising from the dead is the deliverance of his believing people out of the region where he that has the power of death can operate, into a region of resurrection life to which he has no access (Heb. ii. 14; Rom. vi. 1-11). Time and Man.

Time is an island in the azure sea
Of old Eternity.
White granite marge, or burnished beaches,
Hoar woods of old, green meadow-reaches;
One wind for ever blows o'er these,
One soft, supreme, far-travelled breeze,
Breath of Antiquity!

Eternal waves wash Time's grey shores with grace
Of cadenced music low.
Recurrent rote of mystic oceans,
Reiterant throb of rhythmic motions,
Inrolling from far ancient space,
From vortices no eye can trace,
In ceaseless silver flow.

Man is an island in the seas benign
Of God's great deity.
How sweeps the holy, fragrant swelling
Of gales from God around his dwelling!
How blow the sovereign breezes fine
Upon him from the deeps Divine
Of Love and Mystery!

Waves of new life, as morn superbly bright,
Wash all his spirit's shore.
From God's glad bosom crystal, boundless,
Surges a tide serene and soundless;
Warm seas of melody and light
Breaking in splendours infinite
Enwrap man evermore!

Peshawar Medical Mission.—Last winter Dr. A. Lankester and Dr. H. A. Browne were sent to the Peshawar Valley to do medical missionary itinerant work, and then, after some months' experience, they were instructed to report as to the best centres for the permanent medical mission. Events now taking place on that frontier show us very clearly what wild, turbulent people the inhabitants are, and we are asking for special supplication that all concerned may be guided to right decisions in this very important matter of commencing a new medical mission in the Peshawar district.—Mercy and Truth.

Tibetan Pioneer Mission.—Miss A. R. Taylor, having become aware that some letters sent to her during her tour in Scotland did not reach her, requests friends who may not have received replies to any letters to write again, care of Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., London. Postal orders and cheques for the Tibetan Pioneer Mission, enclosed in letters to Miss Taylor during her visit home, should be crossed to the "London and South Western Bank, Earl's Court Branch." The Bethany Home.

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.*

MANY of us have been interested during the last week very much about the subject of correct attitude before God, and of the progress that will be made in Christian life if we are in that correct attitude. In the time we have this morning I want to endeavour to illustrate progress, because of condition and attitude being right, by three pictures taken from the New Testament. To begin with, let us look at Luke x. verses 38-42. That is the first picture we will look at. We will take the others in order. I look upon them as dissolving views, one of them melting into the second, and the second into the third. Though they are entirely three distinct pictures, you will see a close connection between the deep underlying truths in each of them. They are closely knit to each other by the philosophy of love that underlies them, the attitude taken before the Master and the results produced in the circumstances of every day.

This first picture is a beautiful one. It is one of the brightest spots in the life of the beloved Master. He never had a home of his own, but He had a home of friendship, one of those places into which He could go and fling off for the time being all the restraint which is proper and necessary to one who is engaged in such public ministry as He was engaged in. I suppose every one here has some home in addition to his own home, where he can be quite at home and feel there is no need for keeping up appearances; for the eyes that look on us and the hearts that welcome us are the eyes and hearts of love. In the home at Bethany Jesus had such a place as that first picture. On one of those occasions when He went there in the midst of his public ministry, and stayed just a little while for fellowship and rest among those that loved Him so perfectly, I am interested in looking at the two women presented to our view.

We must be right in seeing this picture, or we shall miss the points of those that are to succeed it. What sort of a woman is Martha? A keen, biting north-east sort of woman; just the woman to keep the house perfectly straight in every detail; one of those women, if you cross the threshold of her dwelling, you would have been afraid to sit down lest you would get one of those things on the back of the chair out of straight; a great, bustling woman, always eager to do for everybody, excepting for herself; forgetful of her own personality in her desire to do something for someone else. Martha is just that kind of women; and when Jesus came she ran out into that place at the back of the house to get the supper. Not a single thing must be left undone; everything must be there, and she is so eager about it, coming in and out of the little guest-chamber, where the Master is sitting, hurrying here and there with this one thought in her heart, that the Lord must have her best; nothing must be left unturned to give Him comfort. Grand woman! But what is Mary doing?

ONLY HALF THE TRUTH.

Well, now, some people say Mary sat at his feet and learned there. Now, that is half the truth and only half. You must not miss a little word out of your Bible story or you will miss the point. Look at verse No. 39: "She had a sister called Mary, which also sat at Jesus's feet and heard his word." Martha owned the house. Lazarus is around somewhere, and Mary is introduced as Martha's sister. Mary does not seem to have a separate individuality at first. "She had a sister called Mary," but see what Mary's position is. She also sat. "Also." What does that mean? She, too, had apparently taken her share in the service of the house before she sat at the Master's feet. There is no other explanation of it. Why say "also," if she had not done something else. I am going to defend

* Notes of an address at Northfield.

Mary from the ordinary attack that she went straight in and sat down and did nothing. It was the other part of her life. She loved her Lord, she had taken some part in the ministry of the house, and then sat at Jesus's feet and heard His word.

Now look at Martha. You would have done just what she did if you had not learned Mary's secret. Do not be angry with her. She is cumbered, growing fretful, and her service is getting too much for her; she cannot get things done as well as she would like them done; she cannot get through as much as she hoped to get through; there are so many things to be put just right. And, being fretful and tired, she goes wrong herself. If at first she is cumbered, the next thing, she feels cross with Mary. "Mary is sitting there, and I am so busy getting the supper. What right has she down there when I am so busy?" The third thing, she gets cross with Jesus, and she goes right in and says: "Dost not Thou care that my sister has left me to serve?" Cumbered in her own spirit, angry with her sister, reflecting upon her Master, and putting the blame on Him of her weariness. Dear soul, how she loved and wanted that supper to be all that it ought to be, but she had forgotten that service was only acceptable as it is filled with communion with the Lord! Oh, the multitudes of people in Martha's condition to-day! They love Christ with passionate devotion: they are willing to serve from morning to night, from day to day and from year to year; and yet they get so tired in it. We cannot overtake our work, we cannot do all we want to do, and then we begin to grumble at people who sit at Jesus's feet, and even to say: "Master, do not you care?"

That is the first picture of sunshine in the home. Lazarus, Martha, Mary, and Jesus loving them all. Martha is busy; Mary has been busy, too, and is sitting at his feet; Martha, getting upset and worried, is getting a twist in her disposition because there is so much to do.

THE SECOND PICTURE.

The next is in the eleventh chapter of John. The scene is all changed in that little home, and the sunshine has gone and the darkness has settled upon it. Prosperity has given way to the bitterest adversity in their hearts and experiences; the brightness and gladness are banished, and they are right down under the deepest, darkest cloud of sorrow that ever settled on their home. We have left the sunshine, and here we are in the thick sorrow, and what sorrow this was! I have no need to read this chapter, you know it so well, but think what had happened. Lazarus is ill, and Jesus is not there. He was there, but He is now away, and they send after Him and tell Him their brother is ill. The news reached Him away, and He did not hurry; He stayed just where He was. "Now, Jesus loved Martha and her sister and Lazarus. When He had heard, therefore, that he was sick He abode two days still in the same place where He was." To me those verses are the most wonderful in the story. Oh, how often the Lord does so with you! Even when we cry after Him in some sorrow He does not come, but always right in front of it when He does not come, we have "Jesus loved," but stayed where He was. But how it added to their sorrow! Lazarus dying; Christ not coming; and at last Lazarus is dead and in the tomb, and yet the Master has not come. Darkness and sorrow have come over the home but a little while ago so full of sunshine and beauty.

What about these two women? "Then Martha, as soon as she heard that Jesus was coming, went and met Him, but Mary sat still in the house." What a contrast! How do you account for it? Let me ask you the question, Which would you have done—sit still or go out to meet Him? Christ is coming at last. Lazarus is dead, but He is coming, coming, coming. What will you do? Run out to meet Him? I am inclined to think that the vast majority of us would say, "Let us go and meet Him." But see how it works out. There is Martha running to meet Him and saying: "Lord, if Thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." He understood that. In that word there was almost the accent of rebuke and reproach. "If Thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." But how graciously He deals with her. He comes to her in her argumentative state, and with his own argument teaches her He is the Resurrection and the Life. He is the master of the thing that fills her heart with dread and patiently He deals with her. Was not that beautiful? Where is Mary? In the house. What happened? "She went her way, and called Mary, her sister, secretly, saying: "The Master is come, and calleth for thee." Of course He had called for her. There is no doubt it was a commission, although it is not chronicled. Christ had said to her, "Fetch Mary," and she went and quietly said: "The Master wants you, Mary."

"As soon as she heard that she arose quickly, and came unto Him. Now, Jesus was not yet come into the town, but was in that place where Martha met Him. Then when Mary was come where Jesus was, and saw Him, she fell down at his feet, saying unto Him: Lord, if Thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." That's what Martha said. Yes, but what effect did it produce upon Him when Mary said it? "When Jesus, therefore, saw her weeping, and the Jews also weeping, which came with her, He groaned in the spirit and was troubled," and then we have in verse 35 two words, "Jesus wept." Choicest gem in all the book so far as the revelation of Christ is concerned. Martha gets his teaching. Mary gets his tears. Martha said exactly what Mary said. When Mary said it what a difference!

Which do you think, beloved, was the better thing—to run after Him and get his teaching, or wait till sent for and get his tears? I think I know which you would rather have when sorrow is on the home. You would rather have his tears than his teaching, bright and luminous as it is with resurrection glory; and I think Mary got to deeper depths in the heart of God when she came than Martha, because she drew his tears of deepest sympathy with her sorrow. Why did Jesus weep? Because Lazarus died? No, He is going to call him back for a definite purpose. He knows that bereavement has broken the heart of those two sisters, and, though He is going to heal it, He sympathises with their pain, and his heart goes out in their sorrow. Every wounded heart in this auditorium that belongs to a child of God, the Master is going to heal by-and-by, yet He suffers with you in the wounding and enters by tears with you in the sacrament of your sorrow. And so He wept when those women wept. Which was the better thing—to sit still in the house till sent for, or, like Martha, run out of it and meet Him?

The teaching of this second picture is this: Instead of trying to get out of my circumstances of trial, the better thing is to sit still till God calls me out. Here is the lesson we should learn, but perhaps cannot until we have been through some baptism of sorrow like this. I want you to see there is something better than trying to be delivered from pain and sorrow, and that is to abide in it because it is the will of God, until He shall call us out. That is the second picture.

THE LAST PICTURE.

Now, the last picture is in the twelfth chapter of John. It seems as though we must come into the presence of this picture with muffled voice. I cannot do justice to it, but the Holy Ghost will. It is in the first seven verses. That is my third picture. It is the same home, the same people in it, but, my! what a change there is here! Let us get the humanness as well as the divinity out of it. Look at those people. What are they doing? Sitting at the table. A lovely place for us men to sit at. But Martha served. Do not miss that. She is doing what she did before—getting supper ready. She is bustling about with such things in her earnestness, but she has lost her grumbling. Mary is at the old business again, only with deeper depths than before. Martha gets all through the business with smiles all the time. I remember in the early days of the Salvation Army movement in England, when they were training the cadets, they had this motto, "Stick to it and keep smiling." Martha is no less busy than she used to be, but she is busy, and at rest and peace. She is not cumbered with her business nor angry with Mary, nor is she reflecting on Jesus Christ. She had learned something in the day of sorrow and darkness. It has not altered her power to serve, but the matter and the manner of her service.

What about Mary? I tell you this is lovely, this picture of Mary. If you have carefully studied the last few days of our Lord's life upon the earth you have noticed how He was a lonely man, and how no single one of his disciples—I say it deliberately—ever entered for a single moment into sympathy with his passion and his suffering as it overshadowed his own life. Take the story of these last six days and our Lord's journey to Jerusalem, and you will find that it is an awful picture. Oh, lonely Son of God, without a single heart to come into sympathy with thy passion for human souls! A handful of disciples were wrangling as to who was the biggest man. But there was one soul that saw the Cross—Mary. Never forget it, you men, it was a woman that saw the Cross and went into the shadow of it with Christ, as it was a woman who became the first preacher of the Resurrection when He came back again. Do not forget these things.

But what happened? Christ has come and is on his way to Jerusalem, and there He sits. Judas is there, the financial secretary, looking after himself. He looks on his Master—what does He see? Nothing, nothing. He never saw Christ. Peter is there, and James and John, and I would like you not to miss this; at that first supper where Martha got so very much upset she had Christ as the guest, but I think it is most likely this last time she had the twelve with Him, and she gets through managing the thirteen now, but only one before. When Christ comes in and sits at that board Mary looks at Him, and with that deep intuition that is only born of the highest and the holiest love she sees what no one else sees, that on his heart is the shadow of a great sorrow. Now, put yourself in Mary's place. What is she thinking about? "What can I do? Can I do anything that will let Him see that I know something of his pain? Can I go into the darkness with Him and share in that sorrow?" And when love does this kind of thing it is always extravagant. She went and got a pound of spikenard ointment and brought it, and in her heart she said: "I will give Him this; it is the choicest thing I can get hold of, and I want to pour it out on Him and show Him there is nothing I keep back from Him"; and she goes and anoints his feet with this ointment and wipes his feet with her hair.

I can fancy the woman saying: "He knows I can see his sorrow and pain." But what about Judas? Jesus said: "Let her alone, for my burying she hath done this." Nobody else understood this. Judas said: "What an awful waste!" The Master said that "nothing can be wasted that love pours upon Me, because love enters into my suffering sorrow," and that is what it meant. This woman has got beyond past experience as she has borne his sorrow and anointed Him, as He said, to his burying.

That is the third picture. What a wonderful picture it is! You have had the picture of sunshine, of sorrow, and of that which stretches beyond it. The golden link that makes these three pictures one is found in three words in each Scripture passage describing them "at his feet." There is the key of the situation.

1 Cor. xv. 10.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

"GOD," says the eloquent Adolphe Monod, "left to the Jews the first twelve Apostles, and gave to the Gentiles one only, whom He prepared expressly for them." Like a spiritual Atlas, Paul carries the whole heathen world upon his shoulders. That Roman empire, the most powerful on the face of the earth, which required seven ages to be established, he took only a quarter of an age to regenerate. The greatest among men was Jesus Christ; the greatest among apostles was St. Paul.

Even in these days of easy and universal communication the Apostle's record as a traveller would have been a remarkable one, but how much more remarkable it appears when we recall the banditti that infested the mountain passes of Asia Minor; the impetuous torrents that crossed the track; the vast distances that had to be traversed on foot; the hardships of the wayside inns and caravanserais; the suspicion and dislike of which Jews must have always been the objects.

But what a record he has left! In his first missionary journey he establishes churches as Christian garrisons, along the central highway of Asia Minor, and attracts the enthusiastic Gauls with the tenderest affection—"preaching both to Jews and Gentiles, converting a proconsul and silencing a false prophet; at one time adored as a god, at another stoned by the same people in their fury." In his second, he proclaims the Gospel to Europe, and founds churches in some of the most famous and influential cities—Philippi, Thessalonica, Berea, Athens, Corinth, flame out as successive beacon-fires in the darkness. In the third, like a Colossus, he strides the Ægean, planting one foot in Asia Minor and the other in Greece, where he preaches even to Illyricum. In the fourth, after pleading his cause before at least three different tribunals, he traverses the Mediterranean, saves the crew and passengers of the storm-driven corn-ship by his prayers and heroism, compels the respect and affection of an island of barbarians, and reaches Rome in the guise of a prisoner, but really as a conqueror, to unfurl the banner of his Master in the palace of the Cæsars. After his release he again sets forth on journeys that carried him, perhaps, to Spain, but certainly to familiar scenes in Asia Minor and Greece. So he fulfils his course till Rome and martyrdom again come in sight.

When he began his work the world was being borne to her grave, in spite of what philosophy, literature, and legislation could do to arrest its moral decay; but when he closed it, some thirty years afterwards, germs of life and salvation had been sown, and even nurtured into sturdy growth, which were destined, after three centuries, to displace the fetid remnants of heathenism with the fresh young undergrowth of Christian civilisation.

We may well inquire into the secret of this marvellous work, to which, after that of our Lord, the position of Christianity in the world at this moment is to be ascribed. And if we do we shall discover it not in his intellectual talent and eloquent speech, for these were more than neutralised by his physical weaknesses, his "thorn," and his "contemptible" utterance (2 Cor. xi. 6), but in sources of power which are within the reach of us all, however greatly we may come short of that commanding equipment, which, in the words of the great Neander, would have made him, had he sought it, shine in the highest rank amongst the wise and the orators of all ages, so that he would not have been second to any of those masters of thought or language of whom ancient Greece boasted.

In the forefront we must place the Apostle's vivid remembrance of the mercy that had been shown him. "I obtained mercy," he says on one occasion, when attempting to explain the sources of his indomitable perseverance through obloquy, smiting down, and daily dying. It was as though he never could forget how deeply he had sinned, and how strenuously he had resisted that very grace which he now proclaimed. He was constantly returning to this precious thought. How could he ever despair of men, since such an one as he had found mercy? How should he faint, when the same grace that had laid hold of him waited to enable him? How could he ever repay the long-suffering, which had brooded over his storm-driven nature, and had abounded over his rebellion, until it made him a trophy of its power? Like a silver refrain, it came back on him in all times of anguish, distress, and virulent opposition, "I obtained mercy, therefore I dare not, must not, faint."

From the commencement to the close of his career Paul was impelled by the one master-thought that he had been redeemed to serve; saved that he might save others. The memory of what he had been saved from and saved to was the constant incentive of his arduous and exhausting toils. And so it is well for us, if we can get away for a time from the bustle and rush of life, to stand beneath the Cross, where Jesus died, realising that every drop from his every wound appeals to our every pulse-throb to spend or be spent for the cause that cost Him so dear.

Closely connected with this, we must mention the great and simple purpose for which the Apostle lived. He bent his strength to save men, and for this he was prepared to make any sacrifice. He was equally careful to the very last to institute and organise little Christian communities, which were absolutely necessary to conserve and develop the life that had been implanted. But all such purposes were subordinated to that which he announced in his earliest epistle, "not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth the hearts" (1 Thess. ii. 4). It mattered comparatively little what were the outward results of his endeavours, or what men might say or do, so long as he had the testimony shed through his heart that it pleased God.

This motive is viewed under another light, when, in the next epistle, he yearns, "that the name of our Lord Jesus be glorified" (2 Thess. i. 12). We cannot forget that the passion of Christ's heart, during his earthly ministry was to glorify his Father, and there was a similar passion in the heart of Paul to glorify the Son. To the end of his ministry that purpose grew even stronger. It was always his earnest expectation and hope that in nothing he should be ashamed, but that as always, so then, Christ should be magnified in his body, whether by life or death.

Would that this also were our single aim. It would greatly simplify our lives. We are apt to set ourselves on the accomplishment of purposes which, though good in themselves, fail of the best; and when we do not succeed in them, when the revival does not ensue, or hosts of souls are not converted, or the Church does not heed, we are apt to write hard things against ourselves and God; whereas, if we simply sought the good pleasure and glory of our Master, we should discover that we succeed amid apparent failure, and are more than conquerors when fleeing for our lives.

Happy is the man who can appeal from the verdict of obvious results, of his fellows, of the inner circle of dearest friends, and even of his own heart, and say, "With me, it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's judgment. Yea, I judge not mine own self. For I know nothing against myself; yet am I not hereby justified; but he that judgeth me is the Lord. Wherefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who will both bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and make manifest the counsels of the hearts; and then shall each man have his praise from God" (1 Cor. iv., 3-5).

To each of us a stewardship is committed, of wealth, or time, or influence, or talent in thought and speech. With Paul, each of us can say, "I have a stewardship entrusted to me" (1 Cor. ix. 17). Now surely it is required in stewards, not that they should realise all the dreams that suggest themselves to their imagination, but that they be found faithful to him that appointed them. Judge your lives not by results, but by their motives, and by the smile of his good pleasure who appointed you.

His plan of living also greatly ministered to his success. In point of fact, he had no plan at all. For him the way had been prepared in the counsels of God before the worlds were made, and he had only to discover its track. The scheme of the temple of his life had been conceived by the Divine Architect; he had only to get it by communion with Him on the Mount. He need do nothing from himself, in the sense of self-origination, but what he saw his Saviour doing. His one aim was to repeat in the time sphere what He was doing in the unseen and eternal.

This made the Apostle so cautious in referring to his future programme. Whatever should betide, he must keep in the current of the will of God. To purpose according to the flesh, that there should be the yea, yea, nay, nay of human forecast, was foreign to the habit of his mind. He was ever living in such dependence on the Holy Spirit for guidance, and for the unfolding of the Divine purpose, that from some apparently trivial circumstance he would "gather" the movements of the pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night. And interval there was none between his apprehension of the Divine purpose and his endeavour to strike his tent and follow wherever it might lead (Acts xvi. 6, 7).

Connemara Orphans' Nursery.

This institution was the outcome of a desire to mitigate some of the painful effects of the famine of 1847, in Galway and Mayo; and the benefits of the organisation were subsequently thrown open to the whole of Ireland. Miss Butcher, in the last report, gives a good account of the girls under her care at Glenowen; while Mr. Harris and his daughter temper their reference to financial anxieties with some encouraging facts about the boys' department at Ballyconree, for which they are responsible. It has pleased God to preserve the children in health and strength during the past year. House and farm work has been diligently performed, reports of the inspector and of visitors have been quite satisfactory, while letters received from former inmates constitute additional testimony concerning blessings afforded to many by the homes.

Mr. Wm. Pasley, 11, Buckingham-street, London, W.C., is hon. accountant of this institution, which has produced good fruit in training so many destitute children for godly, useful, and happy lives.

Is My Bible Really True?

WHERE DID WE GET IT?

By Rev. CHARLES LEACH, D.D., Manchester.

No. XI.—WILLIAM TYNDALE.

FROM Wycliffe to Tyndale we take a stride of one hundred years. It is a long step to take, and it is a most important one. For in those years a great discovery was made, which was destined to play a great part, not only in the history of the Bible, but in the spread of knowledge all over the world. I mean the invention of printing. Wycliffe's Bible, and all books up to his time and after, were in writing. Monks in their cells, and learned men in their studies toiled at the work of copying out the Bible with the pen. But when Tyndale was ready to issue his New Testament in English, he had the printing press to help him to multiply copies and spread them throughout England thick as autumn leaves.

THE PRINTING PRESS.

The printing press had at least a twofold effect upon the translation and spread of the Bible. Instead of men having to work for weary months at copying the Bible with the pen, its sheets could be struck off at a rapid rate. If the reader will sit down and write one page of the Bible and mark how long it takes him, and then multiply the number of minutes which it occupies with the whole number of pages of the Bible, he will get some idea of the length of time taken to produce one copy of the Bible, without allowing any time at all for the initial letters and flourishes with which most of the Bibles were illustrated and adorned in the Middle Ages and afterwards. Let the same reader stand in a printing office and see with what rapidity the press throws off the sheets of the Bible.

Then, too, the printing press enables the Bible to be produced at a greatly reduced cost. In John Wycliffe's time Bibles were very costly indeed. There is a great difference in the purchasing power of money now and then. But it is estimated that in the fourteenth century a copy of the English Bible, as translated by Wycliffe, was worth a sum quite equal to £40 of our money. In our days a complete Bible can be had for a few coppers. This great invention of printing has been used to the full in the production and spread of the Scriptures. Every year millions of copies of the Scriptures, in whole or in part, are circulated in over three hundred languages and dialects.

It is almost impossible for us to understand and appreciate the effect produced upon the life of England by the rapid circulation and reading of Tyndale's Bible, and those which immediately followed it. It was the one great Book which England read. It did not take many years to make it the Bible of the people; and it, more than any other work, made England the people of the Bible. It was read in all sorts of places, under all kinds of circumstances, and by all sorts of people. It rapidly found its way to the Universities. It was read by the merchants, the workers, and the ploughboys. At the seat of learning, in the churches, and in the homes of the people, the music of that Book fell upon listening ears, and produced marvellous results. It kindled a remarkable enthusiasm among the people, quickened the moral sense of the country, and deepened the religious life of the nation. "The people who sat in darkness saw a great light."

TYNDALE AND HIS WORK.

But we must tell the story of Tyndale and his work. When William Tyndale was born, about the year 1483, John Wycliffe had been dead one hundred years, and the great reformer, Martin Luther, was about one year old. The times were full of action and hope. The fifteenth century, in which he was born, and the sixteenth, in which he did his work, were centuries crowded with influences and forces which produced the great and powerful England of to-day. Wycliffe and his Lollards had sown the seed of the Reformation, which took root and was to bear fruit during these centuries. It was the age of the revival of learning—of patriots, of discoveries, martyrs, saints, and heroes. It was the era of great men in many departments of life, and England saw a great outburst of enthusiasm, which quickened its social, intellectual, and religious life.

Not the least in importance stood William Tyndale, the Gloucestershire boy. In early life he was sent to Oxford, where he won distinction whilst quite young. Afterwards he went to Cambridge, and came in contact with those influences which pushed him on in the great work of his life. Here he met with Erasmus, the foremost Greek scholar of the day. He, too, became a Greek scholar, and was enabled to read and translate in the original the New Testament, which he determined to publish in English.

He does not seem to have possessed much of this world's wealth; so he sought the help and shelter of the Bishop of London (Dr. Tunstall). He was anxious to carry on his work of putting the Scriptures into English, under the roof of the episcopal palace, and with the patronage of the Bishop. One would think that here he would be sure to find aid. But, unfortunately, he failed, so he betook himself elsewhere. Though he failed with the Bishop, he succeeded with a London merchant of the name of Monmouth, in whose house he worked for a considerable time.

DEPARTURE FROM ENGLAND.

He soon began to feel that he could not hope to be secure in London, nor even in England. He saw many a man led off to prison, and some to death, for offences which would not be considered so serious as the work on which he was engaged. So in the year 1524 he left England (never to return to it) to take up his quarters for a time at Hamburg. Here and at Cologne he toiled on bravely, amid poverty, disgrace, and danger, ever upborne by a brave heart and a hopeful spirit. At length his work was so far forward that the sheets of his New Testament were in the hands of the printer. But now, when success seemed within reach, a new and bewildering difficulty came upon him. An unprincipled and bigoted priest made some of the printers drunk, and got from them the secret of the printing of this book. He at once urged the magistrates to order Tyndale's arrest, and also send him across to England. Hearing of this through some friend Tyndale rushed to the printers, seized the precious sheets of his book, and fled with all speed from Cologne to Worms.

Worms was then the stronghold of the Reformers, and was enthusiastic for Luther and his cause. Here, therefore, Tyndale found refuge. In 1526 he completed his book, and had copies ready for despatch to England. But a new difficulty now faced him. How was he to get his book into the country? Though he had escaped from the mischief of the priest at Cologne, he knew that information had been sent to England about his work, and he was quite sure that a strict watch would be kept for it at the port of entrance. In order to escape the vigilance of the watchers, the book was packed up in bales of cloth, in sacks of flour, in cases of merchandise of all kinds. In spite of all the care of the enemies of the Word of God, thousands of copies were thus introduced into England, and circulated far and wide among the people.

BURNING THE BIBLE.

Whilst the lovers of the Book greatly rejoiced, its enemies were put into a commotion and panic. Finding it impossible to stop its entry into the country, the Bishop of London hit upon the idea of buying up all the copies that could be found. This was done, and the bishop had them piled in heaps and burned at Paul's Cross. The books blazed. But that did not stop the good work. The bishop could no more hinder the progress of God's truth than could the Nazarenes with their puny hands destroy Jesus Christ when they thrust him out of their synagogue. Said Tyndale: "I am glad, for these two benefits shall come thereof: I shall get money to bring myself out of debt, and the whole world will cry out against the burning of God's Word, and the overplus of the money that shall remain with me shall make me more studious to correct the said New Testament, and so newly to imprint the same once again; and I trust the second will be much better than ever was the first."

The work this man did produced lasting fruit; but alas! the worker had only ill-treatment in return. He toiled on in exile, in poverty, and sickness for a few years. He worked away at translations of the Old Testament, but his career was cut short by the malice of his enemies and the treachery of false friends. Enticed some distance from his home one day, he was seized and hurried off to prison. Here, in a cold dungeon, he suffered much, until at last, in 1536, he was strangled at the stake and then burnt to ashes. He died with the prayer upon his lips, "Lord, open the King of England's eyes." In his last hours his thoughts were of and for his enemies. How like Him who, when dying on the cross, said, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do."

Countess Schimmelman's Mission.

In the north of Denmark, God has been manifestly working in a marked manner. At many sparsely populated places in North Jutland the people gathered in thousands from great distances to the Countess's meetings, and the lips of many of the peasantry, unaccustomed to speak in public, were used in testimony for Christ. At one of these meetings a number of avowed Freethinkers with their leaders were broken down and in tears.

On the Baltic coast of Mecklenburg and Pomerania there are signs of an awakening of spiritual life and an unmistakable hunger for the Gospel of Christ. Every meeting is crowded. At the last meeting at Stettin thousands had to go away, after one of the largest halls in the town had been packed to overflowing.

The anxiety to obtain good Gospel literature is very great, and beyond the power of the mission to satisfy. At Swinemünde last evening the Countess addressed a large meeting composed of all classes, including a good sprinkling of military. Clear evidences of blessing were manifest. She is to speak again at the same place this evening; on the two days following at Ahlbeck and Hovingsdorf (fashionable watering-places).

Next Monday the Countess returns to her Fishermen's Homes in the Island of Rügen, where she looks for much blessing, as she finds many of the Christians among these toilers of the deep much grown in grace. At Sassnitz, by the permission of the Commander, she addressed the officers and crew of a German war-ship, and was listened to with the greatest attention. J. McC.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, September 5.

"The Lord appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore have I continued lovingkindness unto thee."—Jer. xxxi. 3 (R.V. marg.).

WE who by faith are the children of Abraham may claim and muse upon these sweet and tender words.

God's love to us is not of to-day or yesterday. It did not originate in any movement of our heart towards Himself, or even on that day of days when Jesus died. You must go back beyond your birth, beyond Calvary and Bethlehem, beyond the fall of man and the Garden of Eden, and as you stand looking out into the immensity of eternity, dare to believe that you were loved and chosen in Christ, the object of God's most tender solicitude and pity.

Does the thought overpower you? Notice the Divine asseveration. Yea, there can be no doubt about it. Beyond this Divine asseveration it is impossible for us to go. By word and oath God, who cannot lie, has given us strong assurance that it is even so.

But now see what comes out of this long, long love. God must have known the worst about us before He set his love on us; then He cannot be surprised as, in the work of education, He comes across evils that horrify and dismay us. He knew all this and worse. Only let that love have its way. It is a universal and invincible solvent. It will yet rid you bit by bit of these hard and evil elements. The very rocks shall flow down at his presence.

The version quoted above gives a further thought. The fountains of God's love rise in eternity, and therefore cannot be exhausted by the demands of time. They will continue. Resisted, disappointed, neutralised, disregarded, they will continue until they have overcome and expelled our virulent selfishness, and made us love with the love of God.

MONDAY, September 6.

"I bought the field."—Jer. xxxii. 9.

What could better manifest the heroic audacity of faith? The Chaldeans infested the land, and Jeremiah knew by the word of the Lord that they were destined to hold both it and the city. And yet at the Divine command he bought a piece of land which was in possession of the foe, with as much formality as though he were at once to enter upon its possession.

He obeyed the Divine command, and then poured out his soul in prayer, nourishing his faith by the contemplation of the might of God in creation, for which nothing was too hard. Surely if God could make the heavens and the earth by his great power and by his stretched out arm, He could easily bring it to pass that the Chaldeans should recede from the land, Israel again inhabit it, and the purchase and tenure of property be unhindered. Faith made the unseen visible, and the distant near, so that the prophet took them into his calculations, and regulated his action in view of them. Herein the man of faith differs from others. They base their calculations and actions upon certain facts and considerations which are within view of their senses; while he takes into his estimate a number of other facts and considerations of which they have no knowledge, and which can only be recognised through the revelation of God's Spirit.

As that land was purchased, though still in the enemy's possession, so Israel is God's possession, though under the bondage of unbelief; so the bodies of God's saints shall be raised, though now under the reign of corruption; so shall this world be emancipated from the curse of sin and the serpent's trail. Oh, man of faith, count on these things as facts, and already begin to lay up possessions that wax not old, and investments that bankruptcy cannot touch.

TUESDAY, September 7.

"Call unto Me, and I will answer thee, and will show thee great things, and difficult, which thou knowest not."—Jer. xxxiii. 3 (R.V.).

We must learn the sacred art of prayer. God says, "Call unto Me." He likes us to address Him in prayer. We may surely believe that He will do the best, but this may degenerate into a subtle excuse for lethargy; and therefore we must be stirred by the invitation to call upon Him. There is no assurance that He will show us these great and difficult things, unless we obey the injunction of our text to call on Him. But be sure and wait before Him until He teaches you what to pray for. The prayer which is born of God rises to God from whom it came with the certainty of an answer. Let your prayers be unselfish. We are safest when we are praying for one another, or for messages and help to pass on to others.

But what a promise is here. We long to see great things done for God in our churches and mission halls, in the hearts and lives of our friends. We long to see the difficult things unknotted, so that the crooked may be made straight, and the rough smooth. All these things shall be. The impossibilities of your life are possible to God. The mysteries of your life can yield their secrets at the summons of God. The iron gates shall open, the sea divide, the sepulchres yield their dead. Only get right with God, only let God have unhindered way through your life, only yield to his least prompting and monition.

WEDNESDAY, September 8.

"I will give the men that have transgressed My covenant, which have not performed the words of the covenant which they made before Me...into the hand of their enemies."—Jer. xxxiv. 18, 20.

The people, in their dire distress, entered into a covenant to emancipate their slaves, but when there seemed respite, and the Chaldeans withdrew, they went back from the covenant into which they had entered under the most solemn pledges, such as passing between the pieces of a sundered calf. How differently they dealt with their bondserfs to the way in which God had dealt with them when He brought them up out of Egypt. He did not excite hopes to dash them ruthlessly to the ground.

This trifling with their covenant to their helpless serfs was terribly avenged; first, because God ever constitutes Himself the judge and avenger of the poor; and, chiefly, because a covenant is so sacred a matter in the esteem of the Most High. All through the Bible great stress is laid on covenant making and maintaining. The Gibeonites were spared because the princes had entered into covenant with them; Mephibosheth was carefully sought out, because David had entered into covenant with Jonathan. What comfort this gives us who shelter in the provisions of the New Covenant, ordered in all things and sure. Was God so jealous of the covenant that Israel made with their poor slaves, and will He not be mindful of the New Covenant, which has been ratified with the blood of his Son? Jesus said, "This is the Blood of the New Covenant," and therefore, if we had a thousand souls, we might fearlessly and gladly venture them there.

THURSDAY, September 9.

"Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel, Jonadab, the son of Rechab, shall not want a man to stand before me for ever."—Jer. xxxv. 19.

The point here is the contrast between the obedience of the Rechabites to the directions of their ancestors, and the disobedience of Israel to Jehovah. How often is this contrast repeated still! We find men so eager and devoted to the customs and traditions of their families, and so regardless of the yet higher claims of God. It is very wonderful! We should have thought that the temper of mind which bound men to their family traditions would have secured their allegiance to the Almighty. But it is not so, as daily experience proves.

Let us also notice the obvious inference from this chapter. If, because of their obedience to the regulations of Jonadab, the Rechabites should never want a man to stand before God, how much more will obedience to the promptings of God's Spirit secure, through his mercy, a perpetual standing before his face, not only of ourselves, but of our children. Christian parents, you have a perfect right to go to God with this fair deduction from his own words, and say: Give us grace to obey Thy commandments, and keep all Thy precepts, and do according to all that Thou commandest; and then grant to us to stand before Thee for evermore in Thy Presence-chamber; and not us only, but our children and children's children. Let them be a godly seed on earth, ever maintaining sweet recollections of our character and life; and let us be a united family in the presence of Thy glory with exceeding joy.

FRIDAY, September 10.

"It came to pass, when Jehudi had read three or four leaves, that the king cut it with the penknife, and cast it into the fire that was in the brazier, until all the roll was consumed in the fire that was in the brazier."—Jer. xxxvi. 23 (R.V.).

It was an audacious and foolish act. Only a fool or a madman could have trifled thus. He did not relish the prophet's words, and so he cut them to pieces; but though he destroyed them, he could not in this way arrest the penalties which they foretold. Indeed, he increased them: "There were added besides unto them many like words." The criminal may tear up the warrant for his arrest, but it will not help his case. The captain may destroy the map which indicates the rocks in his course, but that will not rob them of the cruel fangs with which they will pierce the timbers of his ship. Men may deride and destroy the Bible, but this will not empty the future of hell, or hell of its bitter remorse.

We are all tempted to use the penknife to God's Book. There are passages in it which we do not like, those that cross our favourite notions, our cherished sins. Practically we eliminate them. We never read them, or we explain them away, or profess to doubt their inspiration. How much wiser to read the Scriptures with an open and unbiased mind, not bringing our preconceptions, like penknives, to cut out what we do not agree with, but meekly inquiring what it may please the Lord our God to speak. Blessed are they that tremble before the words of God, and take them in their entire weight of meaning.

SATURDAY, September 11.

"They gave him daily a loaf of bread out of the baker's street."—Jer. xxxvii. 21 (R.V.).

This was God's way of caring for his child. His life was secured to him from the hatred of his foes, and his daily bread as long as there was any to be had. If you do God's work, you may freely count on Him. He will not fail. In the most unlikely ways, your bread shall be given you, and your water shall be sure.

But it may be objected that it is not always so, and that many of God's children are at this very hour suffering the need of many things which are absolutely necessary. But, first, we should have to decide which is really necessary. We might all be deprived of many of the comforts and luxuries of life without detriment. Indeed, it might be better for us to undergo something of the weaning and detaching process. Let us come down to the food and raiment of Matt. vi., which our Father knows we have need of before we ask Him; and for such other things as are essential to the accomplishing of the main purpose of our life. Will it be said that God has failed to give these?

We have God's promises, but we fail to plead them. We know that we can only receive the benefits of Christ's Redemption by faith, but we do not see that the same faith is requisite to bring into our hands those other boons which are included in God's guarantees to his children. You have not, child of God, either because you ask not, or because you are asking for things that would minister simply to appetite and sense. Ask and receive, that your joy may be full.

RELIGION AND DAILY LIFE.

In a sermon on Sunday week at Paddington Chapel, Dr. Wright, of Buffalo, said:—"Beware of any religious exercises which make you feel that the common occupations of life are beneath the dignity of the devoutest man. It is never a consciousness of his immortality that makes a man feel he has no time for the lowly tasks and duties of life; only the consciousness of his mortality can do that. The Man who felt as no other man has done that He must be about his Father's business, the Man who carried the sins, cares, pains of the whole world, while He was walking towards the slopes of Calvary, bearing his own cross, had abundant leisure to watch the lilies and read what God had written in their sweet striving; to listen to the chatter of the sparrows, and tell us what they were meant to say. The disciples often thought they were mounting up on wings as eagles when they were simply drifting among clouds as balloons. Sundays which do not make us better fathers and mothers, merchants, lawyers, are worse than wastings of time, they are wastings of eternity. God, who made us to commune with Himself as the chief end of our creation, put us into this world to do its work with fervour, with enthusiasm. A religion that cheapens life is a delusion."

THE RIGHTS OF THE PEOPLE.

We do not know that the full significance of the decision in the Dover case has yet been realised by either the "trade" or the temperance party. The "trade" are momentarily in consternation at finding that citizens have a right to object to the continuance of a licence without being made to pay for thus seeking to forward the cause of good order and sobriety. And the temperance party are momentarily pleased to find that rights long disputed, and long practically denied, are pronounced by the highest authority to be secured to them by law. But a full consideration of the judgment shows that the laws which give rights to licence-holders are framed so as to safeguard the rights of the public, to whose convenience licence-holders are supposed to minister; and that the mere fact of a population congregating in a district where no licensed house exists does not give the "trade" a right to plant a public-house in that district. Some "trade" witnesses before the Royal Commission have spoken as if the mere fact of a man being willing to take the risk of creating a demand for intoxicating liquor in a district which has grown up without intoxicating liquor shows that a need exists for a licensed house. But such a contention is not in harmony with the licensing laws as interpreted by the House of Lords in the Dover case.—Temperance Record.

CONTACT WITH THE SINNER.

In an article in the current Quiver on "Problems of the Mission Field," Rev. J. Greenhough says:—

"The most successful missions, without exception, have been those in which the labourer has lived among the people, in constant intercourse with them, finding all his interests in his work, finding nearly his only society there, taking part in all the concerns and sharing as far as possible in the daily lot of those around him. The signal triumphs of the Gospel among the negroes of the West Indies and the aborigines of the Pacific Islands are in a large measure attributable to this fact. There the missionary has been father, brother, friend, adviser, and almost everything to the people of his charge. Without this, in some measure, the work is always disappointing. When, as is the custom in some parts of India and China, the missionary has his residence in the European quarter, forming part of that superior society which is separated by a wide gulf from the heathen population, and only coming into contact with the people on his preaching excursions, the results are not and never can be satisfactory."

MISSIONARIES FOR TURKEY.

A party of four missionaries, under the American Board of Foreign Missions, sailed lately from New York en route for Turkey. A young woman travels with the missionaries, who, upon reaching that country, will become the bride of the American consul at Civas. Rev. Dr. and Mrs. M. P. Parmelee, the senior members of the party, have lived in Trebizond since 1880, where they have established kindergarten and high and intermediate schools for Armenian girls and boys. Dr. Parmelee first went to Turkey in 1863, his first station being at Erzeroum. Miss A. P. Jones is returning to work in Constantinople, where she has been employed in city mission work, with two other American women, for six years. Rev. C. K. Tracy, the other member of the party, was graduated from Oberlin College this summer, and returns to Marsovan, his birthplace, to join his father and mother, who are missionaries in that place.—New York Observer.

MADAGASCAR.

Things are a little quieter in Madagascar (says The Rock), but the situation remains a dangerous one. The restoration of the churches to the Protestants from whom they were taken has been effected in some districts, but not in others, and the Jesuits are still persecuting both pastors and people, attempting to force them into the Church of Rome, by threats of denouncing them as rebels. It may be small comfort to the persecuted Protestants of Madagascar to know that the state of affairs in that island is affording a useful and unhappily much-needed object lesson to the people of England, whose rulers, blind to its real character, are never weary of showing the most tender consideration for the Romish Church.

THE PLAGUE AT POONA.

Reuter's agency, in a message dated Bombay, August 27, says:—"The plague at Poona is seriously increasing, and the Kirkee bazaar is entirely closed. Professor Haffkine is performing inoculation at Kirkee, and a house-to-house visitation is being carried on. The city segregation camp is full and the cantonment camp is being re-opened."

MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.

Mr. Denby, the United States Minister at Peking, has achieved another victory for the cause of missions in China. The Chinese Government has hitherto maintained that, however willing, it was unable to protect fully those foreigners who go far into the interior of the country. Mr. Denby has persistently claimed that it was able to do so, and was bound to do so; that missionaries, or any other foreigners, have a right to go where they please in the Empire, and to expect full support of the Chinese Government wherever they may be. According to recent despatches to Washington, he has carried his point, and they are now free to go where they like. Almost more important than this is the privilege he has secured for them of purchasing land. Hitherto this has been denied, and foreign property has been held in the names of Chinese. Now they are free to buy and hold property in their own names. Another scarcely less important concession is the promise that governors who prove themselves careless about the enforcement of law shall be adequately punished, not merely removed from office and made to pay a fine often little more than nominal. It is true that these are promises, the decree not having yet been published; but as promises they show a great advance, and the authorities at Washington express their belief that they will be kept.—*N.Y. DOINGS OF DRINK.

A writer in the N.B. Daily Mail says:—

The appalling frequency with which "drink" figures in newspaper columns has alarmed me as to where the country is being driven to, and when there is to be a reversal of the opinions of our people in reference to its continuance. Murders, manslaughters, poisonings, suicides, fatal accidents, drownings, shipwrecks, bribing of magistrates, family quarrels, desertion of wives and children, drunken wives, drunken husbands, starving waifs necessitating Quarrier's Homes, and almost a thousand more evils, each and all brought about by this drink traffic, are surely enough to cause deep searching of heart, in answering the question—"Why should this traffic continue longer?" Why should any community allow itself to be debased and debauched, merely because the drink is bewitching, and its sale profitable to the publican—profitable, though terribly dangerous? Are not our people of more value than any traffic?" I know decent women who have to toil outside of their own families that their children may not starve, whilst the husbands (some of them make 40s. per week) spend all in drink. Is it not time that the nation got roused to its condition?

YOUNG CRIMINALS.

The Hon. Robert White, while imprisoned in Holloway Gaol in consequence of his share in the Jameson Raid, was grieved at the treatment accorded to young prisoners. It seemed that even while they were unconvicted they were subjected to much the same treatment as older and proved criminals; shut up in cells in solitude and allowed out only for a brief space of formal exercise daily. On regaining his freedom Mr. White took occasion to inquire how children accused of crime are treated in Paris. He finds that every consideration is shown for their possible innocence, and that they are carefully guarded from contact with criminals of maturer years. Boy prisoners are kept in a prison by themselves; girls in a wing entirely apart from their seniors, in the women's prison. Up to the age of twelve they occupy cells with doors open, that the terror which solitude causes in young children may not afflict them, though a warder patrols the corridor to prevent communication. Even when they are of an age which makes the authorities consider it advisable to lock them in, the cells are cheerful and airy, and, besides receiving visits and instruction from a schoolmaster, they are given work to do of a simple yet interesting kind. It certainly seems as if, in the case of children not yet convicted of crime, it is cruel to treat them as if they were proved guilty, as Mr. White seems to think is the case; and education and the interest of learning some kind of work will do much to counteract the evil effects of solitude. But perhaps these effects are less serious than Mr. White imagines. The children who get into gaol are largely recruited from the criminal class itself, and, while one would gladly show any kindness that would induce these children to adopt an honourable life, we are not prepared to say that the present system directly tends to make the innocent take to crime.—The Hospital.

DISCHARGED PRISONERS.

In a leading article The Times says: "What is at present done to help discharged prisoners to resume a respectable life is done by voluntary societies in each county or district, the aid of discharged convicts being mainly the work of two well-known London societies, the Royal and St. Giles's Christian Mission. A scheme for the organisation of such societies under a system of Government grants is in contemplation; but no organisation can remove the standing difficulty that nine employers out of ten will hesitate to employ any one who has been in prison. The work, however, is a good work, and necessary, if these unfortunate men and women are to be saved from slipping back into criminal courses in consequence of inability to find honest employment. Assistance towards emigration and a fresh start in a new country would seem to be the most hopeful and fruitful kind of help. With respect to discharged female convicts, the Commissioners report favourably of a suggestion made by Adeline, Duchess of Bedford, of whose work as lady visitor to a female convict prison they speak as "invaluable," that special homes should be provided for the reception of young women who have been led astray but have not been living an outcast life. Such young women, it appears, show an increasing disinclination to enter the ordinary "refuges," at which, for nine months prior to their discharge, the Government offers them maintenance; and the Duchess thinks that this objection might be overcome by offering them a different class of "home." Of the appointment of such lady visitors to female convict prisons the Commissioners speak with warm approval; and it is only surprising that, since Mrs. Fry showed, in 1817, what could be done by sympathetic ladies among the female prisoners at Newgate, such work has not hitherto received official recognition. It may be hoped that the Duchess is inaugurating a new era in the treatment of a class of criminals who have always been found peculiarly difficult to deal with, but also responsive to skilful and well-directed sympathy from their own sex.

Zanzibar.—A correspondent writes:—I notice from time to time in THE CHRISTIAN paragraphs about the "Strangers' Rest," Zanzibar; Mr. and Mrs. Knapman are untiring in their labours for the Lord's glory. I have myself, during the past nine months on the East African coast, had some refreshing times at the rest. There is a good field for earnest Christian work among the natives, and it is very much needed

Fallacious Critical Principles.

By Rev. HENRY STURT.

THE Higher Criticism not only starts with a theory and then bends the facts to suit it, but it also proceeds on three principles which are equally untrustworthy: (1) the psychological construction of history; (2) the literary arrangement of the Bible; and (3) the evolution of religion. The first of these opens the way to great uncertainty and endless caprice. Psychology, in this matter, must follow history and not precede it. We can know what was the psychological or mental condition of an age, only by its history. In opposition to all such theories, an individual may arise who may be as far above his age as Shakespeare, Milton, and Newton were above their generation. A man who was inspired by the Holy Ghost, whether an architect like Bezaleel, or a psalmist like David, or a prophet like Moses or Isaiah, would not only give expression to thoughts above his age, but even above our own age, and which will endure for ever. How can we fix the place of such men in history by any psychological theory? What a chaos of confusion we should have if the history of England were arranged upon this principle! All the great men and the great utterances of early history would have to be assigned a later date, when it would be supposed that the psychological condition of the times was in harmony with them.

Again, in the literary arrangement of the Bible, the natural order is reversed, and a foregone conclusion leads the way. We must know what an age was from its history, before we can say what were its literary conditions. Special men also, who may wield the pen of the ready writer, may appear and stand head and shoulders above their generation. Canon Driver's reviewer, in the Church Quarterly, charges him with employing canons of evidence and probability never used in historical and literary investigation, and says that his methods were invented to support a foregone conclusion. He also says: "Not a single instance can be given of the reconstruction of documents on purely critical grounds. In other fields of investigation such methods are discredited and exploded, and in the case of the New Testament have been a conspicuous failure." A recent writer has shown that the Epistle to the Romans is capable of similar treatment, and, although admittedly the work of one writer, it might with great plausibility be assigned to different authors at different times.

As for the third principle, the evolution of religion, it crumbles to pieces in the grip of history. As applied to religion by the Higher Criticism the term Evolution is used in the Darwinian sense, i.e., the gradual development of all the forms of life from one or more primordial germs, by the process of natural selection, or the influence of environment upon an organism. Some kind of religious sense, it is supposed, was begotten by dreams and by the immensity and mystery of nature. Then, through the lowest kind of fetishism and serpent-worship, men rose to a higher nature-worship, with a host of presiding deities—over favourite places and forces of nature. At length they reached a loftier conception of God in Judaism, which grew into Christianity, the last and highest product of the system. Of course, those who believe in Theistic evolution maintain that in all this there was the presiding influence of God.

This theory may seem very inviting, but it has one fault. It is not true to history. Not a single instance of it can be given, either in the civilised or uncivilised heathenisms of the world. So far as we can trace their history, the evidence points in the very opposite direction. They have all gone down from a higher to a lower stage, and not one of them has arisen from the lower to the higher, by purging out error and corruption from its centre. The description which the Apostle Paul gives of the heathen world, in the first chapter of Romans, cannot be disproved by a single case which can be adduced to the contrary in the whole history of mankind. And yet this principle, so utterly discredited by history, is one of the pillars of the Higher Criticism.

We do not deny the growth of religious knowledge in Israel. But it was not by evolution, but by revelation, as God spoke to the Fathers by the Prophets. Indeed, at the outset, there was the loftiest conception of God in the religion of Israel in the Pentateuch, which they neither derived from the nations around them nor evolved from their own consciousness. It was given to them by God Himself, in the revelation He made by Moses. How far the people of Israel comprehended it is another question. They may have thought of Jehovah as simply a national God like the other gods of the nations. That they rebelled against the Truth and fell from it, and had bitterly to pay the penalty, their history abundantly shows. It was only by a painful process of suffering and teaching, that they came slowly to understand the revelation which had been in their midst from the first, in the manifestations of Sinai, and in the words of their great teacher and law-giver, Moses.

There is nothing whatever peculiar in all this. We have had the same thing repeated in the history of Christendom. How soon Christianity became corrupted; and how tenaciously the great corrupt churches have clung to their corruptions. How slow men have been to learn the Gospel, and how difficult it is to bring our churches up to the level of it, even in this late period of the world's history. We cannot allow the Bible to be cut to pieces and rearranged according to this theory of evolution. We must take it according to the historical evidence of what God said by Moses, and those holy men of God who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

Conference at Hamburg.—The ninth General Conference of the German Moral Reform Unions and purity societies will, as we mentioned in a preliminary notice in our last issue, be held this year at Hamburg, from the 20th to the 22nd of September. The subjects for deliberation include the evil influences of the theatre and music hall; the moral dangers of a seaman's life, and the moral condition of the army. Addresses will be given by representatives of civil authorities and corporations, and special meetings for men and women respectively will be arranged during the Conference. It is hoped that there will be a good attendance, and friends of the cause from England will be cordially welcome.—Sentinel.

Rev. J. R. McDougall, D.D., OF FLORENCE.

WHEREVER the English traveller goes to-day in Italy he finds religious services provided for him in his own tongue, and evangelical work going on amongst the Italians. It is interesting to find that we have still living and working in Italy, amongst Italians and English alike, with unabated vigour and success, one who has not only witnessed all the marvellous religious changes of the past generation, but who has been largely instrumental in bringing them about —Rev. J. R. McDougall, D.D., of Florence.

Mr. McDougall, when a young man of twenty-six (he was born in Glasgow in 1831) went to Florence in the autumn of 1857, just forty years ago. He had already found his vocation. After a successful university course in Glasgow, he was ordained in Brighton in 1855. Although gifted with a Highlander's strength of constitution, overwork in that fashionable health resort had temporarily impaired his health. His intention was to recruit in Florence for six weeks, and at the same time assist Rev. J. Hanna, a retired Scottish minister, who had begun work there some few years before. This aged minister died before young McDougall touched the soil of Italy, and so, though little dreaming of such a thing, he found there his life's work.

Dr. McDougall is the minister in Florence in connection with the Free Church of Scotland; but his services are not designed exclusively for Free Church people, nor even for Presbyterians, but for all who desire, in a land where the Papal Church seeks to meet the needs of the soul by mutilating intellect and stupefying conscience, to render to God a reasonable service, worshipping Him in spirit and in truth, with the minimum of outward form and show. He has ever been eminently successful in drawing to his church in the Lung' Arno, Quicciardini, Sunday after Sunday, during these past forty years, large congregations of men and women, irrespective of Church and country.

He never seems to forget in his preaching the varied condition of those whom he addresses. There is a word of cheer for the invalid who has gone to Italy in search of health; a word of sympathy for those travelling with such, whose hearts are often full of anxiety and sorrow; a word for the aged who have gone South to escape the rigours of a northern climate; for the minister, or physician, or merchant, ordered abroad to rest from overwork; as well as the rousing appeal to those simply seeking change or pleasure, upon whom travel and hotel life are apt to exercise a deadening influence.

Dr. McDougall believes in following up his public preaching by private intercourse, and is indefatigable in his preaching. But in a thousand ways the Continental minister is called upon to render service to his countrymen and to others, and no one is more able and prompt than he to avail himself of such opportunities.

The Italian side of his work is so well known through the reports of the Evangelical Church of Italy, of which he is the soul and centre, that it is not needful to go into it in detail. When he arrived in Florence, in 1857, he found that evangelical work was being vigorously carried on in secret (in spite of the Grand Ducal threats and Papal bulls) by Dr. Stewart, of Leghorn, assisted by the Scottish merchants who had settled at that seaport. Dr. Stewart had brought down from the Waldensian valleys some pastors and teachers to help on the work. Mr. McDougall at once threw himself into the enterprise, taking charge of the secret circulation of the Scriptures in the Grand Duke's time. Then when that tool of the Jesuits fled to the Austrian camp in 1859 and Tuscany became part of the kingdom of Italy under Victor Emmanuel, Mr. McDougall founded Waldensian churches in many places, opened Waldensian schools, and gave them the use of his own place of worship.

Circumstances led him to take up, in 1869, with Gavazzi, the cause of the Italian Evangelicals, and in June 1870, when they met in synod in Milan and the Free Italian Church was formed, he became their treasurer, and generously undertook to find material support for this friendless Church. But it must not be thought that he took no further interest in the Waldenses. He carefully avoided rivalry, and aided them in every way in his power.

From photograph by Mr. John Fergus, Largs, N.B.

From 1886 to the present time the labours of Dr. McDougall for the evangelisation of Italy have never ceased, and the blessing of God has ever rested upon them. Nor were labours and blessings ever more abundant than in the present year, when nearly a thousand persons were brought out of Papal paganism and indifference to the knowledge of the Truth, and into fellowship with the Evangelical Church of the land.

Though Dr. McDougall has to raise a large sum of money every year to pay the expenses of both the English and Italian sides of the work, some £7,000 in all, yet, owing to his excellent business talents, all the work is systematically managed without waste or extravagance.

In conclusion, it is to be hoped that his friends will more and more support and encourage him in his manifold labours, and that he will be long spared to be a blessing to English-speaking travellers in Florence, and to Italians throughout the length and breadth of his adopted land.
